Digitized by Google

16 prohib. — c

~~qq — 7 — 4 —~~

15
BB

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

PVRCHAS
HIS PILGRIMES.

IN FIVE BOOKES.

The first, Containing Peregrinations and Discoueries, in the remotest North and East parts of ASIA; called TARTARIA and CHINA.

The second, Peregrinations, Voyages, Discoueries, of CHINA, TARTARIA, RVSSIA, and other the North and East parts of the World, by English-men and others.

The third, Voyages and Discoueries of the North parts of the World, by Land and Sea, in ASIA, EVROPE; the Polaire Regions, and in the North-west of AMERICA.

The fourth, English Northerne Navigations, and Discoueries: Relations of Greenland, Groenland, the North-west passage, and other Arctike Regions, with later RVSSIAN OCCVRRENTS.

29402

The fifth, Voyages and Travels to and in the New World, called AMERICA: Relations of their Pagan Antiquities and of the Regions and Plantations in the North and South parts thereof, and of the Seas and Ilands adiacent.

The Third Part.

Vnus Deus, Una Veritas.

LONDON
Printed by William Stansby for Henrie Fetherstone, and are to be sold at his shop in Pauls Church-yard at the signe of the Rose.
1625.

Bibliotheca Angelica

Bibliothecæ Angelicæ
Ex Legato
Illustriss. Lucæ Holstenii

Digitized by Google

PURCHAS

HIS

PILGRIMES.

IN FOUR PARTS.

The First, Containing ...

The Second, ...

The Third, ...

The Fourth, ...

The Fifth ...

The Third Part.

...

LONDON

Printed ... for Henrie Fetherstone ...

... the Princes Arms ...

1625.

Digitized by Google

TO

THE RIGHT HONORABLE, AND RIGHT REVEREND FATHER IN GOD:

IOHN,

Lord Bishop of LINCOLNE, Lord Keeper of the GREAT SEALE of ENGLAND, &c.

Right Reuerend and Honourable,

THese PILGRIMS deliuering a Historie of the World in their owne Trauels by Sea and Land, not onely needed authoritie from the Admiralie, but fearing suspition of Riot without warrantable assemblie, become humble Suters for your Lordships fauour. So shall they sin the approbation of both (to apply by a warrant of Ego dixi, dij estis, the Patriarchs mysticall Dreame to our Historicall purpose) finde a Scala Cœli to ascend from the ground where they are prostrate Petitioners, to the Princes Highnesse, whence authorised they may againe descend and become the Commons of Common Readers. Order requires a Medium betwixt Princely Height and his Lowlinesse, whose function is also warmed Holy Orders, as further tying him to that equall inequalitie, wherein hee beseecheth your Lordship as by speciall Office and in Proprietie to owne that which hee hath Gen.28.12.

pre-

presumed to offer to the Prince in Capite, Quemadmodum sub optimo rege omnia Rex imperio possidet, Domini dominio. Ad reges potestas pertinet, ad singulos proprietas.

Senec. Benef. l. 7. cap. 4. 5.

Many are the reasons which moued the Author to obtrude his PILGRIMS on your Lordship; because he is deeply obliged Yours for former fauours, euen then when you were initiated in the Mysteries of Honour (learning by seruice to Command) in the Discipline of that Honorable Worthy, Lord Chancellor EGERTON! because some conceptions of this Worke were in your Honourable Iurisdiction of Westminster, whither lest some traduce Trauellers for Vagrants, they returne in hope of Sanctuarie, not so much trusting to the ancient Liberties, as to your Lordships liberall respect to literate endeauours: because these Trauellers aduenturing the world, seeke like Iacob at his going and returne, a Reuerend Fathers Blessing and Confirmation. The Author likewise being called on for his promised Europe, submits himselfe to your Lordships Order, heere tendring of that debt, what hee is able, in readie payment. The worke it selfe also being a Libraric in this kind, presents it selfe to your Honour, the Founder of two famous Libraries; one in Westminster, (where the Stones & renued Fabrikes speake your Magnificence) the other in that famous Nurserie of Arts and Vertue Saint IOHNS Colledge in Cambridge, which sometime knew you a hopefull Sonne, but now acknowledgeth your Lordship a happie Father, where also the Author first conceiued with this Trauelling Genius, whereof (without trauelling) he hath trauelled euer since. Learning, the Aduancer of your Honour, hath secured her welwillers not to bee reiected in whatsoeuer indeauours (Scribimus indocti, doctiq;) to aduance Learning. The greatnesse of Nature to goodnesse of Nature, varietie of Estates to a prime Pillar of State, the Historie of Religions to a Religious Prelate, of Antiquities to an Antiquarie, cannot bee altogether vnwelcome; that I mention not the dependance of London Ministers Liuings (fined by the Times iniquitie) on your Lordships equall Sentence. These Causes haue moued; One hath inforced; these PILGRIMES are your Seruants, fitly so called à Seruando, saued by your Lordships hand when they were giuing vp the ghost, despairing through a fatall stroke of euer seeing light.

Gen. 28. & 32. 20.

Aug. de C. D. li. 19. cap. 5.

Most humbly therefore, sue vnto your Honour, these PILGRIMES for acknowledgement, esteeming your Lordships Name in fore-front a cognisance of blest Libertie and best Seruice; Now when Ianus sends many with gratefull emulations to present their acclamations of a New Yeere, presenting (a wordie rather then worthy Present) a World, yea, a New world, in great part one Age younger to mens knowledge then America, sometimes stiled by that Name. I had written other Causes of my addresse to your Honour, but dare not proceed to interrupt Others more weightie. In all humble earnestnesse beseecheth, now in this Festiuall time, the Author with his PILGRIMES to finde Hospi-tall

tall entertainment, not at your Honours table, where Great affaires of Church and State are feasted (except some recreation some times permit) but with Schollers and Gentlemen in the Hall, which will welcome such Guests as your Lordship shall Countenance. So shall you encourage euer to pray for the increase of your Lordships happinesse in the Happie Seruice of his MAIESTIE,

Your Lordships

most bounden,

SAMVEL PVRCHAS.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

THE CONTENTS OF THE CHAPTERS AND PARAGRAPHS IN THE SECOND BOOKE OF THE SECOND PART OF PVRCHAS HIS PILGRIMS.

CHAP. I.

THe Iournall of Friar William de Rubruquis, a French-man, of the Order of the Minorite Friars, vnto the East parts of the World, Anno Dom. 1253. H. pag. 1.

CHAP. II.

Tartarian and Northerne Relations written in Latin by the famous Friar Roger Bacon. H. p. 52

Relations of Vincentius Beluacensis, the most of which he receiued from Friar Simon de Sancto Quintino, one of the foure Friars sent by Pope Innocent the fourth to the Tartars: seruing to the illustration of the former. pag. 58.

CHAP. III.

Relations touching the Tartars, taken out of the Historie of R. Wendouer, and Mat. Paris: with certaine Epistles of the same subiect. pag. 60.

CHAP. IIII.

The first booke of Marcus Paulus Venetus, or of Master Marco Polo, a Gentleman of Venice, his Voyages. pag. 65.

¶. 1. The voyages of Master Nicolo and M. Maffio, from Constantinople to the Great Can, and their comming home to Venice: their second voyage with the Authour and returne. ibid.

¶. 2. Obseruations of M. Polo, of Armenia, Turkie, Zorzania, Baldach, Persia, Chirmain, Cobniam, Ormus, Knaue-fooles paradise, and other Easterne parts in Asia, and Armenia the lesse. pag. 69.

¶. 3. Of Sapurgan, Balac, Thaican, Scassem, Balaxiam, Bascia, Chesmur, Vochan, Samarchan, Carchan, Peym, the dreadfull Desart of Lop and Tanguth. pag. 73.

¶. 4. Of Carchoran, the originall, proceedings and exploits of the Tartars; of Priest Iohn and his discendants. Customes of the Tartars. Of Bargu, Erginul, Xandu, the Cans Citie and Palace; of Muske: of strange Sorcerers, and austere Monkes. pag. 77.

¶. 5. Of Cublai Can, his Raigne and Acts, Magnificent feasts and huntings, Court and Counsell. His Citie Cambalu and glorious Palace. pag. 81.

¶. 6. The Cans prouisions for Embassadours and for Posts, against Dearth; for High-wayes; for the Poore in Cambalu, for Astrologers in Tartars Wine, Fuell, Religion, Opinions, Behauiour, Court-neatnesse: Polos proceeding from Cambalu westward. Of Pulisangan, Gouza, Tainfu, Pianfu, Thaigin, Cacianfu, Quenzanfu, Sindinfu, Thebeth, Caindu, Cataian, Carachan, Cardandan and Vociam. pag. 87.

¶. 7. Of the Prouince of Mien and Bengala, how they were conquered to the Can. Of Cangigu, Amu, Tholoman, Cuinigui, and some other parts of Cataio. And of the Conquest of Mangi. pag. 93.

¶. 8. Of the Cities of Mangi (now called China) and the rarities therein. Of the Wonders of Quinsai, the Palaces, Pleasures, Rites and Gouernment, obserued by the Natiues, and the Tartars. pag. 96.

¶. 9. The ships of India described, the Ile of Zipangu, the Sea Chin, and World of Ilands, the two Iauas, Zeilan, and other Ilands, with the rarities therein. pag. 102.

¶. 10 Of the firme Land of the Greater India. pag. 104.

CHAP.

CHAP. V.

The Historie of Ayton, or Anthonie the Armenian, of Asia, and specially touching the Tartars. H.P. pag.108.

§. 1. Of the Kingdome of Cathay, and diuers other Prouinces of Asia, and of the first habitation of the Tartars: and of Cangius, or Cingis his beginnings. ibid.

§. 2. Of Changius Can his second vision and conquests. Of Hoccota and his three sonnes expeditions; of Gino Can; of Mangu Can, who was visited by the King of Armenia, and baptised; of the expedition of his brother Haloon. pag.112.

§. 3. Of Cobila Can the fift Emperour of the Tartarians: Of the warre with Barcha, and Tartarian quarrell with the Christians, Haolaons death. Acts of the Soldan of Egypt. Of Abaya and other sonnes and successours of Haloon. p.117.

§. 4. Of Argon the sonne of Abaga, and Regaito his brother; of Baido, and of the exploits of Casan against the Soldan of Egypt, and others. pag.120.

§. 5. Casan dyeth, Carbanda succeedeth; his Apostasie. The Authors entrance into a Religious habit. Of Tamor Can the sixt Emperour, and of Chapar, Hochtai, and Carbanda, three other Tartarian Kings. pag.125.

CHAP. VI.

Trauels and Memorials of Sir Iohn Mandeuile. pag.128.

CHAP. VII.

The Voyage of Nicolo di Conti a Venetian, to the Indies, Mangi, Cambalu and Quinsai, with some obseruations of those places. pag.158.

CHAP. VIII.

Extracts of Alhacen his Arabike Historie of Tamerlan, touching his Martiall trauels, done into French by Iean du Bec, Abbat of Mortimer. pag.160.

§. 1. Tamerlans birth and person, his Expedition against the Muscouite; his marriage with the Cans daughter; his ouer-throwing of Calix. ibid.

§. 2. Cataio, Cambalu; Tamerlans Expedition into China, entring the Wall, conquering the King, and disposing of the Countrey, and returne to Cataio. pag.145.

§. 3. The differences betwixt Tamerlan and Baiazet the Turke; his returne to Samercand, and Expedition against Baiazet; the battell, and victorie, his Caging of Baiazet, and making him his foot-stoole. pag.155.

§. 4. Encrease of Samarcand; Affaires of China: Funerals of the Can; comming to Quinza, and description thereof. His disposition of his estate and death. pag.160.

CHAP. IX.

Reports of Chaggi Memet a Persian of Tabas in the Prouince of Chilan, touching his trauels and obseruations in the Countrey of the Great Can, vnto M. G. Baptista Ramusio. pag.164.

CHAP. X.

A Treatise of China, and the adioyning Regions, written by Gaspar da Cruz a Dominican Friar, and dedicated to Sebastian King of Portugall: here abbreuiated. H.P. pag.166.

Of Camboia and the Bramenes there; the cause of his going to China: Of China and the neighbouring Regions. ibid.

§. 2. Cantan described, the publike and priuate buildings and gouernment. The shipping and husbandrie of China; their contempt of the idle, and prouision for impotent poore. pag.170.

§. 3. Of their mechanicall Trades, Merchandises and Moneyes: their prouisions of flesh and fish; the Persons and attyre of Men and Women: their Feasts. pag.176.

§. 4. Of their Louthias, Mandarines or Magistrates, their creation, priuiledges, maintenance; of Prisons and Tortures; of the King and of Embassadours. pag.183.

§. 5. Of the Portugall commerce with the Chinois; of the seuere Iustice executed vpon certaine Magistrates, for wrongs done to the Portugals. pag.190.

§. 6. Of the Religion in China; difficultie of bringing in Christianitie. Terrible Earth-quakes and Tempests in China. pag.195.

CHAP. XI.

The relation of Galeotto Perera, a Gentleman of good credit, that lay prisoner in China. pag.199.

The

Digitized by Google

The Contents of the Chapters and Paragraphs in the second Booke of the Second part of Purchas his PILGRIMS.

CHAP. I.

THe beginning of Englisth Discoueries towards the North, and North-east, by Sir Hugh Willoughby, Richard Chancellor, and others; of the Muscouie Trade, as also Voyages by Russia, ouer the Caspian Sea, and thorow diuers Regions of Tartaria. pag.211.

§. 1. The first voyage for discouerie with three ships, set forth vnder the charge of Sir Hugh Willoughby, Knight, in which he dyed; and Muscouia was discouered by Captaine Chancellor. ibid.

Some additions for better knowledge of this Voyage, taken by Clement Adams, Schoole-master to the Quecnes Henshmen, from the mouth of Captaine Chancellor. pag.218.

The Copie of the Duke of Moscouie and Emperour of Russia his Letters, sent to King Edward the Sixth, by the hands of Richard Chancellor. pag.221.

§. 2. The first voyage made by Master Anthonie Ienkinson, from the Citie of London, toward the Land of Russia, begun the twelfth of May, in the yeere 1557. pag.222.

§. 3. Notes taken out of another mans Relation of the same voyage, touching the Russian Rites. pag.226.

§. 4. The voyage of Master Anthony Ienkinson, made from the Citie of Mosco in Russia, to the Citie of Boghar in Bactria, in the yeere 1558. written by himselfe to the Merchants of London, of the Moscouie Companie. pag.231.

§. 5. Aduertisements and reports of the sixt voyage into the parts of Persia and Media, gathered out of sundrie Letters written by Christopher Borough; and more especially a voyage ouer the Caspian Sea, and their shipwracke and miseries there endured by the Ice. pag.243.

A Letter of Master Henrie Lane, to the worshipfull Master William Sanderson, containing a briefe discourse of that which passed in the North-east discouerie, for the space of three and thirtie yeeres. pag.249.

CHAP. II.

Obseruations of China, Tartaria, and other Easterne parts of the World, taken out of Fernam Mendez Pinto his Peregrination. pag.252.

§. 1. Mendez his many miserable aduentures, his strange Expedition with Antonio de Faria; diuers Coasts visited, Pirats tamed, miseries suffered, glorie recouered. pag.252.

§. 2. Antonio Faria his taking of Nouda a Citie in China, triumph at Liampoo; strange voyage to Calempluy, miserable shipwrack. p.258

§. 3. Their shipwrack in which Faria and most of them were drowned; the miserable wandrings of the rest to Nanquin: their imprisonment, sentence and appeale to Pequin; rarities obserued in those places and wayes; of the beginnings of the China Kingdome, and of their admirable Wall. pag.263.

§. 4. Mindo Salt pits: Mines of Coretumbaga, Copper-workes; Idolatrie and Christianities; China Trades, and Riuer Faires; their comming to Pequin, triall and sentence. Rarities of Pequin. pag.269.

§. 5. Foure buildings incredibly admirable in Pequin, and diuers of their superstitions: their Hospitals and prouisions for the Poore. The Kings reuenues and Court; their Sects. pag.273.

§. 6. Their remoone to Quansie, quarrels, miseries; Tartarian huge Armie, and losse at the siege of Pequim, reported. Quansie taken, and Nixianco: Mendez his exploit. Their entertainment by the Tartar King, and going to Cauchinchina with his Embassadours, with many Tartarian obseruations. pag.277.

CHAP. III.

Spanish plantation of the Philippinas, and what entercourse hath thence hapned betwixe them and the Chinois. pag.282.

§. 1. First discouerie of the Philippinas written by Friar Iuan Gonzales de Mendoza. ibid.

§. 2. First plantation of the Philippinas, by Michael Lopez de Legaspi. pag.284.

§. 3. Of Limahon a China Robber and Rouer, by whose occasion the Spaniards sent into China. pag.286.

§. 4. Friar Martin de Herrada, and other Spaniards entertainment in China, and their returne to the Philippinas. pag.292.

Two Letters taken out of Bartolome Leonardo de Argensola his Treatise, called Conquista de las Islas Malucas, printed at Madrid, 1609. *pag.*336, 337. mentioning the comming of two English ships to China: which seeme to be two ships of the fleet of Beniamin Wood: The former written by the Visitor of Chincheo in China, vnto the Gouernour of the Philippinas, Don Pedro de Acunna. H. P. pag.309.

The Answere of Don Pedro de Acunna, Gouernour of the Philippinas, to the Visitor of Chincheo in China. pag.310.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. IIII.

The report of a Mahometan Merchant, which had beene in Cambalu: and the troubleſome trauell of Benedictus Goes, a Portugall Ieſuite, from Lahor to China by land, thorow the Tartars Countries. pag.310.

CHAP. V.

A generall collection and hiſtoricall repreſentation of the Ieſuites entrance into Iapon and China, vntill their admiſsion in the Royall Citie of Nanquin. pag.316.

§. 1. Of Francis Xauier, Melchior Nunnes, Valignanus, Ruggerius and Paſius. ibid.

§. 2. Iaponian Embaſſage to the Pope; Of Nabunanga and Quabacondono their gouernment; Corai inuaded, Embaſſage from China, Taicoſamas Temple, and Ogoſhoſamas ſucceſſion. pag.322.

§. 3. Ruggerius enters againe into China with Ricius, and is forced backe to Amacao; thence ſent for againe by the Vice-roy. Sande and Almeida are ſent to them, and enter the Countrey as farre as Cequion, and returne to Sciauchin. pag.327.

§. 4. Falſe brethren and others accuſations detected, they are expelled Sciauchin: erect a Seat at Xauceum. Monaſterie of Nanhoa and other things of note in thoſe parts. They alter their habit; Voyage to Nanquin; the Lake, Riuers, Idols and other rarities. pag.332.

§. 5. Nanquin deſcribed; Ricius expelled thence, he ſetleth at Nancian, thence goeth to Nanquin againe, and to Pequin; deſcription of it, the way thither, the Kings Palace, and of Suceu, and Hamceu. pag.338.

§. 6. Letters from Father Longobard and Taiſo. Ricius his entertainment at Nanquin and reſidence there. The Chinois vnlearned learning. pag.343.

CHAP. VI.

A Letter of Father Diego de Pantoia, one of the Companie of IESVS, to Father Luys de Guzman, Prouinciall in the Prouince of Toledo: written in Paquin, which is the Court of the King of China, the ninth of March, the yeere 1602. H. P. pag.350.

§. 1. Difficulties of entring China, their dwelling at Nanquin, going from thence to Paquin, with Preſents for the King, troubles in the way by an Eunuch. pag.350.

§. 2. The King ſends for them, is delighted with their Clocks and Pictures; they are ſhut vp, after take a Houſe, are admired for learning; Chriſtianitie of China. pag.356.

§. 3. The deſcription of the Kingdome of China: of Catay and Musk; the diuiſion into Prouinces; Cities and Townes deſcribed, Riuer, Shipping, Commodities, Diet, and feeding. pag.360.

§. 4. Their moneyes, apparell, perſons, trades, wealth, learning, marriages, ſuperſtitions, rites, and opinions. pag.366.

§. 5. Their bad Souldierie and Artillerie; Degrees, priuiledges, honours and promotions of learning. Their Authors and Bookes, and Printing. The Mandarins commended. pag.369.

§. 6. Of the gouernment of China: Of the Mandarins; the China complements and manifold nicities. pag.372.

§. 7. Of their Women: Of the Tartars Conqueſt, acts and expulſion. The greatneſſe of the King, and neighbouring States. Of the Queenes Eunuchs. pag.375.

CHAP. VII.

A diſcourſe of the Kingdome of China, taken out of Ricius and Trigautius, containing the countrey, people, gouernment, religion, rites, ſects, characters, ſtudies, arts, acts; and a Map of China added, drawne out of one there made with Annotations for the vnderſtanding thereof. pag.380.

§. 1. Of the name, ſcite, and greatneſſe; the Tributaries, commoditie, arts, printing, ſcales, inke, pencill-pennes and fannes. ibid.

§. 2. Of their Characters and writing downeward: their ſtudies, Ethikes, Aſtrologie, Phyſike, authentike Authors, Degrees how taken both Philoſophicall and Militarie. pag.384.

§. 3. Of the Tartarian conqueſt; Of Humuu the Eſtabliſher of the preſent gouernment. The Reuenues. Magiſtrates in the Courts Royall, Prouinces, Cities, Orders, Exaltations, Viſitations, Depriuations. pag.387.

§. 4. Their manifold rites in Salutations, Entertainments, and other ciuilitie: to the King and Magiſtrates: Of Burials and Marriages, Birthdayes; their Men, Women, Names and Games, Habites. pag.391.

§. 5. Of their Superſtitions, Cruelties, feares of Magiſtrates, of the Kings kindred, of Strangers and Souldiers. Their Deities and three Sects: Prieſts, Nunnes, Monaſteries, Legends, Lyes. pag.395.

§. 6. Of ſtrangers; and forraine Religions in China. pag.399.

§. 7. The Map of China, taken out of a China Map, printed with China Characters; illuſtrated with Notes, for the vnderſtanding thereof. pag.401.

CHAP. VIII.

A continuation of the Ieſuites Acts and obſeruations in China till Ricius his death and ſome yeers after. Of Hanceu or Quinſay. An Extract of Monfarts trauell. pag.405.

The

Digitized by Google

The Contents of the Chapters and Paragraphs in the third Booke of the first part of Purchas his PILGRIMS.

CHAP. I.

A Treatise of Russia and the adioyning Regions, written by Doctor Giles Fletcher, Lord Ambassadour from the late Queene, Euer-glorious Elizabeth, to Theodore then Emperour of Russia, A. D. 1588. pag. 413.

CHAP. II.

A briefe discouerie of the Northerne discoueries of Seas, Coasts, and Countries, deliuered in order as they were hopefully begun, and haue euer since happily beene continued by the singular industrie and charge of the Worshipfull Societie of Muscouia Merchants of London, with the ten seuerall Voyages of Captaine Thomas Edge the Author. pag. 462.

§. 1. Greenland first discouered by Sir Hugh Willoughby: the Voyages of Frobisher, Pet, and Iackman, Dauis, the Dutch; First Morse and Whale-killing, with further discoueries. ibid.

§. 2. Dutch, Spanish, Danish disturbance; also by Hull men, and by a new Patent, with the succeeding successe and further discoueries till this present. pag. 466.

§. 3. The description of the seuerall sorts of Whales, with the manner of killing them: Whereto is added the description of Greenland. p. 470.

The description of Greenland. pag. 472.

CHAP. III.

The first Nauigation of William Barents, alias Bernards, into the North Seas; Written by Gerart de Veer. pag. 473.

CHAP. IIII.

A briefe declaration of Barents his second Nauigation, made in Anno 1595. behind Norway, Muscouia, and Tartaria, written by Gerart de Veer. pag. 478.

CHAP. V.

The third voyage Northward to the Kingdoms of Cathaia, and China, in Anno 1596. Written by Gerart de Veer. pag. 482.

§. 1. What happened to them at Sea, before they came to build their House. ibid.

§. 2. Their cold, comfortlesse, darke and dreadfull winter: the Sunnes absence, Moones light, Sunnes vnexpected returne with miraculous speed. Of Beares, Foxes, and many many wonders. p. 492.

§. 3. Their preparation to goe from thence: they depart in a Boat and Scute both open, and come to Cola, 1143. miles. Their many dangers by Beares, Ice, Famine, Scorbute, in the way. pag. 505.

This was written by William Barentson in a loose Paper, which was lent mee by the Reuerend Peter Plantius in Amsterdam, March the seuen and twentieth, 1609. pag. 518.

CHAP. VI.

A Treatise of Iuer Boty a Gronlander, translated out of the Norsh language into High Dutch. H. ibid.

The Course from Island to Groneland. p. 520.

CHAP. VII.

A description of the Countries of Siberia, Samoieda, and Tingoesia. Together with the Iourneyes leading vnto the same Countries toward the East and North-east, as they are daily frequented by the Moscouites. pag. 522.

§. 1. Discouerie of Siberia, and the subiecting of the same to the Russes. ibid.

§. 2. A briefe description of the Wayes and Riuers, leading out of Moscouia toward the East and North-east into Siberia, Samoiedia, and Tingoesia, as they are daily frequented by the Russes: with further discoueries towards Tartaria and China. pag. 525.

§. 3. A Note of the trauels of the Russes ouer Land, and by water from Mezen, neere the Bay of Saint Nicholas to Pechora, to Obi, to Yenisse, and to the Riuer Geta, euen vnto the Frontiers of Cataia; brought into England by Master Iohn Mericke, the English Agent for Moscouie, and translated out of the Russe by Richard Finch. H. pag. 530.

CHAP. VIII.

A voyage made to Pechora 1611. Written by William Gourdon of Hull, appointed chiefe Pilot, for discouerie to Ob, &c. H. ibid.

CHAP. IX.

A Letter of Richard Finch to the Right Worshipfull Sir Thomas Smith, Gouernour; and to the rest of the Worshipfull Companie of English Merchants, trading into Russia: touching the former voyage, and other obseruations. H. pag. 534.

The names of the places that the Russes sayle by, from Pechorskoie Zauorot, to Mongozey: with the manner of their trauell, and distance betweene each place, or time of Sayling, Halling, and Rowing vnto the same. pag. 539.

CHAP. X.

The Voyage of Master Iosias Logan to Pechora, and his wintering there, with Master William

Digitized by Google

Purſgloue, and Marmaduke Wilſon. Anno 1611. H. pag.541.

Extracts taken out of two Letters of Ioſias Logan from Pechora, to Maſter Hakluyt Prebend of Weſtminſter. pag.546.

CHAP. XI.

A briefe relation of a Voyage to Pechora, and wintering there, began in the yeere 1611. Written by William Purſgloue. H. pag.547.

Other obſeruations of the ſaid William Purſgloue. pag.550.

The trauell from Pechora to Permia, Ougoria, and to the Riuer Ob, and the Townes ſituated thereupon, ouer Land. pag.551.

Commodities for Pechora, Siberia, Permia, Ougoria, and among the Tinguſſies. pag.552.

Commodities for the Tinguſſies. ibid.

CHAP. XII.

Later obſeruations of William Gourdon, in his wintering at Puſtozera, in the yeeres 1614. and 1615. with a deſcription of the Samoyeds life. H. pag.553.

CHAP. XIII.

Diuers Voyages to Cherie Iland, in the yeeres 1604, 1605, 1606, 1608, 1609. Written by Ionas Poole. H. pag.556.

CHAP. XIIII.

Diuers Voyages and Northerne diſcoueries of that worthy irrecouerable Diſcouerer Maſter Henrie Hudſon. His Diſcouerie toward the North Pole, ſet forth at the charge of certaine Worſhipfull Merchants of London, in May 1607. Written partly by Iohn Playſe one of the Companie, and partly by H. Hudſon. H. pag.567.

CHAP. XV.

A ſecond voyage or employment of Maſter Henrie Hudſon, for finding a paſſage to the East Indies by the North-eaſt: written by himſelfe. H. pag.574.

CHAP. XVI.

The third voyage of Maſter Henrie Hudſon toward Noua Zembla, and at his returne, his paſſing from Farre Ilands, to New-found-Land, and along to fortie foure degrees and ten minutes, and thence to Cape Cod, and ſo to thirtie three degrees; and along the Coaſt to the Northward, to fortie two degrees and an halfe, and vp the Riuer neere to fortie three degrees. Written by Robert Iuet of Lime-houſe. H. pag.581.

CHAP. XVII.

An Abſtract of the Iournall of Maſter Henrie Hudſon, for the diſcouerie of the North-weſt paſſage, begun the 17. of Aprill, 1610. ended with his end, being treacherouſly expoſed by ſome of the Companie. H. pag.596.

A larger diſcourſe of the ſame voyage, and the ſucceſſe thereof, written by Abacuk Pricket. pag.597.

A Note found in the Deske of Thomas Widhouſe, Student in the Mathematikes, he being one of them who was put into the Shallop. pag.609.

CHAP. XVIII.

The diſcoueries of M. M. Nicolo, and Antonio Zeni, gathered out of their Letters by Franciſco Marcolino: whereto is added Quirino his ſhipwracke. H. P. pag.610.

The ſhipwracke of Maſter Piero Quirino, deſcribed by Chriſtophoro Fiorauanti, and Nicolo di Michiel, who were preſent there: here contracted. H. P. pag.611.

CHAP. XIX.

Ancient commerce betwixt England and Norway, and other Northerne Regions. pag.619.

CHAP. XX.

A briefe Memoriall of the great trauels by Sea and Land, of Maſter George Barkley, Merchant of London, in Europe, Aſia, Africa, and America, and their Ilands. pag.625.

CHAP. XXI.

Collections out of Martin Broniouius de Biezerfedea ſent Ambaſſadour from Stephen King of Poland, to the Crim Tartar: Contayning a deſcription of Tartaria, or Cherſoneſus Taurica, and the Regions ſubiect to the Perecop or Crim Tartars, with their Cuſtomes priuate and publike in peace and warre. pag.632.

CHAP. XXII.

Dithmar Blefkens his Voyages, and Hiſtory of Iſland and Groenland. pag.643.

Of the Iſlanders Religion. pag.645.

The Life and Manners of the Iſlanders. ibid.

Of the wonderfull ſtanding Pooles, Lakes, and Fountaines in Iſland. pag.647.

Of the wonderfull Mountaines in Iſland. pag.648.

Of the Riches of the Iſlanders. pag.649.

Of the Iudgement of the Iſlanders. pag.650.

Of Groneland. pag.651.

CHAP. XXIII.

Extracts of Arngrim Ionas, an Iſlander, his Chrymogæa or Hiſtory of Iſland: publiſhed Anno Dom. 1609. H. P. pag.654.

§. 1. Of Iſland, the Situation, Diſcouerie, Plantation and Language. ibid.

§. 2. A diſcourſe of the firſt Inhabitants of the Northerne World, ſuppoſed to be Giants expelled from Canaan. Of the Iſlanders Houſes, Fewell, Victuall. pag.659.

§. 3. Of their Politie, and Religion in old times. pag.664.

The

Digitized by Google

The Contents of the Chapters and Paragraphs in the fourth Booke of the Second part of Purchas his PILGRIMS.

CHAP. I.

A Voyage set forth by the Right Worshipfull Sir Thomas Smith, and the rest of the Muscouie Company, to Cherry Iland: and for a further Discouerie to bee made towards the North-Pole, for the likelihood of a Trade or a passage that way, in a Ship called the Amitie, of burthen seuentie tunnes; in the which I Ionas Poole was Master, hauhauing foureteene Men and one Boy: Anno Dom. 1610. H. pag. 699.

A briefe note what Beasts, Fowles, and Fishes were seene in this land. pag. 707.

CHAP. II.

A Commission for Ionas Poole our Seruant, appointed Master of a small Barke called the Elizabeth, of fiftie tunnes burthen, for Discouery to the Northward of Greeneland, giuen the last day of May, 1610. H.P. ibid.

CHAP. III.

A briefe Declaration of this my Voyage of Discouery to Greeneland, and towards the West of it, as followeth: being set forth by the right Worshipfull Sir Thomas Smith, Gouernour of the right Worshipfull Company of new Trades, &c. written by Ionas Poole. H. pag. 711.

CHAP. IIII.

A Relation written by Ionas Poole of a Voyage to Greeneland, in the yeere 1612. with two Shippes, the one called the Whale, the other the Seahorse, set out by the right Worshipfull the Muscouie Merchants. H. pag. 713.

CHAP. V.

A Iournall of the Voyage made to Greeneland with fixe Englishe Shippes and a Pinnasse, in the yeere 1613. written by Master William Baffin. H.P. pag. 716.

CHAP. VI.

A Voyage of Discouery to Greeneland, &c. An. 1614. written by Ro. Fotherbye. H.P. pag. 720.

CHAP. VII.

A true report of a Voyage, Anno 1615. for Discouerie of Seas, Lands, and Ilands, to the Northwards; as it was performed by Robert Fotherbie, in a Pinnasse of twenty tunnes called the Richerd of London. H.P. pag. 728.

A Letter of Robert Fotherby to Captain Edge, written in Crosse-rode, Iuly 15. 1615. pag. 731.

CHAP. VIII.

Diuers other Voyages to Greenland, with Letters of those which were there employed, communicated to me by Master William Heley, in the yeere 1617. 1618. 1619. 1620. 1621. 1623. pag. 732.

A Letter of Master Robert Salmon to Master Sherwin. In Sir Thomas Smiths Bay, the 24. of Iune 1618. pag. 733.

A Letter of Master Th. Sherwin: Bell-sound this 29. of Iune, 1618. ibid.

A Letter of Iames Beuersham to Master Heley. From Faire-hauen, the 12. of Iuly, 1618. ibid.

A Letter of Iohn Chambers to W. Heley, Belsound, Iune 16. 1619. pag. 734.

A Letter of I. Catcher to Master Heley from Faire-hauen. Laus Deo, this seuenteenth of Iune, 1620. pag. 735.

A Letter of Robert Salmon from Sir Thomas Smiths Bay, Iuly 6. 1621. ibid.

Laus Deo in Faire-Hauen, the foure and twentieth of Iune, 1623. pag. 736.

Master Catchers Letter: the nine and twentieth of Iune 1623. pag. 737.

Captaine William Goodlards Letter: Belsound this eight of Iuly, 1623. ibid.

CHAP. IX.

The late changes and manifold alterations in Russia since Iuan Vasilowich to this present, gathered out of many Letters and Obseruations of Englishe Embassadours and other Trauellers in those parts. pag. 738.

§. 1. Of the reigne of Iuan, Pheodore his sonne; and of Boris. ibid.

The most solemne and magnificent coronation of Pheodor Iuanowich, Emperour of Russia, &c. the tenth of Iune, in the yeere 1584. seene and obserued by Master Ierom Horsey Gentleman, and seruant to her Maiestie. pag. 740.

§. 2. Occurrents of principall Note which happened in Russia, in the time while the Honorable Sir Thomas Smith remained there Embassadour from his Maiestie. pag. 748.

§. 3. One pretending himselfe to be Demetrius, with the Popes and Poles helpes attaineth the Russian Empire: his Arts, Acts, Mariage, fauour to the Englishe, and miserable end. pag. 755.

The Copie of a Letter sent from the Emperor Demetry Euanowich, otherwise called Grishco Otreapy oue. pag. 758.

The Copie of the translation of a Commission that was sent from the Mosko, from the Emperour Demetry Euanowich, alias Grylhca Otreapyoue by a Courtier named Gauaryla Samoylowich Salmanoue, who was sent downe to the Castle of Archangell, to Sir Thomas Smith, then Lord Embassadour.

Digitized by Google

ſadour. pag.759.

The Copie of the Tranſlation of a new Priuiledge that was giuen to the Company, by the Emperour Demetry Euanowich, otherwiſe called Gryſhca Otreapyoue, the which Priuiledge was ſent into England ouer-land by Olyuer Lyſſet Merchant, and ſeruant to the foreſaid Company. ibid.

The Copie of the tranſlation of a Contract, made by the Emperour Demetry Euanowich, otherwiſe called Gryſcha Otreapyoue, and the daughter of the Palatine Sendamersko, chiefe Generall of Poland. pag.761.

§. 4. The Copie of the Tranſlation of a Letter ſent from the new Emperour Vaſſily Euanowich Shoskey to the Kings Maieſty by Maſter Iohn Mericke. pag.765.

Captaine Margarets Letter to Maſter Mericke from Hamborough, *Ian.*29. 1612. pag.780.

§. 5. Of the miſerable eſtate of Ruſſia after Swiskeys deportation, their election of the King of Polands Sonne, their Interregnum and popular eſtate, and chooſing at laſt of the preſent Emperour, with ſome remarkeable accidents in his time. H.P. pag.782.

Pacta inter Primarium Ducem Exercituum Regni Poloniæ, & inter Heroes Moſcouiæ. p.783.

CHAP. X.

A briefe Copie of the points of the Contracts betweene the Emperours Maieſtie and the Kings Maieſtie of Sweden: in Stolboua the ſeuen and twentieth of February, 1616. pag.792.

CHAP. XI.

A Relation of two Ruſſe Coſſacks trauailes, out of Siberia to Catay, and other Countries adioyning thereunto. Alſo a Copie of the laſt Patent from the Muſcouite. A Copie of a Letter written to the Emperour from his Gouernours out of Siberia, pag.797.

The Copie of the Altine Chars, or golden Kings Letter to the Emperour of Ruſſia. ibid.

A Deſcription of the Empires of Catay and Labin, and other Dominions aſwell inhabited, as places of Paſture called Vluſſes and Hords, and of the great Riuer Ob, and other Riuers and Land paſſages. pag.799.

CHAP. XII.

Notes concerning the diſcouery of the Riuer of Ob, taken out of a Roll, written in the Ruſſian tongue, which was attempted by the meanes of Antonie Marſh, a chiefe Factor for the Moſcouie Company of England, 1584. with other notes of the North-eaſt. H. pag.804.

The report of Maſter Francis Cherry a Moſcouie Merchant, and Maſter Thomas Lyndes touching a warme Sea to the South-eaſt of the Riuer Ob, and a Note of Francis Gaulle. H.P. p.806.

CHAP. XIII.

Diſcoueries made by Engliſhmen to the North-weſt: Voyages of Sir Sebaſtian Cabot, Maſter Thorne, and other Ancients: and Maſter Weymouth. H.P. ibid.

The Voyage of Captaine George Weymouth, intended for the diſcouery of the North-weſt Paſſag toward China, with two ſlye Boates. pag.809.

CHAP. XIV.

Iames Hall his Voyage forth of Denmarke for the diſcouery of Greenland, in the yeere 1605. abbreuiated. H. pag.814.

CHAP. XV.

The ſecond Voyage of Maſter Iames Hall, forth of Denmarke into Greeneland, in the yeere 1606. contracted. H. pag.821.

CHAP. XVI.

The Voyage of Maſter Iohn Knight (which had beene at Greeneland once before 1605. Captaine of a Pinnaſſe of the King of Denmarke) for the Diſcouery of the North-weſt paſſage, begunne the eighteenth of Aprill, 1606. H. pag.827.

CHAP. XVII.

The fourth Voyage of Iames Hall to Groaneland, wherein he was ſet forth by Engliſh Aduenturers, Anno 1612. and ſlaine by a Greenelander. Written by William Baffin. H. pag.831.

CHAP. XVIII.

A true Relation of ſuch things as happened in the fourth Voyage for the Diſcouerie of the North-weſt Paſſage, performed in the yeere 1615. written by William Baffin. H. P. pag.836.

CHAP. XIX.

A briefe and true Relation or Iournall, containing ſuch accidents as happened in the fift Voyage, for the diſcouery of a paſſage in the North-weſt, ſet forth at the charges of the right Worſhipfull Sir Thomas Smith Knight, Sir Dudly Digges Knight, Maſter Iohn Moſtenholme Eſquire, Maſter Alderman Iones, with others, in the good ſhip called the Diſcouery of London; Robert Bileth Maſter, and my ſelfe Pilot, performed in the yeere of our Lord 1616. pag.844.

CHAP. XX.

A briefe Diſcourſe of the probability of a paſſage to the Weſterne or South Sea, illuſtrated with teſtimonies: and a briefe Treatiſe and Map by Maſter Brigges. H.P. pag.848.

The

Digitized by Google

The Contents of the Chapters and Paragraphs in the Fifth Booke of the second part of Purchas his PILGRIMS.

CHAP. I.

A Description of the West Indies, by Antonio de Herrera, his Maiesties chiefe Chronicler of the Indies, and his Chronicler of Castile. H. P. pag.855.

The Presidents, Counsellors, Secretaries, and Attourneys, which vnto this present day haue serued, and doe serue in the supreme Councell of the Indies, from their first Discouerie. pag.916.

The Gouernours and Vice-royes, which haue gouerned vntill this time, the Kingdomes of New-Spaine and of Peru. pag.917.

CHAP. II.

Obseruations gathered out of the First, Second, Third, and Fourth Bookes of Iosephus Acosta, a learned Iesuite, touching the naturall historie of the Heauens, Ayre, Water, and Earth, at the West Indies. Also of their Beasts, Fishes, Fowles, Plants, and other remarkeable rarities of Nature. pag.918.

§. 1. Of the fashion and forme of Heauen, at the new-found World, and of the Ayre and Winds. ibid.

§. 2. Of the Ocean that inuirons the Indies, and of the North and South Seas, their ebbing, flowing, Fishes, fishing, Lakes, Riuers, and Springs. pag.928.

§. 3. Of the qualitie of the Land at the Indies in generall. Properties of Peru, and of new Spaine, and other parts: Of Vulcanes and Earthquakes. pag.935.

§. 4. Of Metals in the Indies, and especially of the Gold and Siluer, and Quick-siluer. pag.941.

§. 5. Of Emeralds, Pearles, Indian Bread, Trees, Fruits, Flowers naturall, and carried thither from Spaine. pag.952.

§. 6. Of Beasts and Fowles in the Indies. pag.962.

Of Fowles that are proper to the Indies, and Venison. pag.965.

CHAP. III.

Extracts of Gonzalo Ferdinando de Ouiedo his Summarie and the generall Historie of the Indies. pag.970.

Of the Mynes of Gold, and the manner of working in them. ibid.

Of the manner of fishing for Pearles. pag.972.

Of the familiaritie which certaine of the Indians haue with the Deuill, and how they receiue answere of him of things to come, and other superstitions. pag.973.

Of diuers particular things, as Wormes, Serpents, Beasts, Fowles, Trees, &c. pag.975.

Of Trees, Fruits, and Plants. pag.981.

Of Reedes or Canes. pag.983.

Of venemous Apples, wherwith they poyson their Arrowes. pag.985.

Of Fishes, and of the manner of fishing. p.986.

Of the increase and decrease (that is) rising and falling of our Ocean Sea, and South Sea, called the Sea of Sur. pag.989.

Of the straight or narrow passage of the Land, lying betweene the North and South Sea, by the which Spices may much sooner and easilier be brought from the Ilands of Molucca into Spaine by the West Ocean, then by that way wherby the Portugals saile into the East India. ibid.

How things that are of one kinde, differ in forme and qualitie, according to the nature of the place where they are engendred or grow, and of the beasts called Tigres. pag.990.

Of the manners and customes of the Indians of the Firme Land, and of their Women. pag.991.

Of the chiefe Ilands, Hispaniola and Cuba. pag.993.

CHAP. IIII.

Mexican Antiquities gathered out of the writings of Iosephus Acosta a learned Iesuite. pag.1000.

§. 1. Of the ancient Inhabitants of new Spain, and of the sixe Linages of the Nauatlacas. Of the Mexican Exodus, and aduentures by the way: the foundation of Mexico, their first King and Tribute. ibid.

§. 2. Of the second King Vitzilouitli; and of his successours and their Acts vntill the reigne of Motezuma their last King. pag.1009.

§. 3. Of the election of great Motezuma, the last King of Mexico: his pompe and manner of gouernment, prodigious fore-warnings, of his ruine, and the Spanish conquest. pag.1018.

CHAP. V.

Of the ancient superstitions of the Mexicans and Indians of America, gathered out of the fifth booke of Iosephus Acosta. pag.1026.

CHAP. VI.

Ciuill Customes and Arts of the Indians taken out of Acostas 6. Booke. pag.1050.

CHAP. VII.

The Historie of the Mexican Nation, described in pictures by the Mexican Author explained in the Mexican language; which exposition translated into Spanish, and thence into English, together with the

Digitized by Google

the said Picture-historie, are heere presented. H. pag.1066
§. 1. The Mexican Chronicle. ibid.
§. 2. The second part of this Booke containing the particular Tributes, which euery Towne subdued payed vnto the Lords of Mexico. pag.1080
§. 3. The third part of this Booke, containeth the priuate behauiour in Marriages, education of Children, and Trades; with the Martiall, Ecclesiasticke, and Ciuill policie of the Mexican people. pag.1102.

CHAP. VIII.

Conqueſt of Mexico and New Spaine, by Hernando Cortes. pag.1118.

CHAP. IX.

Larger Relations of things most remarkeable obserued by the Spaniards at their first comming: Cholallas holies; Popocatepecs ashes. Mutezumas multiforme Magnificence and Maiestie. Mexican Citie and Temple, with other Antiquities gathered out of the Third part of the Historie of Francis Lopez de Gomara. pag.1123.
The Hill called Popocatepec. ibid.
Description of Mexico as it flourished in those times. pag.1131.
Other Mexican Antiquities, Letters, Numbers, Yeeres, Dayes, Weekes, &c. pag.1135.
Their reckoning by numbers. ibid.

The Contents of the Chapters and Paragraphs in the sixth Booke of the Second part of Purchas his PILGRIMS.

CHAP. I.

A Briefe Relation of the seuerall Voyages, vndertaken and performed by the Right Honourable, George, Earle of Cumberland, in his owne person, or at his owne charge, and by his direction: collected out of the Relations and Iournals of credible persons Actors therein. pag.1141.

CHAP. II.

The Voyage to Saint Iohn de Porto Rico, by the Right Honourable, George, Earle of Cumberland, written by himselfe. H. pag.1150.

CHAP. III.

A large Relation of Port Ricco Voyage; written as is reported, by that learned man and reuerend Diuine Doctor Eglambie, his Lordships Chaplaine and Attendant in that Expedion; very much abbreuiated. H. pag.1155.
§. 1. The Ships employed in the Voyage and accidents on the Coasts of Spaine, in the Canaries, and the Nauigation thence to Dominica. ibid.
§. 2. Description of Dominica and the Virgines. Their landing on Port Ricco, March, fights and taking the Towne. pag.1157.
§. 3. The Fort Mora besieged and taken. The Towne described: the Mines. Purpose to hold the place; altered by the death and sickneſſe of manie. pag.1162.
A resolution, which they were to trust to. p.1163.
§. 4. Purpose of returne. Treatie with the Spaniards. His Lordships departure. Description of the Iland, the Beasts, Fruits, Plants, &c. pag.1168.
§. 5. Accidents by Sea in their way to the Azores and there. pag.1174.

CHAP. IIII.

The first Voyages made to diuers parts of America by Englishmen, Sir Sebastian Cabot, Sir Thomas Pert: also of Sir Iohn Hawkins, and Sir Francis Drake, and many others: collected briefly out of Master Camden, Master Hakluit, and other Writers. pag.1177.
A briefe Historie of Sir Francis Drakes Voyages. pag.1179.
A briefe recitall or nomination of Sea-fights, other Englishmens Voyages related at large in the printed Workes of Master Hakluit. pag.1186.

CHAP. V.

The Relation of Peter Carder of Saint Verian in Cornwall, within seuen miles of Falmouth, which went with Sir Francis in his Voyage about the World, begun 1577. who with seuen others in an open Pinnasse or Shallop of fiue tunnes, with eight Oares, was seperated from his Generall by foule weather in the South Sea, in October, Anno 1578. who returning by the Straites of Magellan toward Brasill, were all cast away, saue this one onely aforenamed, who came into England nine yeeres after miraculously, hauing escaped many strange dangers, aswell among diuers Sauages as Christians. H. pag.1187.

CHAP. VI.

Master Thomas Candish his Discourse of his fatall and disastrous Voyage towards the South Sea, with his many disaduentures in the Magellan Straits, and other places; written with his owne owne hand to Sir Triſtram Gorges his Executor. H. pag.1192.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. VII.

The admirable aduentures and ſtrange fortunes of Maſter Anthonie Kniuet, which went with Maſter Thomas Candiſh in his ſecond Voyage to the South Sea, 1591. H. P. pag.1201.

§. 1. What befell in their Voyage to the Straits, and after, till hee was taken by the Portugals. ibid.

§. 2. Anthonie Kniuet his comming to the R. of Ianero, and vſage amongſt the Portugals, and Indians: his diuers Trauels thorow diuers Regions of thoſe parts. pag.1207.

§. 3. His ſtrange trauels with twelue Portugals, whom the Sauages did eate. His life with the Canibals: and after that with the Portugals, from whom hee fleeth to Angola, is brought backe, and after manifold chances, is ſhipped to Liſbone. pag.1216.

§. 4. The diuers Nations of Sauages in Braſill, and the adioyning Regions: their diuerſities of Conditions, States, Rites, Creatures, and other thinges remarkeable, which the Author obſerued in his many yeeres manifold Peregrinations. pag.1225.

The Giants of Port Deſire, and Inhabitants of Port Famine: alſo Angola, Congo, and Maſſangana, and Angica, Countries of Africa. pag.1232.

§. 5. The deſcription of diuers Riuers, Ports, Harbours, Ilands of Braſill: for inſtruction of Nauigators. pag.1237.

CHAP. VIII.

Relations of Maſter Thomas Turner who liued the beſt part of two yeeres in Braſill, &c. which I receiued of him in conference touching his Trauels. pag.1243.

CHAP. IX.

The taking of Saint Vincent and Puerto Bello, by Captaine William Parker of Plimouth, the ſeuenth of February, 1601. ibid.

CHAP. X.

Certayne Notes of a Voyage made by Dauid Middleton into the Weſt Indies with Captaine Michael Geare, Ann. Dom. 1601. H. pag.1246.

CHAP. XI.

The Deſcription of the Ile of Trinidad, the rich Countrey of Guiana, and the mightie Riuer of Orenoco, written by Francis Sparrey, left there by Sir Walter Raileigh, 1595. and in the end taken by the Spaniards and ſent Priſoner into Spaine, and after long Captiuitie got into England by great ſute. H. pag.1247.

CHAP. XII.

Captaine Charles Leigh his Voyage to Guiana, and plantation there. H. pag.1250.

CHAP. XIII.

A true Relation of the traiterous Maſſacre of the moſt part of threeſcore and ſeuen Engliſh men, ſet on Land out of a Ship of Sir Oliph Leagh, bound for Guiana, in Santa Lucia, an Iland of the Weſt Indie, the three and twentieth of Auguſt, written by Iohn Nicol. H. P. pag.1255.

CHAP. XIIII.

The Relation of Maſter Iohn Wilſon of Wanſteed in Eſſex, one of the laſt tenne that returned into England from Wiapoco in Guiana, 1606. H. pag.1260.

CHAP. XV.

Part of a Treatiſe written by Maſter William Turner, ſonne to Doctor Turner of London a Phyſitian, touching the former Voyage. H. pag.1265

CHAP. XVI.

A Relation of a Voyage to Guiana performed by Robert Harcourt of Stanton Harcourt, in the Countie of Oxford Eſquire. pag.1267.

The names of the Riuers falling into the Sea from Amazones, to Deſſequebe, and of the ſeuerall Nations inhabiting thoſe Riuers. pag.1282.

CHAP. XVII.

A Relation of the habitation and other Obſeruations of the Riuer of Marwin, and the adioyning Regions. pag.1283.

Riuers from Brabiſſe to the Amazones. p.1286

CHAP. XVIII.

A Deſcription and Diſcouerie of the Riuer of Amazons, by William Davies Barber Surgeon of London. pag.1287.

The

The Contents of the Chapters and Paragraphs in the Seuenth Booke of the second part of Purchas his PILGRIMS.

CHAP. I.

A Treatise of Brasill, written by a Portugall which had long liued there. H. pag.1289.

§. 1. Of the beginning and originall of the Indians of Brasill, and of their Customes, Religions, and Ceremonies. ibid.

§. 2. Of their manner of killing and eating of Humane flesh: and of their creating Gentlemen. pag.1294.

§. 3. Of the diuersitie of Nations and Languages, and of the Soyle and Climate. pag.1297.

§. 4. Of the Beasts, Land-serpents, and Fowles. pag.1301.

Of Land-snakes and Serpents. pag.1303.

Of the Fowles that are in the Land, and are thereon sustained. pag.1304.

§. 5. Of the Brasilian Trees for Fruit, Medicine, and other vses; and their Herbes of rare operations. pag.1306.

Of the Herbes that yeeld Fruit, and are eaten. pag.1309.

§. 6. Of the Fishes that swimme in the Salt-water: also Shel-fishes, Trees, and Fowles of the Sea: of Riuers and the Creatures which liue therein; and the Beasts and Plants brought thither out of Portugall. pag.1312.

Birds that doe feed, and are found in the Salt-water. pag.1316.

Fresh-water Snakes (and Creatures of the water.) pag.1317.

Of the Beasts, Trees and Herbes, that came from Portugall, and doe grow and breed in Brasill. pag.1318.

CHAP. II.

Articles touching the dutie of the Kings Maiestie our Lord, and to the common good of all the estate of Brasill. Written (as is thought) by the Author of the former Treatise. H. pag.1320.

CHAP. III.

Extracts out of the Historie of Iohn Lerius a Frenchman, who liued in Brasill with Monsieur Villagagnon, Anno 1557. and 58. H.P. pag.1325

§. 1. Of the Beasts, and other liuing Creatures, and Plants of Brasill. ibid.

§. 2. Of the Warre, Battailes, Fortitude, and Weapons of the Barbarians: and of their Religion. pag.1333.

§. 3. Of their Marriages, Education of Children, Policie, Hospitalitie, Diseases, Physitians, Funerals and Lamentations. pag.1341.

CHAP. IIII.

The Trauels of Hulderike Schnirdel in twentie yeeres space, from 1534. to 1554. abbreuiated. H.P. pag.1347.

§. 1. His Voyage vp the Riuer of Plate, foundation of Townes, their expedition vp the Riuer of Parana and Parabol; the people of these parts. ibid.

§. 2. Martin Eyollas made Generall. Gabreros comming: Scherues Voyage. Nunner his insolence. Diuers people and accidents described. pag.1354.

§. 3. A long and tronblesome March from Assumption into Peru. The Authors returne. p.1362

CHAP. V.

The Obseruations of Sir Richard Hawkins, Knight, in his Voyage into the South Sea. An. Dom. 1593. once before published, now reuiewed and corrected by a written Copie, illustrated with Notes, and in diuers places abbreuiated. pag.1367.

§. 1. What happened in this Voyage before they came neere the Æquinoctiall Line, with diuers accidentall Discourses vsefull for Nauigators. pag.1367

§. 2. Considerations of Currents: the Scorbute: fire in Ships; Fishes which attend them: Sea-hawking and Hunting: their comming to Brasill and obseruations thereof. pag.1372.

§. 3. Tharltons treacherie: Discouerie of Land vnknowne: Entrance of the Straits, accidents therein, and description thereof: Diuers occasionall discourses for the furtherance of Marine and Naturall knowledge. pag.1382

§. 4. Entrance into the South Sea; Discouerie of the South parts of the Straits to bee but Ilands, by Sir Francis Drake (which the Hollanders ascribe to Maire and Schouten.) Of the Iland Mocha, and the parts adioyning. pag.1391.

§. 5. The Vice-roy sends an Armado against the English; which vieweth them and returneth: is againe set foorth: their fight; the English yeeld vpon composition: diuers Martiall discourses. pag.1398.

CHAP. VI.

A briefe Note written by Master Iohn Ellis, one of the Captaines with Sir Richard Hawkins, in his Voyage through the Strait of Magelan, begun the

Digitized by Google

the ninth of Aprill, 1593. concerning the said Srait, and certaine places, on the Coast and Inland of Peru. pag. 1415.

CHAP. VII.

A briefe Relation of an Englishman which had beene thirteene yeeres Captiue to the Spaniards in Peru, &c. H. pag. 1418.

CHAP. VIII.

The Relation of Alexandro Vrsino concerning the Coast of Terra Firma, and the secrets of Peru, and Chili, where hee had lined foure and thirtie yeeres. H. ibid.

CHAP. IX.

Notes of the West Indies, gathered out of Pedro Ordonnes de Ceuallos, a Spanish Priest, his larger Obseruations. pag. 1420.

CHAP. X.

Relation of the new discouerie in the South Sea, made by Pedro Fernandez Giros Portugez, 1609. with his Petitions to the King, one English-ed, another in Spanish. pag. 1422.

The Copie of a Petition presented to the King of Spaine, by Captaine Peter Ferdinand de Quir, touching the discouerie of the fourth part of the World, called Terra Australis Incognita: and of the great riches and fertilitie of the same: Printed with license in Siuill, An. 1610. ibid.

A Note of Australia del Espiritu Santo. written by Master Hakluyt. pag. 1432.

CHAP. XI.

The Historie of Lopez Vaz a Portugall (taken by Captaine Withrington at the Riuer of Plate, Anno 1586. with this discourse about him) touching American places, discoueries and occurrents; abridged. ibid.

CHAP. XII.

Briefe extracts translated out of Ierom Benzos three bookes of the New World, touching the Spaniards cruell handling of the Iudians, and the effects thereof. pag. 1448.

CHAP. XIII.

Obseruations of things most remarkable, collected out of the first part of the Commentaries Royall, written by the Inca Garcilasso de la Vega, Naturall of Cozco, in nine bookes; Of the Originall, Liues, Conquests, Lawes and Idolatries of the Incas, or ancient Kings of Peru. pag. 1454.

CHAP. XIIII.

The suppliment of the Historie of the Incas, briefly collected out of the Authors second part, or Generall Historie of Peru. pag. 1485.

CHAP. XV.

Briefe Notes of Francis Pizarro his conquest of Peru, written by a Spanish Captaine therein employed. pag. 1489.

CHAP. XVI.

The Conquest of Peru and Cusco, called New Castile, and directed to the Emperour by Francisco de Xeres, Secretarie to Captaine Francis Pizarro which conquered them. pag. 1491.

CHAP. XVII.

Relations of occurrents in the Conquest of Peru after Fernand Pizarros departure, written at Xauxa, July 15. 1534. by Pedro Sancho, Notarie Generall in the Kingdoms of New Castile, and Secretarie to the Gouernour Fr. Pizarro, subscribed by the said Gouernour himselfe and others, and sent to his Maiestie. pag. 1494.

The Contents of the Chapters and Paragraphs in the Eight Booke of the Second part of Purchas his PILGRIMS.

CHAP. I.

A True Relation of Aluaro Nunez, called Capo di Vacca, concerning that which happened to the Fleet in India, whereof Pamphilo Naruaez was Gouernour, from the yeere 1527. vntill the yeere 1536. who returned vnto Siuill with three of his Companions onely: Translated out of Ramusio, and abbreuiated. H.P. pag. 1499.

§. 1. Their Fleet; and admirall and vnheard of Tempest: their entrance into Florida: the Lakes, troublesome passages, incounters, disastrous successe, building Boates for returne. ibid.

§. 2. Misery pursues them at Sea, and betrayes them to the Indians: their miserable Liues and Death. pag. 1506.

§. 3. Their flight from the Indians to others, wonderfull cures, backe and belly cares: their trauels thorow the Country, and hungry aduentures. Diuers peoples and their Customes. pag. 1514.

§. 4. They come to the South Sea, and trauell through a plentifull Countrey, till they meet with Spaniards;

Digitized by Google

Spaniards; whose crueltie & manner of conuerting Sauages is related. pag.1524.

CHAP. II.

Ferdinando de Soto his Voyage to Florida, and Discouerie of the Regions in that Continent: with the Trauels of the Spaniards foure yeeres together therein, and the accidents which befell them: written by a Portugall of the Companie, and heere contracted. pag.1532.

§ 1. Sotos entrance into Florida, taking of Iohn Ortiz one of Naruaz his Companie, comming to Paracoſſie, and diuers other Caciques, with accidents in the way. ibid.

§. 2. Sotos further Diſcoueries in Florida, and manifold Aduentures till hee came to Tulla. pag.1528.

§. 3. His departure to Autiamque, Ortiz his Death and diſaſters following: Soto takes thought and dyeth. Moſcoſco ſucceedeth. They leaue Florida, and arriue at Panuco. pag 1550.

CHAP. III.

Diuers expeditions from Mexico, and other parts of New Spaine and New Biskay, eſpecially to the more Northerly parts of America, by diuers Spaniards in a hundred yeeres ſpace. pag.1556.

§. 1. The Relation of Nunno di Guſman written to Charles the fift Emperour; tranſlated out of Ramuſios third Tome, and abridged. ibid.

§. 2. The Voyage of Frier Marco de Nica, Don Fr. Vaſquez de Coronado, Don Antonio de Eſpeio, and diuers into New Mexico, and the adioyning Coaſts and Lands. pag.1560.

§. 3. Extracts out of certaine Letters of Father Martin Perez of the Societie of IESVS, from the new Miſſion of the Prouince of Cinoloa, to the Fathers of Mexico, dated in the moneth of December, 1591. With a Letter added, written 1605. of later Diſcoueries. H. pag.1562.

A Letter written from Valladolid by Ludouicus Tribaldus Toletus, to Maſter Richard Hakluyt, tranſlated out of Latine, touching Iuan de Onate his Diſcoueries in New Mexico, fiue hundred leagues to the North from the Old Mexico. H. pag.1565.

The Prologue of the Biſhop Frier Bartholomew de las Caſas, or Caſaus, to the moſt high and mightie Prince, Our Lord Don Philip Prince of Spaine. pag 1568.

CHAP. IIII.

A briefe Narration of the deſtruction of the Indies by the Spaniards: written by a Frier Bartholmew de las Caſas, a Spaniard, and Biſhop of Chiapa in America. pag.1569.

Of the Ile of Hiſpaniola. pag.1570.

Of the two Iles Saint Iohn, & Iamayca p.1573

Of the Ile of Cuba. ibid.

Of Terra Firma, or the firme Land. pag.1575

Of the Prouince of Nicaragua. pag.1576.

Of New Spaine. pag.1577.

Of the Prouince and Realme of Guatimala. pag.1579.

Of New Spaine, and Panuco, and Xaliſco. pag.1580.

Of the Realme of Yucatan. pag.1581.

Of the Prouince of Saint Martha. pag.1583.

Of the Prouince of Carthagene. pag.1584.

Of the Coaſt of Pearles, and of Paria, and of the Ile of the Trinitie. ibid.

Of the Riuer Yuia pari. pag.1587.

Of the Realme of Veneſuela. ibid.

Of the Prouinces of the firme Land, or quarter that is called Florida. pag.1589.

Of the Riuer of La plata. ibid.

Of the mightie Realmes, and large Prouinces of Peru. ibid.

Of the new Realme of Granado. pag.1591.

Part of a Letter written by one which ſaw things mentioned. pag.1596.

The ſumme of the Diſputation betweene Frier Bartholomew de las Caſas or Caſaus, and Doctor Sepulueda. pag.1601.

CHAP. V.

Notes of Voyages and Plantations of the French in the Northerne America: both in Florida and Canada. pag.1603.

CHAP. VI.

The Voyage of Samuel Champlaine of Brouage, made vnto Canada, in the yeere 1603. dedicated to Charles de Montmorencie, &c. High Admirall of France. H. pag.1605

CHAP. VII.

The Patent of the French King to Monſieur de Monts, for the Inhabiting of the Countries of La Cadia Canada, and other places in New France. pag.1619.

The Voyage of Monſieur de Monts into New France, written by Marke Leſcarbot. pag.1620.

CHAP. VIII.

Collections out of a French Booke, called Additions to Noua Francia; contayning the Accidents there, from the yeere 1607. to 1611. pag.1642.

CHAP. IX.

The firſt Plantation of Engliſh Colonies in Virginia, briefly mentioned. pag.1645.

CHAP. X.

The Relation of Captaine Goſnols Voyage to the North part of Virginia, begun the ſix and twentieth of March, Anno 42. Elizabethæ Reginæ 1602. and deliuered by Gabriel Archer, a Gentleman in the

Digitized by Google

the said Voyage. H. pag.1647.

CHAP. XI.

Notes of the same Voyage, taken out of a Tractate written by Iames Rosier to Sir Walter Raileigh, and of Maces Voyage to Virginia. pag.1651.

CHAP. XII.

A Voyage set out from the Citie of Bristoll, at the charge of the chiefest Merchants and Inhabitants of of the said Citie, with a small Ship and a Barke for the Discouery of the North part of Virginia, in the yeere 1603. vnder the command of mee Martin Pringe. H. pag.1654.

A Relation of the voyage made to Virginia, in the Elizabeth of London, a Barke of fiftie tunnes by Captaine Bartholmew Gilbert, in the yeere 1603. Written by Master Thomas Canner, a Gentleman of Barnards Inne, his Companion in the same Voyage. H. pag.1656.

CHAP. XIII.

Extracts of a Virginian Voyage, made An.1604. by Captaine George Waymouth, in the Archangell. Set foorth by the Right Honourable Henrie Earle of South-hampton, and the Lord Thomas Arundel, written by Iames Rosier. H.P. pag.1659

CHAP. XIIII.

The description of the Ilands of Azores, or the Flemish Ilands, taken out of Linschoten, with certaine occurrents, and English acts. pag.1667.

Of certaine notable and memorable Accidents that happened during my continuance in Tercera : in which are related many English Fleets, Sea-fights, and Prizes. pag.1672.

The Contents of the Chapters and Paragraphs in the Ninth Booke of the Second part of Purchas his PILGRIMS.

CHAP. I.

PArt of the first Patent granted by his Maiestie for the Plantation of Virginia, Aprill the tenth 1606. pag.1683.

CHAP. II.

Obseruations gathered out of a Discourse of the Plantation of the Southerne Colonie in Virginia by the English, 1606. Written by that Honorable Gentleman Master George Percy. H. pag.1684

CHAP. III.

The Description of Virginia by Captaine Iohn Smith, inlarged out of his written Notes. pag.1691.

Of such things which are naturall in Virginia, and how they vse them. pag.1694.

Of their planted Fruits in Virginia, and how they vse them. pag.1696.

Of the naturall Inhabitants of Virginia, and their Customes. pag.1697.

Of their Religion. pag.1701.

Of the manner of the Virginians Gouernment. pag.1703.

CHAP. IIII.

The proceedings of the English Colonie in Virginia, taken faithfully out of the writings of Thomas Studley, Cape-Merchant, Anas Todkill, Doctor Russell, Nathaniel Powell, William Phetiplace, and Richard Pot, Richard Wiffin, Tho. Abbay, Tho. Hope; and since enlarged out of the Writings of Captaine Iohn Smith, principall Agent and Patient in these Virginian Occurrents, from the beginning of the Plantation 1606. till Anno 1610. somewhat abbreuiated. pag.1705.

The Proceedings and Accidents, with the second supply. pag.1719.

CHAP. V.

A Letter of Master Gabriel Archer, touching the Voyage of the Fleet of Ships, which arriued at Virginia, without Sir Thomas Gates, and Sir George Summers, 1609. H. pag.1733.

CHAP. VI.

A true reportorie of the wracke, and redemption of Sir Thomas Gates, Knight; vpon, and from the Ilands of the Bermudas : his comming to Virginia, and the estate of that Colonie then, and after, vnder the Gouernment of the Lord La Warre, July 15.1610. written by Wil. Strachy. Esq; H.p.1734

§. 1. A most dreadfull Tempest (the manifold deaths whereof are heere to the life described) their Wracke on Bermuda, and the description of those Ilands. pag.1734.

§. 2. Actions and Occurrents whiles they continued in the Ilands : Rauens sent for Virginia; Diuers Mutinies; Paine executed : Two Pinnaces built. pag.1742.

§. 3. Their departure from Bermuda and arriuall in Virginia : Miseries there, departure and returne vpon the Lord La Warres arriuing. Iames Towne described. pag.1747.

§. 4. The Lord La Warres beginnings and proceedings in Iames Towne, Sir Thomas Gates sent into England; his and the Companies testimony of Virginia, and cause of the late miseries. pag.1754.

CHAP. VII.

The Voyage of Captaine Samuell Argal, from Iames

Digitized by Google

Iames Towne in Virginia, to seeke the Ile of Bermuda, and missing the same, his putting ouer toward Sagadahoc and Cape Cod, and so backe againe to Iames Towne, begun the nineteenth of Iune, 1610. H. pag.1758.

CHAP. VIII.

A short Relation made by the Lord. De la Warre, to the Lords and others of the Counsell of Virginia, touching his vnexpected returne home, and afterwards deliuered to the generall Assembly of the said Companie, at a Court holden the 25. of Iune, 1611. Published by authority of the said Counsell. pag.1762.

CHAP. IX.

A Letter of Sir Samuell Argoll, touching his Voyage to Virginia, and Actions there: Written to Master Nicholas Hawes. Iune, 1613. H. p.1764.

CHAP. X.

Notes of Virginian Affaires in the gouernment of Sir Thomas Dale and of Sir Thomas Gates, till Ann.1614. taken out of Master Ralph Hamor (Secretarie to the Colonie) his Booke. pag.1766.

CHAP. XI.

A Letter of Sir Thomas Dale, and another of Master Whitakers, from Iames Towne in Virginia, Iune 18. 1614. And a peece of a Tractate, written by the said Master Whitakers from Virginia the yeere before. pag.1768.

To the R. and my most esteemed friend, M. D.M. at his house at F. Ch. in London. ibid.

Part of a Tractate written at Henrico in Virginia, by M. Alexander Whitaker, Minister to the Colonie there, which then gouerned by Sir Thomas Dale, 1613. pag.1771.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Lotterie: Sir Thomas Dales returne the Spaniards in Virginia. Of Pocahuntas and Tomocomo: Captaine Yerdley and Captaine Argoll (both since Knighted) their Gouernment; the Lord La Warres Death, and other occurrents till Anno 1619. pag.1773.

CHAP. XIII.

The estate of the Colonie, Anno 1620. and Master Dermers Letter to me from Virginia, touching his Voyage for the South Sea. pag.1775.

A Note of the Shipping, Men, and Prouisions sent to Virginia, by the Treasurer and Companie, in the yeere 1619. pag.1776.

CHAP. XIIII.

A true Relation of a Sea-fight betweene two great and well appointed Spanish Ships, or Men of Warre; and an English ship, called the Margaret and Iohn, or the Black Hodge, going for Virginia. pag.1780.

CHAP. XV.

Virginian affaires since the yeere 1620. till this present 1624. pag.1783.

§. 1. A Note of the shipping, Men, and prouisions sent and prouided for Virginia, by the Right Honourable Henry Earle of South-hampton, and the Companie, and other priuate Aduenturers, in the yeere 1621. &c. With other Occurrents then published by the Companie. ibid.

Ships and People. ibid.

And for the benefit of the Plantations these things following haue beene here done this yeere. ibid.

Other Occurrents of note. ibid.

Gifts. pag.1784.

§. 2. Newes from Virginia in Letters sent thence 1621. partly published by the Company, partly transcribed from the Originals, with Letters of his Maiestie, and of the Companie touching Silke-workes. pag.1787.

His Maiesties gracious Letter to the Earle of South-hampton, Treasurer, and to the Counsell and Companie of Virginia here: commanding the present setting vp of Silke-workes, and planting of Vines in Virginia. pag.1787.

§. 3. The barbarous Massacre committed by the Sauages on the English Planters, March the two and twentieth, 1621. after the English account. pag.1788.

§. 4. A Note of prouisions necessarie for euery Planter or personall Aduenturer to Virginia: and accidents since the Massacre. pag.1791

CHAP. XVI.

English Voyages to the Summer Ilands; Henry Mays Shipwracke there 1593. The first Colony sent 1612. pag.1793.

A Copie of the Articles which Master R. More, Gouernour Deputie of the Summer Ilands, propounded to the Company that were there with him to be subscribed vnto, which both hee and they subscribed the second of August, in his House, Anno 1612. which about the same time hee sent into England, to the Worshipfull Companie of the Aduenturours. pag.1795.

CHAP. XVII.

Relations of Summer Ilands, taken out of Master Richard Norwood, his Map and Notes added thereto, printed 1622. The Historie of the Creatures growing or liuing therein, being inlarged out of Captaine Smiths written Relations. pag.1796.

CHAP. XVIII.

Extracts out of Captaine Iohn Smiths Historie of Bermudas, or Summer Ilands; touching the English acts and occurrents there from the beginning of the Plantation. pag.1801.

CHAP. XIX.

Briefe intelligence from Virginia by Letters, a supplement of French-Virginian occurrants, and their supplantation by Sir Samuel Argal, in right of

Digitized by Google

of the Englisſh plantation. pag.1805.

CHAP. XX.

Virginias Verger: or a diſcourſe ſhewing the benefits which may grow to this Kingdome from American-Engliſh Plantations, and ſpecially thoſe of Virginia and Summer Ilands. p.1809.

The Contents of the Chapters and Paragraphs in the tenth Booke of the Second part of Purchas his PILGRIMS.

CHAP. I.

A Briefe Relation of the diſcouerie and plantation of New England: and of ſundrie accidents therein occurring, from the yeer of our Lord 1607. to this preſent 1622. publiſhed by the Preſident and Councell, and dedicated to the Princes Highneſſe, here abbreuiated. p.1827.

CHAP. II.

The voyage of Maſter Henrie Challons, intended for the North plantation of Virginia, 1606. taken by the way, and ill vſed by Spaniards: written by Iohn Stoneman Pilot. H. pag.1832.

CHAP. III.

Extracts of a Booke of Captaine Iohn Smith, printed 1622. called New Englands trialls, and continuing the ſtorie thereof, with Motiues to the buſineſſe of fiſhing there. pag.1837.

An Abſtract of Letters ſent from the Colonie in New England, Iuly ſixteene, 1622. p.1840.

CHAP. IIII.

A Relation or Iournall of a plantation ſetled at Plimoth in New England, and proceedings thereof; printed 1622. and here abbreuiated. p.1842.

CHAP. V.

Good newes from New England: or, a relation of things remarkable in that Plantation; written by E. Winſlow, and here abbreuiated. pag.1853.

CHAP. VI.

Noua Scotia. The Kings Patent to Sir William Alexander Knight, for the plantation of New Scotland in America, and his proceedings therein; with a deſcription of Mawooſhen for better knowledge of thoſe parts. pag.1871.

The deſcription of the Country of Mawooſhen, diſcouered by the Engliſh, in the yeere 1602. 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9. H. pag.1873.

CHAP. VII.

The beginning of the Patent for New-found-land; and the plantation there made by the Engliſh, 1610. deliuered in a Letter dated thence from M. Guy, to M. Slany: Alſo of the weather the three firſt winters, and of Captaine Weſton: with other remarkable occurrents. H. pag.1876.

Maſter Iohn Guy his Letter to Maſter Slany Treaſurer, and to the Counſell of the New-found-land plantation. pag.1877.

To Maſter Iohn Slany Treaſurer, and others of the Councell, and Companie of the New-found-land plantation, the 29. of Iuly, 1612. pag.1879.

CHAP. VIII.

Captaine Richard Whitbournes voyages to New-found-land, and obſeruations there, and thereof; taken out of his printed booke. p.1882.

A Relation of New-found-land. pag.1884.

CHAP. IX.

The names of diuers honourable perſons and others, who haue vndertaken to helpe to aduance his Maieſties plantation in the New-found-land: written by the ſaid R. W. with extracts of certaine Letters written from thence. pag.1888.

The ſecond Part of the tenth Booke.

CHAP. X.

D*Iuers warlike Fleets ſet forth to Sea againſt the* Spaniards, by our Engliſh Debora, Queene Elizabeth, of glorious memorie: Her manifold deliueries and victories. pag.1891.

CHAP. XI.

The Popes Bull, the King of Spaines preparations, the Duke of Medinas Expedition, the Duke of Parmas Forces, for the inuaſion of England: diuers Sea fights twixt the Engliſh and Spaniſh Fleets, the Sea flight of the Spaniſh, and miſerable diſaſters in their returne. Their lyes. The Queenes religious triumph. pag.1895.

Squadron of the Galeons of Portugall. p.1898.

Don Alonſo Peres de Guſman, the good Duke of Medina, Sidonia, Countie of Nebla, Marqueſſe of Caſheſhe in Africa, Lord of the Citie of Saint Lucar, Captaine Generall of the Occian Sea, of the Coaſt of Andaluzia, and of this Armie of his Maieſtie, and Knight of the honorable Order of the golden Fleece. pag.1902.

The true relation of the ſucceſſe of the Catholike Armie

Digitized by Google

Armie against their Enemies, by the Letters of the Post-master of Logrono of the fourth of September, and by Letters from Roan of the 31. of August, and by Letters from Paris of the Kings Embassadour there: wherein hee declareth the imprisonment of Francis Drake, and other great Nobles of England, and how the Queene is in the field with an Armie, and of a certaine mutinie which was amongst the Queenes Armie, with the successe of the said Catholike Armie since they entred in the Groyne, till they came on the Coast of England, with two Ballets compounded by Christouer Brauo, a blinde man of Cordowa, printed with licence by Gabriel Ramos Beiarano printer. pag. 1913.

CHAP. XII.

A discourse of the Portugall voyage, Anno 1589. Sir Iohn Norris and Sir Francis Drake Generalls, written (as is thought) by Colonell Antonie Wingfield, imployed in the same voyage, formerly published by his friend to whom it was written; and here abbreuiated. pag. 1914.

CHAP. XIII.

A briefe and true report of the Honourable voyage vnto Cadiz, 1596. of the ouerthrow of the Kings Fleet, and of the winning of the Citie, with other accidents, gathered out of Meteranus, Master Hackluyt, and others. pag. 1927.

CHAP. XIIII.

The voyage to the Iles of Azores, vnder the conduct of the Right Honorable Earle of Essex, 1597. pag. 1935.

§. 1. The relation thereof by the said Earle, and other Commissioners. ibid.

§. 2. A larger relation of the said Iland voyage, written by Sir Arthur Gorges Knight, collected in the Queenes ship called the Wast Spite, wherein he was then Captaine; with Marine and Martiall discourses added according to the occurrences. pag. 1938.

The Conclusion of the Worke, with some later aduertisements touching his Maesties care for Virginia. pag. 1980.

Digitized by Google

Maps and Peeces cut in Braſse or VVood in the laſt ten Bookes.

America p.857
America Meridionalis p.882
America Septentrionalis p.853
Map of the Arctike Pole p.625
Boruſsia or Pruſsia p.626
Hondius his Map of China p.361
Purchas his Map of China p.402
Denmarke p.622
England p.1980
869 Florida p.689
Great Britaine and Ireland p.1981
472 Greenland p.468
Vlphilas Gottick letters p.658
Hiſpaniola p.861
Iſsland p.644
Lithuania p.629
Liuonia p.627
Magellan Streight p.900
Mexican hieroglyphic. hiſtor. cut in 65. peeces p.1067, &c. to 1117.
Moſcouia p.778
Norwegia p.620
Polonia p.630
Ruſsia p.220
Noua Scotia p.1874
New Spaine p.871
Tartaria p.234
Taurica Cherſoneſus p.632
Virginia p.1692

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

PEREGRINATIONS AND DISCOVERIES; IN THE REMOTEST NORTH AND EAST PARTS OF ASIA, CALLED TARTARIA AND CHINA.

THE FIRST BOOKE.

CHAP. I.

The Iournall of Frier WILLIAM DE RVBRVQVIS, a French-man, of the Order of the Minorite Friers, vnto the East parts of the World, Anno Dom. 1253.

TO the most Excellent and most Christian Lord, Lewis, by Gods grace the Renowmed King of France, Frier William de Rubruk, * the meanest of the Minorites Order, wisheth health and continuall Triumph in Christ.

It is written in the Booke of Ecclesiasticus, concerning the Wiseman: He shall trauell into forreine Countries, and good and euill shall hee try in all things. The very same Action (my Lord and King) haue I atchieued: howbeit, I wish, that I haue done it like a wise man, and not like a Foole. For many there bee, that performe the same Action which a wise man doth, not wisely but more vndiscreetly: of which number I feare my selfe to bee one. Notwithstanding, howsoeuer I haue done it, because you commanded mee, when I departed from your Highnesse, to write all things vnto you, which I should see among the Tartars, and you wished me also that I should not feare to write long Letters, I haue done as your Maiestie enioyned me: yet with feare and reuerence, because I want words and Eloquence sufficient to write vnto so great a Maiestie. Bee it knowne therefore vnto your Sacred Maiestie, that in the yeare of our Lord 1253. about the Nones of May, wee entred into the Sea of Pontus, which the Bulgarians call the great Sea. It containeth in length (as I learned of certayne Merchants) one thousand and eight miles, and is in a manner, diuided into two parts. About the midst thereof are two Prouinces, one towards the North, and another towards the South. The South Prouince is called Synopolis, and it is the Castle and Port of the Soldan of Turkie: but the North Prouince is called of the Latines, Gasaria: of the Greekes, which inhabit vpon the Sea shoare thereof, it is called Cassaria, that is to say, Cesaria. And there are certayne headlands stretching forth into the Sea towards Synopolis, Also, there are three hundred miles of distance

* Master Hak. had published part of this Author, but the whole worke being found in Benet Colledge Library in Cambridg, I thought fit to communicate it to the World; it being neuer published, as I thinke, in any Language. I begin with the Tartars, as being knowne to these parts before the Chinois: yea, China or Mangi became knowne by them.

Ecclus 39. v. 3. Cassaria, or Gasaria.

ſtance betweene Synopolis and Caſſaria. Inſomuch that the diſtance from thoſe points or places to Conſtantinople, in length and breadth is about ſeuen hundred miles: and ſeuen hundred miles alſo from thence to the Eaſt, namely, to the Countrey of Hiberia, which is a Prouince of Georgia. At the Prouince of Gaſaria or Caſſaria, wee arriued, which Prouince is, in a manner, three ſquare, hauing a Citie on the Weſt part thereof called Kerſoua, wherein Saint Clement ſuffered Martyrdome. And ſayling before the ſaid Citie, wee ſaw an Iland, in which a Church is ſaid to be built by the hands of Angels. But about the midſt of the ſaid Prouince toward the South, as it were, vpon a ſharpe Angle or Point, ſtandeth a Citie called Soldaia, directly againſt Synopolis. And there doe all the Turkie Merchants, which Traffique into the North Countries, in their Iourney outward, arriue, and as they returne home-ward alſo from Ruſſia, and the ſaid Northerne Regions, into Turkie. The foreſaid Merchants tranſport thither Ermines and gray Furres, with other rich and coſtly Skinnes. Others carrie Clothes made of Cotton or Bombaſt, and Silke, and diuers kinds of Spices. But vpon the Eaſt part of the ſaid Prouince ſtandeth a Citie called Matriga, where the Riuer Tanais diſchargeth his ſtreames into the Sea of Pontus, the mouth whereof is twelue miles in breadth. For this Riuer, before it entreth into the Sea of Pontus, maketh a little Sea, which hath in breadth and length ſeuen hundred miles, and it is in no place thereof aboue ſixe paces deepe, whereupon great Veſſels cannot ſaile ouer it. Howbeit the Merchants of Conſtantinople, arriuing at the foreſaid Citie of * Matarta, ſend their Barkes vnto the Riuer of Tanais to buy dryed fiſhes, Sturgeons, Thoſſes, Barbils, and an infinite number of other fiſhes. The foreſaid Prouince of Caſſaria, is compaſſed in with the Sea on three ſides thereof: namely, on the Weſt-ſide, where Kerſoua, the Citie of Saint Clement is ſituate: on the South-ſide the Citie of Soldaia, whereat we arriued: on the Eaſt-ſide Maricandis, and there ſtands the Citie of Matriga, vpon the mouth of the Riuer Tanais. Beyond the ſaid mouth ſtandeth Zikia, which is not in ſubiection vnto the Tartars: alſo the people called Sueui and Hiberi, towards the Eaſt, who likewiſe are not vnder the Tartars Dominion. Moreouer, towards the South, ſtandeth the Citie of Trapeſunda, which hath a Gouernour proper to it ſelfe, named Guydo, being of the Linage of the Emperours of Conſtantinople, and is ſubiect vnto the Tartars. Next vnto that is Synopolis, the Citie of the Soldan of Turkie, who likewiſe is in ſubiection vnto them. Next vnto theſe lyeth the Countrey of Vaſtacius, whoſe Sonne is called Aſtar, of his Grand-father by the Mothers ſide, who is not in ſubiection. All the Land from the mouth of Tanais Weſt-ward as farre as Danubius is vnder their Iuriſdiction. Yea, beyond Danubius alſo, towards Conſtantinople, Valakia, which is the Land of Aſſanus, and Bulgaria minor, as farre as Solania, doe all pay Tribute vnto them. And beſides the Tribute impoſed, they haue alſo, of late yeares, exacted of euery houſhold an Axe, and all ſuch Corne as they found lying on heapes. We arriued therefore at Soldaia, the twelfth of the Kalends of Iune. And diuers Merchants of Conſtantinople, which were arriued there before vs, reported that certayne Meſſengers were comming thither from the Holy Land, who were deſirous to trauell vnto Sartach. Notwithſtanding, I my ſelfe had publikely giuen out vpon Palme Sunday within the Church of Sancta Sophia, that I was not your nor any other mans Meſſenger, but that I trauelled vnto thoſe Infidels according to the Rule of our Order. And being arriued, the ſaid Merchants admoniſhed me to take diligent heed what I ſpake: becauſe they hauing reported mee to bee a Meſſenger, if I ſhould ſay the contrary, that I were no Meſſenger, I could not haue free paſſage granted vnto me. Then I ſpake after this manner vnto the Gouernours of the Citie, or rather vnto their Lieutenants, becauſe the Gouernours themſelues were gone to pay Tribute vnto Baatu, and were not as yet returned. We heard of your Lord Sartach (quoth I) in the Holy Land, that he was become a Chriſtian: and the Chriſtians were exceeding glad thereof, and eſpecially the moſt Chriſtian King of France, who is there now in Pilgrimage, and fighteth againſt the Saracens, to redeeme the holy places out of their hands: wherefore I am determined to goe vnto Sartach, and to deliuer vnto him the Letters of my Lord the King, wherein hee admoniſheth him concerning the good and commoditie of all Chriſtendome. And they receiued vs with gladneſſe, and gaue vs entertaynment in the Cathedrall Church. The Biſhop of which Church was with Sartach, who told me many good things concerning the ſaid Sartach, which afterward I found to be nothing ſo. Then put they vs to our choice, whether wee would haue Carts and Oxen, or packe-horſes to tranſport our Carriages. And the Merchants of Conſtantinople aduiſed me, not to take Carts of the Citizens of Soldaia, but to buy couered Carts of mine owne, (ſuch as the Ruſſians carry their Skinnes in) and to put all our Carriages, which I would daily take out, into them: becauſe, if I ſhould vſe Horſes, I muſt be conſtrayned at euery baite to take downe my Carriages, and to lift them vp againe on ſundry Horſes backes: and beſides, that I ſhould ride a more gentle pace by the Oxen drawing the Carts. Wherefore, contenting my ſelfe with their euill counſell, I was trauelling vnto Sartach two monethes, which I could haue done in one, if I had gone by Horſe. I brought with me from Conſtantinople (being by the Merchants aduiſed ſo to doe) pleaſant Fruits, Muskadell Wine, and delicate Bisket bread to preſent vnto the Gouernours of Soldaia, to the end I might obtayne free paſſage: becauſe they looke fauourably vpon no man which commeth with an empty hand. All which things I beſtowed in one

Gaſaria.

Soldaia.

The Citie of Matriga.

* Matriga.

Zikia.

of

of my Carts (not finding the Gouernours of the Citie at home) for they told me, if I could carry them to Sartach, that they would be most acceptable vnto him. Wee tooke our Iourney therefore about the Kalends of Iune, with foure couered Carts of our owne, and with two other which we borrowed of them, wherein we carried our bedding to rest vpon in the night, and they allowed vs fiue Horses to ride vpon. For there were iust fiue persons in our company: namely, I my selfe and mine associate Frier Bartholomew of Cremona, and Goset the Bearer of these Presents, the man of God Turgemannus, and Nicolas my Seruant, whom I bought at Constantinople, with some part of the Almes bestowed vpon me. Moreouer, they allowed vs two men, which draue our Carts and gaue attendance vnto our Oxen and Horses. There bee high Promontories on the Sea shoare from Kersona vnto the mouth of Tanais. Also there are fortie Castles betweene Kersona and Soldaia, euery one of which almost haue their proper Languages: amongst whom there were many Gothes, who spake the Dutch Tongue. Beyond the said Mountaynes towards the North, there is a most beautifull Wood growing on a Plaine full of Fountaynes and Freshets. And beyond the Wood there is a mightie plaine Champian, continuing fiue dayes Iourney vnto the very extreamitie and borders of the said Prouince North-ward, and there it is a narrow Isthmus or neck Land, hauing Sea on the East and West sides thereof, insomuch that there is a Ditch made from one Sea vnto the other. In the same Plaine (before the Tartars sprang vp) were the Comanians wont to inhabit, who compelled the fore-said Cities and Castles to pay Tribute vnto them. But when the Tartars came vpon them, the multitude of the Comanians entred into the fore-said Prouince, and fled all of them, euen vnto the Sea shoare, beeing in such extreme Famine, that they which were aliue, were constrayned to eate vp those which were dead: and (as a Merchant reported vnto me who saw it with his owne eyes) that the liuing men deuoured and tore with their teeth, the raw flesh of the dead, as Dogges would gnaw vpon Carrion. Towardes the Borders of the said Prouince there bee many great Lakes: vpon the Bankes whereof are Salt-pits or Fountaynes, the water of which so soone as it entreth into the Lake, becommeth hard Salt like vnto Ice. And out of those Salt-pits Baatu and Sartach haue great Reuenues: for they repayre thither out of all Russia, for Salt: and for each Cart loade they giue two Webbes of Cotton, amounting to the value of halfe an Yperpera. There come by Sea also many Shippes for Salt, which pay Tribute euery one of them according to their burthen. The third day after wee were departed out of the Precincts of Soldaia, wee found the Tartars. Amongst whom beeing entred, me thought I was come into a new World. Whose life and manners I will describe vnto your Highnesse as well as I can.

Frier Bartholomew de Cremona.

The necke of Taurica Chersonesus.

The Tartars.

Chap. 2. Of the Tartars, and of their houses.

THey haue in no place any setled Citie to abide in, neither know they of the Celestiall Citie to come. They haue diuided all Scythia among themselues, which stretcheth from the Riuer Danubius euen vnto the rising of the Sunne. And euery of their Captaines, according to the great or small number of his people, knoweth the bounds of his Pastures, and where hee ought to feed his Cattell Winter and Summer, Spring and Autumne. For in the Winter they descend vnto the warme Regions South-ward. And in the Summer they ascend vnto the cold Regions North-ward. In Winter when Snow lyeth vpon the ground, they feed their Cattell vpon Pastures without water, because then they vse Snow in stead of water. Their houses wherein they sleepe, they ground vpon a round foundation of Wickers artificially wrought and compacted together: the Roofe whereof consisteth (in like sort) of Wickers, meeting aboue into one little Roundell, out of which Roundell ascendeth vpward a necke like vnto a Chimney, which they couer with white Felt, and oftentimes they lay Morter or white Earth vpon the said Felt, with the powder of bones, that it may shine white. And sometimes also they couer it with blacke Felt. The said Felt on the necke of their house, they doe garnish ouer with beautifull varietie of Pictures. Before the doore likewise they hang a Felt curiously painted ouer. For they spend all their coloured Felt, in painting Vines, Trees, Birds, and Beasts thereupon. The said houses they make so large, that they contayne thirtie foot in breadth. For measuring once the breadth betweene the wheele-ruts of one of their Carts, I found it to bee twentie feet ouer: and when the house was vpon the Cart, it stretched ouer the wheeles on each side fiue feet at the least. I told two and twentie Oxen in one Teame, drawing an house vpon a Cart, eleuen in one order according to the breadth of the Cart, and eleuen more before them: the Axle-tree of the Cart was of an huge bignesse like vnto the Mast of a Ship. And a fellow stood in the doore of the house, vpon the fore-stall of the Cart driuing forth the Oxen. Moreouer, they make certayne foure square Baskets of small slender Wickers as bigge as great Chests: and afterward, from one side to another, they frame an hollow lidde or couer of such like Wickers, and make a doore in the fore-side thereof. And then they couer the said Chest or little House with black Felt, rubbed ouer with Tallow or Sheeps Milke to keep the rain from soking through, which they deck likewise with painting or with feathers. And in such Chests they put their whole Houshold-stuffe and Treasure. Also the same Chests they doe strongly binde vpon other Carts, which are drawne with Camels, to the end they may wade through Riuers. Neither doe they at any time take downe the said Chests from off their Carts. When they, take downe their dwelling houſes, they turne the doores alwayes to the South: and next of all they place the Carts laden with their Cheſts, here and there, within halfe a ſtones caſt of the Houſe: inſomuch that the Houſe ſtandeth betweene two rankes of Carts, as it were, betweene two Walles. The Matrones make for themſelues moſt beautifull Carts, which I am not able to deſcribe vnto your Maieſty but by Pictures only: for I would right willingly haue painted all things for you, had my Skill beene ought in that Art. One rich Moal or Tartar hath two hundred, or one hundred ſuch Carts with Cheſts. Duke Baatu hath ſixteene Wiues, euery one of which hath one great houſe, beſides other little houſes, which they place behind the great one, being as it were Chambers for their Maidens to dwell in. And vnto euery of the ſaid houſes doe belong two hundred Carts. When they take their houſes from off the Carts, the principall Wife placeth her Court on the Weſt Frontier, and ſo all the reſt in their order: ſo that the laſt Wife dwelleth vpon the Eaſt Frontier: and one of the ſaid Ladies Courts is diſtant from another about a ſtones caſt. Whereupon the Court of one rich Moal or Tartar will appeare like vnto a great Village, very few men abiding in the ſame. One woman will guide twenty or thirty Carts at once, for their Countries are very plaine, and they binde the Carts with Camels or Oxen, one behind another. And there ſits a Wench in the fore-moſt Cart driuing the Oxen, and all the reſidue follow on a like pace. When they chance to come at any bad paſſage, they let them looſe, and guide them ouer one by one: for they goe a ſlow pace, as faſt as a Lambe or an Oxe can walke.

Digitized by Google

The benefit of a Painter in ſtrange Countries.

Chap. 3. Of their Beds, Puppets, Images and drinking Pots.

HAuing taken downe their houſes from off their Carts, and turning the doores South-ward, they place the bed of the Maſter of the houſe, at the North part thereof. The womens place is alwayes on the Eaſt-ſide, namely, on the left hand of the good man of the houſe ſitting vpon his bed with his face South-wards: but the mens place is vpon the Weſt-ſide, namely, at the right hand of their Maſter. Men when they enter into the houſe, will not in any caſe hang their Quiuers on the womens ſide. Ouer the Maſters head there is alwayes an Image, like a Puppet, made of Fealt, which they call the Maſters Brother: and another ouer the head of the good Wife or Miſtris, which they call her Brother, being faſtened to the wall: and aboue betweene both of them, there is a little leane one, which is, as it were the keeper of the whole houſe. The good Wife or Miſtris of the houſe placeth aloft at her beds feet, on the right hand, the Skinne of a Kid ſtuffed with Wooll or ſome other matter, and neere vnto that a little Image or Puppet looking towards the Maidens and women. Next vnto the doore alſo on the womens ſide, there is another Image with a Cowes Vdder, for the women that milke the Kine. For it is the dutie of their women to milke Kine. On the other ſide of the doore next vnto the men, there is another Image with the Vdder of a Mare, for the men which milke Mares. And when they come together to drinke and make merrie, they ſprinkle part of their Drinke vpon the Image which is aboue the Maſters head: afterward vpon other Images in order: then goeth a Seruant out of the houſe with a cup full of Drinke ſprinkling it thrice towards the South, and bowing his knee at euery time: and this is done for the honour of the Fire. Then performeth he the like Superſtitious Idolatry towards the Eaſt, for the honour of the Ayre: and then to the Weſt for the honour of the water: and laſtly, to the North in the behalfe of the Dead. When the Maſter holdeth a cup in his hand to drinke, before hee taſteth thereof, hee powreth his part vpon the ground. If he drinketh ſitting on Horſe-backe, he powreth out part thereof vpon the necke or mane of his Horſe before he himſelfe drinketh. After the Seruant aforeſaid hath ſo diſcharged his cups to the foure quarters of the World, hee returneth into the houſe: and two other Seruants ſtand ready with two cups, and two baſons, to carrie Drinke vnto their Maſter and his Wife, ſitting together vpon a bed. And if hee hath more Wiues then one, ſhee with whom he ſlept the night before, ſitteth by his ſide the day following: and all his other Wiues muſt that day reſort vnto the ſame houſe to drinke: and there is the Court holden for that day: the gifts alſo which are preſented that day, are layd vp in the Cheſts of the ſaid Wife. And vpon a bench ſtands a Veſſell of Milke, or of other Drinke and drinking cups.

Idols.

Chap. 4. Of their drinkes, and how they prouoke one another to drinking.

IN Winter time they make excellent drinke of Rice, of Mill, and of Honey, being well and high coloured like Wine. Alſo they haue Wine brought vnto them from farre Countries. In Summer time they care not for any drinke, but Coſmos. And it ſtandeth alwayes within the entrance of his doore, and next vnto it ſtands a Minſtrell with his Fiddle. I ſaw there no ſuch Citernes and Vials as ours commonly bee, but many other Muſicall Inſtruments which are not vſed among vs. And when the Maſter of the houſe begins to drinke, one of his ſeruants crieth out with a loude voyce, Ha, and the Minſtrell playes vpon his Fiddle. And when they make any great ſolemne feaſt, they all of them clap their hands, and dance to the noyſe of Muſicke, the men before their Maſter, and the women before their Miſtris. And when the Maſter hath drunke, then cryes out his ſeruant as before, and the Minſtrell ſtayeth his Muſicke. Then drinke they all round both men and women, and ſometimes they carowſe for the victorie very filthily and drunkenly. Alſo when they will prouoke any man, they pull him by the Eares to the drinke, and ſo lug and draw him ſtrongly to ſtretch out his throat clapping their hands, and dancing dancing before him. Moreouer, when some of them will make great feasting and reioycing, one of the compame takes a full Cup, and two other stand, one on his right hand, and another on his left, and so they three come singing to the man who is to haue the Cup reached vnto him, still singing and dancing before him: and when he stretcheth forth his hand to receiue the Cup, they leape suddenly backe, returning againe as they did before, and so hauing deluded him thrice or foure times by drawing backe the Cup, vntill he be merrie, and hath gotten a good appetite, then they giue him the Cup, singing and dancing, and stamping with their feet, vntill he hath done drinking.

They vſe the like cuſtome in Florida.

Digitized by Google

Chap. 5. Of their food and victuals.

CONcerning their food and victuals, be it knowne vnto your Highnesse, that they doe, without all difference or conception, eate all their dead Carions. And amongst so many droues it cannot be, but some Cattell must needs die. Howbeit in Summer, so long as their Cosmos, that is, their Mares milke lasteth, they care not for any food. And if they chance to haue an Oxe or an Horse die, they drie the flesh thereof: for cutting it into thinne slices, and hanging it vp against the Sunne and the wind, it is presently dried without Salt, and also without stench or corruption. They make better Puddings of their Horses then of their Hogs, which they eate being new made: the rest of the flesh they reserue vntill Winter. They make of their Oxe skins great bladders or bags, which they doe wonderfully drie in the smoake. Of the hinder part of their Horse hides, they make very fine Sandals and Pantofles. They giue vnto fiftie or an hundred men, the flesh of one Ramme to eate. For they mince it in a bowle with Salt and Water (other Sauce they haue none) and then with the poynt of a Knife, or a little Forke which they make for the same purpose (such as we vse to take roasted Peares and Apples out of Wine withall) they reach vnto euery one of the companie a morsell or twaine, according to the multitude of Guests. The Master of the house, before the Rams flesh be distributed, first of all himselfe taketh thereof, what he pleaseth. Also, if he giueth vnto any of the companie a speciall part, the receiuer thereof must eate it alone, and must not impart ought thereof vnto any other. Not being able to eate it vp all, hee carries it with him, and deliuers it vnto his boy, if hee be present, to keepe it: if not, hee puts it vp into his Saptargat, that is to say, his foure square Budget, which they vse to carrie about with them, for the sauing of all such prouision, & wherein they lay vp their bones, when they haue not time to gnaw them throughly, that they may burnish them afterward, to the end that no whit of their food may come to nought.

Drying of flesh in the wind.

Chap. 6. How they make their drinke, called Cosmos.

THeir drinke, called Cosmos, which is Mares milke, is prepared after this manner. They fasten a long line vnto two posts standing firmly in the ground, and vnto the same line they tye the young Foales of those Mares, which they meane to milke. Then come the Dammes to stand by their Foales gently suffering themselues to be milked. And if any of them be too vnruly, then one takes her Foale, and puts it vnder her, letting it sucke a while, and presently carrying it away againe, there comes another man to milke the said Mare. And hauing gotten a good quantitie of this Milke together (being as sweet as Cowes milke) while it is new they powre into a great bladder or bag, and they beat the said bag with a piece of wood made for the purpose, hauing a Club at the lower end like a mans head, which is hollow within: and so soone as they beat vpon it, it begins to boyle like new Wine, and to be sowre and sharpe of taste, and they beate it in that manner till Butter come thereof. Then taste they thereof, and being indifferently sharpe they drinke it: for it biteth a mans tongue like the Wine of Raspes, when it is drunke. After a man hath taken a draught thereof, it leaueth behind it a taste like the taste of Almond-milke, and goeth downe very pleasantly, intoxicating weake braynes: also it causeth vrine to be auoyded in great measure. Likewise Caracosmos, that is to say, Blacke Cosmos, for great Lords to drinke, they make on this manner. First, they beat the said Milke so long till the thickest part thereof descend right downe to the bottome like the lees of white Wine, and that which is thinne and pure remayneth aboue, being like vnto Whay or white Must. The said lees and dregs being very white, are giuen to seruants, and will cause them to sleepe exceedingly. That which is thinne and cleere their Masters drinke: and in very deede it is maruellous sweet and wholsome liquor. Duke Baatu hath thirtie Cottages or Granges, within a dayes iourney of his abiding place: euery one of which serueth him daily with the Caracosmos of an hundred Mares milke, and so all of them together euery day with the Milke of three thousand Mares, besides white Milke which other of his Subiects bring. For euen as the Husbandmen of Syria bestow the third part of their fruits, and carrie it vnto the Courts of their Lords, euen so doe they their Mares milke euery third day. Out of their Cowes milke they first churne Butter, boyling the which Butter vnto a perfect decoction, they put it into Rams skins, which they reserue for the same purpose. Neither doe they salt their Butter: and yet by reason of the long seething, it putrifieth not: and they keepe it in store for Winter. The churn-milke which remayneth of the Butter, they let alone till it be as sowre as possibly it may be, then they boyle it, and in boyling it is turned all into Curds, which Curds they drie in the Sun, making them as hard as the drosse of Iron: and this kind of food also they store vp in Sachels Caracosmos.

Duke Baatu.

Store of Mares, and Mares milke.

Digitized by Google

againſt Winter. In the Winter ſeaſon when Milke fayleth them, they put the foreſaid Curds (which they call Gry-vt) into a bladder, and powring hot water thereinto, they beat it luſtily till they haue reſolued it into the ſaid Water, which is thereby made exceedingly ſowre, and that they drinke in ſtead of Milke. They are very ſcrupulous, and take diligent heed that they drinke not faire Water by it ſelfe.

Chap. 7. Of the beaſts which they eat of their garments, and of their manner of hunting.

GReat Lords haue Cottages or Granges towards the South, from whence their Tenants bring them Millet and Meale againſt Winter. The poorer ſort prouide themſelues of ſuch neceſſaries, for the exchange of Rams, and of other beaſts skins. The Tartars ſlaues fill their bellies with thicke water, and are therewithall contented. They will neither eate Miſe with long tayles, nor any kind of Miſe with ſhort tayles. They haue alſo certaine little beaſts, called by them, Sogur, which lie in a Caue twentie or thirtie of them together, all the whole Winter ſleeping there for the ſpace of ſixe moneths: and theſe they take in great abundance. There are alſo a kind of Conies hauing long tayles like vnto Cats: and on the outſide of their tayles grow blacke and white haires. They haue many other ſmall beaſts good to eat, which they know and diſcerne right well. I ſaw no Deere there, and but a few Hares, but a great number of Roes. I ſaw wild Aſſes in great abundance, which be like vnto Mules. Alſo I ſaw another kind of beaſt, called Artak, hauing in all reſemblance the bodie of a Ram, and crooked hornes, which are of ſuch bigneſſe, that I could ſcarce lift vp a paire of them with one hand: and of theſe hornes they make great drinking cups. They haue Faulcons, Girfaulcons, and other Hawkes in great plentie: all which they carrie vpon their right hands: and they put alwaies about their Faulcons neckes a ſtring of Leather, which hangeth downe to the midſt of their gorges, by the which ſtring, when they caſt them off the fiſt at the game, with their left hand they bow downe the heads and breaſts of the ſaid Hawkes, leſt they ſhould be toſſed vp and downe, and beaten with the wind, or leſt they ſhould ſoare too high. Wherefore they get a great part of their victuals by hunting and hawking. Concerning their garments and attire, be it knowne vnto your Maieſtie, that out of Cataya, and other Regions of the Eaſt, out of Perſia alſo, and other Countries of to South, there are brought vnto them Stuffes of ſilke, Cloth of gold, and Cotton cloth, which they weare in time of Summer. But out of Ruſſia, Moxell, Bulgaria the greater, and Paſcatir, that is, Hungaria the greater, and out of Kerſis (all which are Northerne Regions, and full of Woods) and alſo out of many other Countries of the North, which are ſubiect vnto them, the Inhabitants bring them rich and coſtly skins of diuers ſorts (which I neuer ſaw in our Countries) wherewithall they are clad in Winter. And alwaies againſt Winter they make themſelues two Gownes, one with the furre inward to their skinne, and another with the furre outward, to defend them from wind and ſnow, which for the moſt part are made of Wolues skins, or Foxe skins, or elſe of Papions. And when they ſit within the houſe, they haue a finer Gowne to weare. The poorer ſort make their vpper Gowne of Dogs or of Goats skins. When they goe to hunt for wild beaſts, there meets a great companie of them together, and enuironing the place round about, where they are ſure to find ſome game, by little and little they approach on all ſides, till they haue gotten the wild beaſts into the midſt, as it were into a circle, and then they diſcharge their Arrowes at them. Alſo they make themſelues Breeches of skins. The rich Tartars ſometimes furre their Gownes with pelluce or ſilke ſhag, which is exceeding ſoft, light, and warme. The poorer ſort doe line their clothes with Cotton cloth, which is made of the fineſt wooll they can picke out, and of the courſer part of the ſaid wooll, they make Felt to couer their houſes, and their chiſts, and for their bedding alſo. Of the ſame wooll, being mixed with one third part of Horſe haire, they make all their cordage. They make alſo of the ſaid Felt couerings for their ſtooles, and caps to defend their heads from the weather: for all which purpoſes they ſpend a great quantitie of their wooll. And thus much concerning the attire of the men.

Our Falconers vſe the left fiſt. Another ſtrange cuſtome, which I leaue to bee ſcanned by Falconers themſelues.

Great expenſe of Wooll.

Chap. 8. Of the faſhion which the Tartars vſe in cutting their haire, and of the attire of their women.

THe men ſhaue a plot foure ſquare vpon the crownes of their heads, and from the two formoſt corners they ſhaue, as it were, two ſeames downe to their temples: they ſhaue alſo their temples, and the hinder part of their head, euen vnto the nape of the necke: likewiſe they ſhaue the fore-part of their ſcalpe downe to their foreheads, and vpon their foreheads they leaue a locke of haire reaching downe vnto their eye-browes: vpon the two hindermoſt corners of their heads, they haue two lockes alſo, which they twine and braid into knots and ſo bind and knit them vnder each eare one. Moreouer, their womens garments differ not from their mens, ſauing that they are ſomewhat longer. But on the morrow after one of their women is married, ſhee ſhaues her ſcalpe from the middeſt of her head downe to her forehead, and weares a wide garment like vnto the hood of a Nunne, yea larger and longer in all parts then a Nunnes hood, beeing open before, and girt vnto them vnder the right ſide. For heerein doe the Tartars differ from the Turkes: becauſe the Turkes faſten their garments to their bodies on the left ſide: but the Tartars alwaies on the right ſide. They haue alſo an ornament for their heads, which they call, Botta, beeing made of the barke of a Tree, or of ſome ſuch other lighter ter matter as they can finde, which by reaſon of the thickneſſe and roundneſſe thereof cannot be holden but in both hands together: and it hath a ſquare ſharpe ſpire riſing from the top thereof, being more then a cubite in length; and faſhioned like vnto a Pinacle. The ſaid Botta they couer all ouer with a piece of rich Silke, and it is hollow within: and vpon the midſt of the ſaid ſpire or ſquare top, they put a bunch of Quils, or of ſlender Canes a cubite long and more: and the ſaid bunch on the top thereof, they beautifie with Peacockes Feathers, and round about all the length thereof, with the Feathers of a Malards taile, and with precious ſtones alſo. Great Ladies weare this kind of ornament vpon their heads, binding it ſtrongly with a certaine Hat or Coyfe, which hath a hole in the crowne, fit for the ſpire to come through it: and vnder the foreſaid ornament they couer the haires of their heads, which they gather vp round together from the hinder part thereof to the crowne, and ſo lap them vp in a knot or bundell within the ſaid Botta, which afterward they bind ſtrongly vnder their throats. Hereupon when a great company of ſuch Gentlewomen ride together, and are beheld a farre off, they ſeeme to be Souldiers with Helmets on their heads, carrying their Lances vpright: for the ſaid Botta appeareth like an Helmet with a Lance ouer it. All their Women ſit on horſe-backe, beſtriding their Horſes like men: and they binde their hoods or gownes about their waſtes with a ſky-coloured Silke Skarfe, and with another Skarfe they gird it aboue their breaſts: and they binde alſo a piece of white Silke like a Mufler or Maske vnder their eyes, reaching downe vnto their breaſts. Theſe Gentlewomen are exceeding fat, and the leſſer their noſes be, the fairer they are eſteemed: they dawbe ouer their ſweet faces with greaſe too ſhamefully: and they neuer lye in bed for their trauell of child-birth.

Digitized by Google

Chap. 9. Of the duties inioyned vnto the Tartarian Women, and of their labors, and alſo of their marriages.

THe duties of Women are to driue Carts: to lay their houſes vpon Carts, and to take them downe againe; to milke Kine; to make Butter and Gry-vt, to dreſſe skinnes, and to ſew them, which they vſually ſew with thread made of ſinewes, for they diuide ſinewes in ſlender threads, and then twine them into one long thread. They make Sandals and Socks, and other Garments. Howbeit they neuer waſh any apparell: for they ſay, that God is then angry, and that dreadfull thunder will enſue, if waſhed garments be hanged forth to dry; yea, they beate ſuch as waſh, and take their garments from them. They are wonderfully afraid of thunder: for in the time of thunder they thruſt all ſtrangers out of their houſes, and then wrapping themſelues in blacke Felt, they lye hidden therein, till the thunder be ouer-paſt. They neuer waſh their diſhes or bowles: yea, when their fleſh is ſodden, they waſh the platter wherein it muſt be put, with ſcalding hot broath out of the pot, and then powre the ſaid broath into the pot againe. They make Felt alſo, and couer their houſes therewith. The duties of the Men are, to make Bowes and Arrowes, Stirrops, Bridles and Saddles: to build Houſes and Carts, to keepe Horſes, to milke Mares, to churne Coſmos and Mares Milke, and to make bags wherein to put it: they keepe Camels alſo, and lay burthens vpon them. As for Sheepe and Goats, they tend and milke them, as well the Men as the Women. With Sheeps Milke thicked and ſalted, they dreſſe and tan their Hides. When they will waſh their hands or their heads, they fill their mouthes full of Water, and ſpowting it into their hands by little and little, they ſprinkle their haire, and waſh their heads therewith. As touching marriages, your Highneſſe is to vnderſtand, that no man can haue a Wife among them till he hath bought her: whereupon ſometimes their Maids are very ſtale before they be married, for their Parents alwaies keepe them till they can ſell them. They keepe the firſt and ſecond degrees of Conſanguinitie inuiolable, as wee doe: but they haue no regard of the degrees of Affinitie: for they will marrie together, or by ſucceſſion, two Siſters. Their Widowes marrie not at all, for this reaſon; becauſe they beleeue, that all who haue ſerued them in this life, ſhall doe them ſeruice in the life to come alſo. Whereupon they are perſwaded, that euery Widow after death ſhall returne vnto her owne Husband. And here-hence ariſeth an abominable and filthy cuſtome among them; namely, that the Sonne marrieth ſometimes all his Fathers Wiues except his owne Mother: For the Court or Houſe of the Father or Mother, falleth by inheritance alwaies to the younger Sonne. Whereupon he is to prouide for all his Fathers Wiues, becauſe they are part of his Inheritance as well as his Fathers poſſeſſions. And then if he will, he vſeth them for his owne Wiues: for he thinkes it no iniurie or diſparagement vnto himſelfe, although they returne vnto his Father after death. Therfore when any man hath bargained with another for a Maid, the Father of the ſaid Damoſell makes him a feaſt: in the meane while ſhe fleeth vnto ſome of her Kinſfolkes to hide her ſelfe. Then ſaith her Father vnto the Bridegroome: Loe, my Daughter is yours, take her whereſoeuer you can finde her. Then he and his friends ſeeke for her till they can find her, and hauing found her, he muſt take her by force and carry her (as it were) violently vnto his owne houſe.

Chap. 10. Of their execution of Iuſtice and Iudgment: and of their deaths and burials.

COncerning their Lawes, or their Execution of Iuſtice, your Maieſtie is to bee aduertiſed, that when two men fight, no third man dare intrude himſelfe to part them. Yea, the Father dare not help his owne Sonne. But he that goes by the woſt, muſt appeale vnto the Court of his Lord. And whoſoeuer elſe offereth him any violence after appeale, is put to death. But he

Digitized by Google

he must goe presently without all delay: and he that hath suffered the iniury, carrieth him (as it were) captiue. They punish no man with sentence of death, vnlesse he bee taken in the deed doing, or confesseth the same. But being accused by the multitude, they put him vnto extreame torture, to make him confesse the truth. They punish murther with death, and Carnall copulation also with any other besides his owne. By his owne, I meane his Wife or his Maid Seruant, for he may vse his Slaue as hee listeth himselfe. Hainous theft also or felony they punish with death. For a light theft, as namely, for stealing of a Ram, the partie (not being apprehended in the deed doing, but otherwise detected) is cruelly beaten. And if the Executioner layes on an hundred strokes, hee must haue an hundred staues; namely, for such as are beaten vpon sentence giuen in the Court. Also counterfeit Messengers, because they feine themselues to be Messengers, when as indeed they are none at all, they punish with death. Sacrilegious persons they vse in like manner (of which kind of Malefactors your Maiestie shall vnderstand more fully hereafter) because they esteeme such to bee Witches. When any man dyeth, they lament and howle most pittifully for him: and the said Mourners are free from paying any tribute for one whole yeare after. Also, whosoeuer is present at the house where any one growne to mans estate lyeth dead, he must not enter into the Court of Mangu-Can, till one whole yeare be expired. If it were a child deceased, hee must not enter into the said Court till the next moneth after. Neere vnto the graue of the partie deceased, they alwaies leaue one Cottage. If any of their Nobles (being of the stocke of Chingis, who was their first Lord and Father) deceaseth, his Sepulchre is vnknowne. And alwaies about those places where they interre their Nobles, there is one house of men to keepe the Sepulchres. I could not learne that they vse to hide Treasures in the graues of their dead. The Comanians build a great Toombe ouer their dead, and erect the Image of the dead partie thereupon, with his face towards the East, holding a drinking Cup in his hand before his Nauell. They erect also vpon the Monuments of rich men, Pyramides, that is to say; little sharpe houses or pinacles: and in some places I saw mightie Towers made of Bricke, in other places Pyramides made of stones, albeit there are no stones to be found thereabout. I saw one newly buried, in whose behalfe they hanged vp sixteene Horse-hides, vnto each quarter of the world foure, betweene certaine high posts: and they set besides his Graue Cosmos for him to drinke, and flesh to eate: and yet they said that he was baptized. I beheld other kinds of Sepulchres also towards the East: namely, large floores or pauements made of stone, some round, and some square, and then foure long stones pitched vpright, about the said pauement towards the foure Regions of the world. When any man is sicke, he lyeth in his bed, and causeth a signe to be set vpon his house, to signifie that there lyeth a sicke person there, to the end that no man may enter into the said house: whereupon none at all visit any sicke partie but his seruant onely. Moreouer, when any one is sicke in their great Courts, they appoint Watch-men to stand round about the said Court, who will not suffer any person to enter within the Precincts thereof. For they feare least euill spirits or winds should come together with the parties that enter in. They esteeme of Soothsayers, as of their Priests.

Sepulchres.

Chap. 11. Of our first entrance among the Tartars, and of their ingratitude.

AND being come amongst those barbarous people, me thought (as I said before) that I was entred into a new world: for they came flocking about vs on horse-backe, after they had made vs a long time to awaite for them sitting in the shadow, vnder their blacke carts. The first question which they demanded, was, whether we had euer beene with them heretofore, or no? And giuing them answere that we had not, they began impudently to beg our victuals from vs. And we gaue them some of our Bisket and Wine, which wee had brought with vs from the Towne of Soldaia. And hauing drunke off one Flagon of our Wine, they demanded another; saying, That a man goeth not into the house with one foote. Howbeit we gaue them no more, excusing our selues that we had but a little. Then they asked vs, whence we came, and whither we were bound? I answered them with the words aboue mentioned: that wee had heard concerning Duke Sartach, that hee was become a Christian, and that vnto him our determination was to trauell, hauing your Maiesties Letters to deliuer vnto him. They were very inquisitiue to know whether I came of mine owne accord, or whither I were sent? I answered, that no man compelled me to come, neither had I come, vnlesse I my selfe had beene willing: and that therefore I was come according to mine owne will, and to the will of my Superior. I tooke diligent heed neuer to say that I was your Maiesties Embassadour. Then they asked what I had in my Carts; whether it were Gold or Siluer, or rich Garments to carrie vnto Sartach? I answered, that Sartach should see what we had brought, when we were once come vnto him, and that they had nothing to doe to aske such questions, but rather ought to conduct me vnto their Captaine, and that he, if he thought good, should cause me to be directed vnto Sartach: if not, that I would returne. For there was in the same Prouince one of Baatu his Kinsmen, called Scacati, vnto whom my Lord the Emperour of Constantinople had written Letters of request, to suffer me to passe through his Territorie. With this answere of ours they were satisfied, giuing vs Horses and Oxen, and two men to conduct vs. Howbeit, before they would allow vs the foresaid necessaries for our iourney, they made vs to awaite a long while, begging our bread for their

Duke Sartach.

Digitized by Google

their young Brats, wondring at all things which they ſaw about our Seruants, as their Kniues, Gloues, Purſes and Points, and deſiring to haue them. I excuſed my ſelfe that wee had a long way to trauell, and that we muſt in no wiſe ſo ſoone depriue our ſelues of things neceſſary, to finiſh ſo long a iourney. Then they ſaid, that I was a very varlet. True it is, that they tooke nothing by force from me: howbeit they will beg that which they ſee very importunatly and ſhameleſly. And if a man beſtow ought vpon them, it is but coſt loſt, for they are thankleſſe wretches. They eſteeme themſelues Lords, and thinke that nothing ſhould be denyed them by any man. If a man giues them nought, and afterwards ſtands in need of their ſeruice, they will do right nought for him. They gaue vs of their Cowes Milke to drink, after the Butter was churned out of it, being very ſowre, which they call Apram. And ſo we departed from them. And in very deed it ſeemed to me that we were eſcaped out of the hands of Diuels. On the morrow we were come vnto the Captaine. From the time wherein we departed from Soldaia, till wee arriued at the Court of Sartach, which was the ſpace of two moneths, we neuer lay in Houſe or Tent, but alwaies vnder the ſtarry Canopie, and in the open Aire, or vnder our Carts. Neither yet ſaw we any Village, nor any mention of building where a Village had beene, but the graues of the Comanians, in great abundance. The ſame euening our guide which had conducted vs, gaue vs ſome Coſmos. After I had drunke thereof, I ſweat moſt extreamely for the noueltie and ſtrangeneſſe, becauſe I neuer dranke of it before. Notwithſtanding, me thought it was very ſauory, as indeed it was.

ON the morrow after we met with the Carts of Scacatai laden with houſes, and me thought that a mightie Citie came to meete me. I wondred alſo at the great multitude of huge Droues of Oxen, and Horſes, and at the Flockes of Sheepe. I could ſee but a few men that guided all theſe matters: whereupon I inquired how many men hee had vnder him, and they told me that he had not aboue fiue hundred in all, the one halfe of which number we were come paſt, as they lay in another Lodging. Then the Seruant which was our Guide told mee, that I muſt preſent ſomewhat vnto Scacatai: and ſo he cauſed vs to ſtay, going himſelfe before to giue notice of our comming. By this time it was paſt three of the clocke, and they vnladed their houſes neere vnto a certayne water: And there came vnto vs his Interpreter, who being aduertiſed by vs that we were neuer there before, demanded ſome of our victuals, and wee yeelded vnto his requeſt. Alſo hee required of vs ſome garment for a Reward, becauſe hee was to interpret our Sayings vnto his Maſter. Howbeit, we excuſed our ſelues as well as we could. Then hee asked vs, what we would preſent vnto his Lord: And we tooke a flagon of Wine, and filled a Maund with Bisket, and a Platter with Apples and other Fruits. But he was not contented therewith, becauſe we brought him not ſome rich garment. Notwithſtanding, wee entred ſo into his preſence with feare and baſhfulneſſe. Hee ſate vpon his bed holding a Citron in his hand, and his Wife ſate by him: who (as I verily thinke) had cut and pared her Noſe betweene the Eyes, that ſhe might ſeeme to be more flat and ſaddle-noſed: for ſhe had left her ſelfe no Noſe at all in that place, hauing anoynted the very ſame place with a blacke Oyntment, and her Eye-browes alſo: which ſight ſeemed moſt vgly in our Eyes. Then I rehearſed vnto him the ſame words, which I had ſpoken in other places before. For it ſtood vs in hand to vſe one and the ſame ſpeech in all places. For we were well-fore-warned of this circumſtance by ſome which had beene amongſt the Tartars, that we ſhould neuer vary in our Tale. Then I beſought him, that he would vouchſafe to accept that ſmall gift at our hands, excuſing my ſelfe that I was a Monke, and that it was againſt our profeſſion to poſſeſſe Gold, or Siluer, or precious Garments, and therefore that I had not any ſuch thing to giue him, howbeit he ſhould receiue ſome part of our victuals in ſtead of a bleſſing. Hereupon he cauſed our Preſent to be receiued, and immediately diſtributed the ſame among his men, who were met together for the ſame purpoſe, to drinke and make merry. I deliuered alſo vnto him the Emperour of Conſtantinople his Letters (this was eight dayes after the Feaſt of Aſcenſion) who ſent them forth-with to Soldaia, to haue them interpreted there: for they were written in Greeke, and he had none about him that was skilfull in the Greeke Tongue. He asked vs alſo whether we would drinke any Coſmos, that is to ſay, Mares Milke: (For thoſe that are Chriſtians among them, as namely, the Ruſſians, Grecians, and Alanians, who keepe their owne Law very ſtrictly, will in no caſe drinke thereof, yea, they account themſelues no Chriſtians after they haue once drunke of it, and their Prieſts reconcile them vnto the Church, as if they had renounced the Chriſtian Faith.) I gaue him anſwere, that wee had as yet ſufficient of our owne to drinke, and that when our drinke fayled vs, we muſt be conſtrayned to drinke ſuch as ſhould bee giuen vnto vs. Hee enquired alſo what was contayned in our Letters, which your Maieſtie ſent vnto Sartach? I anſwered: that they were ſealed vp, and that there was nothing contayned in them, but good and friendly words. And he asked what words wee would deliuer vnto Sartach? I anſwered: the words of Chriſtian Faith. Hee asked againe what theſe words were? For he was very deſirous to heare them. Then I expounded vnto him as well as I could, by mine Interpreter, (who had no wit nor any vtterance of ſpeech) the Apoſtles Creed. Which after hee had heard, holding his peace, he ſhooke his head. Then hee aſſigned vnto vs two men, who Chap. 12. Of the Court of Scacatai, & how the Chriſtians drinke no Coſmos.

A caueat right worthy the noting.

Superſtition, the Kingdome of God is not meate and drinke.

Digitized by Google

who should giue attendance vpon our selues, vpon our Horses, and vpon our Oxen. And hee caused vs to ride in his company, till the Messenger whom he had sent for the Interpretation of the Emperours Letters, was returned. And so wee trauelled in his company till the morrow after Pentecost.

Chap. 13. How the Alanians came vnto vs on Pentecost or Whitson Eeue.

VPon the Eeuen of Pentecost, there came vnto vs certayne Alanians, who are there called * Acias, being Christians after the manner of the Grecians, vsing Greeke Bookes and Grecian Priests: howbeit, they are not Schismatikes as the Grecians are, but without acception of persons, they honour all Christians. And they brought vnto vs sodden flesh, requesting vs to eat of their meate, and to pray for one of their company beeing dead. Then I said, because it was the Eeuen of so great and so solemne a Feast Day, that wee would not eate any flesh for that time. And I expounded vnto them the Solemnitie of the said Feast, whereat they greatly reioyced: for they were ignorant of all things appertayning to Christian Religion, except only the Name of Christ. They and many other Christians, both Russians, and Hungarians demanded of vs, whether they might be saued or no, because they were constrayned to drinke Cosmos, and to eate the dead carkasses of such things, as were slaine by the Saracens, and other Infidels? Which euen the Greeke and Russian Priests themselues also esteeme as things strangled or offered vnto Idols: because they were ignorant of the times of Fasting, neither could they haue obserued them albeit they had knowne them. Then instructed I them aswell as I could and strengthened them in the Faith. As for the flesh which they had brought, wee reserued it vntill the feast day. For there was nothing to be sold among the Tartars for Gold and Siluer, but onely for Cloath and Garments, of the which kind of Merchandize wee had none at all. When our Seruants offered them any Coyne, called Yperpera, they rubbed it with their fingers, and put it vnto their noses, to try by the smell whether it were Copper or no. Neither did they allow vs any food but Cowes Milke onely, which was very sowre and filthy. There was one thing most necessary greatly wanting vnto vs. For the water was so foule and muddy, by reason of their Horses, that it was not meete to be drunke. And but for certaine Bisket, which was by the goodnesse of God remaining vnto vs, we had vndoubtedly perished.

* Or, Akas.

Cloth is the chiefe Merchandise in Tartarie.

Chap. 14. Of a Saracen which said that he would be baptized: and of certaine men which seemed to bee Lepers.

VPon the day of Pentecost there came vnto vs a certaine Saracen, vnto whom, as he talked with vs, we expounded the Christian Faith. Who (hearing of Gods benefits exhibited vnto mankind, by the Incarnation of our Sauiour Christ, and the Resurrection of the dead, and the Iudgement to come, and that in Baptisme was a washing away of sinnes) said, that hee would be baptized. But when wee prepared our selues to the baptizing of him, hee suddenly mounted on horse-back, saying, that he would go home and consult with his wife what were best to be done. And on the morrow after he told vs, that he durst in no case receiue Baptisme, because then he should drinke no more Cosmos. For the Christians of that place affirme, that no true Christians ought to drinke thereof: and that without the said liquor hee could not liue in that Desart. From which opinion, I could not for my life remoue him. Wherefore be it knowne of a certaintie vnto your Highnesse, that they are much estranged from the Christian Faith, by reason of that opinion which hath beene broached and confirmed among them by the Russians, of whom there is a great multitude in that place. The same day Scacatai the Captaine aforesaid gaue vs one man to conduct vs to Sartach, and two other to guide vs vnto the next Lodging, which was distant from that place fiue dayes Iourney for Oxen to trauell. They gaue vnto vs also a Goate for victuals, and a great many Bladders of Cowes Milke, and but a little Cosmos, because it is of so great estimation among them. And so taking our Iourney directly toward the North, mee thought that wee had passed through one of Hell gates. The Seruants which conducted vs began to play the bold Theeues with vs, seeing vs take so little heed vnto our selues. At length hauing lost much by there Theeuery, harme taught vs wisdome. And then wee came vnto the extremitie of that Prouince, which is fortified with a Ditch from one Sea vnto another: without the bounds whereof their Lodging was situate. Into the which, so soone as wee had entred, all the Inhabitants there seemed vnto vs to be infected with Leprosie: for certayne base fellowes were placed there to receiue Tribute of all such as tooke Salt out of the Salt-pits aforesaid. From that place they told vs that we must trauell fifteene dayes Iourney, before we should find any other people. With them we dranke Cosmos, and gaue vnto them a basket full of Fruits and of Bisket. And they gaue vnto vs eight Oxen and one Goate, to sustayne vs in so great a Iourney, and I know not how many bladders of Milke. And so changing our Oxen, we tooke our Iourney which wee finished in tenne dayes, arriuing at another Lodging: neither found we any water all that way, but onely in certayne Ditches made in the Valleyes, except two Riuers. And from the time wherein wee departed out of the foresaid Prouince of Gasaria, we trauelled directly East-ward, hauing a Sea on the South-side of vs, and a waste Desart on the North, which Desart, in some places, reacheth twentie dayes Iourney in breadth, and there is neither Tree, Mountayne, nor Stone therein. And it is most excellent Pasture. Here the Comanians, which were called Capthac, were wont to feed their Cattell. Howbeit by the Dutch-

Salt-pits. Ten dayes Iourney.

men

Digitized by Google

men they are called Valani, and the Prouince it selfe Valania. But Isidore calleth all that tract of Land stretching from the Riuer of Tanais to the Lake of Meotis; and so along as farre as Danubius, the Countrey of Alanes. And the same land continueth in length from Danubius vnto Tanais (which diuideth Asia from Europe) for the space of two moneths iourney, albeit a man should ride post as fast as the Tartars vse to ride: and it was all ouer inhabited by the Comanians, called Capchat: yea, and beyond Tanais, as farre as the Riuer of Edil, or Volga: the space betweene the two which Riuers is a great and long iourney to bee trauelled in ten daies. To the North of the same Prouince lyeth Russia, which is full of wood in all places, and stretcheth from Polonia and Hungaria, euen to the Riuer of Tanais: and it hath beene wasted all ouer by the Tartars, and as yet is daily wasted by them.

Valani.

The length of Comania.

Russia.

THey preferre the Saracens before the Russians, because they are Christians; and when they are able to giue them no more gold nor siluer, they driue them and their Children like flocks of Sheepe into the wildernesse, constraining them to keepe their Cattell there. Beyond Russia, lyeth the Countrey of Prussia, which the Dutch Knights of the order of Saint Maries Hospitall of Ierusalem, haue of late wholly conquered and subdued. And in very deede, they might easily win Russia, if they would put to their helping hand. For if the Tartars should but once know that the great Priest, that is to say, the Pope did cause the Ensigne of the Crosse to be displaied against them, they would flie all into their Desart and solitarie places. Wee therefore went on towards the East, seeing nothing but Heauen and Earth, and sometimes the Sea on our right hand, called the Sea of Tanais, and the Sepulchres of the Comanians, which appeared vnto vs two leagues off, in which places they were wont to burie their kindred altogether. So long as we were trauelling through the Desart, it went reasonably well with vs. For I cannot sufficiently expresse in words the irkesome and tedious troubles which I sustained, when I came at any of their places of abode. For our Guide would haue vs goe in vnto euery Captaine with a present, and our expences would not extend so farre. For we were euery day eight persons of vs spending our wayfaring prouision, for the Tartars seruants would all of them eate of our victuals. We our selues were fiue in number, and the seruants our Guides were three, two to driue our Carts, and one to conduct vs vnto Sartach. The flesh which they gaue vs was not sufficient for vs; neither could we find any thing to be bought for our money. And as we sate vnder our Carts in the coole shadow, by reason of the extreame and vehement heate which was there at that time, they did so importunately and shamelesly intrude themselues into our company, that they would euen tread vpon vs, to see whatsoeuer things we had. Hauing list at any time to ease themselues, the filthie Lozels had not the manners to withdraw themselues farther from vs, then a Beane can be cast. Yea, like vile slouens they would lay their tailes in our presence, while they were yet talking with vs: many other things they committed, which were most tedious and loathsome vnto vs. But aboue all things it grieued me to the very heart, that when I would vtter ought vnto them, which might tend to their edification, my foolish interpreter would say; you should not make me become a Preacher now; I tell you, I cannot nor I will not rehearse any such words. And true it was which he said, for I perceiued afterward, when I began to haue a little smattering in the language, that when I spake one thing, hee would say quite another, whatsoeuer came next vnto his witlesse tongues end. Then seeing the danger I might inqurre in speaking by such an Interpreter, I resolued much rather to hold my peace, and thus we trauelled with great toile from lodging to lodging, till at the length, a few daies before the Feast of Saint Marie Magdalene, we arriued at the banke of the mightie Riuer Tanais, which diuideth Asia from Europa, euen as the Riuer Nilus of Ægypt diuideth Asia from Africa. At the same place where we arriued, Baatu and Sartach did cause a certaine Cottage to be built vpon the Easterne banke of the Riuer, for a companie of Russians to dwell in, to the end, they might transport Ambassadours and Merchants in Ferrie-boates ouer that part of the Riuer. First, they ferried vs ouer, and then our Carts, putting one wheele into one Liter, and the other wheele into another Liter, hauing bound both the Liters together, and so they rowed them ouer. In this place our Guide played the foole most extreamely. For he imagining that the said Russians, dwelling in the Cottage, should haue prouided vs Horses, sent home the Beasts which wee brought with vs, in another Cart, that they might returne vnto their owne Masters. And when we demanded to haue some beasts of them, they answered, that they had a priuiledge from Baatu, whereby they were bound to none other seruice, but onely to ferrie ouer Goers and Commers: and that they receiued great tribute of Merchants in regard thereof. Wee staied therefore by the said Riuers side three daies. The first day they gaue vnto vs a great fresh Turbut: the second day, they bestowed Rye bread, and a little flesh vpon vs, which the Purueyer of the Village had taken vp at euery house for vs: and the third day dryed Fishes, which they haue there in great abundance. The said Riuer was euen as broade in that place, as the Riuer of Sein is at Paris. And before wee came there, wee passed ouer many goodly waters, and full of Fish: howbeit the barbarous and rude Tartars know not how to take them: neither doe they make any reckoning of any Fish, except it bee so great, that they may prey vpon the flesh thereof, as vpon the flesh of a Ram.

Chap. 15. Of our afflictions which wee sustained: and of the Comanians manner of burial.

Prussia.

Extreame heate in Summer.

Tanais.

The breadth of Tanais.

Thus

He is much deceiued.

This Riuer is the limit of the East part of Russia, and it springeth out of the Fennes of Maotis, which Fennes stretch vnto the North Ocean. And it runneth Southward into a certaine great Sea seuen hundred miles about, before it falleth into the Sea called Pontus Euxinus. And all the Riuers which we passed ouer, ran with full streame into those quarters. The foresaid Riuer hath great store of wood also growing vpon the West side thereof. Beyond this place the Tartars ascend no farther vnto the North: for at that season of the yeere, about the first of August, they begin to returne backe vnto the South. And therefore there is another Cottage somewhat lower where Passengers are ferried ouer in Winter time, and in this place we were driuen to great extremitie, by reason that we could get neither Horses, nor Oxen for any money. At length, after I had declared vnto them, that my comming was to labour for the common good of all Christians, they sent vs Oxen and Men; howbeit wee our selues were faine to trauell on foot. At this time they were reaping their Rye. Wheate prospereth not well in that soile. They haue the seed of Millium in great abundance. The Russian women attire their heads like vnto our women. They embroider their Safegards or Gownes on the outside, from their feet vnto their knees with partie-coloured or grey stuffe. The Russian men weare Caps like vnto the Dutch men. Also they weare vpon their heads certaine sharpe and high-crowned Hats made of Felt, much like vnto a Sugar-loafe. Then trauailed we three daies together, not finding any people. And when our selues and our Oxen were exceeding wearie and faint, not knowing how farre off we should find any Tartars, on the sudden there came two Horses running towards vs, which we tooke with great ioy, and our Guide and Interpreter mounted vpon their backs, to see how farre off they could descrie any people. At length, vpon the fourth day of our iourney, hauing found some Inhabitants, we reioyced like Sea faring men, which had escaped out of a dangerous Tempest, and had newly recouered the Hauen. Then hauing taken fresh Horses, and Oxen, we passed on from lodging to lodging, till at the last, vpon the second of the Kalends of August, we arriued at the habitation of Duke Sartach himselfe.

About the beginning of August, the Tartars returne Southward.

Chap. 16. Of the Dominion of Sartach, and of his Subiects.

THe Region lying beyond Tanais, is a very goodly Countrey, hauing store of Riuers and Woods toward the North part thereof. There are mightie huge Woods which two sorts of people doe inhabit. One of them is called Moxel, being meere Pagans, and without Law. They haue neither Townes nor Cities, but onely Cottages in the Woods. Their Lord and a great part of themselues were put to the Sword in high Germanie. Whereupon they highly commend the braue courage of the Almans, hoping as yet to be deliuered out of the bondage of the Tartars, by their meanes. If any Merchant come vnto them, hee must prouide things necessary for him, with whom hee is first of all entertained, all the time of his abode among them. If any lyeth with another mans wife, her husband, vnlesse he be an eye-witnesse thereof, regardeth it not: for they are not iealous ouer their wiues. They haue abundance of Hogs, and great store of Honie and Waxe, and diuers sorts of rich and costly Skins, and plentie of Faulcons. Next vnto them are other people called Merclas, which the Latines call Merdui, and they are Saracens. Beyond them is the Riuer of Etilia, or Volga, which is the mightiest Riuer that euer I saw. And it issueth from the North part of Bulgaria the greater, and so trending along Southward, disimboqueth into a certaine Lake, containing in circuit the space of foure moneths trauell, whereof I will speake hereafter. The two foresaid Riuers, namely, Tanais and Etilia, otherwise called Volga, towards the Northerne Regions, through the which we trauailed, are not distant asunder aboue ten daies iourney, but Southward they are diuided a great space one from another. For Tanais descendeth into the Sea of Pontus: Etilia maketh the foresaid Sea or Lake, with the helpe of many other Riuers, which fall thereinto out of Persia. And wee had to the South of vs huge high Mountaines, vpon the sides thereof towards the said Desart, doe the people called Cergis, and the Alani or Acas inhabit, who are as yet Christians, and wage warre against the Tartars. Beyond them, next vnto the Sea or Lake of Etilia, there are certaine Saracens called Lesgi, who are in subiection vnto the Tartars. Beyond these is Porta ferrea, or the Iron gate, now called Derbent, which Alexander built to exclude the barbarous Nations out of Persia. Concerning the situation whereof, your Maiestie shall vnderstand more about the end of this Treatise: for I trauailed in my returne by the very same place. Betweene the two foresaid Riuers, in the Regions through the which we passed, did the Comanians of old time inhabit, before they were ouerrun by the Tartars.

The people of Moxel are Pagans.

The people called Merdui being Saracens.

The circuit of the Caspian Sea.

Kergis or Aas.

The Saracens called Lesgi.

He returneth by Derbent.

Chap. 17. Of the Court of Sartach, and of the magnificence thereof.

ANd wee found Sartach lying within three daies iourney of the Riuer Etilia: whose Court seemed vnto vs to be very great. For he himselfe had six wiues, and his eldest sonne also had three wiues: euery one of which women hath a great house, and they haue each one of them about two hundred Carts. Our guide went vnto a certaine Nestorian named Coiat, who is a man of great authoritie in Sartachs Court. He made vs to goe very farre vnto the Lords gate. For so they call him who hath the Office of entertayning Ambassadours. In the euening, Coiat commanded vs to come vnto him. Then our Guide began to enquire what wee would present him withall, and was exceedingly offended, when hee saw that wee had nothing ready to present.

Coiat, the Nestorian.

We

Digitized by Google

We stood before him, and he sate maiestically, hauing musick and dancing in his presence. Then I spake vnto him in the words before recited, telling him for what purpose I was come vnto his Lord, and requesting so much fauour at his hands, as to bring our Letters vnto the sight of his Lord, I excused my selfe also, that I was a Monke, not hauing, nor receiuing, nor vsing any gold, or siluer, or any other precious thing, saue onely our Bookes, and the Vestments wherein wee serued God: and that this was the cause why I brought no present vnto him, nor vnto his Lord. For I that had abandoned mine owne goods, could not be a transporter of things for other men. Then he answered very courteously, that being a Monke, and so doing, I did well; for so I should obserue my vow: neither did himselfe stand in need of ought that we had, but rather was ready to bestow vpon vs such things as we our selues stood in need of: and hee caused vs to sit downe, and to drinke of his Milke. And presently after, hee requested vs to say our deuotions for him: and wee did so. Hee enquired also who was the greatest Prince among the Francks? And I said, the Emperour, if he could enioy his owne Dominions in quiet. No (quoth hee) but the King of France. For hee had heard of your Higneſſe by Lord Baldwine of Henault. I found there also one of the Knights of the Temple who had beene in Cyprus, and had made report of all things which he saw there. Then returned we vnto our Lodging. And on the morrow we sent him a flaggon of Muscadell Wine (which had lasted verie well in so long a iourney) and a boxe full of Bisket, which was most acceptable vnto him. And hee kept our Seruants with him for that Euening. The next morning hee commanded mee to come vnto the Court, and to bring the Kings Letters and my Vestments, and Bookes with mee: because his Lord was desirous to see them. Which we did accordingly, lading one Cart with our Bookes and Vestments, and another with Bisket, Wine, and Fruits. Then hee caused all our Bookes and Vestments to bee layd forth. And there stood round about vs many Tartars, Christians, and Saracens on Horseback. At the sight whereof, hee demanded whether I would bestow all those things vpon his Lord or no? Which saying made mee to tremble, and grieued mee full sore. Howbeit, dissembling our griefe as well as we could, we shaped him this Answere: Sir, our humble request is, that our Lord your Master would vouchsafe to accept our Bread, Wine, and Fruits, not as a Present, because it is too meane, but as a Benediction, least we should come with an emptie hand before him. And hee shall see the Letters of my Souereigne Lord the King, and by them hee shall vnderstand for what cause we are come vnto him, and then both our selues, and all that wee haue, shall stand to his courtesie: for our Vestments bee holy, and it is vnlawfull for any but Priests to touch them. Then he commanded vs to inuest our selues in the said Garments, that we might goe before his Lord: and we did so. Then I my selfe putting on our most precious Ornaments, tooke in mine armes a very faire Cushion, and the Bible which your Maiestie gaue mee, and a most beautifull Psalter, which the Queenes Grace bestowed vpon mee, wherein there were goodly Pictures. Mine Associate tooke a Missall and a Crosse: and the Clerke hauing put on his Surplice, tooke a Censer in his hand. And so we came vnto the presence of his Lord: and they lifted vp the Felt hanging before his doore, that hee might behold vs. Then they caused the Clerke and the Interpreter thrice to bow the knee: but of vs they required no such submission. And they diligently admonished vs to take heed, that in going in, and in comming out, wee touched not the threshold of the house, and requested vs to sing a Benediction for him. Then we entred in, singing Salue Regina. And within the entrance of the doore stood a bench with Cosmos, and drinking cups thereupon. And all his Wiues were there assembled. Also the Moals or rich Tartars thrusting in with vs pressed vs sore. Then Coiat carryed vnto his Lord the Censer with Incense, which hee beheld very diligently, holding it in his hand. Afterward he carryed the Psalter vnto him, which he looked earnestly vpon, and his Wife also that sate beside him. After that he carryed the Bible: then Sartach asked if the Gospell were contayned therein? Yea (said I) and all the holy Scriptures besides. He tooke the Crosse also in his hand, and demanded concerning the Image, whether it were the Image of Christ or no? I said it was. The Nestorians and the Armenians doe neuer make the figure of Christ vpon their Crosses. Wherefore either they seeme not to thinke well of his Passion, or else they are ashamed of it. Then hee caused them that stood about vs, to stand aside, that hee might more fully behold our Ornaments. Afterward I deliuered vnto him your Maiesties Letters, with the Translation thereof into the Arabicke and Syriacke Languages. For I caused them to bee translated at Acon, into the Character and Dialect of both the said Tongues. And there were certayne Armenian Priests, which had skill in the Turkish and Arabian Languages. The aforesaid Knight also of the Order of the Temple had knowledge in the Syriake, Turkish, and Arabian Tongues. Then wee departed forth, and put off our Vestments, and there came vnto vs certayne Scribes together with the foresaid Coiat, and caused our Letters to bee interpreted. Which Letters being heard, hee caused our Bread, Wine and Fruits to bee receiued. And hee permitted vs also to carrie our Vestments and Bookes vnto our owne Lodging. This was done vpon the Feast of S. Peter ad vincula.

No good consequence.

Digitized by Google

Chap. 18. How they were giuen in charge to goe vnto Baatu the Father of Sartach.

THe next morning betimes came vnto vs a certayne Priest, who was brother vnto Coiat, requesting to haue our boxe of Chrisme, because Sartach (as he said) was desirous to see it: and so we gaue it him. About Euentyde Coiat sent for vs, saying: My Lord your King wrote good words vnto my Lord and Master Sartach. Howbeit there are certayne matters of difficultie in them, concerning which he dare not determine ought, without the aduice and counsell of his Father. And therefore of necessitie you must depart vnto his Father, leauing behind you the two Carts, which you brought hither yesterday with Vestments and Bookes, in my custodie: because my Lord is desirous to take more diligent view thereof. I presently suspecting what mischiefe might ensue by his couetousnesse, said vnto him: Sir, we will not onely leaue those with you, but the two other Carts also, which we haue in our possession, will wee commit vnto your custodie. You shall not (quoth he) leaue those behind you, but for the other two Carts first named, wee will satisfie your request. I said that this could not conueniently bee done: but needs we must leaue all with him. Then he asked, whether we meant to tarrie in the Land? I answered: If you throughly vnderstand the Letters of my Lord the King, you know that we are euen so determined. Then he replyed, that we ought to bee patient and lowly: and so wee departed from him that Euening. On the morrow after he sent a Nestorian Priest for the Carts, and wee caused all the foure Carts to be deliuered. Then came the foresaid brother of Coiat to meet vs, and separated all those things, which we had brought the day before vnto the Court; from the rest, namely, the Bookes and Vestments, and tooke them away with him. Howbeit Coiat had commanded, that we should carrie those Vestments with vs, which we wore in the presence of Sartach, that we might put them on before Baatu, if need should require: but the said Priest tooke them from vs by violence, saying: thou hast brought them vnto Sartach, and wouldest thou carrie them vnto Baatu? And when I would haue rendred a reason, hee answered: bee not too talkatiue, but goe your wayes. Then I saw that there was no remedie but patience: for wee could haue no accesse vnto Sartach himselfe, neither was there any other, that would doe vs Iustice. I was afraid also in regard of the Interpreter, least he had spoken other things then I said vnto him: for his will was good, that wee should haue giuen away all that we had. There was yet one comfort remayning vnto mee: for when I once perceiued their couetous intent, I conueyed from among our Bookes the Bible, and the Sentences, and certayne other Bookes which I made speciall account of. Howbeit, I durst not take away the Psalter of my Souereigne Ladie the Queene, because it was too well knowne, by reason of the Golden Pictures therein. And so we returned with the two other Carts vnto our Lodging. Then came hee that was appointed to be our Guide vnto the Court of Baatu, willing vs to take our Iourney in all poste-haste: vnto whom I said, that I would in no case haue the Carts to goe with me. Which thing he declared vnto Coiat. Then Coiat commanded, that wee should leaue them and our Seruant with him: And we did as he commanded. And so trauelling directly East-ward towards Baatu, the third day we came to Etilia or Volga: the streames whereof when I beheld, I wondred from what Regions of the North such huge and mightie waters should descend. Before we were departed from Sartach, the foresaid Coiat, with many other Scribes of the Court said vnto vs: doe not make report that our Lord is a Christian, but a Moal. Because the name of a Christian seemeth vnto them to be the name of some Nation. So great is their pride, that albeit they beleeue perhaps some things concerning Christ, yet will they not be called Christians, being desirous that their owne name, that is to say, Moal should be exalted aboue all other names. Neither will they be called by the name of Tartars. For the Tartars were another Nation, as I was informed by them.

They are come as farre as Volga.

The Tartars will be called Moal.

Chap. 19. How Sartach, and Mangu-Can, and Ken-Can doe reuerence vnto Christians. This Historie of Presbyter Iohn in the North-east, is alleaged at large by Gerardus Mercator in his generall Map. From whence the Turkes first sprang. An Ocean Sea. Nayman. Presbyter Iohn.

AT the same time when the Frenchmen tooke Antioch, a certayne man named Con Can, had Dominion ouer the Northerne Regions, lying thereabouts. Con is a proper name: Can is a name of authoritie or dignitie, which signifieth a Diuiner or Sooth-sayer. All Diuiners are called Can amongst them. Whereupon their Princes are called Can, because that vnto them belongeth the gouernment of the people by Diuination. We doe read also in the Historie of Antiochia, that the Turkes sent for ayde against the Frenchmen, vnto the Kingdome of Con Can. For out of those parts the whole Nation of the Turkes first came. The said Con was of the Nation of Kara-Catay. Kara signifieth blacke, and Catay is the name of a Countrey. So that Kara-Catay signifieth the blacke Catay. This name was giuen to make a difference betweene the foresaid people, and the people of Catay inhabiting East-ward ouer against the Ocean Sea: concerning whom your Maiestie shall vnderstand more hereafter. These Catayans dwelt vpon certayne Alpes, by the which I trauelled. And in a certaine plaine Countrey within those Alpes, there inhabited a Nestorian shepheard, being a mightie Gouernour ouer the people called Nayman, which were Christians, following the Sect of Nestorius. After the death of Con Can, the said Nestorian exalted himselfe to the Kingdome, and they called him King Iohn, reporting ten times more of him then was true. For so the Nestorians which come out of those parts, vse to doe. For they blaze abroad great rumours, and reports vpon iust nothing. Whereupon they gaue out concerning Sartach, that he was become a Christian, and the like also they reported ted concerning Mangu Can, and Ken Can: namely, because these Tartars make more account of Christians, then they doe of other people, and yet in very deed, themselues are no Christians. So likewise there went forth a great report concerning the said King Iohn. Howbeit, when I trauelled along by his Territories, there was no man that knew any thing of him, but onely a few Nestorians. In his Pastures or Territories dwelleth Ken Can, at whose Court Frier Andrew was. And I my selfe passed by it at my returne. This Iohn had a Brother, being a mightie man also, and a Shepheard like himselfe, called Vut, and he inhabited beyond the Alpes of Cara Catay, being distant from his Brother Iohn, the space of three weekes iourney. He was Lord ouer a certaine Village, called Cara Carum, hauing people also for his Subiects, named Crit, or Merkit, who were Christians of the Sect of Nestorius. But their Lord abandoning the worship of Christ, following after Idols, retaining with him Priests of the said Idols, who all of them are Worshippers of Deuils and Sorcerers. Beyond his Pastures, some tenne or fifteene dayes iourney, were the Pastures of Moal, who were a poore and beggerly Nation, without Gouernor, and without Law, except their Sooth-sayings, and their Diuinations, vnto the which detestable studies, all in those parts doe apply their minds. Neere vnto Moal were other poore people, called Tartars. The foresaid King Iohn dyed without Issue Male; and thereupon his Brother Vut was greatly inriched, and caused himselfe to be named Can: and his Droues and Flockes raunged euen vnto the Borders of Moal. About the same time there was one Cyngis, a Blacke-Smith, among the people of Moal. This Cyngis stole as many Cattell from Vut Can, as he could possibly get: insomuch, that the Shepheards of Vut complained vnto their Lord. Then prouided he an Armie, and marched vp into the Countrey of Moal, to seeke for the said Cyngis. But Cyngis fled among the Tartars, and hid himselfe amongst them. And Vut hauing taken some spoiles both from Moal, and also from the Tartars, returned home. Then spake Cyngis vnto the Tartars, and vnto the people of Moal, saying: Sirs, because we are distitute of a Gouernor and Captaine, you see how our Neighbours doe oppresse vs. And the Tartars and Moals appointed him to be their Chieftaine. Then hauing secretly gathered together an Armie, hee brake in suddenly vpon Vut, and ouercame him, and Vut fled into Cataya. At the same time was the Daughter of Vut taken, which Cyngis married vnto one of his Sonnes, by whom she conceiued, and brought forth the great Can, which now reigneth, called Mangu-Can. Then Cyngis sent the Tartars before him in all places where he came: and thereupon was their name published and spread abroad: for in all places the people would cry out: Loe, the Tartars come, the Tartars come. Howbeit, through continuall warres, they are now, all of them in a manner, consumed and brought to nought. Whereupon the Moals indeuour what they can, to extinguish the name of the Tartars, that they may exalt their owne name. The Countrey wherein they first inhabited, and where the Court of Cyngis Can as yet remaineth, is called Mancherule. But because Tartaria is the Region, about which they haue obtained their Conquests, they esteeme that as their royall and chiefe Citie, and there for the most part doe they elect their great Can.

Digitized by Google

The place of Ken Kan his aboad.
Vut Can, or Vnc Can.
The Village of Cara Carum.
Crit & Merkit.
Moal in old time a beggerly people.
The place of the Tartars.
Cyngis.
Mangu-Can.
Mancherule.

NOw, as concerning Sartach, whether hee beleeues in Christ or no, I know not. This I am sure of, that he will not be called a Christian. Yea, rather he seemeth vnto mee to deride and skoffe at Christians. He lyeth in the way of the Christians, as namely, of the Russians, the Valachians, the Bulgarians of Bulgaria the lesse, the Soldaianes, the Kerkis, and the Alanians: who all of them passe by him, as they are going to the Court of his Father Baatu, to carrie gifts: whereupon he is more in league with them. Howbeit, if the Saracens come, and bring greater gifts then they, they are dispatched sooner. He hath about him certaine Nestarian Priests, who pray vpon their Beades, and sing their deuotions. Also, there is another vnder Baatu, called Berta, who feedeth his Cattell toward Porta Ferrea, or Derbent, where lyeth the passage of all those Saracens which come out of Persia, and out of Turkie to goe vnto Baatu, and passing by, they giue rewards vnto him. And he professeth himselfe to be a Saracen, and will not permit Swines flesh to be eaten in his Dominions. Howbeit, at the time of our returne, Baatu commanded him to remooue himselfe from that place, and to inhabite vpon the East side of Volga: for he was vnwilling that the Saracens Messengers should passe by the said Berta, because he saw it was not for his profit. For the space of foure daies while wee remained in the Court of Sartach, wee had not any victuals at all allowed vs, but once onely a little Cosmos. And in our iourney betweene him and his Father, wee trauelled in great feare. For certaine Russians, Hungarians, and Alanians, being Seruants vnto the Tartars, (of whom they haue great multitudes among them) assemble themselues twentie or thirtie in a company, and so secretly in the night conueying themselues from home, they take Bowes and Arrowes with them, and whomsoeuer they finde in the night season, they put him to death, hiding themselues in the day time. And hauing tyred their Horses, they goe in the night vnto a company of other Horses feeding in some Pasture, and change them for new, taking with them also one or two Horses besides, to eate them when they stand in neede. Our guide therefore was sore afraid, least we should haue met with such companions.

Chap. 20. Of the Russians, Hungarians, and Alanians: and of the Caspian Sea.
Or, Berta.

Digitized by Google

In this Iourney we had dyed for Famine, had wee not carryed some of our Bisket with vs. At length we came vnto the mightie Riuer of Etilia, or Volga. For it is foure times greater, then the Riuer of Sein, and of a wonderfull depth: and issuing forth of Bulgaria the greater, it runneth into a certayne Lake or Sea, which of late they call the Hircan Sea, according to the name of a certaine Citie in Persia, standing vpon the shoare thereof. Howbeit Isidore calleth it the Caspian Sea. For it hath the Caspian Mountaynes and the Land of Persia situate on the South-side thereof: and the Mountaynes of Musibet, that is to say, of the people called Assassini towards the East, which Mountaynes are conioyned vnto the Caspian Mountaynes: but on the North-side thereof lyeth the same Desart, wherein the Tartars doe now inhabit. Howbeit heretofore there dwelt certayne people called Changla. And on that side it receiueth the streames of Etilia, which Riuer increaseth in Summer time, like vnto the Riuer Nilus in Egypt. Vpon the West part thereof, it hath the Mountaynes of Alani, and Lesgi, and Porta ferrea, or Derbent, and the Mountaynes of Georgia. This Sea therefore is compassed in on three sides with the Mountaynes, but on the North-side with plaine ground. Frier Andrew in his Iourney trauelled round about two sides thereof, namely, the South and the East-sides: and I my selfe about other two, that is to say, the North-side in going from Baatu to Mangu-Can, and in returning likewise: and the West-side in comming home from Baatu into Syria. A man may trauell round about it in foure moneths. And it is not true which Isidore reporteth, namely, that this Sea is a Bay or Gulfe comming forth of the Ocean: for it doth, in no part thereof, ioyne with the Ocean, but is enuironed on all sides with Land.

Changla.

Frier Andrew.

Chap. 21. Of the Court of Baatu: and how we were entertayned by him.

ALL the Region extending from the West shoare of the foresaid Sea, where Alexanders Iron-gate, otherwise called the Citie of Derbent, is situate, and from the Mountaynes of Alania, all along by the Fennes of Meotis, whereinto the Riuer of Tanais falleth, and so forth, to the North Ocean, was wont to be called Albania. Of which Countrey Isidore reporteth, that there bee Dogges of such an huge stature, and so fierce, that they are able in fight to match Buls, and to master Lions. Which is true, as I vnderstand by diuers, who told me, that there towards the North Ocean, they make their Dogges to draw in Carts like Oxen, by reason of their bignesse and strength. Moreouer, vpon that part of Etilia where we arriued, there is a new Cottage built, wherein they haue placed Tartars and Russians both together, to ferrie ouer, and transport Messengers going and comming, to and fro the Court of Baatu. For Baatu remayneth vpon the farther side towards the East. Neither ascendeth hee in Summer time more Northward then the foresaid place where we arriued, but was euen then descending to the South. From Ianuary vntill August, both he and all other Tartars ascend by the banks of Riuers, towards cold and Northerly Regions, and in August they begin to returne backe againe. Wee passed downe the streame therefore in a Barke, from the foresaid Cottage vnto his Court. From the same place vnto the Villages of Bulgaria the greater, standing toward the North, it is fiue dayes Iourney. I wonder what Deuill carried the Religion of Mahomet thither. For, from Derbent, which is vpon the extreme borders of Persia, it is aboue thirtie dayes Iourney to passe ouerthwart the Desart, and so to ascend by the banke of Etilia, into the foresaid Countrey of Bulgaria. All which way there is no Citie, but onely certayne Cottages neere vnto that place where Etilia falleth into the Sea. Those Bulgarians are most wicked Saracens, more earnestly professing the damnable Religion of Mahomet, then any other Nation whatsoeuer. Moreouer, when I first beheld the Court of Baatu, I was astonied at the sight thereof: for his Houses or Tents seemed as though they had beene some huge and mightie Citie, stretching out a great way in length, the people ranging vp and downe about it for the space of some three or foure leagues. And euen as the people of Israel knew euery man, on which side of the Tabernacle to pitch his Tent: euen so euery one of them knoweth right well, towards what side of the Court hee ought to place his house when he takes it from off the Cart. Whereupon the Court is called in their Language Horda, which signifieth, the midst: because the Gouernour or Chieftaine among them dwels alwayes in the middest of his people: except onely that directly towards the South no subiect or inferiour person placeth himselfe, because towards that Region the Court gates are set open: but vnto the right hand, and the left hand they extend themselues as farre as they will, according to the conueniencie of places, so that they place not their houses directly opposite against the Court. At our arriuall wee were conducted vnto a Saracen, who prouided not for vs any victuals at all. The day following, we were brought vnto the Court: and Baatu had caused a large Tent to bee erected, because his house or ordinary Tent could not containe so many men and women as were assembled. Our Guide admonished vs not to speake, till Baatu had giuen vs commandement so to doe, and that then we should speake our minds briefly. Then Baatu demanded whether your Maiestie had sent Ambassadors vnto him or no? I answered, that your Maiestie had sent Messengers to Ken-Can: and that you would not haue sent Messengers vnto him, or Letters vnto Sartach, had not your Highnesse beene perswaded that they were become Christians: because you sent not vnto them for any feare, but onely for congratulation, and courtesies sake, in regard that you heard they were conuerted to Christianitie. Then led he vs vnto his Pauilion: and we were

The North Ocean.

He descendeth downe the Riuer Volga in a Barke.

Astracan.

The description of Baatu his Court.

Horda, signifieth the midst.

charged

charged not to touch the cords of the Tent, which they account in stead of the threshold of the house. There we stood in our habit bare-footed, and bare-headed, and were a great and strange spectacle in their eyes. For indeed Frier Iohn de Plano Carpini, had beene there before my comming: howbeit, because he was the Popes Messenger, he changed his habit that hee might not be contemned. Then wee were brought into the very midst of the Tent, neither required they of vs to doe any reuerence by bowing our knees, as they vse to doe of other Messengers. Wee stood therefore before him for the space wherein a man might haue rehearsed the Psalme, Miserere mei Deus: and there was great silence kept of all men. Baatu himselfe sate vpon a seat long and broad like vnto a Bed, gilt all ouer, with three staires to ascend thereunto, and one of his Ladies sate beside him. The men there assembled, sate downe scattering, some on the right hand of the said Lady, and some on the left. Those places on the one side which the women filled not vp (for there were only the Wiues of Baatu) were supplyed by the men. Also, at the very entrance of the Tent, stood a bench furnished with Cosmos, and with stately great cups of Siluer and Gold, being richly set with Precious Stones. Baatu beheld vs earnestly, and wee him: and he seemed to me to resemble in personage, Monsieur Iohn de Beaumont, whose soule resteth in peace. And he had a fresh ruddie colour in his countenance. At length hee commanded vs to speake. Then our Guide gaue vs direction, that we should bow our knees and speake. Whereupon I bowed one knee as vnto a man: then he signified that I should kneele vpon both knees: and I did so, being loth to contend about such circumstances. And againe, hee commanded me to speake. Then I thinking of Prayer vnto God, because I kneeled on both my knees, beganne to pray on this wise: Sir, we beseech the Lord, from whom all good things doe proceed, and who hath giuen you these earthly benefits, that it would please him hereafter to make you partaker of his heauenly blessings: because the former without these are but vaine and improfitable. And I added further, Be it knowne vnto you of a certaintie, that you shall not obtayne the ioyes of Heauen, vnlesse you become a Christian: for God saith, Whosoeuer beleeueth and is baptized, shalbe saued: but he that beleeueth not, shalbe condemned. At this word he modestly smiled: but the other Moals began to clap their hands, and to deride vs. And of my silly Interpreter, of whom especially I should haue receiued comfort in time of need, was himselfe abashed and vtterly dasht out of countenance. Then, after silence made, I said vnto him, I came vnto your Sonne, because we heard that he was become a Christian) and I brought vnto him Letters on the behalfe of my Soueraigne Lord the King of France: and your Sonne sent me hither vnto you. The cause of my comming therefore is best knowne vnto your selfe. Then he caused me to rise vp. And he enquired your Maiesties Name, and my name, and the name of mine Associate and Interpreter, and caused them all to be put downe in writing. He demanded likewise (because hee had beene informed, that you were departed out of your owne Countries with an Armie) against whom you waged warre? I answered: against the Saracens, who had defiled the House of God at Ierusalem. He asked also, whether your Highnesse had euer before that time sent any Messengers vnto him, or no? To you Sir? (said I) neuer. Then caused he vs to sit downe, and gaue vs of his Milke to drinke, which they account to be a great fauour, especially when any man is admitted to drinke Cosmos with him in his owne house. And as I sate looking downe vpon the ground, he commanded me to lift vp my countenance, being desirous as yet to take more diligent view of vs, or else perhaps for a kind of Superstitious obseruation. For they esteeme it a signe of ill lucke, or a prognostication of euill vnto them, when any man sits in their presence, holding downe his head, as if he were sad: especially, when hee leanes his cheeke or chin vpon his hand. Then we departed forth, and immediately after came our Guide vnto vs, and conducting vs vnto our Lodging, said vnto mee: Your Master the King requesteth that you may remayne in this Land, which request Baatu cannot satisfie without the knowledge and consent of Mangu-Can. Wherefore you, and your Interpreter must of necessitie goe vnto Mangu-Can. Howbeit your associate, and the other man shall returne vnto the Court of Sartach, staying there for you, till you come backe. Then began the man of God mine Interpreter to lament, esteeming himselfe but a dead man. Mine Associate also protested, that they should sooner chop off his head, then withdraw him out of my company. Moreouer, I my selfe said, that without mine Associate I could not goe: and that we stood in need of two Seruants at the least, to attend vpon vs, because, if one should chance to fall sick, we could not be without another. Then returning vnto the Court, he told these Sayings vnto Baatu. And Baatu commanded, saying, let the two Priests and the Interpreter goe together, but let the Clerke returne vnto Sartach. And comming againe vnto vs, hee told vs euen so. And when I would haue spoken for the Clerke to haue had him with vs, he said: No more words; for Baatu hath resolued, that so it shall bee, and therefore I dare not goe vnto the Court any more. Gosset the Clerke had remayning of the Almes money bestowed vpon him, twentie sixe Yperpera, and no more; ten whereof he kept for himselfe and for the Lad, and sixteene hee gaue vnto the man of God for vs. And thus were we parted asunder with teares: he returning vnto the Court of Sartach, and our selues remayning still in the same place.

Iohn de Plano Carpini.

The Letters of the French King.

Digitized by Google

Chap. 22. Of our iourney towards the Court of Mangu-Can.

VPon Assumption Euen our Clerke arriued at the Court of Sartach. And on the morrow after, the Nestorian Priests were adorned with our Vestments in the presence of the said Sartach. Then wee our selues were conducted vnto another Host, who was appointed to prouide vs house-roome, victuals, and Horses. But because wee had not ought to bestow vpon him, hee did all things vntowardly for vs. Then wee rode on forward with Baatu, descending along by the bancke of Etilia, for the space of fiue weekes together: Sometimes mine Associate was so extreamly hungry, that hee would tell mee in a manner weeping, that it fared with him as though hee had neuer eaten any thing in all his life before. There is a Faire or Market following the Court of Baatu at all times: but it was so farre distant from vs, that wee could not haue recourse thereunto. For wee were constrained to walke on foote for want of Horses. At length certaine Hungarians (who had sometime beene after a sort Clergie men) found vs out: and one of them could as yet sing many Songs without booke, and was accounted of other Hungarians as a Priest, and was sent for vnto the Funerals of his deceased Countrey-men. There was another of them also pretily well instructed in his Grammar: for he could vnderstand the meaning of any thing that we spake, but could not answere vs. These Hungarians were a great comfort vnto vs, bringing vs Cosmos to drinke, yea, and sometimes flesh for to eate also: who, when they requested to haue some Bookes of vs, and I had not any to giue them (for indeed we had none but onely a Bible, and a Breuiary) it grieued me exceedingly. And I said vnto them: Bring me some Inke and Paper, and I will write for you so long as we shall remaine here: and they did so. And I copied out for them Horas beatæ Virginis, and Officium defunctorum. Moreouer, vpon a certaine day, there was a Comanian that accompanied vs, saluting vs in Latine, and saying: Saluete Domini. Wondering thereat, and saluting him againe, I demanded of him, who had taught him that kind of salutation? He said, that he was baptized in Hungaria by our Friers, and that of them he learned it. Hee said moreouer, that Baatu had enquired many things of him concerning vs, and that he told him the estate of our Order. Afterward I saw Baatu riding with his company, and all his Subiects that were housholders or Masters of families riding with him, and (in mine estimation) they were not fiue hundred persons in all. At length about the end of Holy-rood, there came a certaine rich Moal vnto vs (whose Father was a Millenary, which is a great Office among them) saying, I am the man that must conduct you vnto Mangu-Can, and we haue thither a iourney of foure moneths long to trauell, and there is such extreame cold in those parts, that stones and trees doe euen riue asunder in regard thereof. Therefore I would wish you throughly to aduise your selues, whether you be able to indure it or no. Vnto whom I answered: I hope by Gods helpe, that we shall be able to brooke that which other men can indure. Then hee said: if you cannot indure it, I will forsake you by the way. And I answered him: it were not iust dealing for you so to do, for we go not thither vpon any businesse of our owne, but by reason that we are sent by our Lord. Wherefore, sithence we are committed vnto your charge, you ought in no wise to forsake vs. Then he said; all shall be well. Afterward he caused vs to shew him all our garments: and whatsoeuer he deemed to bee lesse needfull for vs, he willed vs to leaue it behind in the custodie of our Host. On the morrow they brought vnto each of vs a furred Gowne, made all of Rams skinnes, with the Wooll still vpon them, and breeches of the same, and boots also or buskins according to their fashion, and shooes made of felt, and hoods also made of skins after their manner. The second day after Holy-rood, we began to set forward on our iourney, hauing three guides to direct vs: and we rode continually East-ward, till the feast of All-Saints. Throughout all that Region, and beyond also did the people of Changle inhabite, who were by parentage discended from the Romans. Vpon the North side of vs wee had Bulgaria the greater, and on the South, the foresaid Caspian Sea.

They trauell fiue weekes by the banke of Etilia.

Hungarians.

A Comanian.

A iourney of foure moneths from Volga.

The fixteenth of September.

Forty six daies Or, Kangitta.

Chap. 23. Of the Riuer of Iagac: Or, Iaic, and of diuers Regions or Nations.

HAuing trauelled twelue daies iourney from Etilia, we found a mightie Riuer called Iagac: which Riuer issuing out of the North, from the land of Pascatir, descended into the foresaid Sea. The language of Pascatir, and of the Hungarians is all one, and they are all of them Shepheards, not hauing any Cities. And their Countrey bordereth vpon Bulgaria the greater, on the West frontier. From the North-East part of the said Countrey, there is no Citie at all. Out of the said fore-named Region of Pascatir, proceeded the Hunnes of old time, who afterward were called Hungarians. Next vnto it is Bulgaria the greater. Isidore reporteth, concerning the people of this Nation, that with swift Horses they trauersed the impregnable walls and bounds of Alexander, (which, together with the Rockes of Caucasus, serued to restraine those barbarous and blood-thirstie people from inuading the Regions of the South) insomuch that they had tribute paid vnto them, as farre as Ægypt. Likewise they wasted all Countries euen vnto France. Whereupon they were more mightie then the Tartars as yet are. And vnto them the Blacians, the Bulgarians, and the Vandals ioyned themselues. For out of Bulgaria the greater, came those Bulgarians. Moreouer, they which inhabite beyond Danubius, neere vnto Constantinople, and not farre from Pascatir, are called Ilac, which (sauing the pronunciation) is all one with Blac, (for the Tartars cannot pronounce the Letter B) from whom also discended Iaic, twelue daies iourney from Volga.

Pascatir.

The Hungarians descended from the Bascirdes.

Valachians.

the

Digitized by Google

the people which inhabite the Land of Aſſan. For they are both of them called Ilac, (both theſe and the other) in the languages of the Ruſſians, the Polonians, and the Boheimians. The Sclauonians ſpeake all one language with the Vandals, all which banded themſelues with the Hunnes: and now for the moſt part, they vnite themſelues vnto the Tartars: whom God hath raiſed vp frō the vtmoſt parts of the earth, according to that which the Lord ſaith: I will prouoke them to enuy (namely ſuch as keepe not his Law) by a people, which is no people, and by a fooliſh Nation will I anger them. This prophecy is fulfilled, according to the literall ſenſe thereof, vpon all Nations which obſerue not the Law of God. All this which I haue written concerning the Land of Paſcatir, was told me by certaine Friers Predicants, which trauelled thither before euer the Tartars came abroad. And from that time they were ſubdued vnto their neighbours the Bulgarians being Saracens, whereupon many of them proued Saracens alſo. Other matters concerning this people, may be knowne out of Chronicles: For it is manifeſt, that thoſe Prouinces beyond Conſtantinople, which are now called Bulgaria, Valachia, and Sclauonia, were of old time Prouinces belonging to the Greekes. Alſo Hungaria was heretofore called Pannonia. And wee were riding ouer the Land of Cangle, from the feaſt of Holy-rood, vntill the feaſt of All-Saints: trauelling almoſt euery day (according to mine eſtimation) as farre, as from Paris to Orleans, and ſometimes farther, as we were prouided of Poſt-horſes: for ſome daies we had change of horſes twice or thrice in a day. Sometimes we trauelled two or three daies together, not finding any people, and then we were conſtrained not to ride ſo faſt. Of twentie or thirtie Horſes we had alwaies the worſt, becauſe we were Strangers. For euery one tooke their choice of the beſt Horſes before vs. They prouided me alwaies of a ſtrong Horſe, becauſe I was very corpulent and heauy; but whether he ambled a gentle paſe or no, I durſt not make any queſtion. Neither yet durſt I complaine, although he trotted full ſore. But euery man muſt bee contented with his lot as it fell. Whereupon we were exceedingly troubled; for oftentimes our Horſes were tyred before we could come at any people. And then we were conſtrained to beate and whip on our Horſes, and to lay our Garments vpon other emptie Horſes: yea, and ſometimes two of vs to ride vpon one Horſe.

Deut. 32. v. 21. Rom. 10. v. 19.

Cangle an huge plaine Countrey.

OF hunger and thirſt, cold and wearineſſe, there was no end. For they gaue vs no victuals, but onely in the euening. In the morning they vſed to giue vs a little drinke, or ſome ſodden Millet to ſup off. In the euening they beſtowed fleſh vpon vs, as namely, a ſhoulder and breaſt of Rams Mutton, and euery mans meaſured quantitie of broath to drinke. When wee had ſufficient of the fleſh-broath, we were maruellouſly well refreſhed. And it ſeemed to mee moſt pleaſant, and moſt nouriſhing drinke. Euery Saturday I remained faſting vntill night, without eating or drinking of ought. And when night came, I was conſtrained, to my great griefe and ſorrow, to eate fleſh. Sometimes we were faine to eate fleſh halfe ſodden, or almoſt raw, and all for want of Fewell to ſeethe it withall; eſpecially, when we lay in the fields, or were benighted before we came at our iourneys end: becauſe we could not then conueniently gather together the dung of Horſes or Oxen: for other fewell we found but ſeldome, except perhaps a few thornes in ſome places. Likewiſe vpon the banckes of ſome Riuers, there are woods growing here and there. Howbeit they are very rare. In the beginning our guide highly diſdained vs, and it was tedious vnto him to conduct ſuch baſe fellowes. Afterward, when he began to know vs ſomewhat better, he directed vs on our way by the Courts of rich Moals, and we were requeſted to pray for them. Wherefore, had I carried a good Interpreter with me, I ſhould haue had opportunitie to haue done much good. The foreſaid Chingis, who was the firſt great Can or Emperour of the Tartars, had foure Sonnes, of whom proceeded by naturall diſcent many children, euery one of which doeth at this day enioy great poſſeſſions: and they are daily multiplyed and diſperſed ouer that huge and vaſt Deſart, which is in dimenſions, like vnto the Ocean Sea. Our guide therefore directed vs, as we were going on our iourney, vnto many of their habitations. And they maruelled exceedingly, that wee would receiue neither Gold nor Siluer, nor precious and coſtly garments at their hands. They inquired alſo, concerning the great Pope, whether he was of ſo laſting an age as they had heard? For there had gone a report among them, that hee was fiue hundred yeares old. They inquired likewiſe of our Countries, whether there were abundance of Sheepe, Oxen, and Horſes, or no? Concerning the Ocean Sea, they could not conceiue of it, becauſe it was without limits or bankes. Vpon the Euen of the feaſt of All-Saints, wee forſooke the way leading towards the Eaſt, (becauſe the people were now deſcended very much South) and wee went on our iourney by certaine Alpes, or Mountaines directly South-ward, for the ſpace of eight daies together. In the foreſaid Deſart I ſaw many Aſſes (which they call Colan) being rather like vnto Mules: theſe did our guide and his companions chaſe very eagerly: howbeit, they did but loſe their labour, for the beaſts were two ſwift for them. Vpon the ſeuenth day there appeared to the South of vs huge high Mountaynes, and we entred into a place which was well watered, and freſh as a Garden, and found Land tilled and manured. The eight day, after the feaſt of All-Saints, wee arriued at a certaine Towne of the Saracens, named Kenchat, the Gouernour whereof met our Guide at Chap. 24. Of the hunger and thirſt, and other miſeries, which we ſuſtained in our iourned.

Certaine Riuers.

Eight daies iourny Southward.

Aſſes ſwift of foot.

High Mountaines.

Manured grounds.

Kenchat, a Village of the Saracens.

Digitized by Google

at the Townes end with Ale and Cups. For it is their manner at all Townes and Villages, subiect vnto them, to meete the messengers of Baatu and Mangu-Can with meate and drinke. At the same time of the yeere, they went vpon the Ice in that Countrey. And before the feast of Saint Michael, we had frost in the Desart. I enquired the name of that Prouince: but being now in a strange Territorie, they could not tell mee the name thereof, but onely the name of a very small Citie in the same Prouince. And there descended a great Riuer downe from the Mountaynes, which watered the whole Region, acccording as the Inhabitants would giue it passage, by making diuers Chanels and Sluces: neither did this Riuer exonerate it selfe into any Sea, but was swallowed vp by an hideous Gulfe into the bowels of the earth, and it caused many Fennes or Lakes. Also I saw many Vines, and dranke of the Wine thereof.

The seuenth day of November.
A great Riuer.
Many Lakes.
Vines.

Chap. 25. How Ban was put to death: and concerning the habitation of the Dutch men.

THe day following, we came vnto another Cottage neere vnto the Mountaynes. And I enquired what Mountaynes they were, which I vnderstood to bee the Mountaines of Caucasus, which are stretched forth, and continued on both parts to the Sea, from the West vnto the East: and on the West part they are conioyned vnto the foresaid Caspian Sea, where into the Riuer of Volga discharged his streames. I enquired also of the Citie of Talas, wherein were certaine Dutch men, seruants vnto one Buri, of whom Frier Andrew made mention. Concerning whom also I enquired very diligently in the Courts of Sartach and Baatu. Howbeit I could haue no intelligence of them, but onely that their Lord and Master Ban was put to death vpon the occasion following: This Ban was not placed in good and fertile Pastures. And vpon a certaine day being drunken, hee spake on this wise vnto his men. Am not I of the stocke and kindred of Chingis Can, as well as Baatu? (for in very deede he was brother or Nephew vnto Baatu.) Why then doe I not passe and repasse vpon the banke of Etilia, to feede my Cattell there, as freely as Baatu himselfe doth? Which speeches of his were reported vnto Baatu. Whereupon Baatu wrote vnto his seruants to bring their Lord bound vnto him. And they did so. Then Baatu demanded of him whether he had spoken any such words? And he confessed that he had. Howbeit (because it is the Tartars manner to pardon drunken men) he excused himselfe that he was drunken at the same time. How durst thou (quoth Baatu) once name mee in thy drunkennesse? And with that hee caused his head to be chopt off. Concerning the foresaid Dutch men, I could not vnderstand ought, till I was come vnto the Court of Mangu-Can. And there I was informed that Mangu-Can had remoued them out of the iurisdiction of Baatu, for the space of a moneths iourney from Talas Eastward, vnto a certaine Village, called Bolac: where they are set to dig gold, and to make armour. Whereupon I could neither goe nor come by them. I passed very neere the said Citie in going forth, as namely, within three daies iourney thereof: but I was ignorant that I did so: neither could I haue turned out of my way, albeit I had knowne so much. From the foresaid Cottage we went directly Eastward, by the Mountaines aforesaid. And from that time we trauailed among the people of Mangu-Can, who in all places sang and danced before our Guide, because he was the messenger of Baatu. For this curtesie they doe afford each to other: namely, the people of Mangu-Can receiuing the messengers of Baatu in manner aforesaid: and so likewise the people of Baatu entertaining the messengers of Mangu-Can. Notwithstanding, the people of Baatu are more surly and stout, and shew not so much curtesie vnto the subiects of Mangu-Can, as they doe vnto them. A few daies after we entered vpon those Alpes where the Cara Catayans were wont to inhabit. And there we found a mightie Riuer: insomuch that we were constrained to imbarke our selues, and to saile ouer it. Afterward we came into a certaine Valley, where I saw a Castle destroyed, the walls whereof were onely of mudde: and in that place the ground was tilled also. And there wee found a certaine Village, named Equius, wherein were Saracens, speaking the Persian language: howbeit they dwelt an huge distance from Persia. The day following, hauing passed ouer the foresaid Alpes, which descended from the great Mountaynes Southward, wee entred into a most beautifull Plaine, hauing high Mountaynes on our right hand, and on the left hand of vs a certaine Sea or Lake, which containeth fifteene daies iourney in circuit. All the foresaid Plaine is most commodiously watered with certaine Freshets, distilling from the said Mountaynes, all which doe fall into the Lake. In Summer time we returned by the North shoare of the said Lake, and there were great Mountaines on that side also. Vpon the fore-named Plaine there were wont to bee great store of Villages: but for the most part they were all wasted, in regard of the fertile Pastures, that the Tartars might feede their Cattell there. We found one great Citie there, named Coilac, wherein was a Mart, and great store of Merchants frequenting it. In this Citie wee remained fifteene daies, staying for a certaine Scribe or Secretarie of Baatu, who ought to haue accompanied our Guide for the dispatching of certaine affaires in the Court of Mangu. All this Countrey was wont to bee called Organum: and the people thereof had their proper language, and their peculiar kind of writing. But it was altogether inhabited of the people, called Contomanni. The Nestorians likewise in those parts vse the very same kind of language and writing. They are called Organa, because they were wont to bee most skilfull in playing vpon the Organs or Citherne, as it was reported vnto mee. Here first did I see worshippers of Idols, concerning

A Cottage.
The Mountaynes of Caucasus are extended vnto the Easterne Sea.
The Citie of Talas, or Chincitalas.
Frier Andrew.
The Village of Bolac.
He entreth into the Territories of Mangu-Can.
Certaine Alpes, wherein the Cara Catayans inhabited.
A mightie Riuer.
Ground tilled.
Equius.
A Lake of fifteene daies iourney in compasse.
Coilac a great Citie and full of Merchants.
Contomanni.

Digitized by Google

cerning whom, bee it knowne vnto your Maieſtie, that there bee many ſects of them in the Eaſt Countries.

Chap. 26. How the Neſtorians, Saracens, and Idolaters are ioyned together.

THe firſt ſort of theſe Idolaters are called Ingures: whoſe Land bordereth vpon the foreſaid Land of Organum, within the ſaid Mountaines Eaſtward: and in all their Cities Neſtorians doe inhabit together, and they are diſperſed likewiſe towards Perſia, in the Cities of the Saracens. The Citizens of the foreſaid Citie of Cailac had three Idol-temples; and I entred into two of them, to behold their fooliſh ſuperſtitions. In the firſt of which, I found a man hauing a Croſſe painted with Inke vpon his hand, whereupon I ſuppoſed him to be a Chriſtian: for he anſwered like a Chriſtian vnto all queſtions which I demanded of him. And I asked him, Why therefore haue you not the Croſſe with the Image of Ieſu Chriſt thereupon? And he anſwered, We haue no ſuch cuſtome. Whereupon I coniectured that they were indeed Chriſtians: but, that for lacke of inſtruction they omitted the foreſaid ceremonie. For I ſaw there behind a certaine Cheſt (which was vnto them in ſtead of an Altar, whereupon they ſet Candles and Oblations) an Image hauing wings, like vnto the Image of Saint Michael, and other Images alſo, holding their fingers, as if they would bleſſe ſome body. That euening I could not find any thing elſe. For the Saracens doe onely inuite men thither, but they will not haue them ſpeake of their Religion. And therefore, when I enquired of the Saracens concerning ſuch Ceremonies, they were offended thereat. On the morrow after were the Kalends, and the Saracens feaſt of Paſſeouer. And changing mine Inne or lodging the ſame day, I tooke vp mine aboade neere vnto another Idol-Temple. For the Citizens of the ſaid Citie of Cailac doe curteouſly inuite, and louingly entertaine all meſſengers, euery man of them according to his abilitie and portion. And entring into the foreſaid Idol-temple, I found the Prieſts of the ſaid Idols there. For alwaies at the Kalends they ſet open their Temples, and the Prieſts adorne themſelues, and offer vp the peoples Oblations of Bread and Fruits. Firſt therefore, I will deſcribe vnto you thoſe rites and ceremonies which are common vnto all their Idol-temples: and then the ſuperſtitions of the foreſaid Ingures, which be, as it were, a ſect diſtinguiſhed from the reſt. They doe all of them worſhip towards the North, clapping their hands together, and proſtrating themſelues on their knees vpon the earth, holding alſo their foreheads in their hands. Whereupon the Neſtorians of thoſe parts will in no caſe ioyne their hands together in time of prayer: but they pray diſplaying their hands before their breaſts. They extend their Temples in length Eaſt and Weſt; and vpon the North ſide they build a Chamber, in manner of a Veſtrie, for themſelues to goe forth into. Or ſometimes it is otherwiſe. If it be a foure ſquare Temple, in the midſt of the Temple towards the North ſide thereof, they take in one Chamber in that place where the Quire ſhould ſtand. And within the ſaid Chamber, they place a Cheſt long and broade like vnto a Table, and behind the ſaid Cheſt towards the South, ſtands their principall Idoll: which I ſaw at Caracarum, and it was as big as the Idoll of Saint Chriſtopher. Alſo a certaine Neſtorian Prieſt, which had beene in Catay, ſaid that in that Countrey there is an Idoll of ſo huge a bigneſſe, that it may be ſeene two daies iourney before a man come at it. And ſo they place other Idols round about the foreſaid principall Idoll, being all of them finely gilt ouer with pure gold: and vpon the ſaid Cheſt, which is in manner of a Table, they ſet Candles and Oblations. The doores of their Temples are alwaies open towards the South, contrary to the cuſtomes of the Saracens. They haue alſo great Bels like vnto vs. And that is the cauſe (as I thinke) why the Chriſtians of the Eaſt will in no caſe vſe great Bells. Notwithſtanding, they are common among the Ruſſians, and Gracians of Gaſaria.

The people called Ingures Idolaters.

Frier William was at Caracarum.

Chap. 27. Of their Temples and Idols, and how they behaue themſelues in worſhipping their falſe gods. Bookes.

ALl their Prieſts had their heads and beards ſhauen quite ouer: and they are clad in Saffron coloured garments: and being once ſhauen, they leade an vnmarried life from that time forward: and they liue an hundred or two hundred of them together in one Cloiſter or Couent. Vpon thoſe daies when they enter into their Temples, they place two long Formes therein: and ſo ſitting vpon the ſaid Formes like Singing-men in a Quire, namely, the one halfe of them directly ouer againſt the other, they haue certaine bookes in their hands, which ſometimes they lay downe by them vpon the Formes: and their heads are bare ſo long as they remaine in the Temple. And there they reade ſoftly vnto themſelues, not vttering any voice at all. Whereupon comming in amongſt them, at the time of their ſuperſtitious deuotions, and finding them all ſitting mute, in manner aforeſaid, I attempted diuers waies to prouoke them vnto ſpeech, and yet could not by any meanes poſſible. They haue with them alſo whitherſoeuer they goe, a certaine ſtring, with an hundred or two hundred Nut-ſhels thereupon, much like to our bead-roll which wee carrie about with vs. And they doe alwaies vtter theſe words: Ou mam Hactani; God thou knoweſt: as one of them expounded it vnto me. And ſo often doe they expect a reward at Gods hands, as they pronounce theſe words in remembrance of God. Round about their Temple they doe alwaies make a faire Court, like vnto a Church-yard, which they enuiron with a good wall: and vpon the South part thereof, they build a great Portall, wherein they ſit and conferre together. And vpon the top of the ſaid Portall, they pitch a long Pole right vp, exalting ting it, if they can, aboue all the whole Towne besides. And by the same Pole all men may know that there stands the Temple of their Idols. These rites and ceremonies aforesaid, be common vnto all Idolaters in those parts. Going vpon a time towards the foresaid Idoll-temple, I found certaine Priests sitting in the outward Portall. And those which I saw, seemed vnto mee, by their shauen beards, as if they had beene French men. They wore certaine ornaments vpon their heads, made of Paper. The Priests of the foresaid Iugures doe vse such attire whithersoeuer they goe. They are alwaies in their Saffron coloured Iackets, which bee very straight, being laced or buttened from the bosome right downe, after the French fashion, and they haue a Cloake vpon their left shoulder, descending before and behind vnder their right arme, like vnto a Deacon carrying the houssel-box in time of Lent. Their letters or kind of writing the Tartars did receiue. They begin to write at the top of their paper, drawing their lines right downe: and so they reade and multiply their lines from the left hand to the right. They doe vse certaine papers and characters in their Magicall practices. Whereupon their Temples are full of such short scrolls hanged round about them. Also Mangu-Can hath sent letters vnto your Maiestie, written in the language of the Moals or Tartars, and in the foresaid hand or letter of the Iugures. They burne their dead according to the ancient custome, and lay vp the ashes in the top of a Pyramis. Now, after I had sate a while by the foresaid Priests, and entred into their Temple, and seene many of their Images, both great and small, I demanded of them what they beleeued concerning God? And they answered: Wee beleeue that there is onely one God. And I demanded farther: Whether doe you beleeue that he is a Spirit, or some bodily substance? They said: Wee beleeue that hee is a Spirit. Then said I: Doe you beleeue that God euer tooke mans nature vpon him: Then they answered; No. And againe I said: Sithence yee beleeue that hee is a Spirit, to what end doe you make so many bodily Images to represent him: Sithence also you beleeue not that hee was made man: why doe you resemble him rather vnto the Image of a man then of any other creature? Then they answered, saying: we frame not those Images whereby to represent God. But when any rich man amongst vs, or his sonne, or his wife, or any of his friends deceaseth, he causeth the Image of the dead partie to be made, and to be placed here: and we in remembrance of him doe reuerence thereunto. Then I replyed. You doe these things onely for the friendship and flatterie of men. No (said they) but for their memorie. Then they demanded of mee, as it were in scoffing wise: Where is God? To whom I answered: Where is your soule? they said, In our bodies. Then said I, Is it not in euery part of your bodie, ruling and guiding the whole bodie, and yet notwithstanding is not seene or perceiued? Euen so God is euery where, and ruleth all things, and yet is he inuisible, being vnderstanding and wisedome it selfe. Then being desirous to haue had some more conference with them, by reason that mine Interpreter was wearie, and not able to expresse my meaning, I was constrained to keepe silence. The Moals or Tartars are in this regard of their sect; namely, they beleeue that there is but one God: howbeit, they make Images of felt, in remembrance of their deceased friends, couering them with fiue most rich and costly garments; and putting them into one or two Carts, which Carts no man dare once touch: and they are in the custodie of their Sooth-sayers, who are their Priests, concerning whom, I will giue your Highnesse more at large to vnderstand hereafter. These Sooth-sayers or Diuiners, doe alwaies attend vpon the Court of Mangu, and of other great personages. As for the poorer or meaner sort, they haue them not, but such onely as are of the stocke and kindred of Chingis. And when they are to remoue or to take any iourney, the said Diuiners goe before them, euen as the cloudie Pillar went before the Children of Israel. And they appoint ground where the Tents must be pitched, and first of all they take downe their owne houses: and after them the whole Court doth the like. Also vpon their festiuall daies or Kalends, they take forth the foresaid Images, and place them in order, round or circle wise within the house. Then come the Moals or Tartars, and enter into the same house, bowing themselues before the said Images and worship them. Moreouer, it is not lawfull for any stranger to enter into that house. For vpon a certaine time I my selfe would haue gone in, but I was chidden full well for my labour.

Digitized by Google

Paper. So doe the people of China vse to write, drawing their lines perpendicularly downeward, and not as we doe, from the right hand to the left.

Chap. 28. Of diuers and sundry Nations: and of certaine people which were wont to eate their owne parents. The Countrey of Presbyter Iohn. Tangut.

BVt the foresaid Iugures (who liue among the Christians and Saracens) by their sundry disputations, as I suppose, haue beene brought vnto this, to beleeue that there is but one onely God. And they dwelt in certaine Cities, which afterward were brought in subiection vnto Chingis Can: whereupon hee gaue his daughter in marriage vnto their King. Also the Citie of Caracarum it selfe, is in a manner within their Territorie, and the whole Country of King or Presbyter Iohn, and of his brother Vut, lyeth neere vnto their Dominions: sauing that they inhabit in certaine Pastures Northward, and the said Iugures betweene the Mountaynes towards the South. Whereupon it came to passe, that the Moals receiued letters from them. And they are the Tartars principall Scribes: and all the Nestorians almost can skill of their Letters. Next vnto them, betweene the foresaid Mountaynes Eastward, inhabiteth the Nation of Tangut, who are a most valiant people, and tooke Chingis in battell. But after the conclusion of a league, he was set at libertie by them, and afterward subdued them. These people of Tangut haue Oxen of great strength, with tailes like vnto Horses, and with long shag haire vpon their backs and Strange Oxen.

Digitized by Google

and bellies. They haue legs greater then other Oxen haue, and they are exceeding fierce. These Oxen draw the great houses of the Moals: and their hornes are slender, long, streight, and most sharpe pointed: insomuch that their owners are faine to cut off the ends of them. A Cow will not suffer her selfe to be coupled vnto one of them, vnlesse they whistle or sing vnto her. They haue also the qualities of a Buffe: for if they see a man cloathed in red, they runne vpon him immediately to kill him. Next vnto them are the people of Tebet, men which were wont to eate the carkasses of their deceased parents: that for pities sake, they might make no other Sepulchre for them, then their owne bowels. Howbeit of late they haue left off this custome, because that thereby they became abominable and odious vnto all other Nations. Notwithstanding, vnto this day they make fine Cups of the Skulls of their parents, to the end, that when they drinke out of them, they may amidst all their iollities and delights, call their dead parents to remembrance. This was told mee by one that saw it. The said people of Tebet haue great plentie of gold in their Land. Whosoeuer therefore wanteth gold, diggeth til he hath found some quantitie, and then taking so much thereof as will serue his turne, hee layeth vp the residue within the earth: because, if he should put it into his Chest or Store-house, he is of opinion that God would withhold from him all other gold within the earth. I saw some of those people, being very deformed creatures. In Tangut I saw lusty tall men, but browne and swart in colour. The Ingures are of a middle stature, like vnto our French men. Among the Ingures is the originall and roote of the Turkish, and Comanian Languages. Next vnto Tebet are the people of Langa and Solanga, whose messengers I saw in the Tartars Court. And they had brought more then ten great Carts with them, euery one of which was drawne with six Oxen. They bee little browne men like vnto Spaniards. Also they haue iackets, like vnto the vpper Vestiment of a Deacon, saue that the sleeues are somewhat streighter. And they haue Miters vpon their heads like Bishops. But the fore-part of their Miter is not so hollow within as the hinder part: neither is it sharpe pointed or cornered at the top: but there hang downe certaine square flaps compacted of a kind of Straw, which is made rough and ragged with extreame heate, and is so trimmed, that it glittereth in the Sunne-beames, like vnto a Glasse, or an Helmet well burnished. And about their Temples they haue long bands of the foreland matter, fastened vnto their Miters, which houer in the winde, as if two long hornes grew out of their heads. And when the wind tossed them vp and downe too much, they tie them ouer the middest of their Miter, from one Temple to another: and so they lie circle wise ouerthwart their heads. Moreouer, their principall messenger comming vnto the Tartars Court, had a table of Elephants tooth about him, of a cubit in length, and a handfull in breadth, being very smoothe. And whensoeuer he spake vnto the Emperor himselfe, or vnto any other great personage, he alwaies beheld that table, as if hee had found therein those things which hee spake: neither did hee cast his eyes to the right hand, nor to the left, nor vpon his face with whom he talked. Yea, going too and fro before his Lord, hee looketh no where but onely vpon his table. Beyond them (as I vnderstand of a certaintie) there are other people called Muc, hauing Villages, but no one particular man of them appropriating any Cattell vnto himselfe. Notwithstanding, there are many flocks and droues of Cattell in their Countrey, and no man appointed to keepe them. But when any one of them standeth in neede of any beast, hee ascendeth vp vnto a hill, and there maketh a shoute, and all the Cattell which are within hearing of the noyse, come flocking about him, and suffer themselues to be handled and taken, as if they were tame. And when any messenger or stranger commeth into their Countrey, they shut him vp into an house, ministring there things necessary vnto him, vntill his businesse be dispatched. For if any stranger should trauell through that Countrey, the Catttell would flie away at the very sent of him, and so would become wilde. Beyond Muc is great Cataya, the Inhabitants whereof (as I suppose) were of old time, called Seres. For from them are brought most excellent stuffes of silke. And this people is called Seres, of a certaine Towne in the same Countrey. I was credibly informed, that in the said Countrey, there is one Towne hauing Walls of siluer, and Bulwarkes or Towers of gold. There bee many Prouinces in that Land, the greater part whereof are not as yet subdued vnto the Tartars. And the * Sea lyeth betweene them and India. These Catayans are men of a little stature, speaking much through the nose. And this is generall, that all they of the East haue small eyes. They are excellent workemen in euery Art: and their Physicians are well skilled in the Vertues of Herbs, and iudge exactly of the Pulse; But vse no Vrinals, nor know any thing concerning Vrine. This I saw, for there are many of them at Caracarum. And they are alwaies wont to bring vp all their children in the same trade whereof the father is. And therefore they pay so much tribute; for they giue the Moallians euery day one thousand and fiue hundred Cessines or Iascots: (Iascot is a piece of siluer weighing ten Markes) that is to say, euery day fifteene thousand Markes, beside silkes and certaine victuals, which they receiue from thence, and other seruices which they doe them. All these Nations are betweene the Mountaynes of Caucasus,

The people of Tebet.

Abundance of gold.

The stature of the people of Tangut, and of the Ingures.

Langa and Solanga.

The people of Solanga resemble Spaniards.

A table of Elephants tooth.

The people called Muc.

Great Cataya.

* From hence is supplyed by Master Hakluits industrie (as he told me) out of a Manuscript in Bennet Colledge in Cambridge: the other part hee had out of an imperfect Copie of my Lord Lumlies. The Chapters disagree, as being (I thinke) rather some Transcribers diuision then the Authors. Yet haue I followed the numbers I found, euen where they are obscurest. The Friers Latin for some barbarous words and phrases, hath beene troublesome to translate. The worke I hold a Iewell of Antiquitie, now first entirely publike.

on

Idolatry.

on the North side of those Mountaines to the East Sea, on the South part of Scythia, which the Shepheards of Moal doe inhabit: All which are tributarie vnto them, and all giuen to Idolatry, and report many fables of a multitude of gods, and certaine Deified men, and make a pedigree of the gods as our Poets doe.

Nestorians.

The Nestorians are mingled among them as Strangers; so are the Saracens as farre as Cathay. The Nestorians inhabit fifteene Cities of Cathay, and haue a Bishopricke there, in a Citie called Segin. But further, they are meere Idolaters. The Priests of the Idols of the said Nations, haue all broad yellow hoods. There are also among them (as I vnderstood) certaine Hermits liuing in the Woods and Mountaines, of an austere and strange life. The Nestorians there know nothing, for they say their Seruice, and haue holy Bookes in the Syrian tongue, which they know not. So that they sing as our Monkes doe, who are ignorant of Grammar; and hence it commeth, that they are wholly corrupted. They are great Vsurers and Drunkards, and some of them also who liue among the Tartars, haue many Wiues, as the Tartars haue. When they enter into the Church, they wash their lower parts, as the Saracens doe. They eate flesh on Friday of the weeke, and hold their Feasts that day, after the manner of the Saracens. The Bishop comes seldome into those Countries, perchance, scarse once in fiftie yeares. Then they cause all their little Children (which are Males) to be made Priests, euen in the Cradell; so that all their men almost are Priests: and after this they marrie Wiues, which is directly against the decrees * of the Fathers: they are also Bigami, for the Priests themselues, their first Wife being dead, marrie another. They are all Simonists, for they giue no holy thing freely. They are very carefull for their Wiues and Children, whereby they apply themselues to gaine, and not to the spreading of the Faith. Whence it commeth to passe, while some of them bring vp some of the Nobilities children of Moal (although they teach them the Gospell, and the Articles of the Faith) yet by their euill life and couetousnesse, they driue them further from Christianitie; Because the life of the Moallians, and Tuinians (who are Idolaters) is more harmelesse then theirs.

Segni a Citie of Cathay.

They are so at this day.

The euill qualities of the Nestorians.

Hence by corruption of manners and ignorance of faith, seemeth the Apostasy of the greatest part of Asia to haue happened, furthered by Tartarian inuasions and Saracenicall.

All Priests.

* Consider our Author a Frier, whose trauels we rather embrace, then (in such passages) his diuinitie. They were later Fathers which made such Decrees, contrary to the Father of truth which ordained marriage in Leuies Priest-hood, and chose married men to the Apostleship: and forewarned of another Father, who with Doctrines of Deuils should prohibite meate and marriage, vnder colour of Priests chastitie, making the Temple stewes to carnall and spirituall whoredome.

Chap. 26.

Of such things as befell them, departing from Cailac, to the Country of the Naymannes.

Nouemb. 30.

WE departed from the foresaid Citie of Cailac on Saint Andrewes day. And there wee found almost within three leagues, a whole Castle or Village of Nestorians. Entring into their Church, we sang, Salue Regina, &c. with ioy, as loud as we could, because it was long since we had seene a Church. Departing thence, in three daies we came to the entrance of that Prouince, in the head of the foresaid Sea, which seemed to vs as tempestuous as the Ocean, and we saw a great Iland therein. My Companions drew neere the shoare, and wet a Linnen cloath therein, to taste the Water, which was somewhat salt, but might bee drunke. There went a certaine Valley ouer against it, from betweene the great Mountaines, betweene South and East: and betweene the hils, was another certaine great Sea; and there ranne a Riuer through that Valley, from the other Sea into this. Where came such a continuall winde through the Valley, that men passe with great danger, least the wind carrie them into the Sea. Therefore wee left the Valley and went towards the North, to the great hilly Countries, couered with deepe Snow, which then lay vpon the Earth: so that vpon Saint Nicholas day we beganne now to haste our iourny much, and (because we found no people, but the Iani themselues (to wit) men appointed from daies iourney to daies iourney together, the Messengers together. Because in many places in the hilly Countries) the way is narrow, and there are but few fields, so that betweene day and night we met with two Iani, whereupon of two daies iourneys we made one, and trauelled more by night then by day. It was extreame cold there, so that they lent vs their Goats skins, turning the haire outward.

Decemb. 6.

Extreme cold.

Decemb. 7.

The second Sunday of Aduent in the euening, we passed by a certaine place betweene very terrible Rockes: and our Guide sent vnto me, intreating me to speake some good words, wherewith the Deuils might be driuen away; because in that passage, the Deuils themselues were wont suddenly to carrie men away, so that it was not knowne what became of them. Sometimes they violently snatched a Horse and left the man: sometimes they drew out a mans bowels, and left the emptie carkasse vpon the Horse. And many such things did often fall out there. Then we sang with a loud voyce, Credo in Deum, &c. And by the Grace of God, wee passed through (with all our company) vnhurt. After that, they beganne to intreat me, that I would write them Papers to carrie on their heads: and I told them, I would teach them a word which they should carrie in their hearts, whereby their soules and bodies should be saued euerlastingly. But alwaies when I would teach them, I wanted an Interpreter: Yet I wrote them the Creede and the Lords Prayer; saying, Heere it is written whatsoeuer a man ought to beleeue concerning God. Here also is that prayer, wherein we begge of God whatsoeuer is needfull for a man: Whereupon beleeue firmely that which is written here, although you cannot vndervnderſtand it, and aske of God that he do that for you which is contained in this written Prayer: becauſe with his owne mouth he taught it his friends, and I hope he will ſaue you. I could not doe any thing elſe, becauſe it was very dangerous to ſpeake the words of doctrine by ſuch an Interpreter, nay almoſt impoſſible, becauſe he was ignorant.

A dangerous passage.

Chap. 27. Of the Country of the Naymans, and what befell the ſtock of Ken-chan his ſonne & wiues.

AFter this, wee entred into that plaine where the Court of Ken-Cham was, which was wont to be the Countrey of the Naymans, who were the peculiar Subiects of Preſbyter Iohn: but at that time I ſaw not that Court, but in my returne. Yet heere I declare vnto you what befell his Anceſtry, his Soone and Wiues. Ken-Cham being dead, Baatu deſired that Mangu ſhould be Chan. But I could vnderſtand in certaintie of the death of Ken. Frier Andrew ſaid, that he dyed by a certaine medicine giuen him: and it was ſuſpected that Baatu cauſed it to be made. Yet I heard otherwiſe, for he ſummoned Baatu, to come and doe him homage. And Baatu tooke his iourney ſpeedily with great preparation; but he and his Seruants were much afraid, and ſent one of his Brothers before, called Stichin: who when he came to Ken, and ſhould waite vpon his Cup, contention ariſing betweene them, they ſlue one another. The Widow of Stichin kept vs a whole day, to goe into her houſe and bleſſe her, that is, pray for her. Therefore Ken being dead, Mangu was choſen by the conſent of Baatu. And was then choſen when Frier Andrew was there. Ken had a certaine Brother, called Siremon, who by the counſell of Kens Wife and her Vaſſals, went with great preparation towards Mangu, as if he meant to doe him homage, and yet in truth he purpoſed to kill him, and deſtroy his whole Court. And when he was neere Mangu, within one or two daies iourney, one of his Wagons remained broken in the way. While the Wagoner laboured to mend it, in the meane ſpace came one of the Seruants of Mangu, who helped him: he was ſo inquiſitiue of their iourney, that the Wagoner reuealed vnto him what Siremon purpoſed to doe. Then turning out of the way, as if hee little regarding it, went vnto the herd of Horſes, and tooke the beſt Horſe hee could chooſe, and poſting night and day, came ſpeedily to the Court of Mangu, reporting vnto him what he had heard. Then Mangu quickly aſſembling all his ſubiects, cauſed foure rings of Armed men to compaſſe his Court, that none might goe in or out: the reſt he ſent againſt Siremon, who tooke him, (not ſuſpecting his purpoſe had beene diſcouered) and brought him to the Court with all his followers. Who when Mangu lay the matter to his charge, ſtrait-way confeſſed it. Then he and his eldeſt Sonne Ken Chan were ſlaine, and three hundred of the Nobilitie of the Tartars with them. The Noble Women alſo were ſent for, who were all beaten with burning fire-brands to make them confeſſe: and hauing confeſſed, were put to death. His youngeſt ſonne Ken, who could not be capable or guiltie of the conſpiracy, was left aliue: And his Fathers Palace was left vnto him, with all belonging vnto it, as well Men as Chattels: and we paſſed by it in our returne. Nor durſt my Guides turne in vnto it, neither going nor comming. For the Lady of the Nations ſate there in heauineſſe, and there was none to comfort her.

Baatu.

Stichin and Ken kill one another.

Chap. 28. Of their comming to the Court of Mangu Chan.

THen went wee vp againe into the high Countries, going alwaies towards the North. At length on Saint Stephens day we entred into a great Plaine like the Sea, where there was not ſo much as a Mole-hill. And the next day, on the feaſt of S. Iohn the Euangeliſt, we came vnto the Palace of that great Lord. But when we were neere it, within fiue daies iourney, our Hoſt where we lay, would haue directed vs a way farre about, ſo that wee ſhould yet trauaile more then fifteene daies. And this was the reaſon (as I vnderſtood) that wee might goe by Onam Kerule their proper Countrey, where the Court of Chingis-Chan is. Others ſaid, that he did it for this purpoſe, that he might make the way longer, and might ſhew his power the more. For ſo they are wont to deale with men comming from Countries not ſubiect to them. And our Guide obtained with great difficultie, that we might go the right way. For they held vs vpon this from the morning till three of the clocke. In that way alſo, the Secretarie (whom we expected at Cailac) told me, that it was contained in the Letters which Baatu ſent to Mangu-Chan, that wee required an Army and ayde of Sartach againſt the Saracens. Then I began to wonder much, and to be greatly troubled: for I knew the Tenor of the Letters, and that no mention therof was made therein: ſaue that yee aduiſed him to be a friend to all Chriſtians, and ſhould exalt the Croſſe, and be an enemy to all the enemies of the Croſſe: and becauſe alſo the Interpreters were Armenians, of the greater Armenia, who greatly hated the Saracens; leſt perhaps they had interpreted any thing in euill part to make the Saracens more odious and hatefull at their pleaſure, I therefore held my peace, not ſpeaking a word with them, or againſt them; for I feared to gainſay the words of Baatu, leaſt I ſhould incurre ſome falſe accuſation without reaſonable cauſe. We came therefore the foreſaid day vnto the ſaid Court. Our Guide had a great houſe appointed him, and we three a little Cottage, wherein wee could ſcarſe lay our ſtuffe, make our beds, and haue a little fire. Many came to viſit our Guide, and brought him drinke made of Rice, in long ſtrait mouthed bottles, in the which I could diſcerne no difference from the beſt Antiſſiodorenſian Wine, ſaue that it had not the ſent of Wine. We were called, and ſtraightly examined vpon what buſineſſe we came: I anſwered, that we heard of Sartach that he was a Chriſtian: we came therefore vnto him; the French King sent him a Packet by vs, he sent vs to Baatu his Father: & his Father hath sent vs hither, hee should haue written the cause, wherevpon they demanded whether we would make peace with them? I answered, he hath sent Letters vnto Sartach as a Christian: and if he had knowne, he were not a Christian, hee would neuer haue sent him Letters, to treate of peace: I say, he hath done you no wrong: if he had done any, why should you warre vpon him, or his people? he, willingly (as a iust man) would reforme himselfe, and desire peace. If yee without cause will make warre with him, or his Nation, we hope that God (who is iust) will helpe them. And they wondred, alwayes repeating, why came yee, seeing yee came not to make peace? For they are now so puffed vp with pride, that they thinke the whole World should desire to make peace with them. And truly, if I might bee suffered, I would preach Warre against them to the vttermost of my power) throughout the whole World. But I would not plainly deliuer the cause of my comming, lest I should speake any thing against that which Baatu commanded. I told them therefore the whole cause of my comming thither, was because he sent me.

Onam Kerule the proper Country of the Tartars. Chap. 15.

Tartars pride.

Decemb. 28. The day following we were brought vnto the Court, and I thought I could goe bare-foot, as I did in our Countrey: whereupon, I layd aside my shooes. But such as come to the Court, alight farre from the house where the Great Chan is, as it were a Bow-shot off: where the Horses abide, and a Boy to keepe them. Whereupon, when wee alighted there, and our Guide went with vs to the house of the Great Chan, a Hungarian Boy was present there, who knew vs (to wit) our Order. And when the men came about vs, and beheld vs as Monsters, especially because we were bare-footed, and demanded whether we did not lacke our feet, because they supposed we should strait-way haue lost them, that Hungarian told them the reason, shewing them the condition of our Order. Then the chiefe Secretary (who was a Nestorian and a Christian, by whose counsell and aduice almost all is done) came vnto vs, to see vs, and looked earnestly vpon vs, and called the Hungarian vnto him, of whom he demanded many Questions. Then we were willed to returne vnto our Lodging.

Chap. 29. Of a Christian chappell, and of the conference with Sergius the counterfeit Armenian Monke, and of the sharpnes and continuance of the Winter.

An Armenian Monke.

Their conference with the Armenian Monke.

Monkish Re(ue)lation.

AND when we returned, at the end of the Court towards the East, farre from the Court, as much as a Crosse-bow could shoot at twice, I saw a house, vpon the which there was a little Crosse, then I reioyced much, supposing there was some Christianitie there. I went in boldly and found an Altar very well furnished, for there in a Golden cloth were the Images of Christ and the blessed Virgin, and Saint Iohn Baptist, and two Angels, the lineaments of their bodies and garments distinguished with Pearle, and a great siluer Crosse hauing precious stones in the corners, and the middle thereof, and many other Embroyderings: and a Candle burning with Oyle before the Altar, hauing eight Lights. And there sate an Armenian Monke, some-what blacke and leane, clad with a rough hairen Coate to the middle legge, hauing vpon it a blacke Cloke of bristles, furred with spotted Skinnes, girt with Iron vnder his haire-cloth. Presently after wee entred in, before we saluted the Monke, falling flat vpon the ground, we sang, Aue Regina Cœlorum, &c. and he rising, prayed with vs. Then saluting him, we sate by him hauing a little fire before him in a Pan. Therefore we told him the cause of our comming. And he began to comfort vs much, saying, that we should boldly speake, because we were the Messengers of God, who is greater then all men. Afterwards he told vs of his comming, saying, he came thither a moneth before vs, and that he was a Heremite of the Territorie of Hierusalem, and that the Lord appeared to him three times, commanding him to goe to the Prince of the Tartars: And when he deferred to goe, the third time God threatned him, and ouerthrew him vpon the ground, saying, he should dye, vnlesse he went; and that he told Mangu Chan, that if he would become a Christian, the whole World should be obedient vnto him; and the French and the Great Pope should obay him: and he aduised me to say the like vnto him. Then I answered, brother, I will willingly perswade him to become a Christian: (For I came for this purpose, to preach thus vnto all) I will promise him also, that the French, and the Pope will much reioyce thereat, and account him for a brother and a friend: but I will neuer promise, that they shall become his Seruants, and pay him Tribute, as these other Nations; because in so doing I should speake against my conscience, then he held his peace. We went therefore together to our Lodging, which I found a cold Harbour: and we had eaten nothing that day, so we boyled a little flesh and Millet in the broth of flesh to sup. Our Guide and his companions were drunken at the Court: and little care was had of vs. At that time the Messengers of Vastace were there hard by vs, which wee knew not: And the men of the Court made vs rise in great haste, at the dawning of the day. And I went bare-foot with them a little way, vnto the house of the said Messengers. And they demanded of them, whether they knew vs. Then that Grecian Souldier calling our Order and my companion to remembrance, because he had seene him in the Court of Vastace, with Frier Thomas, our Minister, and all his fellowes, gaue great testimony of vs. Then they demanded whether wee had peace or war with Vastace? we haue (said I) nor war nor peace. And they demanded, how that might be? Because (said I) their Countries are far remoued one from the other, and meddle not together. Then the Messenger of Vastace said wee had peace, giuing mee a caueat: so I held my tongue. That morning, my toes ends were frozen, so that I could no longer goe bare-foot: for Toes frozen. S. Francis Order not Catholike; Vniuersally fitting all places and seasons.

in

in those Countreyes the cold is extreame sharpe: and from the time when it beginneth to freeze it neuer ceaseth vntill May: nay, in the moneth of May it freezed euery morning; but in the day time it thawed through the heate of the Sunne: but in the Winter it neuer thawes, but the Ice continues with euery winde. And if there were any winde there in the Winter, as it is with vs, nothing could liue there, but it is alwaies milde weather vntill Aprill, and then the winds arise, and at that time when wee were there (about Easter) the cold arising with the winde killed infinite creatures. In the Winter little snow fell there: but about Easter, which was in the latter end of Aprill, there fell so great a snow, that all the streets of Caracarum were full; that they were fayne to carrie it out with their Carts. Then they first brought vs (from the Court) Ramskin Coats, and Breeches of the same, and Shooes; which my Companion and Interpreter receiued. But I thought I had no need of them, because I supposed my Pelt-garment (which I brought from Baatu) was sufficient for me.

Frost vntill the moneth of May.

Easter in the end of the end of Aprill. And great Snow in the end of Aprill.

Then the fift of Ianuarie we were brought vnto the Court: and there came Nestorian Priests vnto me, (I not knowing they were Christians) demanding which way we worshipped? I said, vnto the East. And this they demanded because wee had shauen our beards by the aduice of our Guide, that wee might appeare before Chan according to the fashion of our Countrey: whereupon, they thought wee had beene Tuinians (to wit) Idolaters. They made vs also expound out of the Bible. Then they demanded what reuerence wee would doe to Chan, whether after our owne fashion, or theirs? To whom I made answere. Wee are Priests, giuen to the seruice of God; Noblemen in our Countrey will not suffer Priests to bow their knees before them, for the honour of God; neuertheless, wee will humble our selues to all men, for the Lords sake. Wee came from a farre Countrey. If yee please, wee will first sing prayses vnto God, who hath brought vs safe hither from afarre; and after, wee will doe whatsoeuer pleaseth the Lord; with this exception, that he command vs nothing which may bee against the worship and honour of God. Then they entring into the house, deliuered what wee had said. So their Lord was contented. And they set vs before the gate of the house, lifting vp the Felt which hung before the gate. And because it was, Christmas wee began to sing, Shauing.

Respect of Priests.

A Solis ortus cardine,	From the first Easterne Land,
Et vsque Terræ limitem,	To furthest Westerne Strand,
Christum canamus Principem,	Let vs Christ laud and sing
Natum Maria Virgine.	Blest Virgins Sonne, our King.

Chap. 30. Of the Admitting of the Friars to Mangu chan, and his description, and their conference with him.

AND when wee had sung this Hymne, they searched our legs, and our bosoms, and our armes, whether wee had Kniues about vs. They made our Interpreter vngird himselfe, and leaue his Girdle and his Knife, without in the custodie of a Doore-keeper.

Then we came in. And in the entrance there stood a Bench with Cosmos, by the which they make our Interpreter stand; and caused vs to sit vpon a Forme before the Ladies. The whole house within was hanged with Cloth of Gold: and on a certaine Hearth in the middle of the house, there was a fire made of thornes and Wormewood roots (which grow there very bigge) and Oxe dung. But he sate vpon a Bed clothed with a spotted skin or Furre, bright, and shining like a Seales skin. Hee was a flat-nosed man, of a middle stature, about the age of fiue and fortie yeeres: and a little pretie young woman (which was his wife) sate by him, and one of his daughters, Cirina by name, (a hard-fauoured woman) marriageable, with other little ones, sate next vnto them vpon a Bed. For that was the house of a certaine Christian Ladie, whom he dearely loued, by whom he had the foresaid daughter: and hee married that young wife beside: but yet the daughter was Mistresse of all that Court, which was her Mothers. Then he made them aske vs, what we would drinke, whether Wine, or Ceracina, that is, drinke made of Rice, or Caracosus, that is, cleere Cowes milke, or Ball, that is, Mede made of Honey: for they vse these foure kinds of Drinkes in the Winter. Then I answered, Sir, wee are not men who take pleasure in drinke. What pleaseth you shall content vs. Then he commanded drinke of Rice to be giuen vs, cleere and sauoury, as white Wine: whereof I tasted a little for reuerence of him. And our Interpreter (to our misfortune) stood by the Butlers: who gaue him much drinke, and hee was quickly drunke. Then Chan caused Falcons, and other birds to bee brought vnto him, which he tooke vpon his fist, and lookes vpon them: and after a long time he commanded vs to speake. Then we were to bow the knees. And hee had his Interpreter, a certaine Nestorian, whom I knew not to bee a Christian; and wee had our Interpreter, such an one as he was, who now also was drunke. Then I said, Wee first giue thankes and praise to God, who hath brought vs from so remoued parts of the World, to see Mangu Chan, to whom God hath giuen so great power vpon Earth: and wee beseech our Lord, by whose command wee liue and die, that he would grant him a long and a prosperous life. (For this they desire, that men pray for their liues.) Then I told him: Sir, Wee haue heard of Sartach that he was a Christian; and the Christians who heard it, but specially the French King, reioyced: wherefore wee came vnto him, and our Lord and King hath sent him Letters by vs wherein were words of peace: and amongst other things, hee testifieth of vs, whose seruants wee are, and intreated him to suffer vs to abide in his Countrey. For it is our office to teach men to liue according to the Law of God. And hee sent vs to Baatu his father: and

Of the Description of Mangu chan, and their conference with him.

The description of Mangu chan.

Drinke of Rice is cleere and sauoury, and like to white Wine. The Indians call it Racke.

The Oration of Frier William to Mangu Chan.

The like Letters you haue of King Edw. 1. before l. 8. c. 7. for another Friar.

Baatu hath ſent vs hither vnto you. You are they to whom God hath giuen great Dominion vpon earth; We therefore intreat your Highneſſe, to giue vs leaue to continue in your Countrey to doe the ſeruice of God for you, your Wiues and Children. Wee haue neither Gold nor Siluer, nor precious ſtones to preſent vnto you, but our ſelues, whom we preſent to ſerue, and pray vnto God for you. At the leaſt, giue vs leaue to continue while the cold be paſt. My Companion is ſo weake, that hee cannot by any meanes trauaile on Horſe-backe without hazzard of his life. For my Companion willed me, and adiured me, to craue leaue to ſtay. For we ſuppoſed we muſt returne to Baatu, vnleſſe of his ſpeciall Grace he gaue vs leaue to ſtay. Then he began to anſwer: Euen as the Sunne ſpreads his beames euery where, ſo our power and Baatues ſpreads it ſelfe euery where: ſo that wee haue no needs of your Siluer and Gold. Hitherto I vnderſtood my Interpreter: but further, I could not perceiue any perfect ſentence. Whereby I eaſily found hee was drunke, and Mangu Chan himſelfe was drunke alſo, as I thought. Yet with this, (as it ſeemed to mee, hee ended his ſpeach) that he was diſpleaſed that we came firſt to Sartach, before wee came to him. Then ſeeing the defect of my Interpreter, I held my peace, this onely excepted, that I intreated his Highneſſe hee would not be diſpleaſed, for that which I ſpoke of Gold and Siluer; becauſe I ſpoke it not that he had need of ſuch things, or deſired them, but becauſe we would willingly honour him with temporall and ſpirituall things.

The anſwer of Mangu Chan, not wel vnderſtood and deliuered by a drunken Interpreter.

Then he made vs riſe, and ſit downe againe; and after ſome few words, doing our dutie to him, we went out, and his Secretaries, and that Interpreter of his (who had the bringing vp of one of his Daughters) went together with vs. And they began to bee very inquiſitiue of the Kingdome of France, whether there were many Rams, Oxen and Horſes there, as if preſently they ſhould enter and take all. And oftentimes I was faine to bridle my ſelfe much, in diſſembling anger and indignation. And I anſwered, There are many good things there which yee ſhall ſee, if yee happen to come thither. Then they appointed vs one, who ſhould haue care of vs. And we went vnto the Monke: and when we came out againe, ready to goe to our lodging, the foreſaid Interpreter came vnto vs; ſaying, Mangu Chan hath compaſſion on you, and giues you two moneths time to ſtay. Then the extreame cold will be paſt, and he ſends to you: Here within ten daies iourney there is a good Citie, called Caracarum, if yee will go thither, he will cauſe neceſſarie things to be giuen you: but if yee will abide heere, yee may, and yee ſhall haue neceſſaries: yet it will be a troubleſome thing for you to follow the Court. And I anſwered: The Lord preſerue Mangu Chan, and grant him a good and long life. We haue found this Monk heere, whom we thinke to be an holy man, and that by the good pleaſure of God he came into theſe parts, wherefore we would willingly ſtay with him, becauſe wee are Monkes, and wee would pray together for the life of Chan. Then he held his peace and departed. And we went vnto our houſe, which we found very cold, and without any Fuell, as yet faſting, and it was night. Then he, to whom we were recommended, prouided vs Fuell, and a little meate. Our Guide was now to returne to Baatu, who deſired a Carpet of vs, which (by his Commandement) we left in the Court of Baatu: which we gaue him, and he peaceably departed ſo, kiſſing our right hand; and confeſſing his fault, if he ſuffered vs to indure hunger and thirſt vpon the way. We pardoned him, crauing pardon of him and his whole Family, if we had giuen them any euill example.

Caracarum ten daies iourney from the Courts of Mangu Chan, toward the North, as appeareth, Ch. 36.

Chap. 31. Of Paſcha, of Mentz in Lotharingia, and William Bouchier the Goldſmith, a Pariſian.

Building in requeſt.

ACertaine Woman of Mentz in Lotharingia, called Paſcha, found vs, who made vs great cheere, according to her power, who belong to the Court of that Lady, which was a Chriſtian, of whom I ſpoke before: who told vs of her ſtrange pouertie which ſhe indured before ſhe came to the Court; but now ſhe was well to liue, for ſhe had a young Husband, a Rutenian, (by whom ſhe had three very faire Children) who was skilfull in building, which amongſt them is an excellent Art. Moreouer, ſhe told vs, that at Caracarum, there was a certaine Goldſmith, called William, borne at Paris; whoſe ſurname was Bouchier, and his Fathers name Lawrence Bouchier, and ſhe thinketh he hath a Brother yet vpon the Great Bridge, called Roger Bouchier. And ſhe told me, that he had a certaine young man which he brought vp, whom hee accounted as his Son, who was an excellent Interpreter. But Mangu Chan deliuered to the foreſaid Gold-ſmith, three hundred Iaſcots, that is, three thouſand Markes, and fiftie Worke-men to make a piece of worke, ſo that ſhe feared he could not ſend his Sonne vnto me. For ſhe heard ſome ſay vnto her in the Court, The men which came from your Countrey are good men, and Mangu Chan would willingly ſpeak vnto them, but their Interpreter is nothing worth: therefore ſhe was carefull for an Interpreter. Then I writ vnto the foreſaid Gold-ſmith, certifying him of my comming hither, and requeſting him, that if he could, he would ſend me his ſonne. And he wrote me anſwere, that he could not that Moone, but the next, his worke ſhould bee perfected, and then he would ſend him vnto me. We ſtayed therefore with other Meſſengers. And it is otherwiſe with Meſſengers in Baatu's Court, then in the Court of Mangu Chan. For in the Court of Baatu, there is one Iani on the Eaſt ſide, who receiueth all ſuch as come from the Weſt, and ſo of other Countries of the world: But in the Court of Mangu, they are all together vnder one Iani, and they may ſee and viſit one another. In Baatu's Court they know not

They alſo reckon by Moones in Eaſt India.

one

Digitized by Google

one another, and know not one of another, whether hee be a Messenger or no; because they know not one anothers lodging, nor see one another but in the Court: and when one is called, perchance another is not called. For they goe not to the Court, vnlesse they bee sent for. Wee found there a certaine Christian of Damascus, who said he came in behalfe of the Soldan of Mons Regalis, and of Crac; who desired to become friend and tributarie to the Tartars.

Crac is a strong fortresse of the Templars in the holy Land.

THE yeare also before I came thither, there was a certaine Clerke of Acon, who called himselfe Raimund, but in truth his name was Theodolus; and he tooke his iourney from Cyprus with Frier Andrew, and went with him into Persia, and got him certaine Instruments of Armenicus there in Persia, who abode there after Frier Andrew. Frier Andrew returning, hee went forward with his Instruments, and came to Mangu Chan: who being demanded wherefore he came, said, That he was with a certaine holy Bishop, to whom the Lord sent Letters from heauen, written in golden Characters, and commanded him to send them to the Emperour of the Tartars, because he should bee Lord of the whole Earth, and that he should perswade men to make peace with him. Then Mangu said vnto him; If thou hadst brought those Letters which came from heauen, and the Letters of thy Lord, then hadst beene welcome. Then he answered, That he brought Letters, but they were with other things of his, vpon a certaine wilde and pampered Gelding, which escaping fled from him through the Woods and Mountaines, so that he had lost all. And it is very true, that many such chances often happen: wherefore a man must very warily hold his Horse when he alighteth for necessitie. Then Mangu demanded the name of the Bishop. He said, he was called Odo. Whereupon he told him of Damascus, and Master William, who was Clerke of the Lord Legat. Then Chan demanded in whose Kingdome it was? To whom he made answer, That it was vnder a certaine King of the Frankes, called Moles: (for he had heard of that which happened at Mallora; and he would haue said, that they were of your Seruants) moreouer, hee told Chan that the Saracens were betweene the Frankes and him, who hindred his way. But if the way had beene open, he would haue sent Messengers, and willingly haue made peace with him. Then Mangu Chan asked him, If hee would bring his Messengers to that King, and that Bishop? He told him he would, and also to the Pope. Then Mangu caused an exceeding strong Bow to bee made, which two men could scarse bend, and two Arrowes, whose heads were of Siluer, full of holes, which sing when they are shot like a whistle. And he inioyned Moal whom hee should send with the said Theodolus; Thou shalt goe to that King of the Frankes, to whom this man shall bring thee, and thou shalt present him with these in my behalfe, And if he will haue peace with vs, we will winne the Countrey vpon the Saracens, euen home to him, and will grant him the rest of the Countrey vnto the West: If otherwise, bring backe the Bow and Arrowes vnto vs, and tell him we shoot farre, and smite strongly with such Bowes. Then he caused Theodolus to goe forth, whose Interpreter Master Williams Sonne was, and in his hearing, he said vnto Moal. Thou shalt go with this man, marke well the Waies, the Countries, and their Castles, Men and Munition. Then the young man blamed Theodolus, saying, He had done ill, in conducting the Messengers of the Tartars with him, for they went for no other cause, but to spy. Then hee answered, That he would set them on the Sea, that they should not know whence they came, or which way to returne. Mangu gaue also vnto Moal his golden Bull, or Tablet, to wit, a plate of Gold of an hand-breadth, and halfe a cubit long, wherein his commandement is ingrauen: Who so carrieth that, may command what he will, and it is done without delay. So then Theodolus came to Vastacius, determining to passe ouer to the Pope, that he might deceiue the Pope, as he had deceiued Mangu Chan. Then Vastacius demanded of him, whether he had Letters to the Pope, because he was a Messenger, and should conduct the Messengers of the Tartars? But, not being able to shew the Letters, he tooke him and spoiled him of all that hee had gotten, and cast him in prison. And Moal fell sicke and dyed there. But Vastacius sent backe the golden Tablet to Mangu Chan, by the seruants of Moal: whom I met at Assaron in the entrance into Turkie, who told mee what happened to Theodolus. Such Cosners runne through the world, whom the Moalians kill when they can take them. Now the Epiphany was at hand, and that Armenian Monke, Sergius by name, told me, That he should baptize Mangu Can vpon the Holy-day. I intreated him to labour by all meanes that I might be present, that I might beare witnesse that I saw it: and hee promised he would.

Chap. 32. Of Theodolus the Clerke of Acon, how hee deceiued Mangu Chan, and was imprisoned of Vastacius.

Frier Andrew went from Cyprus by Persia.

Blasphemous flattery.

The Golden Tablet of the Emperor of the Tartars.

Vastacius King of Pontus.

Or, Erserum.

Sergius an Armenian Monke.

THE feastiuall day came, and the Monke called me not, but at sixe of the clocke I was sent for to the Court, and I saw the Monke with the Priests returning from the Court with his Crosse, and the Priests with the Censer and the Gospell. For that day Mangu Chan made a feast. And his custome is, that vpon such daies as his Sooth-sayers doe appoint vnto him feastiuall, or with the Nestorian Priests sometimes make Holy-daies, that then he holds his Court: And vpon such daies the Christians come first with their furniture, and pray for him and blesse his Cup. They then departing, the Saracen Priests come and doe the like. Next after them, come the Idolatrous Priests and doe the same. And the Monke told me, that he onely beleeues the Chap. 33. Of Mangu Chans holyday, and how his principall wife and his eldest sonne came to the Diuine ceremonies of the Nestorians, and of their filthy bowsings the Christians, yet will haue all to pray for him; but he lyed, for he beleeueth none, as you shall hereafter heare, yet all follow his Court, as flyes doe Honey. And he giueth vnto all, and all men thinke they are his Familiars; and all prophesie prosperitie vnto him. Then wee sate before the Court a long space, and they brought vs flesh to eate. To whom I made answere, that we would not eate there, but if they would prouide vs meate, they should prouide it for vs at our house. Then they said, get yee home to your house; because you were inuited for no other cause but to eate. Therefore we returned by the Monkes, who blushed at the Lye hee told me, wherefore I would not speake a word of that matter. Yet some of the Nestorians would affirme vnto mee, that he was baptized: to whom I said, that I would neuer beleeue it, nor report it to others, seeing I saw it not.

Digitized by Google

We came to our cold and emptie house, they prouided vs bedding and Couerlets, they brought vs also fuell, and gaue vs three the carkasse of one little leane Ramme, meate for sixe dayes; and euery day a little Platter full of Millet, and lent vs a Caldron and a Triuet to boyle our flesh: which being sodden, we sod our Millet in the broath of the flesh. This was our meate, and it had well sufficed vs, if they had suffered vs to eate in peace. But there are so many hunger-starued, who are not prouided of meate: that, as soone as they saw vs dresse meate, they thrust in vpon vs, and must eate with vs. There I found by experience, how great a Martyrdome liberalitie is in pouertie. Then the cold began much to preuaile: and Mangu Chan sent vs three Pelt-coates of the Skinnes of Papions (Papionum), whose haire they turne outward; which we thankfully receiued. They demanded also, how we were prouided of necessary food? To whom I answered, that little meate sufficed vs, but we haue not an house wherein to pray for Mangu Chan. For our Cottage was so little, that we could scarce stand vpright in it, nor open our Bookes, as soone as wee made fire. Then they brought him word: and hee sent vnto the Monke to know, if hee would haue our company? who gladly answered, that hee would. From that time wee were prouided of a better house: and we went downe with the Monke before the Court, where none lodged but we, and their Sooth-sayers: but they lodged neerer, before the Palace of the greatest Lady: and wee in the furthest end towards the East, before the Palace of the last Lady. And that was done the day before Octabis Epiphaniæ. On the morrow (to wit) in Octauis Epiphaniæ, all the Nestorian Priests came together before day at the Chappell, and smote vpon a board, and sang Matines solemnely, and put on their Ornaments, preparing the Censer and the Incense.

The cold much preuayleth.

The 13. of Ian.

Cotota Caten the principall Wife of Mangu Chan.
Baltu the Son of Mangu Chan.

And while they stayed wayting thus, behold, in the morning, the principall Wife Cotota Caten by name, (Caten is as much as Ladie, and Cotota her proper name) came into the Chappell with many other Ladies, and with her eldest Sonne, called Baltu, and other little ones of hers: And they cast themselues downe vpon the Earth, ducking after the manner of the Nestorians, and after this, they touched all the Images with their right hands, alwayes kissing their hands after they had touched, and after that, they gaue their right hands to all that stood about them in the Church. For this is the custome of the Nestorians when they come into the Church. Then the Priests sang many things, giuing the Lady Incense in her hand, and she put it vpon the fire: then they perfumed her. After this, when the day was cleere, shee began to put off the Ornament of her head, which is called Baccha: and I saw her bare scull, then shee commanded vs to goe forth, and as I went out, I saw a siluer Bason brought: whether they baptized her or no, I know not: but I know, they celebrate not Masse in a Tent, but in a standing Church. And in the Easter I saw them baptize, and hallow Fount with great Solemnitie, which now they did not.

And while we went into our house, Mangu Chan himselfe came, and went into the Church, or Oratory, and a Golden Bed was brought, on which hee sate by his Queene, ouer against the Altar. Then were we sent for, not knowing that Mangu was come. And the Doore-keepers searched vs, lest we should haue Kniues about vs. But comming into the Oratory, hauing a Bible, and a Breuiary in my bosome, I first bowed downe vnto the Altar, and after to Mangu Chan: and so passing by, we stood betweene the Monke and the Altar. Then they made vs sing a Psalme after our manner, and chaunt it. But we sang of that prose, Veni Sancte Spiritus, &c. And Cham caused our Bookes to be brought vnto him, the Bible, and the Breuiarie: and diligently inquired concerning the Images, what they signified. The Nestorians answered him at their pleasure, because our Interpreter came not in with vs. And when I was first before him, I had the Bible in my bosome, which he commanded to be brought vnto him, who looked earnestly vpon it. Then he departed, and his Ladie remayned there, and distributed gifts to all the Christians there, shee gaue the Monke a Iascot, and to the Archdeacon of the Priests another: she caused a Nassic to be spread before vs (to wit) a piece of Cloth, as broad as a Couerlet of a Bed, very large, and a * Buckeram, which when I would not receiue, they sent them to my Interpreter, who had them to himselfe. He brought the Nassic to Cyprus, which he sold for eightie Sultanines of Cyprus; but it was much the worse for the carriage. Then drinke was brought (to wit) drinke made of Rice and red Wine, like Wine of Rochell, and Cosmos. * Then the Ladie holding the cup full in her hand, desired blessing vpon her knees, and all the Priests sing with a loud voyce, and shee drunke

* Vnum bucheranum.

* Cosmos of Mares Milke, Vid. sup.

it

and I and my companion muſt ſing. Another time, when all of them were almoſt drunke, their meate was brought (to wit) the carkaſſe of one Ramme which was preſently deuoured: and after that, great fiſhes, which are called Carpes, without Salt, or Bread: whereof I eate a little, ſo they paſſed the day, vntill the Euening. And when the Lady her ſelfe was drunke, ſhe tooke her Chariot (the Prieſts ſinging) and went her way. The next Sunday, when (There was a Marriage in Cana of Galily) is read for the Goſpell; Chans Sonne came (whoſe Mother was a Chriſtian) and did the like, but not with ſo great Solemnitie. For he gaue no gifts, but made the Prieſts drinke, till they were drunke, and gaue them parched Millet to eate. January 20.

Before the firſt Sunday in Lent, the Neſtorians faſt three dayes, which they call the Faſt of Ionas, which he preached to the Niniuites. And the Armenians faſt fiue dayes, which they call the Faſt of Saint Sorkis, which is the greateſt Saint amongſt them. Of the Faſt of the Neſtorians, and Armenians, and of their Proceſſions vnto the Court of Mangu Chan his eldeſt Son, and Wiues. Saint Sarkis. Lent.

The Neſtorians beginne their Faſt vpon Tueſday, and end it vpon Thurſday; ſo that vpon Friday they eate fleſh. And all that time I ſaw the Chancelor (to wit, the great Secretarie of State called Bulgai) make them a pittance of fleſh vpon the Friday; and they bleſſed the fleſh with great Solemnitie, as the Paſchall Lambe is bleſſed: but he eate none with them, and this I learned of Willielmus Pariſienſis, who was his very familiar friend. The Monke ſent to Mangu to faſt that weeke, which (as I heard) hee did: ſo that on the Sabbath of Septuageſima (at which time it is as it were Eaſter to the Armenians) wee went on Proceſſion to the houſe of Mangu: and the Monke, and we two (being firſt ſearched whether wee had Knives) went in with the Prieſts, before him. And while we went in, one of the Seruants went forth, carrying out the ſhoulder bones of Rammes, burnt to the blackneſſe of Coales. Whereupon I maruelled greatly, what it ſhould meane, whereof after I had inquired, I vnderſtood, that hee neuer doth any thing, before he haue conſulted with thoſe bones. Whereupon hee doth not ſo much as ſuffer a man to enter his houſe, but firſt conſulteth with that bone, which kind of Diuination, is thus done. Mangu Chans Court viſited with Proceſſions.

When he purpoſeth to doe any thing, he cauſeth three of thoſe bones to be brought vnto him vnburnt; and holding them he thinketh of the thing, whereof he will conſult, whether he may doe it or not: and then deliuereth the bones to bee burnt, and there are alwayes two little Roomes, hard by the houſe where he lyes, where thoſe bones are burnt; which are diligently ſought for euery day thorow all the Leskar or Tent-dwelling. When they are burnt blacke, they bring them vnto him, then hee lookes vpon them, whether the bones (by the heate of the fire) be cleft right length-wayes: then the way is open, that he may do it. But if the bones be cracked athwart, or round pieces flye out of them, then he doth it not; for the bone is alwayes cleft in the fire, or the thinne skin which ouer-ſpreadeth it. And if one of the three be cleft forth right, yet he doth it. When therefore wee went in before him (aduiſed before, that wee ſhould not touch the threſhold) the Neſtorian Prieſts brought him Incenſes, and he put it vpon the Cenſor, and they cenſed him. Then they ſung, bleſſing his cup, and after them the Monke pronounced his bleſſing, and we muſt bleſſe laſt. And when he ſaw vs holding the Bible before our breſt, he cauſed it to be brought vnto him, that he might ſee it, which hee diligently looked vpon. Then after he had drunke, and the chiefe Prieſt had wayted on his Cup, they gaue the Prieſts drinke: After that, we went forth, and my companion ſtayed laſt. And when wee were without, my companion (when hee ſhould haue gone out after vs) turned his face to Chan, bowing himſelfe vnto him: and then, haſtily following vs, he ſtumbled at the threſhold of the houſe. How they diuine by the ſholder blades of Rammes burnt blacke. In M. Ienkinſons Voyage among the Tartars, ye may reade of ſuch a Diuination. Threſhold-Superſtition. They doe the like in Florida.

And when we went in haſte toward the houſe of Baltu his eldeſt Sonne, they that obſerued the threſhold, layd hands on my companion, and made him ſtay, that hee ſhould not follow vs; calling one, and commanding him to carrie him to Bulgai, who is the great Secretary of the Court, and iudgeth thoſe that are arraigned of life and death. But I knew it not, yet when I looked backe, and ſaw him not comming, I thought they detayned him, to giue him ſome lighter garments: For he was weake, and ſo laden with Pelt-garments that he could ſcarce goe. Then they called our Interpreter, and made him ſit with him: but wee went to Chans eldeſt Sonnes houſe, who had two Wiues, and was lodged at the right ſide of his Fathers Court: who as ſoone as he ſaw vs comming, leaping from his bed whereon he ſate, caſt himſelfe vpon the earth, ſmiting his fore-head againſt the ground, worſhipping the Croſſe, and ariſing, cauſed it to be ſet vpon a new cloth, in an high place by him, very honourably. He hath a Schoolemaſter, a Neſtorian Prieſt called Dauid, a very Drunkard, who teacheth him. Then he made vs ſit, and giue the Prieſts drinke, and hee alſo dranke, receiuing the bleſſing from them. Then wee went vnto the Court of the ſecond Lady, which was called Ceta, who followed Idolaters: whom wee found lying ſicke a bed. Then the Monke made her riſe out of her bed, and worſhip the Croſſe, bowing her knees thrice, and ducking toward the ground: he ſtanding with the Croſſe at the Weſt-ſide of the houſe, and ſhe on the Eaſt: this being done, they changed places, and the Monke went with the Croſſe vnto the Eaſt, and ſhee vnto the Weſt. And hee boldly commanded her (although ſhe were ſo weake, that ſhe could ſcarce ſtand vpon her feet) that ſhee ſhould caſt herſelfe downe thrice againe, and worſhip the Croſſe, toward the Eaſt after the manner of the Chriſtians: which ſhe did, and he taught her to make the ſigne of the Croſſe vpon her forehead. Baltues Court who was eldeſt Son of Mangu Chan.

After

Digitized by Google

After ſhe lay downe vpon her bed, and praying for her, we went vnto the third houſe, where a Chriſtian Lady vſed to be: who being dead, a young woman ſucceeded her, who together with the Daughter of her Lord, ioyfully receiued vs: and all that whole houſe reuerently worſhipped the Croſſe. And ſhe ſet it vpon a Veluet cloth in an high place, and ſhee cauſed meate to bee brought (to wit) the carkaſſe of one Ramme, which being ſet before the Ladie, ſhee cauſed it to be diſtributed to the Prieſts. But I and the Monke were very warie of the meate and drinke, for the meate being eaten, and much drinke drunke, wee were to goe to the Damoſell Cerina, who lodged behind that great houſe, which was her Mothers: who at the comming in of the Croſſe, caſt her ſelfe vpon the Earth, and worſhipped it very deuoutly, becauſe ſhee had beene well taught ſo to doe, and ſhee ſet it in a high place, vpon a piece of ſilke. And all thoſe clothes whereon the Croſſe was ſet, were the Monkes.

A certaine Armenian brought this Croſſe who came with the Monk (as he ſaid) from Hieruſalem; and it was of ſiluer, weighing about ſome foure markes; and it had foure Precious Stones in the corners, and one in the middle. It had not the Image of our Sauiour (becauſe the Armenians and the Neſtorians are aſhamed, that Chriſt ſhould appeare nayled to the Croſſe) and hee had preſented it (by the Monke) to Mangu Chan. And Mangu demanded of him what hee deſired? to whom he anſwered, That he was the Sonne of an Armenian Prieſt, whoſe Church the Saracens had deſtroyed, and craued his helpe for the building againe of that Church. Then hee aſked him, for how much it might be built againe: he anſwered, for two hundred Iaſcots (that is) for two thouſand markes: and he commanded Letters to be giuen him, to him who receiued the Tribute in Perſia, and Armenia the greater, that they ſhould pay him the ſaid ſumme of ſiluer. This Croſſe the Monke carried with him euery where. And the Prieſts ſeeing the gaine thereof, began to enuie him. Wee were therefore in the houſe of the ſaid Damoſell, and ſhee gaue the Prieſts much drinke. From hence wee went vnto the fourth houſe, which was the laſt in number and honour. For he vſed not to come often to that Ladie, and her houſe was very old, and her ſelfe nothing gracious. But after Eaſter Chan made her a new houſe, and new Chariots. She likewiſe as the ſecond knew little or nothing of Chriſtianitie, but followed Soothſayers, and Idolaters. Yet at our comming in, ſhee worſhipped the Croſſe, as the Monke and the Prieſts taught her. There alſo the Prieſts dranke againe. And from that place wee returned to our Oratorie, which was neere thereabouts: the Prieſts accompanying vs with great howling and out-cryes in their drunkenneſſe, which there is reprehenſible neither in man nor woman. Then my fellow was brought home, and the Monke ſharply rebuked him becauſe he touched the threſhold. On the morrow Bulgai came (who was a Iuſtice) and diligently inquired, whether any had warned vs to take heed of touching the threſhold. And I anſwered, Sir, wee had not our Interpreter with vs: how could we vnderſtand? Then hee pardoned him. But would neuer after ſuffer him to come into any of the houſes of Mangu Chan.

The Court of the third Lady. The Armenians and Neſtorians are aſhamed to ſhew Chriſt faſtned to the Croſſe.

Mangu built a Church.

The Court of the fourth Lady.

Drunkenneſſe not reprouea-ble among the Tartars.

Chap. 35. How Lady Cota was cured of Sergius the counterfeit Monke.

IT happened afterwards, that the ſame Ladie Cota, which was ſicke about Septuageſima, was ſicke almoſt vnto death: and diuination by Lots of the Idolaters could profit her nothing. Then Mangu ſent vnto the Monke, demanding of him, what might bee done for her. And the Monke indiſcreetly anſwered, that if ſhee were not cured, hee ſhould cut off his head, hauing made that anſwere, the Monke called vs, declaring the matter vnto vs with teares, intreating to watch with him that night in Prayer: which we did. And he had a certayne Roote which is called Rubarbe; and hee cut it almoſt to powder, and put it in water, with a little Crucifixe which he had, wherein the Image of our Sauiour was aduanced: whereof he reported, that by it he knew, when the ſicke ſhould recouer or dye. For if they ſhould eſcape, it ſtucke to the breſt of the ſicke, as if it were glued, if otherwiſe it ſtucke not at all. And I ſtill thought that Rubarbe had beene ſome holy Relike, which he had brought from the Holy Land of Hieruſalem. And he gaue all ſicke perſons of that water to drinke: ſo that it could not bee, but their bowels ſhould be griped with ſo bitter a Potion: which alteration in their bodies they accounted a Miracle. Then I told him (when he was about to make ſuch a water) that hee ſhould prepare ſome of that Holy water, which is made in the Church of Rome, which hath great vertue to expell Deuils: becauſe I vnderſtood ſhee was vexed of a Deuill. And at his intreatie, wee made him ſome Holy water, and he mingled Rubarbe, and put his Crucifixe all the whole night in the water to temper it. I ſaid moreouer, that if hee were a Prieſt, that the Order of Prieſt-hood hath great power to expell Deuils. And he ſaid it was very true, and yet hee lyed, becauſe hee had no order, nor knew any one Letter: but was a Weauer, as I vnderſtood after, in his Countrey, when I returned. On the morrow therefore I, and the Monke, and two Neſtorian Prieſts went vnto the foreſaid Ladie. And ſhee was in a little houſe, behind her greater houſe. When wee came in, ſhee ſate in her bed, and worſhipped the Croſſe, and ſet it honourably by her vpon a cloth of Silke, and drunke of the bleſſed water with Rubarbe, and waſhed her breſt. And the Monke requeſted me to reade a Goſpell ouer her, ſo I read the Paſſion of our Lord according vnto Iohn. At length ſhe was cheered, and felt her ſelfe better: and ſhee cauſed foure Iaſcots to bee brought, which ſhe firſt layd at the feet of the Croſſe, and after gaue me to the Monke, and reached Licence is granted him to carrie the Croſſe aloft.

Rubarbe and the Croſſe Miracle-workers with credulous Superſtition.

Holy water not knowne in the Eaſt.

Sergius, the Armenians Lye.

Digitized by Google

ched me one, which I would not receiue. Then the Monke ſtretching forth his hand, tooke it, and gaue either of the Prieſts one: ſo that, at that time ſhee gaue fortie Markes. Then ſhee cauſed Wine to be brought, and gaue it the Prieſts to drinke; and I muſt drinke thrice from her hand, in honour of the Trinitie. Shee began alſo to teach mee the Language, jeſting with mee, becauſe I was dumbe, not hauing any Interpreter.

On the morrow we returned to her againe. And Mangu Chan hearing that we came that way, made vs come in vnto him, becauſe hee vnderſtood that the Lady was ſomewhat better; and we found him with a few ſeruants, ſupping liquid Tam, to wit, meat made of paſte, for comforting the head: and the burnt ſhoulder-blades of a Ram lay before him: and he tooke the Croſſe in his hand, but that hee kiſhed or worſhipped it, I ſaw not: but looked vpon it, and asked ſome queſtions, I know not what. Then the Monke craued leaue to carry the Croſſe aloft vpon a Lance; becauſe I had ſpoken to the Monke before concerning this. And Mangu anſwered, Carry it as you thinke beſt to doe it. Then doing our duty to him, wee went to the foreſaid Ladie, and we found her luſtie and cheerfull; and ſhe ſtill drunke of the bleſſed Water, and wee read the Paſſion ouer her. And thoſe miſerable Prieſts neuer taught her the Faith, nor aduiſed her to bee baptiſed. But I ſate there mute, not able to ſpeake any thing, but ſhee ſtill taught me the Language: and the Prieſts neuer find fault with any kind of Sorcerie. For there I ſaw foure ſwords halfe drawne out of the ſheath, one at the head of the Ladies bed, another at the feet, and two other, on either ſide of the doore one. I ſaw alſo there one ſiluer Chalice, of our Chalices, which peraduenture was taken or ſtolne out of ſome Church of Hungary; and it hung againſt the walls full of aſhes, and vpon thoſe aſhes there was a blacke ſtone. And concerning ſuch things, the Prieſts neuer teach them that they are euill: Nay, they themſelues doe, and teach ſuch things. We viſited her three daies, ſo that ſhee was reſtored to perfect health. After that, the Monke made a Banner full of Croſſes, and got a Cane as long as a Lance, and we carried the Croſſe aloft. I honored him as my Biſhop, becauſe hee could ſpeake the Language; yet hee did many things which pleaſed me not: for he cauſed a Chaire which may be folded to bee made for him, ſuch as Biſhops vſe to haue, and Gloues, and a Cap of Peacocks feathers, and vpon it a little Croſſe of gold: I was well pleaſed with the Croſſe. Hee had ſcabbed feete, which hee laboured to grace with ointments, and was very preſumptuous in ſpeech. The Neſtorians alſo repeated certaine Verſes of the Pſalter (as they ſaid) vpon two rods, which were ioyned together, being held of two men. The Monke was preſent at ſuch things. And many other vanities appeared in him, which diſpleaſed me. Yet wee ioyned our ſelues to his ſocietie for the honor of the Croſſe. For we carried the Croſſe aduanced through all the Tents ſinging: Vexilla Regis prodeunt, &c. Whereupon the Saracens were much diſmaied.

Sorcerie of foure ſwords.

The Croſſe carried aloft.

Chap. 36.

SInce we came to the Court of Mangu Chan, he rode but twice towards the South: and from that time he beganne to returne towards the North, which was toward Caracarum. Whereupon I noted all the way, a thing of which Maſter Baldwin of Hannonia had ſpoken to mee at Conſtantinople (who was there) that he had ſeene this onely wonderfull, that he alwaies aſcended in going, and neuer deſcended. For all Riuers came from the Eaſt into the Weſt, either directly or indirectly (that is to ſay) bending towards the South or North. And I enquired of the Prieſts which came from Cataya, who teſtified this ſame. From that place where I found Mangu Chan, vnto Cataya, were twentie daies iourney, going towards the South and Eaſt. To Onan Kerule, which is the proper Countrey of Moall, where the Court of Chingis is, were ten daies iourney right Eaſt. And in thoſe parts of the Eaſt there was no Citie: yet there were people which are called Su-Moall, that is to ſay, Moall of the Waters: for Su is as much to ſay as Water. Theſe people liue vpon Fiſh, and hunting, hauing neither Flocks nor Heards. Towards the North likewiſe, there is no Citie, but a poore people feeding Cattell, who are called Kerkis. The Orangei are alſo there, who binde ſmoothe filed bones vnder their feete, and thruſt themſelues forward vpon the congealed Snow and Ice, with ſuch ſwiftneſſe, that they take Birds and Beaſts. And many other poore people there are on the North ſide, ſo farre as they may ſpread themſelues for the cold. And they ioyne on the Weſt, with the Countrey of Paſcatir, which is Hungaria the Greater, whereof I haue ſpoken before. The bound or limit of the North corner is not knowne, for the extremitie of the cold: for in that place there are continuall ſpires or heapes of Snow. I was inquiſitiue of the Monſters or monſtrous men, whereof Iſidorus and Solinus make report. They told me they neuer ſaw any ſuch, whereof we much wonder, whether it bee true or no. All the Nations aforeſaid (although but poore) yet they muſt ſerue in ſome trade: for it was the commandement of Chingis, that none ſhould bee free from ſeruice, till hee were ſo old, that he could labour no longer, by any meanes. Vpon a time a certaine Prieſt of Cataya ſate with mee, clothed with a red coloured cloth; and I demanded of him whence hee had ſuch a colour. And he told me, that in the Eaſt parts of Cataya there were high craggie Rocks, wherein certaine Creatures dwell, hauing in all parts the ſhape of men, but that they bow not the knees, but walke (I know not how) leaping: which are not aboue one cubit long, and their whole body is couered with * haire; who haue their abode in Caues which no man can come vnto. And they

A deſcription of the Countries about the Court of Mangu Chan, and of their manner of writing, and their money.

Chap. 3.

Al Riuers bending towards the South and North runne towards the Weſt.

Chap. 15.

Su-Moal, the Water Tartars to the Eaſt, liuing vpon fiſh.

Kerkis.

Orangai.

Paſcatir on the Weſt.

Chap. 19.

Mutezuma commanded the like in Noua Hiſpania.

A deſcription of Apes, or elſe an embleme or Apiſh fable, and perhaps by the Chinois inuented, to ſell their wares the dearer.

that that hunt them goe vnto them, and carry strong drinke with them, as strong as they can make, and make pits in the Rocks like Cups, filling them with that strong drinke. For Cataia as yet hath no Wine (but now they beginne to plant Vineyards) for they make drinke of Rice. The Hunters therefore hide themselues, then the foresaid Creatures come out of their holes, and taste the said drinke, and crie Chin-chin. Then they come together in great multitudes and drinke the said drinke, and are made drunke, so that they sleepe there. Then the Hunters come, and bind them hand and feete while they are sleeping; and after, they open the Veine in their necke, and draw forth three or foure drops of bloud from euery one, and let them goe free. And that bloud (as he told me) is most precious to die purple.

Most precious Purple.

He told it also for truth (which neuertheless I doe not beleeue) that there is a Prouince beyond Cataia, into the which, at whatsoeuer age a man enters, he continueth in the same age wherein he entred. Cataia is vpon the Ocean. And Master Willielmus Parisiensis told me, that the same Messengers of certaine people which are called Taute and Manse, who inhabit Ilands, whose Sea is frozen in the winter, so that the Tartars may inuade them; who offered two thousand Tumen or Iascots yeerely, so they would let them liue in peace. Tumen is a piece of money containing ten Markes. The common money of Cataia is Paper made of Bombaste, the breadth and length of an hand, vpon the which they imprint lines, like the Seale of Mangu. They write with a Penfill wherewith Painters paint; and in one figure they make many letters comprehending one word. The people of Thebet write as wee doe, and they haue Characters very like ours. They of Tangut write from the right hand vnto the left, as the Arabians, and multiply the lines ascending vpward. Iugur, as aforesaid, from aboue downeward. The common mony of the Rutenians are little spotted and grisel'd skins. When we came with the Monke, hee charitably admonished vs to abstaine from flesh, and that our seruants should eate flesh with his seruants; but he would promise vs Meale, and Oyle or Butter. Which wee did, though it much grieued my Companion, by reason of his weakenesse: wherefore our foode was Millet and Butter, or Paste sodden in water with Butter, or sowre Milke, and vnleauened bread baked in Oxe-dung, or Horse-dung.

Cataia vpon the Ocean.

Taute and Manse, who dwell in Ilands, whose Sea freezeth in the Winter.

Cataia paper money.

The manner of writing in Cataia like that of China.

The people of Thebet.

Their manner of writing in Tangut and Iugur.

The money of the Rutenians.

Chap. 37.

NOw Quinquagesima came, which is the Lent-time to all the people of the East. And the greatest Ladie Cotota with all her company, fasted that weeke, who came euery day to our Oratorie, and gaue meate vnto the Priests, and other Christians, whereof a great multitude flocked thither the first weeke, to heare their dutie. And she gaue to me and my Companion, to each a Coate and Breeches of gray Samit (Samito) furred with course haire (Stuppa setæ) because my companion complained much of the weight of his Skinnes, which I receiued for my fellowes comfort, excusing my selfe neuertheless, that I would not weare such clothes. I gaue to my Interpreter what belonged to me. Then the Porters of the Court seeing that so great a multitude came daily to the Church, which was within the bounds of the keepers of the Court, they sent one of their fellowes vnto the Monke, declaring vnto him, that they would not haue so great a multitude come together within the precincts of the Court. then the Monke roughly answered, that he would know whether they commanded this from Mangu Chan? hee added moreouer certaine threatning speeches, as if he would accuse them to Mangu Chan. Then they preuenting him, accused him before Mangu; That he was too full of words, and that he gathered together too great a multitude to heare him speake. Afterward, the first Sunday in Lent, being called to the Court (and the Monke being shamefully demanded whether hee had a Knife, insomuch that he put off his shooes) wee came in before Chan himselfe, who haiung the burnt shoulder-blade of a Ramme in his hand, looked vpon it, and (as it were) reading in it, began to reproue the Monke, demanding, that seeing he was a man that should pray vnto God, why hee spoke so much with men? but I stood behind with my head bare: and Chan saying vnto him, Why dost thou not put off thy Cap, when thou commest before me, as that Francke doth? and commanded me to be called neerer. Then the Monke being much abashed, put off his Cap, contrary to the custome of the Greekes and Armenians. And when Chan himselfe had spoken many things sharply vnto him, wee went out. Then the Monke deliuered me the Crosse to beare to the Oratorie, becaus he could not carry it for shame.

Of the second fast of the people of the East, in Lent. The Monke is reproued for the multitude of those that came vnto him.

After a few daies he was reconciled vnto him, promising that he would goe to the Pope, and that he would bring all the Nations of the West to his obedience. Whereupon, he returning to the Oratorie after that conference had with Chan, began to enquire of mee touching the Pope, if I beleeued he would see him if he came vnto him in the behalfe of Mangu, and if hee would furnish him with Horses vnto Saint Iames? He demanded also of you, if I thought you would send your sonne vnto Mangu? Then I counsailed him, that he should take heede that hee did not promise lyes to Mangu, because the last errour should bee worse then the first; and that God needeth not our lyes, that we should speake deceitfully for him.

At that time there arose a certaine question betweene the Monke and a Priest called Ionas, a Learned man, whose father was an Archdeacon, and the other Priests accounted him for a Master and an Archdeacon. For the Monke said, That man was created before Paradise, and that the the Scripture said so. Then was I called to bee an arbitrator of that question. But I being ignorant that they contended about this, answered, that Paradise was made vpon Tuesday, when the other Trees were made, and that Man was made the sixt day. Then the Monke began to say, Did not the Deuill bring earth the first day from the foure parts of the world, and making clay made the bodie of man therewith, and God inspired his soule? Then hearing this Hæresie of the Monke, and that he so publikely and shamelesly recited it, I reproued him sharply, saying, he should put his finger vpon his mouth, because he knew not the Scriptures, and that he should take heed, that he said it not, whereby he might be faulty: And he began to mocke me, because I was ignorant of the Language. I departed therefore from him, going to our house. It fell out afterwards, that he and the Priests went on Procession to the Court, without calling mee; because the Monke spake not to me for the foresaid reproofe, nor would he carrie me with him, as he was wont. When therefore they came before Mangu, (I being not seene among them) hee earnestly demanded where I was, and why I came not with them? The Priests fearing, excused themselues. But returning, they told me the words of Mangu, and murmured at the Monke. After this, the Monke was reconciled to me, and I to him, intreating him, that he would helpe me with his Language, and I would helpe him in the holy Scripture. For a brother that is holpen of a brother, is as a strong Citie. After the first weeke of fasting, the Ladie ceased to come vnto the Oratorie, and to giue meat, and drinke, which wee were wont to haue, for the Monke suffered it not to be brought, saying, that Mutton fat or Suet was put in the confection thereof: and shee gaue no Oyle, but very seldome: so that we had nothing but browne Bread, and past boyling in water, that we might suppe broath; because we had no water, but of dissolued Snow, or of Ice, which was exceeding nought. Then my Companion began to be much grieued: so I acquainted Dauid (the Schoole-master of Chans eldest sonne) with our necessities, who made report thereof to Chan: and he commanded to giue vs Wine, Flowre, and Oyle. Neither the Nestorians, nor the Armenians, eate fish, by any meanes, in the Lent. Then they gaue vs a bottle of Wine. The Monke said he would not eate but on the Sunday: and then the Ladie her selfe sent meat of boyled paste with vinegar to suppe. But he had a Chist by him vnder the Altar, with Almonds and Raisins, and dried Prunes, and many other fruits, which hee ate all the day, whensoeuer hee was alone. Wee ate once a day, and that in great affliction: for as soone as they knew, that Mangu Chan had giuen vs Wine, most impudently they came in vpon vs like Dogs, both the Nestorian Priests, who were drunke all the day in the Court, and the Moallians also, and the seruants of the Monke. The Monke also, when any came vnto him, to whom he would giue drinke, he sent to vs for Wine. So that, the Wine caused our greater affliction then comfort; because wee could not denie it without offence. If wee gaue, wee wanted our selues, nor durst we, that being spent, desire any more from the Court.

Digitized by Google

Monkes Manichæan blasphemie of the Creation.

Snow-water, or water of Ice, exceeding naught.

No fish eaten in Lent.

Hypocriticall feast-fast.

Chap. 38. A Description of the worke of William Boucbier, and of the Palace of Mangu Chan at Caracarum, into which Citie they entred on Palm-sunday.

ABout mid-lent Master Williams sonne came, bringing with him a faire siluer Crosse, made after the French fashion, hauing the Image of Christ all of siluer fastened vpon it at the top: which the Monkes and Priests seeing, put it away: this Crosse hee was to present in the behalfe of his Master to Bulgai, who was the chiefe Secretarie of the Court: which when I heard, I was offended. The same young man also declared to Mangu Chan, that the worke which he commanded to be made, was finished, which worke I described vnto you. Mangu hath at Caracarum a great Court, hard by the walls of the Citie, enclosed with a bricke-wall; as the Priories of Monkes are enclosed with vs. In that place, there is a great Palace, wherein he holdeth his drinkings twice a yeere: once in Easter, when hee passeth that way, and once in Summer, when he returneth. And this latter is the greater: because then all the Nobles (who dwell farre some two moneths iourney off in any place) meet together at his Court. And then hee giues vnto them gifts and garments, and shewes his great glorie. There are many other houses there, as large as Granges, wherein his victuals, and treasures are stored. In the entrance of that great Palace (because it was vnseemely to bring in bottles of Milke, and other drinkes) Master William Parisiensis made him a great siluer Tree, at the root whereof were foure siluer Lions, hauing one Pipe sending forth pure Cowes milke, and the foure Pipes were conuayed within the Tree, vnto the top thereof: whose tops spread backe againe downward: and vpon euery one of them was a golden Serpent, whose tayles twine about the bodie of the Tree. And one of those Pipes runs with Wine, another with Caracosmos, that is, clarified Whay; another with Ball, that is, drinke made of Honey, another with drinke made of Rice, called Teracina. And euery drinke hath his vessell prepared of siluer, at the foot of the Tree, to receiue it. Betweene those foure Pipes in the top, he made an Angell holding a Trumpet; and vnder the Tree, he made an hollow vault, wherein a man might be hid; and a Pipe ascendeth through the heart of the Tree vnto the Angell. Hee first made Bellowes, but they gaue not wind enough. Without the Palace there is a Chamber, wherein the drinkes are layd, and there are seruants readie there to powre it out, when they heare the Angell sounding the Trumpet. And the boughes of the Tree are of siluer, and the leaues and Peares. When therefore they want drinke, the Master Butler cryeth to the Angell, that he sound the Trumpet. Then he hearing (who is hid in the

Two moneths iourney.

The Description of a most artificiall siluer Tree.

Digitized by Google

the Vault) blowes the Pipe ſtrongly, which goeth to the Angell. And the Angell ſets his Trumpet to his mouth, and the Trumpet ſoundeth very ſhrill. Then the Seruants hearing, which are in the chamber, euery of them powre forth their drink into their proper Pipe, and the Pipes powre it forth from aboue, and they are receiued below in Veſſels prepared for that purpoſe: Then the Butlers draw them, and carry them through the Palace, to men and women.

The deſcription of the Palace.

And the Palace is like a Church, hauing the middle Ile, and the two ſides beyond the two rewes of Pillars, and three gates on the South. And within before the middle gate ſtands the tree. And Chan himſelfe ſitteth in the North front, in an high place, that hee may bee ſeene of all. And there are two degrees of ſteps aſcending vnto him, by the one, he that carryeth his cup commeth vp vnto him, and by the other he deſcendeth. That ſpace which is in the middle, betweene the tree and the ſteps whereby they aſcend vnto him, is voyde. For there ſtandeth hee that wayteth on his Cup, and the Meſſengers, which bring Preſents. And hee ſitteth there aboue like a God. On the right ſide (to wit) toward the Weſt are the men: on the left women. For the Palace ſtretcheth it ſelfe out in length from North to South by the Pillars. On the right ſide are places full of ſeates lifted vp, like the Sellar of an houſe; whereon his Sonnes and Brethren ſit. On the left ſide is the like, where his Wiues and Daughters ſit. One only woman ſitteth there aboue by him, but not ſo high as hee. When therefore hee had heard, that the Worke was finiſhed, hee commanded the chiefe Workeman to ſet it in his place, and make it fit.

The Sunday in the Paſſion he goeth towards Caracarum.

And about Paſſion Sunday, hee went before with ſmall houſes, leauing his greater houſes behind: And the Monke and we followed him; and he ſent vs another Bottle of Wine. And hee paſſed betweene the hilly Countries, where there was great wind, and an extreame cold, and there fell a great Snow. Whereupon hee ſent about mid-night to the Monke and vs, intreating vs to pray vnto God, that hee would mitigate that wind and cold, becauſe all the beaſts which were in the trayne were in ieopardie, eſpecially becauſe all that time they were with young and readie to bring forth. Then the Monke ſent him Incenſe, requiring him to put it on the coales and offer it to God: which, whether he did, I know not. But the Tempeſt ceaſed, which had now continued two dayes, and now the third day drew neere. On Palme Sunday we were neere Caracarum: In the dawning of the day we bleſſed the Willow boughes, whereon as yet there appeared no bud, and about nine of the clocke we entred the Citie, carrying the Croſſe aloft with the Banner, paſſing through the middle of the ſtreet of the Saracens, where the Market and Faires are vnto the Church: and the Neſtorians met vs on Proceſſion. And entring into the Church, we found them prepared to celebrate the Maſſe: which beeing celebrated, they all communicated, and they asked mee, whether I would communicate? I anſwered that I had drunke before, and the Sacrament ſhould not be receiued but faſting. Maſſe being ſaid, it was now Euening. Maſter William brought vs with great ioy to his Inne to ſup with him: who had a Wife, the Daughter of a Lotharingian, borne in Hungarie, who could ſpeake the French and the Language of Comania. We found alſo there a certayne other man called Baſilius, the Sonne of an Engliſhman, borne in Hungarie, who alſo was skilfull in the foreſaid Languages. Supper being ended, they brought vs to our Cottage, which the Tartars had appointed vs, in a certayne plat of ground neere the Church, with the Oratory of the Monke. On the morrow Chan himſelfe entred into his Palace. And the Monke and I, and the Prieſts went vnto him. They ſuffered not my companion to goe, becauſe he ſtumbled at the threſhold. I much deliberated with my ſelfe what I ſhould doe, whether I ſhould goe or no. And fearing offence, if I ſhould depart from other Chriſtians, and becauſe it pleaſed him: and fearing leſt that good might be hindred, which I hoped to obtaine, I choſe rather to go, although I ſaw their actions ful of Sorcery and Idolatrie: nor did I any other thing there, but pray for the whole Church with a loud voyce, and alſo for Chan himſelfe, that God would direct him to the way of eternall ſaluation. We therefore went into that Court which was ſufficiently ordered. And in the Summer Riuers are conueyed into euery place, whereby it is watered. After this we entred into the Palace, full of men and women, and ſtood before Chan, hauing the foreſaid Tree at our backs, which with the Veſſels thereof tooke vp a great part of the Palace. The Prieſts brought two little Loaues, and fruit in a Platter, which they preſented vnto him, bleſſing them. And the Butler brought them vnto him ſitting aloft in a very high place, much raiſed. And hee preſently began to eate one of the Loaues, and ſent another to his Sonne, and to a certayne yonger Brother of his, who was brought vp by a certayne Neſtorian, and knew the Goſpell, who alſo ſent for my Bible, that he might ſee it. After the Prieſts the Monke ſaid his Prayer, and I, after the Monke. Then he promiſed, that the next day he would come vnto the Church, which is great enough, and faire, and all the ſeeling aboue was couered with ſilke wrought with Gold. The next day he went his way, willing the Prieſts to excuſe him, that he durſt not come to the Church, becauſe he vnderſtood the dead were carried thither. But we, and the Monke remayned at Caracarum, and other Prieſts of the Court, that they might celebrate Eaſter there.

They enter Caracarum on Palme Sunday

Mangu Chan departeth from Caracarum.

Maundie

Digitized by Google

MAundie Thurſday drew neere, and Eaſter, and I had not our Veſtments, and I conſidered the manner how the Neſtorians made the Sacramentall Bread, and I was much troubled, what I ſhould doe; whether I ſhould receiue the Sacrament of them, or ſhould celebrate it in their Veſtments, and Chalice, and vpon their Altar, or ſhould altogether abſtayne from the Sacrament. Then there were a great multitude of Chriſtians, Hungarians, Alanians, Rutenians, Georgians, and Armenians; all which had not ſeene the Sacrament ſince they were taken: becauſe the Neſtorians would not admit them to their Church, vnleſſe they were baptized of them, as they ſaid, yet they made no mention of this to vs. And they offered their Sacrament freely to vs, and made me ſtand in the doore of the Quire, that I might ſee their manner of Conſecration. And alſo on the Vigill or Eeuen before Eaſter, by the Font, that I might ſee their manner of baptizing. They ſay, they haue of that Oyntment, wherewith Mary Magdalene anoynted the feet of our Lord, and they power in as much of that Oyle, with that which they lay aſide, and kneade their bread therewith. For all thoſe people of the Eaſt put fat in their bread, in ſtead of Leuen or Butter, or Suet of a ſheepes tayle, or Oyle.

Chap. 39. The manner how the Neſtorians make the Sacramentall Bread. The Chriſtians confeſſe themſelues, and receiue the Sacrament of Frier William in the dayes of the Lords Supper, and Eaſter

They ſay alſo that they haue of the flowre, whereof the bread was made, which the Lord conſecrated: and alwayes powre out ſo much Oyle with it, as the flowre they lay aſide. And they haue a Chamber hard by their Quire, and an Ouen, where they bake the bread, which they muſt conſecrate with great reuerence. They therefore make one Loafe of an hand breadth, with the foreſaid Oyle, which they firſt breake into twelue pieces, according to the number of the Apoſtles: and after diuide thoſe pieces, according to the multitude of the people: and the Prieſt giues the bodie of Chriſt to euery one in his hand. And then euery man taketh it out of the Palme of his hand with reuerence, and ſtretcheth his hand to the top of his head.

The Chriſtians deſire the Sacrament. Confeſſion. Theft excluded the ten Commandements: perhaps theſe fellowes were of thoſe Borderers minde, which thought K. Henry had put it in the Decalogue.

The foreſaid Chriſtians, and the Monke himſelfe were very earneſt, intreating vs for Gods ſake, that wee would celebrate. Then I made them bee confeſſed, by an Interpreter, as I could, reckoning vp the tenne Commandements, and the ſeuen deadly Sinnes, and other things, for the which a man ought to bee grieued, and confeſſed. All of them publikely excuſed themſelues concerning Theft, ſaying, that without Theft they could not liue, becauſe their Maſters prouided them neither food nor rayment. Then conſidering, that they had taken away the perſons and their ſubſtance without iuſt cauſe, I ſaid vnto them, that they might lawfully take neceſſaries, of the goods of their Maſters, and I was readie to maintayne it to the face of Mangu Chan.

Some of them alſo were Souldiers, who excuſed themſelues, that they muſt needs goe to the Warres, or elſe they ſhould bee ſlaine; I firmely forbad them to goe againſt the Chriſtians, and that they ſhould not hurt them, they ſhould rather ſuffer themſelues to bee ſlaine, for ſo they ſhould become Martyrs. And I ſaid, that if any would accuſe mee of this Doctrine before Mangu Chan, I would bee readie to preach the ſame in his hearing. For the Neſtorians themſelues of the Court were preſent, when I taught this; of whom I was ſuſpitious, leaſt they ſhould report ill of vs. Then Maſter William cauſed an Iron to bee made for vs, to make Hoſts, and hee had certayne Veſtments which hee had made for himſelfe: for he had ſome knowledge in Learning, and behaued himſelfe as a Clerke. Hee cauſed the Image of the bleſſed Virgin Marie to bee grauen after the French faſhion, and ingraued the Hiſtory of the Goſpell (in the Caſements) very faire, and made a certayne ſiluer Boxe, to lay vp the bodie of Chriſt therein, and the Relikes, in certayne little holes cunningly made in the ſides of the Boxe.

Hee made alſo a certayne Oratorie vpon a Chariot, very fairely painted with holy Hiſtories. I therefore tooke his Veſtments and bleſſed them, and wee made Hoſts, after our manner, very faire; and the Neſtorians aſſigned mee their Font for Baptiſme, wherein there was an Altar. And their Patriarch ſent them from Baldach, a ſquare Hide like a portable Altar, made with Chriſme, which they vſe in ſtead of conſecrated Stone. Therefore I celebrated on the Day of the Lords Supper, in their ſiluer Chalice and Diſh, which were very great Veſſels; I did the like alſo on Eaſter day. And wee communicated the people with the bleſſing of God, as I hope. But they baptized in the Vigill of Eaſter more then threeſcore perſons very orderly. There was great ioy generally among all Chriſtians.

The Patriarch of the Neſtorians remayneth at Baldach.

THen it hapned that Maſter William was grieuouſly ſicke, and when hee was vpon recouerie, the Monke viſiting him, gaue him Rubarbe to drinke, ſo that hee had almoſt killed him. Then viſiting him, when I found him ſo ill at eaſe, I asked him, what hee had eaten or drunke? And hee told mee, the Monke had giuen him the foreſaid Potion, and hee drunke two little Diſhes full, thinking it had beene Holy Water. Then I went to the Monke, and ſaid vnto him, Either goe as an Apoſtle doing Miracles indeed, by vertue of Prayer, and the Holy Ghoſt, or doe as a Phyſician according to the arte of Medicine. You giue a ſtrong

Chap. 40. William Boucher is ſicke, the Monke giueth him Rubarbe; the Prieſt Ionas is ſicke: Frier William adminiſtreth the Lords Supper vnto him, and anointeth him beeing readie to dye. Hee reproueth the Monke for his Sorceries.

Digitized by Google

Potion of Phyſicke to drinke, to men not prepared, as if it were a certayne hollow thing, for the which you will incurre a foule ſcandall, if it come to the knowledge of men. From that time he began to feare and to beware of him.

The Prieſt Ionas is ſicke and dyeth.

It hapneth at that time, that that Prieſt was ſicke, who was, as it were, the Archdeacon of the reſt: and his friends ſent for a certayne Saracen, which was a Sooth-ſayer. Who ſaid vnto them, A certayne leane man, who neyther eateth, nor drinketh, nor ſleepes in a Bed, is angry with him: if hee can obtayne his bleſſing hee may recouer. Then they vnderſtood it was the Monke. And about mid-night, the Prieſts Wife, his Siſter, and his Sonne came, intreating that hee would come, and bleſſe him. They alſo raiſed vs vp, to intreate the Monke. Then he ſaid vnto vs, intreating him: Let him alone, becauſe hee with three others, who likewiſe tooke euill courſes, conſulted to goe vnto the Court, to procure Mangu Chan, that I and you ſhould bee expelled from theſe parts.

For there aroſe a contention among them, becauſe Mangu and his Wiues ſent foure Iaſcots and certayne Silkes vpon Eaſter Eeuen to the Monke and Prieſts, to diſtribute among them. And the Monke had kept vnto himſelfe one Iaſcot for his part, and of the other three, one was counterfeit, for it was Copper. Whereupon it ſeemed to the Prieſts, that the Monke had kept too great a portion to himſelfe. Whence (it might bee) that they had ſome words among themſelues, which were reported to the Monke. When day came I went vnto the Prieſt, hauing an extreme griefe in his ſide, and ſpitting bloud: whereupon I thought it was an Impoſtume. Then I counſelled him (if he had any thing that was an others) to reſtore it. He ſaid, hee had nothing. I ſpoke vnto him alſo of the Sacrament of Extreme Vnction. Who anſwered, we haue no ſuch cuſtome, neither doe our Prieſts know how to doe it: I intreat you, that you would doe it for mee, as you know beſt to bee done. I aduiſed him alſo concerning Confeſſion, which they frequent not, hee ſpake ſhortly in the Eare of a certayne Prieſt, one of his fellowes.

The Neſtorians know not Extreme Vnction, nor Confeſſion.

After this hee beganne to bee better, and hee intreated mee to goe for the Monke. So I went, but the Monke would not come at the firſt: yet when hee heard hee was ſome-what better, hee went with his Croſſe. And I alſo went, and carryed (in a Boxe of Maſter Williams) the Bodie of Chriſt, which I had reſerued vpon Eaſter Day, at the intreatie of Maſter William. Then the Monke beganne to kicke him with his feet, and hee moſt humbly imbraced his feet.

Then I ſaid vnto him; It is the cuſtome of the Church of Rome, that the ſicke ſhould receiue the Bodie of Chriſt, as it were prouiſion for their iourney, and a defence againſt all the Deceits of the Enemie. Behold, the Bodie of Chriſt, which I conſecrated on Eaſter Day. You muſt bee confeſſed, and deſire it. Then ſaid hee with a great Faith, I deſire it with all my heart. Which, when I had diſcouered, hee, with great affection ſaid, I beleeue, that this is my Creatour and my Sauiour, who gaue mee life, and will reſtore it againe vnto mee after death in the generall Reſurrection: and ſo tooke the Bodie of Chriſt (from my hand) made after the manner of the Church of Rome. Then the Monke abode with him, and gaue him (in my abſence) I know not what Potions. On the morrow hee beganne to haue the pangs of death vpon him. Then taking their Oyle, which they ſaid, was holy, I anointed him according to the manner of the Church of Rome, as they intreated mee. I had none of our Oyle, becauſe the Prieſts of Sartach kept all.

He that is preſent with one that dyeth, cannot come into the preſence of the Prince, for the ſpace of an whole yeare.

And when wee ſhould ſing a Dirge, and I would haue beene preſent at his end, the Monke ſent vnto mee, willing me to depart, becauſe if I ſhould bee preſent, I could not come into the houſe of Mangu Chan, for one whole yeare. Which, when I had told his friends, they ſaid, it was true: and requeſted me to depart, leſt I might be hindered in that good, which I might promote. Aſſoone as hee was dead, the Monke ſaid vnto mee, care not: I haue killed him with my Prayers. This fellow only was Learned, and oppoſed himſelfe againſt vs: the reſt know nothing. Henceforth Mangu Chan himſelfe, and they all will crouch at our feete. Then hee declared vnto me the foreſaid Anſwere of the Sooth-ſayer. Which (not beleeuing it) I inquired of the Prieſts who were friends of the dead, whether it were true or no. Who ſaid it was. But whether he were pre-inſtructed or not, that they knew not. Afterwards I found, that the Monke called the foreſaid Sooth-ſayer and his Wife into his Chappell, and cauſed duſt to bee ſifted, and to diuine vnto him. For hee had a certayne Rutenian Deacon, who diuined to him. Which, when I vnderſtood, I was aſtonied at his fooliſhneſſe, and ſaid vnto him, Brother, a man full of the Holy Ghoſt which teacheth all things, ſhould not demand Anſweres or Counſell from Sooth-ſayers: ſeeing all ſuch things are forbidden, and they excommunicated, who follow ſuch things. Then hee beganne to excuſe himſelfe that it was not true, that hee ſought after ſuch things. But I could not depart from him, becauſe I was placed there by the commandement of Chan himſelfe, nor could I remooue my ſelfe without his ſpeciall command.

Bold blindnes. The Monke vſeth Diuinations.

Concer-

Digitized by Google

CONcerning the Citie of Caracarum, know this, that excluding the Palace of Chan himselfe, it is not so good, as the Castle of Saint Denis: and the Monasterie of Saint Denis is tenne times more worth then that Palace, and more too. There are two streets there: one of the Saracens, where the Faires are kept: and many Merchants haue recourse thither, by reason of the Court, which is alwayes neere, and for the multitude of Messengers. There is another street of the Cataians, who are all Artificers. Without those streets there are great Palaces, which are the Courts of the Secretaries. There are there twelue kindes of Idolatries of diuers Nations. Two Churches of Mahomet, where the Law of Mahomet is proclaimed: one Church of the Christians at the end of the Towne. The Towne is inclosed with a mudde Wall, and hath foure Gates. On the East part Millet and other Graine is sold, which yet is seldome brought thither. On the West, Sheepe and Goates. On the South, Oxen and Waggons are sold. At the North, Horses are sold. Following the Court, before the Ascension, wee came thither the Sunday before the Ascension. The next day after, we were called before Bulgai, who is a Iustice, and chiefe Secretarie, both the Monke and all his Family, and wee, and all the Messengers and Strangers, which frequented the house of the Monke. And wee were called before Bulgai seuerally, first the Monke, and after wee, and they beganne diligently to inquire whence wee were, and for what purpose wee came, and what our errand was? And this inquirie was made, because it was told Mangu Chan, that foure hundred Hassasines, or secret Murtherers were gone forth in diuers Habits to kill him. About that time the foresaid Ladie was restored to health, and shee sent for the Monke; and hee not willing to goe, answered: shee hath sent for Idolaters about her, let them cure her, if they can. I will goe no more. Vpon Ascension Eeuen, wee were in all the houses of Mangu Chan: and I saw when hee should drinke, how they cast Cosmos to their Idols of Felt. Then I said to the Monke, What fellowshippe hath Christ with Beliall. What part hath our Crosse with these Idols?

Chap. 41. The description of the Citie of Caracarum, they are examined: Mangu Chan sendeth his brethren against diuers Kingdomes, the Monke biddeth the Saracens farewell. The Wife of Mangu Chan dyeth.

Moreouer, Mangu Chan hath eight Brethren, three by the Mother, and fiue by the Father. One of them of his Mothers side, hee sent into the Countrey of the Hassasines, who are called by them Mulibet: and hee commanded to kill them all. Another went towards Persia, and is now entred therein, to goe (as is thought) into Turkie, from thence to send Armies against Baldach, and Vastacius. One of the other, he sent into Cataia, against some that rebelled. His youngest Brother of the same venter, hee kept nigh himselfe, whose name was Arabucha, who holdeth his Mothers Court which was a Christian, whose Seruant Master William is: for one of his Brothers, on the Fathers side, tooke him in Hungarie in a certayne Citie, called Belgrade, where there was a Norman Bishoppe, of Belle-Ville neere Roan, with a certayne Nephew of the Bishoppes, whom I saw there at Caracarum. And hee gaue Master William to Mangues Mother, because shee was very earnest to haue him. When she was dead, Master William came backe againe to Arabucha, with all things else pertayning to the Court of his Mother: and from him hee came to the knowledge of Mangu Chan. Who after the finishing of the foresaid Worke, gaue vnto Master William an hundred Iascots, that is, a thousand Markes.

The Countrey of the Hassasines, or Mulibet. Chap. 16. Some of Cataia rebell.

On the Eeuen therefore of the Ascension, Mangu Chan said, hee would goe to his Mothers Court, and visit her, for it was neere. And the Monke said, hee would goe with him, and giue his blessing to his Mothers soule. Chan was well contented. In the Euening, the day of the Ascension, the foresaid Ladie was very much pained. And the chiefe of the Sooth-sayers sent to the Monke, commanding him that the Table should not be smitten. On the morrow, when the whole Court remooued, the Court of the foresaid Ladie remayned still. And when wee came to the place where the Court should stay, the Monke was commanded to depart further from the Court, then hee was wont: which hee did. Then Arabucha met his brother Chan. So the Monke, and wee, seeing that hee was to passe by vs, met him with the Crosse. And hee calling vs to minde, because sometimes he had beene at our Oratorie, stretching forth his hand, made a Crosse vnto vs, like a Bishop. Then the Monke taking Horse, followed him, bearing certayne Fruits. But hee alighted, before his brothers Court, wayting, while hee came from hunting. Then the Monke alighted there, and offered him the Fruit, which hee receiued. And hard by him sate two Saracens, of the Nobilitie of the Court of Chan. But Arabucha vnderstanding of the contention betweene the Christians and the Saracens, enquired of the Monke if hee knew the said Saracens; and hee answered, I know they are Dogges; why haue you them so neere you? but they replyed; why, say they, doe you wrong vs, when wee doe none to you? To whom the Monke said, I speake the truth: and yee, and your Mahomet are vile Dogges. Then they beganne to answere blasphemously against Christ; and Arabucha forbad them, saying, speake not so blasphemously, for wee know, that the Messias is God. That very houre there arose so great a winde ouer all the street, that the Deuils seemed to runne through them. And after a while, there came Rumours, that the Ladie was dead.

Ascension day.

Arabucha the yonger brother of Mangu Chan.

Ignorant zeale a betrayer of the Faith, a cause perhaps of Tartarian Saracenisme. One of the Wiues of Chan dyeth.

Digitized by Google

The next morning, Chan returning towards his Court another way. For this is their Sorcerie, that they neuer returne the same way they came. Moreouer, while the Court abode heere, after the remooue thereof, none dare passe that way (neither Horseman nor Footman) where the Court stayed, so long as any shew of the fire made there, remayneth. That day certayne Saracens kept company with the Monke vpon the way, prouoking him, and disputing with him. And when hee could not defend himselfe with Argument, and they mocked him, hee would haue lashed them with the Whip which hee held in his hand; and hee went so farre, that the foresaid words were reported at the Court. And wee were commanded to depart with other Messengers, and not abide before the Court, where wee were wont. And I alwayes hoped, the King of Armenia would come. There came some about Easter from Bolac, where those Dutchmen are, for whose sake chiefly I went thither, who told mee, that the Dutch Priest should come to the Court. Therefore I mooued no Question to Mangu, concerning our stay, or departure. And in the beginning hee gaue vs leaue to stay but two monethes: and now fiue monethes are past. This was done about the end of May. And wee had continued there all Ianuary, February, March, Aprill, and May. But hearing no newes of the King, or the said Priest, and fearing lest wee should returne in the Winter, whose sharpnesse wee had prooued, I caused to bee demanded of Mangu Chan, what his pleasure was concerning vs, because willingly wee would euer stay there, if so hee pleased. But if wee must returne, it were easier for vs to returne in Summer, then in the Winter. Hee presently sent vnto mee, commanding, that I should not goe farre off, because his pleasure was to speake with mee the next day. But I told him, that if hee would speake with mee, hee should send for Master Williams Sonne, for my Interpreter was not sufficient. And hee, that spake with mee, was a Saracen, who had beene a Messenger to Vastacius: and (blinded with Rewards) counselled Vastacius to send Ambassadours to Mangu Chan, and the meane while the time passed: for Vastacius thought, hee would presently enter his Countrey. So hee sent, and after hee knew them, hee little regarded them, nor made peace with them, neither did they yet enter his Countrey: nor shall they bee able, so long as they dare defend themselues, nor did they euer take any Countrey by Force, but by Deceit. And because men make peace with them, vnder colour of that peace they ouerthrow them.

The Tartars do more by deceit then by force.

Then hee beganne to bee very Inquisitiue of the Pope, and of the King of the Franckes, and of the way to goe to them. But the Monke hearing this, aduised mee secretly not to answere him, because he would procure, that an Ambassadour should be sent. Whereupon I held my peace, not willing to answere him. And hee spake vnto mee I know not what iniurious words; for the which the Nestorian Priests would haue accused him: so that hee had either beene slaine, or beaten all to clouts, but I would not.

Chap. 42. They are often examined wherfore they came, Mangu desireth to make comparison of Diuine things: The most learned speech of Frier William with the Idolaters. The Saracens acknowledge the truth of the Gospel. The godly conference of Frier William, with the Seruants of Mangu Chan.

ON the morrow, (to wit) the Sunday before Pentecost, they brought mee to the Court: and the chiefe Secretaries of the Court came vnto mee: one of Moal, who wayteth vpon Chans cup, and the rest, Saracens, inquiring on the behalfe of Chan, wherefore I came? Then I told them the foresaid words, how I came to Sartach, and from Sartach to Baatu, and how Baatu sent me thither. Whereupon, I said vnto him, I haue nothing to speake on the behalfe of any man, vnlesse I should speake the words of God vnto him, if he would heare them; for he should best know what Baatu hath written to him. They stucke vpon this word, demanding, what words of God I would speake vnto him? thinking I would propheſie vnto him some prosperous thing, as many vse to doe. To whom I answered: if yee will that I speake the words of God vnto him, get me an Interpreter. Who said, we haue sent for him, yet speake by this Interpreter, as you may: wee shall vnderstand you well. And they vrged mee much to speake. Then I said: This is the word of God: To whom more is committed, more is required at his hands, another also: to whom more is forgiuen, hee ought to loue more out of these true words of God, I said, to Mangu himselfe, that God hath giuen him much. For the power and riches which hee hath, the Idols of the Tuinians haue not giuen him, but the Omnipotent God, who hath made Heauen and Earth, in whose hands all Kingdomes are, and hee translateth them from Nation to Nation for the sinnes of men. Wherefore if he loue him, it shall goe well with him: if otherwise, let him know, that God will require all these things at his hands, euen to the vttermost farthing. Then said one of the Saracens, Is there any man that loueth not God? I answered, God saith, if any man loue me, he will keepe my Commandements: and he that loueth me not, keepeth not my Commandements. Therefore, hee that keepeth not the Commandements of God, loueth not God. Then said hee, haue yee bin in Heauen, that yee might know the Commandements of God? No said I, but he hath giuen them from Heauen to holy men: and at the last himselfe descended from Heauen, teaching vs: and wee haue those things in the Scriptures, and we see by the workes of men, whether they keepe them or no. Whereto hee replyed, will yee then say that Mangu Chan keepes not the Commandements of God? To whom I said, Your Interpreter wil come, as yee say, then before Mangu Chan (if it please him) I wil recite the Com-

Digitized by Google

Commandements of God, and he ſhall be his owne Iudge, whether hee keepe them or not. So they departed, and told him, that I ſaid, hee was an Idolater or a Tuine, and kept not the Commandements of God. The next day, he ſent his Secretaries vnto mee, ſaying: Our Lord ſends vs vnto you, ſaying. Yee are heere Chriſtians, Saracens, and Tuines: and euery of you ſaith, his Law is better, and his Letters (to wit) Bookes, are truer. Wherefore hee would, that yee all come together, and make compariſon, that euery one write his words, that he might know the truth. Then I ſaid, Bleſſed be God, who hath put this in the heart of Chan, but our Scriptures ſaid, the Seruant of God muſt not bee contentious, but meeke vnto all: wherefore I am readie without ſtrife and contention, to render an account of the faith and hope of Chriſtians, to euery one that ſhall require it. Then they wrote my words, and brought them to him. Then the Neſtorians were commanded, to prouide themſelues, and write what they would ſpeake, and the Saracens likewiſe, and the Tuinians alſo.

Maugu Chan deſireth to haue a compariſon made concerning diuine things, betweene the Chriſtians, Saracens, and Idolaters.

On the morrow hee ſent the Secretaries againe, ſayng: Mangu Chan would know, wherefore yee came to theſe parts, to whom I ſaid: That hee ſhall know by the Letters of Baatu. Then ſaid they, Baatues Letters are loſt, and hee hath forgotten, what Baatu wrote vnto him, wherefore he would know of you. Then ſomewhat imboldned, I ſaid vnto them. The dutie or office of our Religion is to preach the Goſpell to all: whereupon, when I heard of the fame of the people of Moal, I had a deſire to come vnto them: and while I was thus purpoſed, we heard of Sartach, that he was a Chriſtian. Then I directed my Iourney vnto him: And my Soueraigne Lord the King of the Frankes ſent him Letters, containing good words: and other words beſides, teſtifie of vs vnto him, what men wee are when hee made requeſt, that hee would ſuffer vs to continue with the people of Moal. Then he ſent vs to Baatu, and Baatu to Mangu Chan. Whereupon we intreated, and yet intreat him to ſuffer vs to ſtay. But they wrote all, and made relation thereof vnto him. On the morrow, he ſent to me againe, ſaying: Chan knowes well enough that yee haue no meſſage vnto him, but yee came to pray for him as many other Prieſts doe: But hee demandeth, whether euer any of your Embaſſadours were with him, or ours with you? Then I declared all vnto them concerning Dauid and Frier Andrew, ſo they putting all in writing, reported the ſame vnto him. Then he ſent againe vnto me, ſaying: Our Lord Chan ſaith, yee haue ſtayed long here, his pleaſure is, that yee returne vnto your Countrey: withall, hee demandeth whether yee would conduct his Embaſſadours with you. To whom I made anſwere, that I durſt not carrie his Embaſſadours beyond his owne Countrey: becauſe there is a Warlike Nation betweene vs and you, and the Sea and Mountaynes, and I am a poore Monke: and therefore dare not take vpon mee to bee his Guide. So they hauing ſet downe all in writing, returned.

His Anſwere.

Maugu Chan wil haue them returne.

Whitſon Eeuen came; The Neſtorians writ Chronicles from the Creation of the World to the Paſſion of Chriſt: and paſſing ouer the Paſſion, they ſpake of the Reſurrection of the dead, and of the Aſcenſion, and of the comming to Iudgement. Wherein ſomewhat was to be reprehended which I told them, and wee likewiſe wrote the Symbole of the Maſſe, Credo in vnum Deum. Then I demanded of them, how they would proceed. They ſaid, they would firſt diſpute with the Saracens. I ſhewed them, this was no good courſe: for the Saracens in this agree with vs, who affirme, there is but one God. Wherefore, yee ſhall haue them to helpe you againſt the Tuines: ſo they were contented. Then I asked them, if they knew how Idolatry had his firſt originall in the World, and they could not tell. Then I told them and they ſaid; yee ſhall declare theſe things vnto them: and then let vs ſpeake; for it is hard to ſpeake by an Interpreter. To whom I ſaid: make tryall, how yee will behaue your ſelues againſt them: I will take the Tuinians part, and yee the Chriſtians. Suppoſe I am of that Sect, that ſay, there is no God. Proue yee there is a God. For there is a certayne Sect there, which ſaith, That euery ſoule, and euery vertue in what thing ſoeuer, is the God thereof, and that otherwiſe there is no God. Then the Neſtorians knew not how to prooue any thing, but only that which their Writing declareth. I ſaid, they beleeue not the Scriptures: if yee ſhew one, they will ſhew another. Then I counſelled them, to let me firſt talke with them: becauſe if I ſhould be ouercome, they might yet haue libertie of ſpeech: if they ſhould be ouerthrowne, I ſhould haue no hearing. They agrred vnto it.

Whitſunday Eeuen.

How Idolatry began firſt in the World.

Wee were therefore gathered together on Whidſon Euen at our Oratorie, and Mangu Chan ſent three Writers, who ſhould be Iudges: one Chriſtian, one Saracen, and one Tuine: And it was proclaimed before. This is the Commandement of Mangu Chan: And none dare ſay that the Commandement of God is otherwiſe: He commandeth that none ſpeake contentious or iniurious words to other, nor make any tumult, whereby this buſineſſe might be hindered, vpon paine of his head. Then all were ſilent: And there was a great aſſembly there: for euery partie inuited the wiſeſt of their Nation, and many others came flocking thither. Then the Chriſtians ſet me in the middle of them, willing the Tuinians to ſpeake with mee. Then they (who are many in number) began to murmure againſt Mangu Chan, becauſe neuer any Chan attempted thus much, to ſearch into their ſecrets. Then they oppoſed one vnto mee, who came from Cataia, hauing his Interpreter: and I had Maſter Williams Sonne. And he firſt ſaid vnto me: Friend, if you bee brought to a non

The Proclamation of Mangu Chan.

The murmuring of the Idolaters againſt Mangu Chan.

Digitized by Google

The beginning of the disputation concerning the Christian Religion, with an Idolater.

a non plus, you must seeke a wiser then your selfe. But I held my peace. Then hee demanded whereof I would first dispute? either how the world was made? or what becomes of the soules after death? To whom I answered: Friend, this should not be the beginning of our speech. All things are of God, and he is the Fountayne and head of all. Wherefore we ought to speake first of God: of whom yee thinke otherwise then we doe. And Mangu desires to know who beleeues better. Then the Arbitrators iudged this to bee reasonable. They would haue begunne with the foresaid questions, because they hold them for the strongest; for they are all of the Heresie of the Manichees: beleeuing, that the one halfe of things is bad, and the other good: and that at the least there are two Principia. And concerning the soules they all thinke they passe from body to body. Insomuch as one of the wisest of the Nestorian Priests demanded of mee, concerning the soules of bruite Beasts, whether they could fly any whither where they should not be compelled to labour after death? for confirmation also thereof (as Master William told mee) a certaine child was brought from Cataia, who (according to the quantitie of his body) was not three yeeres old, yet notwithstanding was capable of any reason; who affirmed of himselfe, that he had beene three times incorporated, and knew letters, and how to write. I said to the foresaid Tuinian, Wee firmely beleeue with the heart, and confesse with the mouth, that there is a God, and there is but one God, and one in perfect vnitie. What beleeue you? Hee said: Fooles say there is but one God, but Wise men say there are many. Are there not great Lords in your Country, and here is a greater Lord, Mangu Chan? So is it of the gods: because in diuers Countries there are diuers. To whom I said: You make an ill example or comparison of men with God; for so euery mightie man in his country may be called a god. And when I would haue dissolued the similitude, hee preuented me, inquiring; What manner of God is yours, whereof you speake, that hee is but one? I answered: Our God, beside whom there is no other, is Omnipotent, and therefore needeth not the helpe of another: nay, all we haue neede of his helpe, it is not so with men. No man can doe all things. And therefore there must be many Lords in the earth, because no one can support all. Againe, he knowes all things, therefore he needes not a Counseller: nay, all wisedome is from him. Moreouer, he is perfectly good, and needeth not our good: nay, in him we liue, moue, and haue our being. Such is our God, and therefore you must not hold there is any other. It is not so, saith he. Nay, there is one highest in the Heauens, whose Generation we know not yet, and ten are vnder him, and vnder them there is one Inferiour. And in the Earth there are infinite. Then hee would haue added other fables. So I asked him of that highest God, whether he thought he were Omnipotent? or of any other God? and fearing to answer, hee demanded, if your God bee such as you say, Why made hee the halfe of things euill? It is false said I. Whoso maketh any euill is no God, and all things whatsoeuer are good. At this word all the Tuinians maruelled, and set it downe in writing, as false, or impossible. Then he began to aske, Whence therefore commeth euill? You aske amisse, said I; For first you should demand, what euill is, before you aske whence it is. But returne vnto the first question, whether you beleeue that any God is Omnipotent, and after I will answer you to all, whatsoeuer you will demand. Then hee sate a long time and would not answer; Insomuch, as the Writers on the behalfe of Chan, were faine to command him to answer. At length hee answered: That no God was Omnipotent. Then all the Saracens brake out into great laughter: Silence being made, I said, Therefore none of your gods can saue you in all dangers, because such a chance may happen, wherein he hath no power. Againe, no man can serue two Masters. How then can you serue so many Lords in Heauen and in earth. The Auditorie willed him to answer. But he held his peace. Then when I was about to alleadge reasons to proue the truth of the diuine Essence, and the Trinitie, in euery mans hearing, the Nestorians of the Countrey said vnto me, that it was enough, because they meant to speake. So I gaue them place: And when they would haue disputed with the Saracens; they answered: We grant that your Law is true, and whatsoeuer is in the Gospell is true: Wherefore wee will not dispute with you in any thing: and they confessed, that they beg at the hands of God in their prayers, that they may die the death of the Christians. There was there a certaine old Priest, of the Sect of Iugurs, who confesse one God, yet they make Idols, with whom they talked much, shewing all till the comming of Christ to iudgement, declaring the Trinitie to him and the Saracens by similitudes. All of them harkened without any contradiction; yet none of them said, I beleeue, and will become a Christian. The conference ended, the Nestorians and the Saracens sang together with a loud voice, the Tuinians holding their peace: and after that, they all drunke abundantly.

God is Omnipotent.

God knowes all things.

God perfectly good.

The Saracens answer, that the Gospell is true.

The Sect of the Iugurs.

Chap. 43. The day of Pentecost he is called before Mangu Chan, who confesseth the faith of the Tartars he speaketh of his returne by Baatu, he craueth leaue to stay there, which is not graunted.

VPon Whitsonday Mangu Chan called mee before him, and the Tuinian with whom I disputed, and before I went in, Master Williams sonne my Interpreter, said vnto me, that we must returne vnto our Countrey; and that I should speake nothing against it, because he vnderstood it for a certaine. When I came before him, I must kneele, and the Tuinian by mee, with his Interpreter. Then he said vnto me: Tell me the truth, whether you said (when I sent my Writers vnto you) that I was a Tuinian? Then I answered. My Lord, I said not so, but (if it pleased your Highnesse) I will tell you the words I spake. Then I recited what I had spoken: and he answered; I thought well, you said not so, for it was a word which you should not speake, but but your Interpreter hath ill interpreted it; ſo hee reacheth foorth his ſtaffe towards mee, whereon he leaned, ſaying: Feare not. I ſmiling ſaid ſoftly, If I feared, I had not come hither. Then he demanded of the Interpreter what I had ſaid? So he repeated my words vnto him. Afterward he beganne to confeſſe his Faith vnto me. Wee Moallians (ſaith he) beleeue, that there is but one God, through whom we liue and dye; and we haue an vpright heart towards him. Then (ſaid I) God grant you this, for without this gift it cannot be. And he demanded what I ſaid: ſo the Interpreter told him; then he added further. That as God hath giuen vnto the hand diuers fingers, ſo he hath giuen many waies to men. God hath giuen the Scriptures to you, and ye Chriſtians keep them not. Ye finde it not in the Scriptures, that one of you ſhall diſpraiſe another? Doe you finde it, ſaid he? No, ſaid I, but I ſignified vnto you from the beginning, that I would not contend with any. I ſpeake it not, ſaith he, touching you. In like manner, yee finde it not, that for Money a man ought to decline from Iuſtice. No Sir, ſaid I, and truly, neither came I into theſe parts to get Money; nay, I refuſed that which was giuen me. And there was a Writer preſent there, who gaue teſtimony that I had refuſed a Iaſcot, and certaine pieces of Silke: I ſpeake it not (ſaid he) for that. God hath giuen you the Scriptures, and yee keepe them not: But he hath giuen vs Sooth-ſayers, and we doe that which they bid vs, and we liue in peace. He dranke foure times as I thinke, before hee diſcloſed theſe things. And while I hearkned attentiuely whether hee would confeſſe any thing elſe concerning this Faith, he beganne to ſpeake of my returne, ſaying: You haue ſtayed a long time heere, my pleaſure is therefore, that you returne. You ſaid, you durſt not carrie my Embaſſadours with you. Will you carrie my meſſage or my Letters? And from that time I could neither haue place nor time to ſhew him the Catholike Faith. For a man cannot ſpeake before him, ſaue what he pleaſeth, vnleſſe he were an Embaſſadour. But an Embaſſadour may ſpeake what he will: And they alwaies demand, whether he haue any thing elſe to ſay. But he ſuffered me to ſpeake no more: but I muſt heare him, and anſwere Interrogatories. Then I anſwered, That if he could make me vnderſtand his words, and that they were ſet downe in writing, I would willingly carrie them to my power. Then he asked me, if I would haue Gold or Siluer, or coſtly garments? I ſaid, we receiue no ſuch things: but we haue not expenſes, and without your helpe, we cannot get out of your Countrey. Then ſaid he, I will prouide you all neceſſaries throughout my Countrey, will you any more? I anſwered, it ſufficeth me: Then he demanded, how farre will you be brought? I ſaid, Let our Paſſe bring vs into the King of Armeniaes Countrey: if I were there, it were enough. He anſwered: I will cauſe you to be conueyed thither, and after looke to your ſelfe. And hee added: there are two eyes in one head; and though they bee two, yet there is one aſpect of both, and whither the one directeth the ſight the other doth. You came from Baatu, and therefore you muſt returne by him: when hee had thus ſaid, I craued licence to ſpeake. Speake on, ſaith hee. Then ſaid I; Sir, wee are not men of warre: wee deſire that they haue dominion of the world, who would more iuſtly gouerne it, according to the will of God. Our office is to teach men to liue according to the will of God: for this purpoſe came we into theſe parts, and would willingly haue remained heere, if it had pleaſed you: but ſeeing it is your pleaſure that we returne, it muſt bee ſo. I will returne and carrie your Letters according to my power, as yee haue commanded. I would requeſt your magnificence, that when I haue carried your Letters, it might bee lawfull for me to returne vnto you with your good liking, chiefely, becauſe yee haue poore Seruants of yours at Bolac, who are of our language; and they want a Prieſt, to teach them and their children their Law, and I would willingly ſtay with them. Then anſwered he: Know you whether your Lords would ſend you backe to me? Then ſaid I; Sir, I know not the purpoſe of my Lords: but I haue licence from them to goe whether I will, where it were needfull to preach the word of God: and it ſeemeth to mee, that it were very neceſſarie in theſe parts: whereupon, whether they ſend Embaſſadours backe or no, if it pleaſed you, I would returne. Then hee held his peace, and ſate a long ſpace as it were in a Muſe. And my Interpreter willed me, to ſpeake no more, and I carefully expected what he would anſwere. At length he ſaid: You haue a long way to goe, make your ſelfe ſtrong with food, that you may come luſty into your Countrey. And he cauſed them to giue me drinke. Then I departed from his preſence, and returned not againe. If I had had power to doe wonders as Moſes did, peraduenture hee had humbled himſelfe.

A token of fauour.

The faith of the Tartars.

He ſpeaketh of the Fryers returne.

Baatus greatneſſe.

Hee craueth leaue againe to ſtay in the Tartars Countrey, but it is not granted.

He departeth from the preſence of Mangu Can.

Chap. 44.

A deſcription of the Tartarian Sorcerers, and of their diuers and vnlawfull behauiour.

SOoth-ſayers therefore, as hee confeſſed, are their Prieſts: and whatſoeuer they command to bee done, is performed without delay. Whoſe office I deſcribe vnto you, as I could learne of Maſter William, and others, who reported vnto me things likely to be true. They are many; and they haue alwaies one Captaine or chiefe Prieſt: who alwaies placeth his houſe before the great houſe of Mangu Chan, neere, within a ſtones caſt. Vnder his cuſtodie (as I ſaid before) are the Chariots which beare their Idols. The others are behind the Court, in places appointed for them. And they who haue any confidence in that Art, come vnto them from diuers parts of the World. Some of them are skilfull in Aſtronomie, ſpecially the chiefe of them. And they foretell to them the Eclipſe of the Sunne and the Moone, and when it ſhall come to paſſe. All the people prepare them food, ſo that they need not goe forth of the doore of their houſe. And when Chiefe Prieſt of the Tartars.

Some of them know Aſtronomy.

Eclipſes.

Digitized by Google

They fore-tell lucky and vnfortunat daies for the performance of all busineſſe whatſoeuer.

They cauſe all things ſent to the Court, paſſe betweene fires. Friar Andrew, and his fellows

The ninth day of the Moone of May, ſolemnly kept euery yeere.

They are called to the birth of children, and fore-tell their deſtinies, and are alſo ſent for when any are ſicke.

The falſe accuſations of the Sorcerers.

The Biſhop of the Neſtorians in Cataia.

A lyer and a murtherer from the beginning.

when there is an Eclipſe, they play vpon their Timbrels and Organs, and make a great noiſe, and a loude crye, when the Eclipſe is paſt, they giue themſelues to feaſting, and drinking, and make great ioy. They foretell fortunate and vnlucky dayes for all buſineſſe or affaires. Whereupon they neuer leuie an Armie, nor vndertake Warre without their direction. And they had long ſince returned into Hungarie: but their Sooth-ſayers doe not ſuffer them. They make all things which are ſent to the Court paſſe betweene fires, and they haue a due portion thereof. They alſo purge all the houſhold-ſtuffe of the Dead, drawing them betweene the fires. For when any one dieth, all things whatſoeuer appertayne to him, are ſeparated, and not mingled with other things of the Court, till all be purged by the Fire. So did I ſee it done to the Court of that Ladie, which died, while wee were there. Whereupon, there was a double reaſon why Friar Andrew, and his fellowes ſhould goe betweene the fires, both becauſe he brought preſents, as alſo for that they belonged to him, who was dead, (to wit) Ken Chan. No ſuch thing was required of me, becauſe I brought nothing. If any liuing creature, or any thing elſe, fall to the ground, while they thus make them paſſe betweene the fires, that is theirs. They alſo the ninth day of the Moone of May, gather together all the white Mares of the Herd, and conſecrate them. The Chriſtian Prieſts alſo muſt come together thither with their Cenſers. Then they caſt new Coſmos vpon the ground, and make a great Feaſt that day; becauſe then they thinke they drinke Coſmos firſt, as it is the faſhion ſomewhere with vs, touching Wine, in the Feaſt of Saint Bartholmew, or Sixtus, and of fruits, in the Feaſt of Saint Iames and Chriſtopher. They alſo are inuited, when any child is borne, to foretell his deſtinie. They are ſent for alſo when any is ſicke, to vſe their Charmes: and they tell whether it bee a naturall infirmitie, or by Sorcerie. Whereupon that woman of Mentz, whereof I ſpake before, told mee a wonderfull thing.

On a certaine time, very coſtly Furres were preſented, which were layd downe at the Court of her Ladie, who was a Chriſtian, as I ſaid before. And the Sooth-ſayers drew them through betweene the fires, and tooke more of them then was their due. And a certaine woman, vnder whoſe cuſtodie the treaſure of her Ladie was, accuſed them thereof vnto her Ladie: whereupon the Ladie her ſelfe reproued them. It fell out after this, that the Ladie her ſelfe began to be ſicke, and to ſuffer certaine ſudden paſſions in diuers parts of her bodie. The Sooth-ſayers were called: and they ſitting farre off, commanded one of thoſe Maidens, to put her hand vpon the place where the griefe was, and if ſhee found any thing, ſhee ſhould ſnatch it away. Then ſhee ariſing did ſo. And ſhe found a piece of Felt in her hand, or of ſome other thing. Then they commanded her to put it vpon the ground; which being layd downe, it began to creepe, as if it had beene ſome liuing Creature. Then they put it into the water, and it was turned, as it were, into a Horſe-leach: and he ſaid, ſome Witch hath hurt you thus with her Sorceries: and they accuſed her that had accuſed them of the Furres, who was brought without the Tents into the fields, and receiued the baſtinado ſeuen dayes together there, and was thus tormented with other puniſhments, to make her confeſſe; and in the meane ſpace her Ladie died. Which ſhee vnderſtanding, ſaid vnto them, I know my Ladie is dead, kill mee, that I may goe after her, for I neuer did her hurt. And when ſhee confeſſed nothing, Mangu Chan commanded to ſuffer her to liue. Then the Sorcerers accuſed the Ladies daughters Nurſe, of whom I ſpake before: who was a Chriſtian, and her husband was the chiefe among all the Neſtorian Prieſts, ſo ſhee was brought to puniſhment, with a certaine Maide of hers, to make her confeſſe. And the Maide confeſſed, that her Miſtreſſe ſent her to ſpeake with a certaine Horſe, to demand anſweres. The woman alſo her ſelfe, confeſſed ſome things which ſhee did to bee beloued of her Ladie, that ſhe might doe her good, but ſhee did nothing that might hurt her. Shee was demanded alſo, whether her husband were priuie to it: ſhee excuſed him, for that he had burnt the Characters and Letters which ſhe had made. Then ſhee was put to death, and Mangu Chan ſent the Prieſt her husband to the Biſhop which was in Cataia, to be iudged, although he were not found culpable.

In the meane time it fell out, that the principall wife of Mangu Chan, brought forth a ſonne, and the Sooth-ſayers were called, to fore-tell the Deſtinie of the child, who all prophecied proſperitie, and ſaid, he ſhould liue long, and be a great Lord: after a few dayes, it happened, the child died. Then, the mother enraged, called the Sooth-ſayers, ſaying, you ſaid my ſonne ſhould liue, and loe hee is dead. Then they ſaid, Madam, behold wee ſee that Sorcereſſe, the Nurſe of Cbirina, who the other day was put to death, ſhee hath killed your ſonne; and behold wee ſee, ſhee carries him away. Now there remayned one ſonne and a daughter of that woman growne to full age in the Tents: and the Ladie ſent preſently for them in a rage, and cauſed the young man to be ſlayne of a man, and the maide of a woman, in reuenge of her ſonne, whom the Sooth-ſayers affirmed to be killed of their mother not long after, Mangu Chan dreamed of thoſe children, and demanded in the morning, what was become of them. His ſeruants were afraid to tell him: and he being troubled the more, demanded where they were, becauſe they had appeared vnto him in a Viſion by night. Then they told him. So hee preſently ſending for his wife, demanded whence ſhee learned, that a woman ſhould giue ſentence of death, without the priuitie priuitie of her Husband? And he caused her to be shut vp seauen dayes, commanding to giue her no meat. But the man who (who slew the young man) he caused to be beheaded; and the head to be hung about the womans necke, who had kild the Mayde; and made her to be cudgelled with burning Fire-brands through all the Tents, and after to be put to Death. Hee had also put his Wife to death, but for the Children he had by her: And he went out of his Court, and returned not till after one Moone.

Digitized by Google

The Reuenge of Mangu Chan, vpon his Wife being a murtherer.

The Sorcerers also trouble the Ayre with their charmes: and when the Cold is so great naturally, that they cannot apply any remedy, then they search out some in the Campe, whom they accuse, that the cold comes through their meanes, so they are put to Death without any delay. A little before I departed thence, one of the Concubines was sicke, and languished long, and they mumbled their Charmes ouer a certaine Dutch Slaue of hers, who slept three dayes. Who, when shee came to her selfe, they demanded, what she had seene? And she had seene many persons, of all which, shee iudged they should all shortly dye: And because she saw not her Mistres there, they iudged she should not dye of that sicknes. I saw the Maydes head yet aking by reason of that sleepe. Some of them also call vpon Deuils, and gather them together (who will haue answers from the Deuill) in the night vnto their house, and they put sodden flesh in the middest of the house, and that Chan who inuoketh, beginneth to say his Charmes, and hauing a Tymbrell, smites it strongly against the ground; at length he begins to raue, and causeth himselfe to be bound. Then the Deuill comes in the darke, and giues him flesh to eate, and makes him answer. On a certaine time, (as Master William told me) a certaine Hungarian hid himselfe with them, and the Deuill being vpon the house, cryed, that hee could not come in, because a certaine Christian was with them. He hearing this, fled with haste, because they began to search for him. These things and many other doe they, which were too long to report.

The Sorcerers trouble the Ayre with their Charmes.

The Sorcerers raise vp deuils.

Chap. 45.

AFter the Feast of Penticost they began to make ready their Letters, which they meant to send vnto you. In the meane while, he returned to Caracarum, and held a great Solemnity, iust about the fifteenth of Iune: and hee desired, that all the Embassadours should be present. The last day also he sent for vs, but I went to the Church to Baptise three Children of a certaine poore Dutch-man, whom we found there. Master William was chiefe Butler at that Feast, because he made the Tree which powred foorth drinke. And all the Poore and Rich sung and daunced, and clapped their hands before Chan. Then he began to make an Oration vnto them, saying; I haue sent my Brethren farre off, and haue sent them into danger, into forraigne Nations: Now it shall appeare what yee will doe, when I shall send you, that our Common-wealth may be inlarged. Euery day in those foure dayes, hee changed garments, which hee gaue them all of one colour, euery day, from the shooes euen to the tyre of the head. At that time I saw the Embassadour of the Calipha of Baldach, who caused himselfe to bee carried vpon a Horse-litter, betweene two Mules, to the Court; of whom some said, that he made peace with them: so that they should giue him ten thousand Horse for his Army. Others said, that Mangu said, hee would not make Peace, vnlesse they would destroy all their Munition. And the Embassadour answered; when you will plucke off your Horse hoofes, we will destroy our Munition: I saw also there, the Embassadours of a certaine Soldan of India, who brought with him eight Leopards, and ten Hare-hounds taught to sit vpon the Horse buttockes, as Leopards doe. When I inquired of India, which way it lay from that place, they shewed me towards the West. And those Embassadours returned with me, almost for three Weekes together, alwayes westward? I saw also the Embassadors of the Soldan of Turkie, who brought him rich presents: And hee answered (as I heard) he needed neither Gold nor Siluer, but men: wherefore he required them to prouide him an Army. In the feast of Saint Iohn he held a great Drinking, and I caused one hundred and fiue Carts, and ninety Horses to be numbred, all laden with Cowes milke: And in the feast of the Apostles S. Peter and S. Paul, in like manner. At length the Letters being dispatched, which he sendeth to you, they called me, and interpreted them, the tenor whereof I writ, as I could vnderstand them by my Interpreter, which is this. The commandement of the eternall God is this: There is but one Eternall God in Heauen: vpon Earth let there be but one Lord Chingis Chan, Temingu Tingij, That is to say the sound of Yron: (They call Chingis, the sound of Yron, because hee was a Smith: and puffed vp with pride, they call him now the Sonne of God.) This is the word which is spoken to you. Whatsoeuer Moals wee are, whatsoeuer Naymans, whatsoeuer Merkets, whatsoeuer Musulman, where soeuer eares may heare, whether soeuer Horse may goe, there, cause it to bee heard, and vnderstood, since they haue heard my commandement, and would not beleeue it, and would leuy an Army against vs, yee shall heare and see, that they shall be as hauing Eyes, and not seeing, and when they would hold any thing, they shall be without hands, and when they would walke, they shall be without feet. This is the commandement of the Eternall God, by the vertue of the Eternall God: by the great world of the Moall. The cõmandement of Mangu Chan is giuen to the French King, King Lodouick, and all other Lords, and Priests and to the great world of the Frankes, that they vnderstand my wordes, and the commaundement of the Eternall God, made to Chingis Chan. Nor from Chingis Chan, nor others after him, came this commandement vnto you. A certaine man called Dauid came vnto you, as an Embassadour of

The Feast of Saint Iohn, Iune 24.

The Letters of Mangu Chan, to Lodowicke the French King.

Moall.
Nayman.
Merket.
Musulman.

The Embassadour of the Calipha of Baldach

The Embassadours of a certaine Soldan of India.

India is more to the West then Caracarum by three weeks iourney.

Great Solemnity. Mangu Chans Letters to Lodowicke King of France: the Friers companion stayeth with the Tartars: they returne to Caracarum.

This is also the manner of the Americanes in Florida.

Digitized by Google

Chen-chan, is called Cuncan, of Iohn de Plano Carpini.

of the Moalls, but he was a lyar, and with him you ſent your Embaſſadours to Chen-chan. After Chen-chan was dead, your Embaſſadours came to his Court. Charmis his wife ſent you Cloth, called Naſic. But to know matters appertayning to Warre and Peace, and to ſettle the great World in quiet, and to ſee to doe good; That wicked woman, more vile then a Dog, how could ſhee know how to doe it? Thoſe two Monkes which came from you vnto Sartach, Sartach ſent them to Baatu: but Baatu, becauſe Mangu Chan is the greateſt ouer the World of the Moalls, ſent them vnto vs. But now, that the great World and the Prieſts, and the Monkes might line in peace, and enioy their goods, that the commandement of God might be heard among you, wee would haue ſent our Embaſſadours of Moall, with your Prieſts: but they anſwered, that betweene vs and you there was a warlike Nation, and many bad men, and troubleſome wayes; ſo as they feared they could not bring our Embaſſadours ſafe vnto you, but if we would deliuer them our Letters, contayning our commandement to King Lodowick, they would carrie them. For this cauſe wee ſent not our Embaſſadours with them. But wee haue ſent the commandement of the eternall God by your ſaid Prieſts. It is the commandement of the eternall God, which wee haue giuen you to vnderſtand. And when you ſhall heare and beleeue it, if yee will obey vs, ſend your Embaſſadours vnto vs, ſo ſhall wee be certified, whether yee will haue peace with vs, or warre. When by the power of the eternall God, the whole World ſhall be in vnitie, ioy, and peace, from the riſing of the Sunne, to the going downe of the ſame, then ſhall it appeare what wee will doe. When yee ſhall heare and vnderſtand the commandement of the eternall God, and will not hearken to it, nor beleeue it, ſaying, our Country is farre off, our Hills are ſtrong, our Sea is great, and in this confidence, ſhall leuie an Armie againſt vs, to know what wee can doe, Hee which made that which was hard, eaſie; and that which was farre off, neere, the eternall God himſelfe knowes it.

And they called vs your Embaſſadors in the Letters. Then I ſaid vnto them, call vs not Embaſſadors, for I ſaid well to Chan, that wee are not the Embaſſadors of King Lodowicke. Then they went vnto him and told him. But when they returned, they ſaid vnto me: that he held it much for our good, and that he commanded them to write as I ſhould direct them. Then I told them, they ſhould leaue out the name of Embaſſadour, and call vs Monkes and Prieſts. In the meane time, while theſe things were doing, my Companion hearing that wee muſt returne by the Wilderneſſe to Baatu, and that a man of Moall ſhould be our Guide, he ranne (without my priuitie) to Bulgai the chiefe Scribe, ſignifying to him by ſignes that he ſhould die, if he went that way. And when the day came, wherein we ſhould haue our Paſſe (to wit) a fortnight after the Feaſt of Saint Iohn; when we were called to the Court, the Scribes ſaid vnto my Companion, Behold Mangus pleaſure is, that your Companion returne by Baatu, and you ſay, you are ſicke, and it appeareth ſo: Mangu ſayth thus, If you will goe with your Companion, goe: but let it be your owne fault; becauſe peraduenture you may remayne with ſome Iani, that will not prouide for you, and it will bee an hinderance to your Companion. But if you will ſtay heere, he ſhall prouide neceſſaries for you, till ſome Embaſſadours come, with whom you may returne more eaſily, and by a way where there are Villages. The Friar anſwered, God grant Chan a proſperous life; I will ſtay. Then I ſaid vnto the Friar; Brother, bee aduiſed what you doe, I will not leaue you. You leaue not me (ſayth he) but I leaue you: becauſe, if I goe with you, I ſee the death of my bodie and ſoule, becauſe I haue not patience in intolerable labour. Then they held three Garments or Coats, and ſaid vnto vs, Yee will not receiue Gold, or Siluer, and yee haue ſtayed long here, and prayed for Chan: hee entreats you, that at the leaſt euery one of you would receiue a ſingle Garment, that yee depart not emptie from him. Then we muſt receiue them, for reuerence of him: for they account it a very euill thing, when their gifts are contemned. Firſt, he cauſed vs to bee often asked, what we would haue? And wee alwaies anſwered the ſame thing: ſo that the Chriſtians inſulted ouer the Idolaters, who ſeeke nothing but gifts. And they anſwered, that wee were fooles: becauſe if hee would giue them his whole Court, they would willingly take it and ſhould doe wiſely to. Receiuing therefore the Garments, they beſought vs to make our prayers for Chan; which we did. So, taking our leaue, we went to Caracarum. But it happened vpon a certaine day, while wee were with the Monke, farre from the Court, with other Embaſſadours; that the Monke cauſed the Table to be ſtrucken ſo hard, that Mangu Chan heard it, and demanded what it was? Then they told him. So he asked, why he was remoued ſo farre from the Court. They told him, becauſe it was troubleſome to bring him Horſes and Oxen euery day vnto the Court: and ſaid further, that it were better, that he ſhould ſtay at Caracarum. Then Chan ſent vnto him, ſaying, if hee would goe to Caracarum, and ſtay there, neere about the Church, he would giue him all things neceſſarie. But the Monke anſwered, I came from the holy Land of Ieruſalem hither, by the commandement of God, and left that Citie, wherein there are a thouſand better Churches then that of Caracarum. If he pleaſe that I ſtay here and pray for him, as God commanded me, I will ſtay: if not, I will returne to the place from whence I came. So that euery euening Oxen were brought him yoaked to the Carts, and in the morning he was brought vnto the place where hee vſed to be before the Court. And a little before wee departed thence, a certaine Neſtorian came, who ſeemed to bee a wiſe man: Bulgai the chiefe Secretarie placed him before his Court; to whom Chan ſent his children, that he ſhould bleſſe them.

He departeth the 9. of Iuly.

Note.

They ſtayed there from the 27. of December to the 9. of Iuly.

They depart from the Court to Caracarum.

Wee

Chap. 46. They come to Caracarum. Returning, he accompanieth Baatu a whole moneth; departing, he goeth toward the South to the Towne Sarai.

WEe came therefore to Caracarum. And while wee were in Master Williams house, my Guide came vnto me, and brought me ten Iascots, whereof he left fiue in Master Williams hand, willing him to spend them in the behalfe of Chan, for the Friars necessities, which remayned there: other fiue he left in the hand of the Man of God, my Interpreter, commanding to spend them vpon the way, for my necessities. For Master William had giuen them such instructions, without our knowledge. I presently changed one into money, and distributed it to the poore Christians, which were there: for all their eyes were fixed vpon vs. Wee spent another in buying necessarie things for vs, as garments, and other things, which wee wanted. With the third, the Man of God himselfe, bought some things, wherein hee gayned somewhat which was profitable vnto him: we spent the rest, and that to; because since wee came into Persia, sufficient necessaries were no where giuen vs: nor yet any where among the Tartars: but we seldome found any thing to be sold there. Master William, sometimes your Citizen, sends you a certaine Girdle set with a certaine precious-stone, which they vse to weare against thunder and lightning, and infinitely salutes you, alwaies commending you to God in his prayers: for whom, I shall neuer bee able to render sufficient thankes to God and you. Wee baptized there in all sixe soules. Wee therefore departed one from the other with teares: my Companion remayning with Master William; and I returning alone, with my Interpreter, my Guide, and one seruant; who had commandement to take one Mutton in foure dayes, for vs foure. Wee came therefore in two moneths and ten dayes from Caracarum to Baatu, and neuer saw Towne, nor token of any house, but Graues, except one Village, where in we eate no Bread. Nor did we euer rest, in those two moneths, and ten dayes; saue one day, because wee could not get Horses. Wee returned for the most part by the same kind of people, and yet through other Countries altogether: for we went in the Winter, and returned in the Summer, and by the higher parts of the North by farre; except, that fifteene dayes iourney wee must goe and returne alwaies hard by a certaine Riuer, betweene the Mountaines, where there is no lodging, but by the Riuer side. We went two dayes, and sometimes three dayes, taking no food but Cosmos. Once wee were in great danger, not being able to finde any people, our prouision fayling vs, and our Horses tyred. When I had trauelled twentie dayes, I heard newes of the King of Armenia, that he had passed by.

He returned by Persia.

A precious stone good against thunder and lightning.

From Caracarum to the Riuer of Volga, is two moneths, and ten dayes iourney.

A Riuer betweene the Mountaines of fifteene dayes iourney.

In the end of August I met with Sartach himselfe, who went to Mangu Chan with Flockes and Herds, and with his Wiues and Children: yet his great Families remayned betweene Tanais and Etilia. And I did my dutie to him, saying, I would willingly stay in his Countrey; but Mangu Chan would not haue mee returne, and carrie his Letters. Hee answered, that I must performe the will of Mangu Chan. Then I asked Coiac for your children. Hee answered, they were in the Court of Baatu carefully recommended. I also required to haue our Clothes, and Bookes againe: who answered, Did yee not bring them to Sartach? I said, I brought them to Sartach, but I gaue them not vnto him, as yee know: and I replied to him, what answere I made, when he demanded whether I would giue them to Sartach. Then hee answered, you say true, and none can resist the truth. I left your goods with my father, who remayneth neere Sarai; which is a new Towne Baatu hath made vpon Etilia, on the East shoare: but our Priests haue some of the vestments. If any thing like you (said I) keepe it, so my Bookes be restored. Then he told me, he would report my words to Sartach: I must haue Letters (said I) to your Father, to restore mee all. But he was readie to bee gone, and said vnto mee, The traine of the Ladies followeth vs neere at hand. Yee shall alight there, and I will send you Sartachs answere by this man. I was very carefull he should not deceiue me; yet I could not contend with him. Late in the euening the man came vnto me, whom he shewed me, and brought two Coats with him, which I thought had beene all of Silke, vncut: and he said vnto me, Behold two garments: the one, Sartach hath sent to you; and the other, if it seeme good to you, you shall present to the King, on his behalfe. To whom I answered, I weare no such garments, I will present them both vnto my King, in honour of your Lord. Then said hee, doe with them what you please; but it pleased me to send them both vnto you, and I send them to you by the bearer of these presents. He deliuered him Letters also to the Father of Coiac, to restore mee all which appertayned vnto me, because he had no need of any thing which was mine. So wee came to the Court of Baatu the same day I departed thence, the yeere past; the second day after the Exaltation of the blessed Crosse. And I found our young men in health, yet much afflicted with penurie, as Gosset told me. And if the King of Armenia had not comforted them, and recommended them to Sartach, they had perished: for they thought I had beene dead. The Tartars also demanded of them, if they could keepe Oxen, or milke Mares. For, if I had not returned, they had beene brought into their seruitude.

The end of August he met Sartach in his returne going to Mangu. Coiac the Priest of Sartach.

Sarai is a new Towne, built vpon Etilia, or Volga.

They come to the Court of Baatu, September. 16. 1254. cap. 18.

The King of Armenia comforted them.

After this, Baatu caused me to come vnto him, and made the Letters (which Mangu Chan sends vnto you) to be interpreted vnto me. For so Mangu wrote vnto him, that if it pleased him to adde any thing, or leaue out, or change, hee should doe it. Then said hee, yee shall carrie these Letters, and cause them to bee vnderstood. Hee demanded also what way I would goe, whether by Sea, or Land? I said, the Sea was shut, because it was Winter, and I must goe by Land.

The sea frozen in the Winter.

Digitized by Google

A short way by Hungarie.

* Bigauimus wane-trauelling with Baatu a whole moneth.

His Guide was a Iugur.

They depart from Baatu, 17. of October, going right South.

The seuen mouthes of the Riuer of Volga.

The Village Sumerkent, or Astracan is in the latitude of 46. degrees.

They goe no further downe, then Sumerkent of Astracan.

The Riuer of Volga frozen ouer.

He commeth to Sarai.

Sarai is vpon the East side of Etilia. This place is now called Veboog, from Astracan 60. Versta.

Chap. 47.

From Sarai they passe by the Mountains of the Alani, and by the Saracens called Lesgi, and by Derbent, by the Citie Samarcan. by Alexanders Inclosures or Walls, by the Citie Shamaghi, by the great Plaine Mota, and the Bridge made of ships, where Cur and Araxes meet together.

The Tartars haue little store of Armor

A Castle of the Alani.

A description of Porta ferrea, or Derbent.

Land. For I thought you had beene yet in Syria, so I directed my iourney towards Persia. For if I had thought you had passed into France, I would haue gone into Hungarie: so I should sooner haue come into France, and by a more easie way then into Syria. Then wee trauelled * a moneth with him, before wee could haue a Guide. At length, they appointed mee a certaine Iugur, who vnderstanding I would giue him nothing, and that I would goe forth-right into Armenia, caused Letters to be made, to conduct me to the Soldan of Turkie, hoping he should receiue gifts of the Soldan, and that he should gayne more that way. Then we tooke our iourney speedily (fifteene dayes before the Feast of Al-Saints) towards Sarai, going forth right Southward, descending neere to Etilia, which is diuided into three Armes there below: euery one whereof is almost twice as big as the Riuer of Damiata. It maketh foure other lesser Armes; so that we passed that Riuer in seuen places by Boat. Vpon the middle Arme is the Village, called Sumerkent, without a wall: but when the Riuer ouerflowes, it is compassed with water. The Tartars were eight yeeres about it before they could take it: and the Alani, and the Saracens were in it. There we found one Dutch-man, with his wife, a very good man, with whom Gosset stayed in the Winter: for Sartach sent him thither to ease his Court. About those parts was Baatu on the one side of the Riuer, and Sartach on the other, about Christmas, and they goe no further downe. And it falleth out, that all the Riuer is frozen, so they passe ouer. Here is great store of grasse, and there among the Caues theeues hid themselues, till the Ice melt. Coiacks father, receiuing Sartachs Letters, restored my vestments vnto mee, except three Albes and an Amice trimmed with fine Silke, and a Stole, and a Girdle, and a Tualia adorned with golden embroyderie, and a Surplice. He restored also vnto me the siluer Plate, except the Censer, and the little Boxe where the Chrisme was. All which, the Priests which were with Sartach had. Hee restored my Bookes, except our Ladies Psalter, which hee kept with my leaue, because I could not denie it him: for he said, Sartach tooke much delight in it. Hee also requested me, that if it happened, that I returned vnto those parts againe, I would bring them a man that knew how to make Parchment: for he made a great Church (by the Commandement of Sartach) vpon the West side of the Riuer, as he said, and a new Towne. Yet I know that Sartach meaneth no such matter. Sarai and the Palace of Baatu, are vpon the Easterne side of the Riuer. And the Valley through which the Armes of the Riuer are spread abroad, contayneth more then seuen leagues in bredth. And there is great store of fish there. A Bible also in verse, and a certaine Booke in the Arabian, worth thirtie Sultanies, and many other things I neuer recouered.

SO departing from him on the Feast of All-Saints, alwaies going toward the South, in the Feast of Saint Martin, we came to the Mountaines of the Alani. Betweene Baatu and Sarai in fifteene dayes we found no people, but one of his sonnes, who went before him, with Falcons, and his Falconers, who were many, and one litle Village. From the Feast of All-Saints, for fiue dayes, we found not a man: and wee were almost in great danger by reason of thirst, one whole day and a night finding no water, till about three of the Clocke the next day, the Alani in those Mountaines yet hold out, so that, of ten of the Subiects of Sartach, two must come, to guard the straight and narrow passages of the Hills, left they come forth of the Mountaines, and steale their Cattell in the Playne. Betweene the Alani, and Porta Ferrea, which is two dayes iourney thence, where the Playne of Arcacci beginneth, betweene the Caspian Sea and the Mountaines, there are certaine Saracens called, Lesgi, betweene the Mountaines, who likewise resist: so that those Tartars, who dwell at the foot of the Mountaines of the Alani, were faine to giue vs twentie men, to bring vs beyond the Iron gate, or Porta Ferrea. And I was glad, because I hoped to see them armed. For I could neuer see their Armour, though I had beene very desirous. And when we came to the dangerous Passage, of twentie there were two which had Habergions. And I demanded, whence they had them? They said, they had gotten them of the Alani aforesaid, who are good Worke-men for such things, and excellent Smiths. Whereupon, I thinke, they haue small store of Armour, but Quiuers, and Bowes, and Leather lackes. I saw them presented with Iron Plates, and Iron Sculls (capillos) out of Persia. And saw two also, who presented themselues to Mangu, armed with Coats made of Hogs skins bent inward, of rough Leather, which were very vnfit, and vnwildy. Before we came to Porta ferrea, wee found one Castle of the Alani, which was Mangu Chans: for hee had subdued that Countrey. There we first found Vineyards, and drunke Wine. The day following, wee came to Porta ferrea, which Alexander the Macedonian King made. And it is a Citie whose East end is vpon the Sea shoare, and there is a little Plaine betweene the Sea and the Mountaines, through which the Citie is stretched forth in length vnto the top of the Mountaine which bordereth vpon it on the West: so that there is no way aboue, for the roughnesse of the Mountaines, nor below for the Sea, but forth-right through the middest of the Citie ouerthwart, where there is an Iron gate, from whence the Citie hath the name. And the Citie is more then a mile long, and in the top of the Hill a strong Castle: and it is as much in bredth, as a great stones cast: it hath very strong walls without Trenches, and Turrets of great polished stones. But the Tartars haue destroyed the tops of the Turrets, and the Bulwarkes of the Walls, laying the Turrets euen with the Wall. Beneath that Citie, the Countrey was wont to bee like a Paradise.

rets

Digitized by Google

Two dayes iourney hence, we found another Citie called Samaron, wherein there were many Iewes. And when we past it, we saw walles descending from the Mountaines to the Sea. And leauing the way by the Sea by those walles, because it bent towards the East, wee went vp into the high Countries towards the South. On the morrow, wee passed through a certaine Valley, wherein the foundations of walles appeared, from one mountaine to another, and there was no way through the tops of the Mountaines. These were sometimes the Inclosures or walles of Alexander, restraining the fierce Nations, (to wit) the Shepheards of the Wildernes, that they could not inuade the inhabited Countries and Cities. There are other walles or Inclosures where Iewes are. The next day we came vnto a certaine great Citie, called Samag. And after this, we entred into a great Plaine, called Moan, through which the Riuer Cur floweth, of the which the Curgi haue their name, whom we call Georgians. And it runneth through the middle of Tiflis, which is the Metropolis of the Curgines, and in comes directly from the West running to the East, to the foresaid Caspian Sea, and it hath excellent Salmons. In that plaine wee found Tartars againe. Also by that plaine comes the Riuer Araxes, which commeth from the greater Armenia, from betwixt the South and West: of which it is called the Land Araxat, which is Armenia it selfe. Whereupon in the booke of the Kings it is said of the Sonnes of Sennacherib[a], that hauing slaine their Father they fled into the Land of the Armenians. And in Esay it is said, that they fled into the Land of Ararat. To the West then of that most beautifull Plaine is Curgia. In that Plaine the Crosmini were wont to be. And there is a great Citie in the entrance of the Mountaines, called Ganges, which was their Metropolis, stopping the Georgians that they could not come downe into the Plaine. Then wee came to the Bridge of Ships, which were fastened together with a great Yron chaine, stretched forth crosse the Riuer, where Cur, and Araxes meet together. But Cur loseth his name there.

Samaron a Citie of Iewes.

The inclosures or walles of Alexander.

Other inclosures where the Iewes are.

Or Samagi.

Moan a great Plaine.

Cur, or the Riuer Cyrus.

The Georgians.

The Citie Tiflis.

[a] Reg. 19. 45. 37. Note that the Hebrew text hath Ararat in both places.

Ganges, a great Citie.

A bridge of Ships.

Chap. 48.

AFter that, wee went alwayes vpward by Araxes, whereof it is said; Pontem dedignatur Araxis, Araxes disdaines a Bridge; Leauing Persia, and the Caspian mountaines on the left hand, towards the South: on the right hand, Curgia, and the great Sea toward the West: going Southwest, betweene the South and the West. We passed through the meadowes of Bacchu, who is Generall of that Armie, which is there within Araxis: And hee hath made the Curgi, and Turkes, and Persians subiect to him. There is another Gouernour (in Persia at Taurinum, ouer the Tribute) called Argon. Both which, Mangu Chan hath called home to giue place to his Brother comming into those Countries. That Countrey which I haue described to you, is not properly Persia, but was sometimes called Hyrcania. I was in Bacchues house, and hee gaue vs Wine to drinke, and he himselfe dranke Cosmos, which I would willingly haue drunke, if he had giuen it me: yet it was the best new Wine: but Cosmos is more wholsome for an hunger-staruen man. Wee went vp therefore by the Riuer Araxes, from the Feast of Saint Clement, vnto the second Sunday in Lent, till we came to the head of the Riuer. And beyond that Mountaine where it riseth, there is a goodly Citie, called Arserum, which belongeth to the Soldan of Turkie. And neare thereabout Euphrates ariseth towards the North, at the foot of the Mountaines of Curgia: to whose Spring I had gone, but the Snow was so great, that no man could goe out of the trodden path: on the other side of the Mountaines of Caucasus, towards the South ariseth Tigris.

When we departed from Bacchu, my Guide went to Taurinum to speake with Argon, carrying my Interpreter with him. But Bacchu caused me to bee brought to a certaine Citie, called Naxnan, which sometimes was the head of a certaine great Kingdome, and the greatest and fairest Citie; but the Tartars haue made it a Wildernes. And there were sometimes Eight hundred Churches of the Armenians there: now there are but two little ones: for the Saracens haue destroyed them: In one of the which, I held the feast of Christmas as I could with our Clerke. And the next day following, the Priest of that Church dyed: to whose buriall came a certaine Bishop, with twelue Monkes of the high Countries. For all the Bishops of the Armenians are Monkes, and of the Greekes likewise, for the greater part. That Bishop told me, that there was a Church neere that, where Saint Bartholmew, and likewise Saint Iudas Thaddaus were martyred: but there was no way open for Snow. He told me also, that they haue two Prophets: The first or chiefe is Methodius the Martyr, who was of their Country, and plainely Prophesied of the Ismaelites. Which Prophesie is fulfilled in the Saracens. The other Prophet is called Acacron, who when hee dyed, Prophesied of a Nation of Archers, that should come from the North, saying; That they should Conquer all the Countries of the East: and should spare the Kingdome of the East, that he might giue them the Kingdome of the West. But he saith, our Friers the Frankes being Catholikes, beleeue them not: And they shall possesse the Countries from North to South: and shall come vnto Constantinople, and shall take the Port of Constantinople. And one of them, who shall be called a Wise man, shall enter the Citie: and seeing the Churches and rites of the Frankes, shall cause himselfe to be Baptized, and shall counsell the Frankes, how they may kill the Emperour of the Tartars; and there they shall be confounded. Hearing this, the Frankes which shall be in the middle of the Land, (to wit) Hierusalem, shall set

They alwaies goe vp the Riuer of Araxis, by the Citie Vaxnan, by the Countrey of Sahensa, by the Castle Marseugen, by Aini, a Citie of Sahensa; they came to the Head of Araxis.

Bacchu a Prince of the Tartars: of whom perhaps the Citie Bacchu on the Caspian Sea (of which it is now called the Sea of Bacchu or Bacou) hath her name.

The head of Tigris.

Or Vaxnan sometimes the greatest Citie of Armenia.

Bartholmew and Thaddæus Martyrs.

The Prophesie of Methodius.

Or Acatron, his Prophesie.

Digitized by Google

vpon the Tartars, who ſhall border vpon them, and with the helpe of our Nation (that is) the Armenians, ſhall purſue them: ſo that the French King ſhall place his Royall Throne at Taurinum in Perſia. And then all Eaſt Countries, and all the vnbeleeuing Nations ſhall be conuerted to the Faith of Chriſt. And there ſhall be ſo great Peace in the world, that the Liuing ſhall ſay to the Dead, Woe be vnto you wretches, that liued not vntill theſe times. I read this Propheſie brought to Conſtantinople by the Armenians, which remaine there, but I made light of it. Yet, when I ſpake with the ſaid Biſhop, calling it to minde, I regarded it the more. And throughout all that Armenia, they as firmely beleeue this Propheſie as the Goſpell. Hee ſaid vnto vs alſo: Euen as the Soules in Limbo expected the comming of Chriſt for their deliuery; ſo doe we looke for your comming, that we might be freed from this ſlauery, wherein wee haue ſo long liued. Neere the City (Vaxnin) aforeſaid, there are Mountaines, on the which (they ſay) the Arke of Noah reſted. And there are two, one greater then the other, and Araxes runneth at the foote of them. And there is a little Towne there, called Cemainum, which is by Interpretation, Eight: for (they ſay) it was ſo called of the Eight perſons, which came foorth of the Arke, and built it. Many haue aſſayed to climbe the greater Hill, and could not. And that Biſhop told me, that a certaine Monke was very much troubled, and an Angell appeared vnto him, and brought him a piece of the wood of the Arke, willing him to trouble himſelfe no more. That piece of Wood they had in their Church, as he told me. Neither is the Hill ſo high in appearance, but that men might well get vp vnto it. A certaine Old man ſhewed me a ſufficient reaſon, why none ſhould climbe it. They call that Mountaine Maſſis: and it is of the Feminine gender in their Tongue. No man (ſaith he) muſt climbe vp Maſſis, becauſe it is the Mother of the world.

Mountaines on the which Noahs Arke reſted.

Or Cemanium a Towne or a Citie.

Armenian fables.

The Mountain Maſſis.

In that Citie (of Vaxnan) Frier Bernard Cathalane, of the Order of the Preaching Friers found me; who abode in Georgie, with a certaine Prior of the Sepulcher, who poſſeſſeth great lands there. And he had learned ſomewhat of the Tartars language. Who went with a certaine Hungarian Frier to Taurinum, to deſire Argons Paſſe to Sartach. When they came there, they could not haue acceſſe: and the Hungarian Frier returned by me to Tephelis with one Seruant: but Frier Bernard remained at Taurinum with a certaine Lay Frier, whoſe language he vnderſtood not. We went out of the Citie of Vaxnan in octauis of the Epiphanie: for we had ſtayd long there by reaſon of the Snow. We came therefore in foure dayes to the Countrey of Sahenſa, a certain Curgine, ſometimes mighty, but now tributary to the Tartars, who deſtroyed all his Munition: whoſe Father Zacharias got that Countrey of the Armenians, hauing deliuered them from the hands of the Saracens. And there are many faire Villages of true Chriſtians, hauing Churches right like the Frankes. And euery Armenian hath in his houſe, in an honourable place, a wooden hand holding a Croſſe, and he ſets a burning Lampe before it: And that which we doe with holy Water, ſprinkling it to driue away wicked Spirits, they doe the ſame with Frankinſence. For euery euening they burn Frankinſence, carrying it through all the corners of the houſe, to rid them of all kinde of Enemies. I ate with the foreſaid Sahenſa, and he did me great reuerence, both he and his Wife, and his ſonne Zachary was a very faire and wiſe young man. Who demanded of me, that if he ſhould come vnto you, whether yee would entertaine him? for he ſo hardly brooketh the Dominion of the Tartars, that, though he haue plenty of all things, he had rather trauaile into a ſtrange Country, then indure their Lord-like Dominion. They ſaid further, that they were ſonnes of the Church of Rome: and if the Lord Pope would ſend them any ayde, they would bring all the bordering Nations vnto the ſubiection of the Church.

Tephelis.

Ianuary 14. Snow.

Ianuary 18. The Countrey of Sahenſa.

From that Towne of his, in fifteene dayes, we entred the Countrey of the Soldan of Turkie, vpon the firſt Sunday in Lent. And the firſt Caſtle we found, is called Marſeugen. All in the Caſtle were Chriſtians, Armenians, Curgines, and Greekes: The Saracens onely haue the Dominion. There, the Captaine of the Caſtle ſaid, he had receiued commandement, that no victuals ſhould be giuen to any Franke, or to the Ambaſſadours of the King of Armenia, or of Vaſtacius. So that from the place where wee were the firſt Sunday in Lent, vnto Cyprus, (whether I came eight dayes before the Feaſt of Saint Iohn Baptiſt) we muſt buy our prouiſion. He, who was my guide procured me Horſes, and tooke money for the victuals, and put it in his purſe. When he came into the Fields, ſeeing a flocke any where, hee violently tooke one Sheepe, and gaue it to his family to eate, and maruailed I would not eate of his robbery. In the Purification I was in a certaine Citie called Aini, which was Sahenſas, whoſe ſituation is moſt ſtrong: and there are there a thouſand Armenian Churches, and two Synagogues of the Saracens. The Tartars place a Baily there. There fiue Preaching Friers met me, whereof foure came from Prouince in France, and the fift ioyned himſelfe to them in Syria, and they had but one ſicke Boy, who could ſpeake Turkiſh, and a little French: And they had the Popes letters to Sartach, and to Mangu Chan, and to Buri; ſuch as your Highnes gaue me, Letters of requeſt, that they would ſuffer them to continue in their Countrey, and Preach the Word of God, &c. But when I told them what I had ſeene, and how they ſent me backe againe, they directed their iourney to Tephelis, where there are Friers of their Order, to conſult what they ſhould doe. I ſaid vnto them they might well paſſe, by thoſe Letters, if they would: but they ſhould bee well aſſured to indure much labour, and render an account of their comming: for ſeeing they had no other meſſage, but the office of Preaching, they would

A Towne of Sahenſa.

The Countrey of the Soldans of Turkie.

Marſengen.

The firſt Sunday in Lent.

February the 2. The Citie Aini, belonged to Sahenſa.

The Popes letters to Sartach, and Mangu Chan.

Digitized by Google

would care but a little for them, and chiefly, because they had no Interpreter. What they did after, I know not.

THe second Sunday in Lent, we came to the head of Araxis, and passing beyond the top of the Mountaine, we came to Euphrates; by the which wee descended eight dayes, alwayes going to the West, vnto a certaine Castle, called Camath. There Euphrates bendeth to the South towards Halapia. But we passing the Riuer went through very high hilly Countries, and through the deepe Snow to the West. There was so great an Earthquake there that yeare, that in one Citie called Arsengan, tenne thousand persons noted by name, perished, beside poore men of whom there was no notice taken. Riding three dayes together, we saw the gaping of the Earth, as it was cleft by the Earthquake, and the heapes of Earth which came from the Mountaines, and filled the valleyes: so that if but a little more of the Earth had beene moued, that which Esay speaketh had beene literally fulfilled. Euery valley shall be filled, and euery Mountaine, and little hill shall be humbled. We passed through the Valley where the Soldan of Turkie was vanquished of the Tartars. It were too long to write how he was ouercome. But a certaine seruant of my guides who was with the Tartars, said; That the Tartars were not aboue tenne thousand in the whole; and a certaine Curgine, a seruant of the Soldans, said; That there were two hundred thousand with the Soldan, all Horsemen, In that plaine where the Battaile was, nay that slight, there brake out a great Lake, at the time of the Earthquake. And my heart told me; that all that Earth opened her mouth to receiue yet more blood of the Saracens. We were in Sebaste of the lesser Armenia in Easter weeke. There we visited the Tombes of forty Martyrs. There the Church of Saint Blase standeth: but I could not goe thither, because it was aboue in the Castle. On Low-Sunday we came to Cesaria of Cappadocia; where there is a Church of Saint Basill the great. About fifteene dayes after we came to Iconium, making small iournies, and resting in many places: because we could not so readily procure Horses. And my guide did this of purpose; taking vpon him to sollicite his owne busines three dayes, in euery Towne: whereupon, I was much grieued, but durst not speake, because he might haue sold, or slaine me and our seruants, and there was none to gaine-say it. I found many Frankes at Iconium, and a certaine Ianuenslan Marchant, called Nicholas de Sancto Syrio. Who with a certaine companion of his a Venetian, called Boniface de Molendino, carried all the Allum out of Turkie, so that the Soldan could not sell any, but to those two: and they made it so deare, that what was wont to be sold for fifteene Bizantians, is now sold for fifty. My guide presented me to the Soldan; The Soldan said, he would willingly cause me to be conuayed to the Sea to Armenia, or Cilicia. Then the foresaid Marchant knowing that the Saracens made little accompt of me, and that I was much burthened with the company of my guide (who troubled me euery day to giue him gifts) caused me to be conueyed to Curcum, a Hauen of the King of Armenia. I came thither the day before the Ascension, and stayed till the day after Penticost. Then I heard, that Ambassadours came from the King to his Father. Then I went speedily to the Kings father, to demand, whether hee had heard any newes of his Sonne: And I found him set with all his Sonnes, one excepted, called Barum Vsin: Who made a certaine Castle. And he receiued newes from his Sonne, that hee was returned: And that Mangu Chan had much eased his Tribute, and had giuen him a Priuiledge, that no Ambassadour should come into his Countrey. Whereupon the old man himselfe, with all his Sonnes made a great Banquet. And he caused me to be conueyed to the Sea, to the Hauen called Aiyax: and thence I passed ouer into Cyprus. And at Nicosia I found our Prouinciall, who the same day carried me with him to Antiochia, which is in very weake state. Wee were there on the Feast of Saint Peter and Paul. From thence we came to Tripolis, where our Chapter was, in the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin.

Chap. 49.
They come to Euphrates, to the Castle Camath, they passe into Cyprus, afterward to Antiochia, and thence to Tripolis.
The Citie Arsengan mightily shaken with an Earthquake.
The gaping of the earth clouen.
The Valley where the Soldan of Turkie was vanquished of the Tartars.
Sebaste of the lesser Armenia.
Maior Hipdomada.
Cesaria of Cappadocia.
Iconium.
Allum in Turkie.
The Soldan of Iconium.
Curcum a hauen of Cilicia, ouer against the East part of the Iland of Cyprus.
Barum Vsin.
Aiyax or Giazzo
Iune the 16. he came to Cyprus.
Antiochia.
Iune 29.
Tripolis.
August. 15.

AND our Prouinciall determined, that I should leaue Acon, not suffering me to come vnto you: commanding, to write vnto you, what I would by the bearer of these Presents. And not daring to resist contrarie to my obedience, I did according to my power, and vnderstanding: craning pardon of your inuincible Clemencie for my superfluities, or wants, or for any thing that shall be vndiscreetly, nay foolishly spoken, as from a man of little vnderstanding, not accustomed to indite long Histories. The Peace of God which passeth all vnderstanding preserue your heart and vnderstanding.

I would willingly see your Highnesse, and certayne spirituall friends, which I haue in your Kingdome. Wherefore, if it should not bee contrarie to your Maiesties liking, I would beseech you to write to our Prouinciall, that he would let me come vnto you, and returne shortly againe into the Holy Land.

Concerning Turkie, your Maiestie shall vnderstand, that the tenth man there, is not a Saracen: nay, they are all Armenians, and Greekes, and Children rule ouer them. For the Soldan who was conquered of the Tartars, had a lawfull Wife of Hiberia, by whom he had one feeble Sonne, concerning whom he charged, that he should be the Soldan. He had another of a Greeke Concubine, whom he gaue to a certayne great Admirall. The third, hee had of a Turke. To whom

Chap. 50.
He writeth from Tripoli to King Lodowick, and giueth his aduise, for sending of a fit Ambassage to the Tartars.
The weake estate of Turkie.

Digitized by Google

many Turks and Turcomans being gathered together, they purpoſed to haue ſlaine the Sonnes of the Chriſtians. They ordayned alſo (as I vnderſtood) that after they had gotten the Victorie, they would deſtroy all the Churches, and kill as many as would not become Saracens. But hee was ouercome, and many of his men ſlaine. Hee renued his Armie the ſecond time, and then was taken, and is yet in Priſon. Pacaſter the Sonne of the Greeke Concubine procured of Filiaſter, that he might be Soldan, becauſe the other was weake, whom they ſent to the Tartars. Whereupon, his Kindred on the Mothers ſide (to wit) the Hiberi, and the Curgi were angry. So that a child ruleth in Turkie, hauing no Treaſure, few Warriours, and many Enemies. The Son of Vaſtacius is weake, and hath warre with the Sonne of Aſſan, who likewiſe is a child, and worne out with the ſeruitude of the Tartars. Wherefore, if an Armie of the Church ſhould come to the Holy Land, it were a very eaſie thing to ſubdue all theſe Countries, or to paſſe through them.

The Baſtard Pacaſter getteth the Kingdome.

The weake eſtate of Vaſtacius and Aſſan.

The King of Hungarie hath not aboue thirtie thouſand Souldiers. From Cullin to Conſtantinople are not aboue threeſcore dayes iourney by Waggons. From Conſtantinople are not ſo many dayes iourney to the Countrey of the King of Armenia. In old time, valiant men paſſed through theſe Countries, and proſpered, yet they had moſt valiant Reſiſters; whom God hath now deſtroyed out of the Earth. And we need not be in danger of the Sea, nor in the mercie of Saylers. And the price which wee ſhould giue for fraight, were ſufficient for expenſes by Land. I ſpeake it confidently, if your Countrimen (I ſay not Kings and Souldiers) would goe, as the Kings of the Tartars goe, and bee contented with ſuch victuals, they might winne the whole World. It ſeemeth not expedient (as I thinke) that any Frier goe vnto the Tartars any more, as I did, or as the Preaching Friers doe. But if our Souereigne Lord the Pope would honourably ſend a Biſhop, and anſwere their follies; which they haue thriſe written to the Frankes: once to Pope Innocent the Fourth of Sacred Memorie, and twice to your Maieſtie, once by Dauid, who deceiued you, and now by me, he might ſpeake vnto them what he would, and alſo cauſe them to put thoſe things in writing. For they heare whatſoeuer an Ambaſſadour will ſpeake, and alwayes demand, if he will ſay any more. But he muſt haue a good Interpreter; nay, many Interpreters, and large Expenſes.

The ſtate of the King of Hungaria. Godfrey of Bullin and many other Princes.

Tartars thriftie in food and rayment.

What Meſſage or Ambaſſage ſhould be ſent to the Tartars.

FOr the Readers better ſatisfaction touching the former Authour, and knowledge of the North parts of Aſia and Europe and for His owne ſake alſo, I haue added this Tranſcript of our famous Countriman Frier Bacon, which I haue not Engliſhed, both to preuent tedioufneſſe in this Worke, otherwiſe more then enough voluminous; and becauſe he was an Hiſtorian, no Traueller; and the vſe thereof is principally to ſuch as can reade his owne Idiome; a good part alſo being the ſame with that which our former Frier hath deliuered.

CHAP. II.

Ex quarta parte Maioris operis fratris Rogeri Bacon, Angli excerpta quædam de Aquilonaribus mundi partibus.

Mare Scythicum.

AD Aquilonarem vero partem Indiæ, vt dictum eſt, ſunt Mare Scythicum, & montes illi magni, qui Caucaſus & Taurus, & multis alijs nominibus vocantur, ſecundum diuerſitatem locorum & Gentium. Et ab Occidente eſt Perſida ſeu Parthia & Media. Deinde ſub eis ad Occidentem eſt Meſopotamia & Syria, vt dictum eſt. Sed in confinio Mediæ & Parthiæ, eſt Porta ferrea Alexandri; quæ eſt Ciuitas denominata à Portis. Et illæ portæ dicuntur Caſpiæ, non Caucaſiæ, vt dicit Plinius. Nam aliæ ſunt portæ Caucaſiæ, vt poſtea dicetur. Quia in littore Maris Caſpiæ ſunt hæ Portæ. Eſt enim Mare quoddam quod fit ex concurſu maximorum fluminum venientium ab Aquilone, & Caſpium vocatur atque Hircanicum ſecundum Plinium. Nam Caſpij & Hircani ſuper littora illius Maris inhabitant. Non igitur eſt hoc Mare veniens ab Oceano, vt Iſidorus & Plinius, & omnes Authores Occidentales ſcribunt. In hoc enim caſu non habuerunt experientiam certam, nec per ſe, nec per alios, ſed ex rumore ſcripſerunt.

Porta ferrea vel Derbent Vid. Plin. l.6.c.11. videſis etiam Ortel. Theſ. Geog. Mare Caſpium fit ex concurſu fluminum. Iſid. Etym. Plin. l.6.c.13. Ptolemæus primus prodidit Mare Caſpium terra vndiquaq; circundatum. Capadocia. Cilicia vel Armenia minor. Pamphilia.

In libris autem de moribus Tartarorum, & per fide dignos, qui in illis Regionibus fuerunt, patet, quod hoc Mare ſit ex concurſu fluminum. Et eſt Mare ſatis magnum. Nam circuitus eſt quatuor menſium. Et Hircania prope, eſt ſuper littus Meridionale illius Maris in termino Parthiæ. Et vbi Parthia coniungitur Mediæ in Portis illis, extenditur à Portis Caſpijs verſus Orientem, vt dicit Plinius. Deinde contra reſiduum Mediæ ad eius Septentrionem, & ad Occidentem Hircaniæ eſt maior Armenia: & eam diuidit Euphrates à Capadocia, vt dicit Plinius. Propter quod Capadocia eſt ad Occidentem Armeniæ maioris. Deinde verſus Syriam & Mare noſtrum eſt Cilicia, quæ dicitur Armenia minor. Vnde iacet partim Medio, partim in Occidente Capadociæ; & eius principium non diſtat ab Antiochia per duas dietas. Sub Cilicia ad Septentrionem ſuper Mare comprehenditur Pamphilia, vt dicit Plinius, neglecta gente Iſaurica, vel non computata per ſe propter prauitatem, ſed ſub eis comprehenſa.

Digitized by Google

hensa. In Cilicia est Tarsus Metropolis eius; in quo natus fuit Beatus Apostolus Paulus. Et durat Cilicia à meridie in Septentrionem per Tarsum in latitudine circiter quatuor dietas versus Turkiam. Nam ad Septentrionem Ciliciæ est Lycaonia; vbi est Iconium celeberrima Ciuitas; à qua Lycaonia dicitur quasi Iconia. Vnde Princeps eorum vocatur Soldanus Iconij & Turkiæ. Et à finibus Armeniæ vsque Iconium sunt octo dietæ. Nomina Prouinciarum in his Regionibus sunt multum mutata propter guerras. Nam Turkia multas terras occupat quæ apud Authores habent nomina antiqua. Vt est pars Asiæ minoris, & Phrygia & Lydia. Asia vero maior continet plus medietate Mundi, & totum præter Europam & Africam: vnde continet hanc Asiam minorem. Et hæc nunc vocatur apud Græcos Anatoli, id est, Orientalis Græcia: in qua est Galatia; vnde Galatæ, quibus scribit Apostolus: & Troia dicitur illa formosissima Ciuitas: & sunt alia mutata, vt Ephesus, & 7. Ecclesiæ Apocalypsis; & Nicea: vnde Synodus Nicena, & multa alia. Et ab Iconio vsque Niceam sunt 20. dietæ in æstate: & ab ea vsque ad Brachium Sancti Georgij (quod apud antiquos vocatur Hellespontus) Mare inter Italiam & Antiochiam. Et ibi terminatur Asia minor. Et habet à parte Occidentis Thraciam, Macedoniam, & Achaiam. A parte vero meridiei habet Mare illud, quod est inter Italiam & Græciam, & Antiochiam, & Egyptum. Ab Oriente habet Phrygiam. Nam vt dicit Plinius curialite, Phrygia Troadi superiecta Septentrionali sua parte Galatis continua est, meridiana Lycaoniæ ab Occidente Capadociã habet. Et dicit quod Lydia, Phrygiæ ex ortu solis vicina est, vnde fuit Crœsus ditissimus Rex Lydorũ. Brachium vero Sancti Georgij est strictum multum, & habet Cõstantinopolim ab Occidente in Europa. Et extenditur à Mari magno quod est inter Asiam & Egyptum, Syriam, & Italiã, circiter centum leucas versus Aquilonem, vsq; ad aliud Mare, quod vocatur Ponticum, & Mare Maius. Et istud Mare habet formam arcus Scythici; & multas Regiones disterminat. Vnde hæc incipiunt Regiones Aquilonares: de quibus Philosophi meridiani parum sciuerunt, secundum quod Ethicus Astronomus refert in suo libro. Sed hic perambulauit omnes has Regiones, & Mare Oceanum Septentrionale cum Insulis suis nauigauit. Volo sequi ipsum: & nihilominus libros de moribus Tartarorum: & præcipue fratrem Willielmum, quem Dominus Rex Franciæ, Lodouicus in Syria existens misit ad terram Tartarorum anno Domini 1253. Qui frater scripsit Domino Regi situm Regionum & Marium. Extenditur autem hoc Mare maius ab Occidente, scilicet à Constantinopoli in Oriens, per mille quadringenta milliaria in longum: & in medio eius coarctatur ex vtraq; parte in angulos: & in angulo meridiano est castrum & portus Turkiæ, quod vocatur Sinopolis: A parte vero Aquilonis habet aliud castrum in angulo, quod vocatur Soldaia; & est in Prouincia quæ nunc Cassaria dicitur, id est, Caisaria. Et sunt trecenta milliaria inter Sinopolim & Soldaiam. Et hæc est latitudo maris inter illos angulos. Et ista castra sunt duo portus famosi, à quibus transeunt homines à meridianis Regionibus ad Aquilonares, & è contrario. Et ab istis castris versus Occidentem seu Constantinopolim extenditur Mare per septingenta milliaria in longum & latum, similiter ad Orientem per septingenta. Et ista Prouincia Cassaria circundatur Mari à tribus lateribus. Nam in Occidente habet partem Maris Pontici, vbi est ciuitas Kersoua, in qua fuit Sanctus Clemens martyrisatus; & prope eam est Insula, in qua est Templum, quod dicitur Angelicis manibus præparatum, in quo corpus Sancti sepultum fuit. Et à Kersoua vsq; ad Soldaiam sunt quadringinta castra, quorum quodlibet fere habet proprium Idioma. Et sunt ibi multi Goti, qui omnes loquuntur Teutonicum. Et à parte meridiei Cassariæ extenditur Mare Ponticum: Et in Oriente eius cadit flumen Tanais in Mare, vbi habet latitudinem duodecim milliariorum, vbi est Ciuitas Matrica. Et flumen illud versus Aquilonem facit Mare quoddam, habens septuaginta milliaria in longitudine & latitudine, nusquam habens profunditatem vltra 6. pedes. Et hoc Mare est Palus Mæotis famosissima, de qua Philosophi & Historia & Poeta loquuntur.

Et flumen Tanais extenditur vltra illam paludem versus Aquilonem vsq; ad montes Riphæos; qui sunt in vltimo Aquilonis: à quibus montibus oritur hoc flumen, & descendit per longum terræ tractum in Paludem supradictam, faciens eam; & vltra eam disgraditur, & fluit in Mare Ponticum, vt prædixi. Et hoc flumen famosum diuidit Europam ab Asia in locis illis, & Palus illa & plures paludes sunt contiguæ: sed quasi pro vna computantur, & vocantur paludes Mæotis: vel Mæotidæ in adiectiuo. Paludes igitur illæ quæ vocantur Mare illud vadosum sunt in Oriente Cassariæ; & pars fluminis Tanais, quæ est inter paludes & Mare Ponticum. Et hæc Prouincia Cassaria habet ab Aquilone vastam solitudinem, quæ extenditur à flumine Tanai in Oriente vsq; ad Danubium in Occidente itinere duorum mensium velociter equitando, sicut equitant Tartari. Et hoc est vna die quantum est ab Aurelianis Parisijs. Vnde durat hæc terra circiter 4. menses, secundum quod alij homines communiter equitant. Et hæc terra fuit tota Cumanorum, qui dicebantur Captac. Sed Tartari destruxerunt eam totaliter, & interfecerunt Cumanos, præter partem quæ fugit ad Regnum Hungariæ, qui sunt ei tributarij: Et à Teutonicis dicitur Valana; A Plinio & Isodoro & cæteris Alania Occidentalis. Et hæc Prouincia habet Danubium, & Poloniam, & Hungariam, ab Occidente. Et ab Aquilone istius Prouincia est Russia magna: quæ similiter à Polonia in vna parte sua extenditur ad Tanaim; sed in magna sui parte habet Leuconiam in Occidente (quæ est terra ita magna sicut Alemannia:) Ad cuius partem Occidentalem sunt multa terra in circuitu Maris cuiusdam: quod Mare sit per multa Brachia Maris Oceani quæ veniunt per medium Daciæ, & vltra versus Orientem dilatat se magnum Mare, quod ab Occidente habet Daciam & Sweciam: Sed Swecia est ad Aquilonem Daciæ declinans aliquantulum in Orientem vltra Daciam: vltra quas ad Aquilonem est Norguegia. Deinde Mari magno interiecto sunt Scotia & Anglia: & Mari paruo interposito Hibernia. Nota sunt hæ Regiones; sed tango Turkia. Lycaonia. Iconium. Soldanus Iconij. Descriptio Maris Ponticl vel maioris. Regiones Aquilonares. Oceanus Septentrionalis. Quibus authoribus vsus est maxime. Sinopolis. Soldaia. Cassaria olim fuit appellata Taurica Chersonesus. Kersoua ciuitas Goti. Matrica ciuitas Palus Mæotis. Montes Riphæi. Vasta Solitudo. Tartaricum iter ergo est 64. milliariorum ve-strorum. Cuniani. Captac. Alania Occidentalis. Russia magna. Vel Lituaniam. Mare Sweciam. Dacia. Swecia. Norguegia.

tango eas propter notitiam aliorum. Si ergo à finibus Occidentalibus ex parte Aquilonis ascendamus versus Orientem, primo est Hibernia, secundo Britannia maior, quæ continet Angliam & Scotiam: Deinde Norguegia, Swecia, Dacia, & post in Orientem versus est mugnum mare predictum, quod vocatur mare Orientale; quia Oceanus non se extendit vltra aliud mare: Sed super latus Aquilonare istius maris immediate post angulum Sweciæ est Estonia: deinde Liuonia versus Orientem illius maris: deinde Curonia seu Curlandia declinando ad Meridianum latus: postea Prussia magna terra in Meridiano latere: deinde Pomerania: postea Lubec portus magnus & famosus in confinio Daciæ & Saxoniæ. In medio istius maris est Insula quadam, quæ vocatur Gotlandia. Et super Liuoniam ad Orientem est Semigallia. Curoniam circundat Leuconia predicta, & etiam circundat Russia magna ex vtraque parte maris dicti, & terminatur Meridiana ad Prussiam & Poloniam. Polonia vero iacet ad Meridiem Prussiæ: & ad Meridiem eius est Bohemia: deinde Austria. Et ad Occidentem terrarum istarum Alemannia; & postea Francia & Hispania. Sed hæ notæ sunt: facio tamen mentionem propter alias. Ad Orientem Austriæ & Bohemiæ est Hungaria, ad quam Occidentalis pars Albaniæ descendit. Nam cadit super Danubium, qui fluit per medium Hungariæ, & vltra eam in mare Ponticum per duodecim ostia magna. In termino vero Hungariæ Orientalis à parte Aquilonis occurrit Moldauia, contra quam ad Meridiem Danubij sunt * Balchi & Bulgari & Constantinopolis, quæ terra antiquitus vocabantur Thracia. Albania igitur Occidentalis extenditur à Danubio post finem Hungariæ versus Orientem vsque ad flumen Tanaim; habens Cassariam à Meridie, & Balchiam, Bulgariam & Constantinopolim. Ab Occasu vero Hungariam & Poloniam, & extremitatem Russiæ: ab Aquilone habet totam longitudinem Russiæ.

Et vltra Russiam ad Aquilonem est Gens Hyperborea, quæ sic nominatur à montibus magnis, qui vocantur Hyperborei. Et hæc Gens propter aeris salubritatem vixit in syluis. Gens longæua vsque quo fastidiant mortem, optimarum consuetudinum. Gens quieta & pacifica, nulli nocens, nec ab alia Gente molestatur: sed confugiunt ad eam sicut ad asylum. Qualiter autem potest Regio ibi esse temperatissima, tetigi prius in complexionibus locorum Mundi. Et sic habemus regiones Aquilonares in Europa notabiles. Ritus vero istarum Gentium sunt diuersi. Nam Pruteni, Curlandi, Liuonij, Estonij, Semigalli, Leuconij sunt Pagani. Alani vero non sunt, quia Tartari ceperunt terram illam, & fugauerunt omnes, vsque in Hungariam. Et Cumani sunt Pagani: & Alani fuerunt similiter, sed deleti sunt. Ruteni sunt Christiani, & sunt scismatici, habentes ritum Græcorum, sed non vtuntur lingua Græca; immo lingua Sclauonica: quæ est vna de linguis, quæ plures occupat regiones. Nam Russiam, Poloniam & Bohemiam, & multas alias Nationes tenet. Tartari vero à Danubio in ho in terram Alanorum seu Cunamorum, & vlterius, vsque fere ad partes vltimas Orientis, & alias Nationes eis vicinas ad Aquilonem & Meridiem subiugauerunt pro maxima parte. Nam aliquæ Gentes sunt in montanis & locis tutissimis, quas non possunt debellare, licet sint eis vicini, quia sunt inexpugnabiles.

Tanais quidem fluuius descendit à montibus Riphæis altissimis, qui sunt in vero Aquilone: nec est vltra illos ad Aquilonem habitatio. Et in termino Orientali Russiæ & Alaniæ, vbi mercatores & alij conueniunt de Hungaria & Cassaria, & Polonia & Russia est quoddam Casale, vbi nauigio pertransitur flumen Tanais. Et est Tanais ibi ad latitudinem Sequanæ Parisijs. Et vltra flumen illud est Albania superior vsque ad aliud flumen magnum, quod vocatur Etilia, quæ maior est in quadruplo quàm Sequana: & est de maioribus fluminibus Mundi; & crescit in æstate sicut Nilus: & à parte Aquilonis distat hoc flumen à Tanai per decem dietas: sed versus meridiem multum seperantur. Nam Tanais cadit in mare Ponticum, & Etilia in mare Caspium: & facit illud mare, cum alijs fluminibus multis, quæ veniunt de Perside & alijs locis. Nam à Pontico mari secundum Plinium sunt tricenta octoginta milliaria vsque ad mare Caspium. Et in hac terra habitabant Cumani. Sed Tartari deleuerunt omnes, sicut ex altera parte fecerunt vsque ad Danubium, vt dictum est. Et Tartari habent pecora infinita, & habitant in tentorijs, non habentes villas nec castra, nisi rarissime. Et vnus Princeps cum exercitu, & cum suis armentis gregum vagatur inter duo flumina. Vt vnus inter Boristhenem & Tanaim: alius inter Tanaim & Etiliam; & sic vltra versus Orientem, quia semper diuisi sunt per pascua & aquam. Et à Ianuario incipiunt adire partes Aquilonares iuxta flumina vsque ad Augustum: & tunc redeunt versus meridianas propter frigus Aquilonis in hyeme. Et versus Aquilonem distat Etilia à Prouincia Cassariæ per vnum mensem & tres dietas, sicut equitant Tartari. Hæc vero terra Tartarorum inter Tanaim & Etiliam habet ab Aquilone quasdam Gentes: & primo est Gens Arimphæa prope montes Riphæos, quæ est similis Hyperboreis in * omnibus. Et hæ duæ Gentes sunt prope polum in Aquilone. Sed remotius ab Aquilone vltra Tanaim est primo Gens quæ vocatur Moxel, subiecta Tartaris. Et sunt adhuc sine lege pure Pagani: ciuitatem non habent, sed casulas in syluis. Dominus eorum & magna pars eorum fuerunt interfecta in Polonia per Polonos & Alemannos & Boemos. Nam Tartari duxerunt eos ad bellum cum Polonis: & multum approbant Polonos & Alemannos de strenuitate; sperantes adhuc liberari à seruitute Tartarorum per eos. Si mercator veniat inter eos, oportet quod ille in cuius domo primo hospitatur, det ei expensas quantum vult ibi morari. Hæc enim est consuetudo illius Regionis. Post hos ad Orientem est Gens quædam quæ vocatur Merduini, subiecti Tartaris. Sed sunt Saraceni, habentes legem Machometi. Post eos est Etilia flumen predictum quod descendit à maiori Bulgaria, de qua postea dicetur. A meridie vero istius Regionis Tartarorum super mare Ponticum sunt Iberi & Georgiani. Et in Georgia est metropolis ciuitas, Mare Orientale.

Estonia hinc vocati eius Incolæ in nostris historijs Easterlings.
Liuonia.
Prussia.
Semigallia.
Albania.
Danubij duodecim ostia.
* Vel Valachi.
Albania Occidentalis.
Gens Hyperborea, ex antiquorum fabulis.
Pagani.
Tartari.
Alani deleti.
Deest linea.
Tartari.
Montes Riphæi.
Hoc Casale hodie vocatur Asou.
Albania superior.
Etilia flumen, nunc Edel, & Volga, crescit non ex eadem causa, quia Nilus, nec eodem modo; sed Hyeme congelatur; æstate liquefiunt niues, &c.
* Etiam in ipsis de eâ fabulis & antiquandis antiquitatis nugis.
Dottè tamen author iste, cuius tempore nec loca ista detecta, nec fabulæ.
Etilia, vel Volga. Etil. Tartaricum nomen, Volga Muscouiticum. Nota quod maior Bulgaria, hodie Russia dicitur, & Muscouia.

Digitized by Google

ciuitas, quæ vocatur Tephelis, in qua Fratres Prædicatores habent domum. Et vlterius versus Orientem est terra Coraſminorum: ſed deleti ſunt à Tartaris. Et in his locis ſolebant antiquitus eſſe Amazones, ſecundum Plinium & Ethicum Aſtronomum. Amazones enim, vt refert Ethicus, fuerunt mulieres ducentes exercitum magnum ex mulieribus ſine viris collectum: quæ aduocantes vsos certis temporibus anni conceperunt: ſed maſculos genitos interfecerunt, faminas reſeruando, quarum in iuuentute mamillas dextras per artificium chirurgiæ abſtulerunt ne in ſagittando reciperent impedimentum per mamillas; & Minotauros ac Centauros, monſtra ferociſſima nutriuerunt à iuuentute mamillis ſuis: vnde antecedebant eas ſicut matres ſuas: & omnem exercitum premebant magis per huiuſmodi monſtra, quam per arma: & ſimiliter Elephantes à iuuentute nutriebant & aſſueſcebant ad bella: & ſic per centum annos vaſtabant meridianas partes Aſiæ & Græciæ, donec ab Hercule fuerunt ſeductæ & diſtructæ.

Tephelis.
Cormini deleti.
Amazones.
Palea.

Hæc vero loca Georgianorum & Coraſminorum habent terram Soldani Turkiæ & Capidociam à Meridie. Nam in latere Meridiano maris Ponticì eſt terra Soldani vſque ad Sinopolim, de qua prius dictum eſt: & poſt eam in eodem latere maris verſus Occidentem eſt terra Vaſtacij, ſcilicet Græcia Orientalis. Nam Occidentalis vocatur vbi Conſtantinopolis eſt, & Regiones ei annexæ citra Brachium Sancti Georgij in Europa. Sed Armenia maior eſt ſuper Capadociam ad Orientem. Et ideo illa Armenia etſi Meridiana ſit reſpectu Georgiæ, tamen in Orientem tendit, & extenditur vſque Mediam & Meſopotamiam. Et hæc terra tota æſtimatur à multis eſſe terra Ararat; propter hoc quod in Iſaia dicitur, quod filij Sennacherib interfecto patre fugerunt in Ararat: In libro Regum dicitur, quod fugerunt in Armeniam. Sed Ieronimus vndecimo libro ſuper Iſaiam ſoluit hoc dicens: Ararat regio in Armenia campeſtris per quam Araxis fluit incredibilis vbertatis ad radices montis Tauri, qui vſque illuc extenditur. Quapropter Ararat non eſt tota Armenia, ſed regio determinata; magna tamen eſt. Nam Araxes fluuius, à quo Ararat regio nominatur, extenditur à capite ſuo per iter trium menſium & amplius. Caput autem eius eſt Fons in monte Armeniæ vbi propriè oritur Euphrates ex parte Aquilonis, & Tigris ad aliud latus montis verſus Meridiem. In montibus autem Armeniæ teſtante Scriptura requieuit Arca Noe: Sed non in quibuſcunque montibus: quoniam non eſt in iſtis, vbi oriuntur iſta tria flumina magna, ſed in altiſſimo Tauri montis cacumine, vbi Ararat regio eſt, ſecundum quod dicit Ieronimus vndecimo ſuper Iſaiam; Arca in qua liberatus eſt Noe ceſſante diluuio non ad montes generaliter Armeniæ, ſed ad montes Tauri altiſſimos, qui Ararat imminent campis. Et prope illos montes eſt ciuitas quæ maxima fuit, antequam eam deſtruxerunt Tartari. Nam fuerunt in ea octingentæ Eccleſiæ Hermenorum. Et in tempore Fratris Willelmi, cum tranſiuit per eam, non fuerunt niſi duæ paruulæ: Et ibi prope fuerunt Martyrizati Beatus Bartholomæus & Beatus Iudas Thaddæus. Et ibi ſunt duæ Prophetiæ. Vna eſt Beati Methodij Martyris, qui fuit de Gente illa. Et plane prophetauit de Iſmaelitis: quæ prophetia impleta eſt in Saracenis. Alius Propheta eorum vocatur Akaton, qui prophetauit de Tartaris & deſtructione eorum. Dicit enim, quod ab Aquilone veniet Gens Sagittaria, quæ omnes Nationes Orientis ſubiugabit: Et veniunt in Regnum Occidentis, ſcilicet ad Conſtantinopolim, & ibi per Principes Occidentis deſtruentur. Et tunc conuertentur omnes Gentes Chriſti: & erit tanta pax vbique, quod viui dicent mortuis: Væ vobis, quod non vixiſtis vſque nunc. Et Imperator Chriſtianus ponet ſolium ſuum in Taurino in Perſide. Et Hermeni habent iſtam prophetiam ſicut Euangelium. Et ciuitas memorata vocatur nunc Naxuan; quæ ſolebat eſſe caput Regni: & eſt verſus partes Aquilonares Armeniæ. Nam à feſto Sancti Clementis aſcendit Frater Willelmus iuxta Araxem vbi terminatur verſus Aquilonem; & in feſto Natalis venit ad illam ciuitatem; & in Octauis Epiphaniæ receſſit ab ea: & per Araxem iuit vſque ad caput eius in ſecunda Dominica quadrageſimæ: & non longe plus eſt à ciuitate illa ad vltimum Armeniæ à parte Meridiei, quam ad Aquilonem. Deinde ſuperius ad Orientem ſunt montes Alanorum, & Aas, qui ſunt Chriſtiani, & recipiunt indifferenter omnes Chriſtianos tam Latinos quàm Græcos: vnde non ſunt ſciſmatici, & pugnant cum Tartaris; & ſimiliter Alani. Poſt eos ad Orientem ſunt Saraceni, qui vocantur Lelgi, qui ſimiliter propter terra fortitudinem pugnant cum Tartaris.

Frater Willelmus.
Vid. ſup. in Rubruq.
Bartholomæus.
Iudas Thadæus.
Nunc Nachchuan.
Alani. Aas.
Lelgi, Saraceni.

Poſt illos ad Orientem ſunt Portæ Caſpiæ ſuper Mare Caſpium, quas Alexander magnus conſtruxit in concurſu Montium. Nam cum voluit expugnare Gentem Aquilonarem no potuit propter illius Gentis ferocitatem & multitudinem. Et, vt dicit Ethicus, ſtetit per annum vnum & menſes tres, vt defenderet ſe ab eis, & ingenuit quod talis peſſima Gens fuiſſet in partibus Aquilonis; & exclamauit ad Deum, vt apponeret remedium, ne mundus deſtrueretur per eos. Sed, licet non fuit dignus exaudiri, tamen Deus ſua bonitate, & propter ſalutem generis humani, iuſſit fieri terræ motum maximum, & montes diſtantes per ſtadium coniuncti ſunt vſque ad latitudinem vnius Portæ. Et Alexander tunc fecit fundi columnas æreas miræ magnitudinis, & erexit portas & liniuit eas bitumine, quod nec igne, nec aqua, nec ferro diſſolui poſſet, quod acquiſiuit ex Inſulis maris. Nec potuerunt diuini aliquo modo niſi per terræ motum: & iam dirutæ ſunt. Nam Frater Willelmus tranſiuit per medium earum cum Tartaris. Et eſt ibi ciuitas quæ vocatur Porta ferrea Alexandri: à qua verſus orientem incipit Hircania ſuper Hircanum mare, quod eſt Caſpium, vt ſuperius dictum eſt. Nam Hircania iacet ſuper littus meridionale illius maris, & extenditur vſq; ad terminos Indiæ: à cuius Hircaniæ latere meridionali ſunt Media & Parthia; ſicut prius fuit annotatum. Hæ vero Portæ non ſunt Caucaſiæ, ſed Caſpiæ, vt dicit Plinius: nec Caucaſiæ ſunt Caſpiæ. Nam Caucaſiæ diſtant à Caſpijs per ducenta milliaria verſus mare Ponticum: Et à mari Pontico diſtant per centum milliaria circa partes Hiberiæ & Georgiæ.

Portæ Caſpiæ.
Bitumen egregium ex Inſulis maris.
Porta ferrea Alexandri.

Et

Digitized by Google

Gog & Magog in his locis inclusi.
Iudæi his locis inclusi.
Antichristus.
* Vt Iudæi Christum expectauerunt spectantes, imo crucifigentes praesentem, & alium sperant: sic artibus eiusdem Satanæ contrarijs, Pontificij spectantes & conspicientes, expectant tamen Antichristum, horrentq; venturum quem praesentem honorant; neque sine Magno iniquitatis mysterio vices idem agit Christi & Diaboli.
Frater Willielmus.
Rogerus Bacon vixit tempore Lodouici 9 regis Franciæ.
Oceanus Aquilonaris.
Antiqui antiquati.
Cumani idem qui Cangle, & Albani.
Iter ab Etilia 4. mensium.
Terra principalis Imperatoris.
Cumania maxima terrarum, vbi & Turcomani.
Bulgaria maior (quæ hodie Russicum siue Moscouiticum Imperium) tunc temporis Mahometica: quæ iam pridem ad vitus Greco modo Christianos transijt, hodieq; tenet.
Finis Aquilonis.
Pascatur terra, Magna Hungaria.
* Scilicet in notioribus illis Orbis regionibus.
Blaci, Valachia Ilac.
Mare Caspium
Montes Caucasi
Cataia Nigra, vel Cara Cataia.
Cataia Nigra bis Presbyterum

Et ista loca cum montibus intersecantibus vocantur clausura Alexandri, per quæ cohibuit Gentes Aquilonares ne irruerent in terras Meridianas deuastando eas. Nam Alexander multa bella gessit cum eis, vt refert Ethicus, & aliquando infra tres dies ceciderunt ex vtraque parte multa millia hominum. Alexander tamen magis arte & ingenio vicit, quam armorum potestate. Et cum fuerunt excitati sicut Vrsi de cauernis suis, non potuerat eos reprimere per violentiam: Sed Deus iuuit per terræ motum & clausuras montium: Nunc autem ruptæ sunt; & dim est quod fractæ sunt, sine terræ motu, seu vetustate. Et considerandum est diligenter de locis istis. Nam Gog & Magog de quibus Ezechiel Prophetat, & Apocalypsis, in hijs locis sunt inclusi. Secundum quod dicit Ieronimus vndecimo libro super Ezechielem; Gog Scythica gens trans Caucasum & Mæotim & Caspium mare ad Indiam vsque tenduntur. Et à principe Gog, omnes qui subditi sunt Magog appellantur. Et Iudæi similiter, quos Orosius & alij sancti referunt exituros. Atque, sicut Ethicus scribit, Alexander inclusit viginti duo Regna de stirpe Gog & Magog, exitura in diebus Antichristi: Qui mundum primo vastabunt, & deinde obuiabunt Antichristo, & vocabunt eum Deum deorum; sicut & Beatus Ieronimus confirmat. O quam necessarium est Ecclesiæ Dei, vt Prelati & viri Catholici hæc loca considerent: non solum propter conuersionem* Gentium in illis locis, & consolationem Christianorum captiuorum ibidem, sed propter persecutionem Antichristi, vt sciatur vnde venturus sit, & quando, per hanc considerationem & alias multas.

A portis vero Caspijs incipit Mare Caspium extendi in longum ad Orientem & in latum ad Aquilonem. Et est non minus quam Ponticum Mare, vt dicit Plinius: Et habet spatium quatuor mensium in circuitu. Frater vero Willielmus in redeundo ab imperatore Tartarorum circuiuit latus Occidental, & in eundo ad eum perambulauit latus Aquilonare; vt ipse retulit Domino Regi Franciæ, qui nunc est, Anno Domini, 1253. Et a parte Aquilonis habet vastam Solitudinem, in qua sunt Tartari: Et vltra eos sunt multa Regiones Aquilonares antequam perueniatur ad Oceanum. Et ideo non potest istud Mare esse sinus maris Oceani: quod tamen fere omnes authores scribunt. Sed experientia huius temporis facta per fratrem Willielmum & homines alios fideles docet quod non venit a Mari, sed fit per flumina magna & multa, quorum congregatione fit hoc mare Caspium & Hircanum.

Tota vero hæc terra Tartarorum à Tanai vsque ad Etiliam fuit Cumanorum, qui vocabantur Cangle: qui omnes sunt deleti per Tartaros. Et tota ista terra vocabatur Albania antiquitus. Et hic sunt Canes maximi, ita vt Leones, & tauros perimant: Et homines ponunt eos in bigis & aratris. Deinde vltra Etiliam est tertius principatus Tartarorum: Et destructæ sunt gentes indigenæ ab eis: Et fuerunt Cumani Cangle, sicut prius. Et durat principatus ille à flumine Etilia in Orientem per iter quatuor mensium ex parte meridionali, vsque veniatur ad terram principalem imperatoris: Sed ex parte Aquilonari durat per iter duorum mensium & decem dierum. Ex quo patet, quod Cumania fuit terrarum maxima. Nam à Danubio vsque ad terram hanc in qua Imperator residet, habitabant Cumani. Qui omnes sunt destructi à Tartaris, præter eos qui fugerunt ad regnum Hungariæ. Et hic principatus habet ab Aquilone primo Maiorem Bulgariam; à qua venerunt Bulgari, qui sunt inter Constantinopolin & Hungariam & Sclauoniam. Nam hæc quæ in Europa est minor Bulgaria, habet linguam illorum Bulgarorum qui sunt in maiori Bulgaria, quæ est in Asia. Et isti Bulgari sunt pessimi Saraceni. Et hoc est mirabile: quoniam illa terra distat a porta ferrea seu a Portis Caspijs triginta diebus & plus per transuersum Solitudinis: Et est in fine Aquilonis. Vnde mirum est valde, quod ad eos tam distantes a Saracenis peruenit secta Machometi. Et de hac Bulgaria venit Etilia, de qua dictum est. Post eam ad orientem est terra Pascatur, quæ est magna Hungaria, a qua exiuerunt Huni: Qui postea Hungri; modo dicuntur Hungari. Qui colligentes secum Bulgaros, & alias Nationes Aquilonares, sicut dicit Isidorus, Claustra Alexandri ruperunt: Et soluebatur eis tributum vsque in Egygtum. Et destruxerunt terras omnes vsque in Franciam. *Vnde maioris potentiæ fuerunt, quam adhuc sunt Tartari. Et magna pars eorum residet in terra quæ nunc vocatur Hungaria vltra Bohemiam & Austriam, quæ est modo apud latinos regnum Hungariæ. Et iuxta terram Pascatur sunt Blaci de Blacia maiori: à qua venerunt Blaci in terra Assani inter Constantinopolim & Bulgariam, & Hungariam, & Hungariam minorem. Nam populus ille dicitur nunc a Tartaris Ilac; quod idem est quod Blac. Sed Tartari nesciunt sonare B. literam. A parte vero meridiei Istius Solitudinis Tartarorum est mare Caspium: Et deinde montes Caucasi vsque in Orientem. Et extenditur hic principatus ab Etilia vsque in Catayam Nigram: vnde vocatur Cara Cataia. Et Cara idem est, quod Nigra: Et dicitur Cataia Nigra, ad differentiam alterius Cataiæ, quæ est longe vltra hanc ad Orientem multis regionibus distantem ab ista Cataia Nigra: de qua postea dicitur. Et hæc terra cum sibi adiacentibus est terra imperatoris Tartarorum præcipui, in quibus vagatur semper eum curia sua, ascendendo in æstate ad frigidas regiones; & in hyeme ad calidas. Et hæc Cataia Nigra fuit terra Presbyteri Ioannis, seu Regis Ioannis; de quo tanta fama solebat esse: & multa falsa dicta sunt & scripta.

Hic vero oportet exprimi originem Tartarorum: non solum propter euidentiam distinctionis regionum maiorem, sed propter ipsam Gentem, quæ nunc famosissima est, & subdit mundum pedibus. Sciendum igitur, quod cum bellum fuit Antiochiæ, tunc regnauit in Terra ista Coir Can. Nam in historia Antiochena legitur. Quod Turci miserunt pro succursu contra Francos ad regnum Coir Can, qui tenebat Monarchiam in regionibus Aquilonis, tempore illo, quo capta fuit Antiochia qui fuit de Cara Cataia. Coir fuit Terra Presbyteri Iohannis, de quo multa falsa, nec falsitate minori transyt fabula ad Abassinos nouumq; dedit nobis Ioannem Africanum, Turci. Regnum Coir Can.

vero

Digitized by Google

vero est nomen proprium: Can est nomen dignitatis; & sonat idem quod Diuinator. Nam principes ibi regunt populum per diuinationes & scientias, quæ instruunt homines in futuris, siue sint partes Physicæ, vt Astronomia & scientia experimentalis, siue artes Magicæ, quibus totum Oriens est deditū & imbutum. Omnes igitur imperatores Tartarorum vocantur Can: sicut apud nos vocantur Imperatores & Reges. Mortuo vero isto Coir, fuit quidam pastor Nestorinus in terra illa potens & Dominus super populum, qui populus vocatur Naiman; qui erant Christiani, Nestorini. Qui sunt mali Christiani: Et tamen dicunt se esse subiectos Romanæ Ecclesiæ. Et isti Nestorini non solum sunt ibi in Terra Naiman, sed per omnes regiones vsque in Orientem sunt dispersi. Iste vero pastor erexit se in Regem; & vocatus est Presbyter & Rex Iohannes. Huic Iohanni erat frater quidam pastor potens Vnc nomine: habens sua pascua vltra fratrem suum per iter trium Septimanarum: Et erat Dominus cuiusdam Villæ, quæ dicitur Caracarum: quæ est nunc ciuitas Imperialis, & maior in terra Imperatoris: Et tamen non est ita bona sicut Sanctus Dionysius iuxta Parisios in Francia; sicut scripsit frater Willelmus Domino Regi. Et vltra pascua istius circiter duodecim dietas erant pascua Moal, qui erant pauperes homines, & stulti ac simplices sine lege: iuxta quos fuerunt alij pauperes qui vocabantur Tartari, similes eis. Mortuo igitur Iohanne Rege eleuauit se in Regem Vnc frater eius, & vocauit se Can: vnde Vnc-Can dicebatur: qui misit armenta sua versus terminos Moal. Inter quos Moal erat faber quidam nomine Cingis, furans & rapiens animalia Vnc-can. Quo congregante exercitum Cingis fugit ad Tartaros: Qui dixit ad eos & ad Moal: Quia sumus sine duce ideo Vicini nostri opprimunt nos. Et factus est Dux eorum, & congregato exercitu irruit super Vnc-can, & vicit eum; & factus est princeps in terra, & vocauit se Cingis-can: Et accepit filiam Vnc, & dedit eam filio suo in vxorem, ex qua natus est Mangu Can, qui regnum diuisit istis principibus Tartarorum, qui nunc regnant & discordant ab invicem. Ad hunc enim Mangu Can fuit frater Willelmus. Et ipse Cingis Can vbiq; præmittebat Tartaros in pugna. Vnde exiuit fama Tartarorum: qui fere deleti sunt per crebra bella. Et licet propter hanc causam nos istam Gentem vocemus Tartaros, apud quos est imperium & Dominium: tamen semper sunt Imperatores & principes de gente Moal. Nec volunt vocari Tartari sed Moal: quia primus eorum imperator scilicet Cingis-can, fuit Natione Moal. Vnde non habuerunt ad huc ante istos qui nunc regnant nisi tres scilicet Cingis-can, & Ken-can, & Mangu-can. Qui Ken-can fuit filius Cingis, & Mangu filius eius. Hac igitur gens Moal est stultissima ab origine prima, & pauperrima: Quæ tamen permissione Diuina paulatim omnes Nationes vicinas subiugauit & totam mundi latitudinem in paruo tempore prostrauit. Quæ si esset concors primo congressu Ægyptum & Affricam vastaret, vt sic ex omni parte Latinos circundarent. Nam nunc a parte Aquilonis regnant vsq; in Poloniam. Quia tota Russia est eis subiecta, & tota terra ab Oriente vsq; ad Danubium, & vltra Danubium, scilicet Bulgaria & Blachia sunt eis tributariæ: Ita quod vsq; ad terram Constantinopolitanam tenet eorum Imperium. Et Soldanus Turkiæ, & Rex Armeniæ, & princeps Antiochiæ, & omnes principes Orientis vsq; in Indiam sunt eis subiecti, præter pancos, qui aut nimis distant, aut habent loca in Montanis tutissima, quæ expugnari non possunt.

Primo igitur in terra vbi imperator moratur est, Cataia Nigra, vbi fuit Presbyter Iohannes. Post eam est terra fratris sui vltra per iter trium Septimanarum. Deinde terra Moal; & Tartarorum vltra eos per iter quasi duo decem dietarum. Sed tota hac terra est in qua moratur Imperator vagans per diuersa loca. Terra tamen in qua fuerunt Moal, vocatur Ornan Kerule: Et ibi est adhuc Curia Cingis Can. Sed quia Caracarum, cum Regione eius fuit prima adquisitio eorum; ideo Ciuitatem illam habent pro imperiali: Et prope illam eligunt suum Can, id est Imperatorem. Deinde post Moal & Tartaros ad Orientem sunt fortes homines, qui vocantur Tangut; qui ceperunt primo Cingis-can in bello. Sed pace facta iterum subiugauit eos. Isti homines habent Boues fortissimos, habentes Candas plenas pilis sicut Equi: Quorum vaccæ non permittunt se Mungi*, nisi cautetur eis. Et si isti Boues vident hominem indutum rubeis, insiliunt in eum volentes interficere. Post istos ad Orientem sunt homines qui vocantur Tebeth: qui solebant comedere parentes suos causa pietatis, vt non facerent eis alia Sepulchra nisi viscera sua. De quibus scribunt Philosophi, vt Plinius, Solinus & alij: Et frater Willelmus testatur in libro suo: ac frater Iohannes de Plano Carpini similiter in libro, quem composuit de Tartaris, inter quos fuit Anno Domini, 1246. missus a Domino Papa in legationem ad Imperatorem Tartarorum. Sed quia fuerunt ex hoc facto abhominabiles omni Nationi, ideo iam mutauerunt hunc ritum; & tamen adhuc de ossibus capitum faciunt ciphos, in quibus bibunt propter memoriam parentum suorum. Post istos ad Orientem sunt parui homines & fusci sicut Hispani, & dicuntur Solangi. Quorum nuncij cum veniunt ad curiam alicuius, habent in manu tabulam de Ebore, in qua inspiciunt cum narrant ea quæ volunt, ac si omnia essent ibi scripta. Et vltra eos est quidam Populus, quorum animalia non appropriant alicui, nec habent custodem. Sed si aliquis indigena vult habere aliquod animal, stat super collem & vociferat sicut vult, & veniunt ad vocem suam, & accipit quod vult. Quod si extraneus veniret, odore suo fugaret omnia, & faceret ea Sylvestria. Et ideo cum homo venit extraneus, claudunt eum in domo, & dant ei necessaria vitæ, donec habeat responsum de eis pro quibus venit, nec permittent eum vagari per regionem. Vltra hos est Cataia (quæ Seres dicitur apud Philosophos.) Et est in extremitate Orientis, a parte Aquilonari respectu Indiæ, diuisa ab ea per sinum Maris & Montes. Et hic fiunt panni serici optimi, & in magna copia. Vnde ab hac terra deferuntur ad alias regiones. Et hic populus aspirat multum per nares: Et sunt optimi Artifices in omni arte. Et sunt boni Medici apud eos in omnibus præterquam de Vrina, cuius indicio non vtuntur, sed per Pulsum & alia signa optime diindicant: Et bene Naiman populus.

Caracarum Villa.

Pascua Moal.

Tartari.

Cingis faber.

Cingis can.
Hocata-can.
Ken-can.
Mangu-can.

Tota Russia Tartaris subdita.

Cataia Nigra.
vbi fuit Presbyter Iohannes.
Terra Moal.
Terra Tartarorum.
Ornan Kerule.
Caracarum, Ciuitas Imperialis.
Tangut.
Vaccæ mulcendæ cantu ad Mulgendum.
* Mulgeri.
Tebeth.
Vid. ab Hak. to. 1. & ap. Vincen. spec. hist. l. 32.

Solangi.

Cathia in extremitate Orientis.

Digitized by Google

bene cognoscunt vires herbarum, & totius medicinæ potestatem. Multi ex eis sunt apud Tartaros. Et istorum Cataiorum moneta vulgaris est charta de bambasio in qua imprimunt quasdam lineas. Nec mirum; Cum Ruteni, qui prope nos sunt, habent pro moneta faciem * Hesperolorum. Et ista Cataia non distat per 120. dietas à terra in qua moratur Imperator. Et in illa terra sunt rupes excelsæ, in quibus habitant quedam creaturæ habentes per omnia formam humanam; non tamen genua flectunt, sed ambulant saltando: sed non sunt longitudinis maioris, quàm cubiti; & vestitur totum corpus crinibus: Et venatores portant cerusiam, & faciunt foueas in rupibus ad modum cyphorum: Et illa animalia veniunt & bibunt cerusiam, & inebriantur, & dormiunt, & sic capiuntur: Et venatores ligant eis manus & pedes, & aperiunt venam in collo, & extrahunt tres vel quatuor guttas sanguinis, & dissoluunt ea; ac permittunt abire. Et ille sanguis est preciosissimus pro purpura.

Vel Aspreolorum.

Descriptio Simiæ.

Sciendum vero, quod à principio Cataiæ magna nigra vsque ad finem Orientis sunt principaliter Idolatræ: sed mixti sunt inter eos Saraceni & Tartari, & Nestoriani, qui sunt Christiani imperfecti, habentes Patriarcham suam in Oriente; qui visitat Regiones, & ordinat infantes in cunabulis ad sacros ordines: quia ipse solus [b] ordinat; & non potest venire ad vnum locum nisi quasi in quinquaginta annis. Et ille dicit se habere authoritatem à Romana Ecclesia ab antiquo; & paratus est obedire, si via esset aperta. Et isti docent filios Nobilium Tartarorum Euangelium & fidem, & alios quando possunt. Sed quia parum sciunt, & sunt malorum morium, ideo Tartari despiciunt eos. Et consecrant in missa vnum panem latum ad modum palmæ, & diuidunt primo in duodecem partes, secundum numerum Apostolorum; & postea illas partes diuidunt secundum numerum populi. Et Sacerdos dat vnicuique corpus Christi in manu sua; & tunc quilibet assumit de palma sua cum reuerentia. Sed Idolatræ prævalent in multitudine in omnibus hijs Regionibus. Et omnes conueniunt in hoc quod habent Templa sicut nos, & campanas magnas. Et ideo Ecclesia Græcorum & totius Orientis nolunt habere campanas. Ruteni tamen habent & Græci in Cassaria.

Patriarcha Nestorianorum.

[b] Sic solus Abuna in Æthiopia ordinat.

Idolatræ. Templa. Campanæ.

Omnes Sacerdotes eorum radunt caput & barbam, & seruant castitatem ex quo radunt caput: Et viuunt centum vel ducentum in vna congregatione. Diebus quibus intrant Templum ponunt duo scamna, & sedent è Regione, chorus contra chorum in terra, habentes libros in manibus, quos aliquando deponunt super illa scamna: & habent capita discooperta quamdiu sunt in Templo legentes in silencio; & nullo modo loquerentur in Templo nisi verba officij sui. Habent etiam in manibus quocunque vadunt quandam cordam centum vel ducentum nucleorum sicut nos Pater noster: & dicunt super hac verba. On, Maio, Baccan, id est, Deus tu nosti. Hæc sunt communia omnibus Idolatris. Sed tamen Iugres, qui habitant in terra vbi Imperator moratur, differunt ab alijs. Nam alij non ponunt vnum Deum, sed plures, & creaturam adorant. Isti vero propter Viciniam Christianorum & Saracenorum ponunt vnum Deum. Et sunt optimi scriptores: vnde Tartari acceperunt litteras eorum: & illi sunt magni scriptores Tartarorum. Et isti scribunt à sursum in deorsum, & à sinistra in dextram multiplicant lineas & legunt. Tebeth scribunt sicut nos, & habent figuras similes nostris. Tangut scribunt à dextra in sinistram sicut Arabes, sed multiplicant lineas ascendendo. Catai Orientales scribunt cum punctorio, quo pingunt pictores: & faciunt in vna figura plures literas comprehendentes vnam dictionem. Et ex hoc veniunt Caracteres, qui habent multas literas simul. Vnde veri Caracteres & Philosophici sunt compositi ex literis, & habent sensum dictionum. Et tota terra à Danubio vsq; in Orientem vocatur apud Antiquos Scythia, à quo Scythæ. Et omnes Regiones Tartarorum sunt de Scythia: & etiam Russia, & totum vsq; ad Alamaniam.

Rasura. Castitas. Collegia Sacerdotum.

Corda nucleorum.

Iugres.

Tebeth. Tangut. Catai Orientalis. Chinæi vtuntur hodie eiusmodi penicillis, & characteribus Caracteres Philosophici.

And thus much ex quarta parte Compendij Studij Theologiæ F. R. Baconi.

Relations of VINCENTIVS BELVACENSIS, the most of which hee receiued from Frier SIMON de Sancto Quintino, one of the foure Friers sent by Pope INNOCENT the Fourth to the Tartars: seruing to the illustration of the former.

V. B. Spec. hist. lib. 32. Mat. Michou. l. 2. c. 5. saith two of them went to the Cham: but they were two others sent another way, Iohn de Plano Carpini and his fellow, whose story is in M. Hak. and in the said Vincent. l. 32.

ANno, 1246. Cuyne, who is also called Gog Cham, was aduanced to the Imperiall Throne of the Tartars. All their Barons being assembled, placed a golden seat in the midst, whereon they caused him to sit; and set a Sword before him, saying, Wee will, and desire, and command thee to rule ouer vs. He demanded if they were contented, to doe, come, goe, slay as he should command. They answered yea. Then said he, The word of my mouth shall henceforth bee my Sword: and they all consented. After this they spread a Felt on the ground, and set him thereon, saying, Looke vpwards and acknowledge God, and looke downe on the Felt whereon thou sittest. If thou shalt gouerne well, wilt be liberall, iust, and honour thy Princes according to their dignitie, thou shalt reigne magnificent, and the whole World shall be subiect to thy Dominion, and God will giue thee all thy hearts desire; if otherwise thou shalt bee miserable and so poore, that the Felt shall not bee left thee whereon thou sittest. This done, they set his Wife with him on the Felt: and lifted them vp both so sitting, and proclaimed them Emperour and Empresse of the Tartars. After which they brought before him infinite store of Gold, and Siluer, and Gemmes, with all which remayned to Chagadan, who distributed what he pleased, and reserued the rest. Then began they to drinke vntill night after their manner; and afterward sodden flesh came in Carts without Salt, and among it

Others call him Ocodai Can

Digitized by Google

mongſt foure or fiue they diſtributed a ioynt thereof. They call him Can, concealing his proper name, and he boaſts himſelfe the Sonne of God. He hath a Prince in the Confines of Perſia, called Baioth Noy (Noy, ſignifieth his dignitie; Baioth is his name) which hath ſubdued the Countries of Chriſtians and Saracens to the Mediterranean Sea. Another called Corenzam remayneth in the Weſt Frontiers with threeſcore thouſand vnder him. The greateſt Prince is Bathoth, who hath vnder him one hundred and threeſcore thouſand Tartars, and foure hundred and fiftie thouſand Chriſtians and others. The Chams forces are innumerable. Batho.

Anno Dom. 1247. Frier Aſcelinus ſent by the Pope, came into the Campe of the Tartars with other Friers Preachers: where the Captayne Baioth-noy, by Meſſengers demanded, whoſe Meſſengers they were. Frier Aſceline anſwered for them all, I am the Meſſenger of the Lord Pope, who amongſt Chriſtians is greater then any man, reputed a Father and Lord. They replyed, how proudly doe yee ſay your Pope is greater then any? Knowes he not that the Cham is Son of God, and Baioth-noy and Batho are his Princes? Aſcelinus anſwered, the Pope knowes not them, but heares that the Tartars haue comne out of the Eaſt, and haue deſtroyed infinite multitudes. And had he knowne the names of Cham or his Princes, he would not haue omitted their names in the Letters which we bring. But beeing grieued for the ſlaughters of ſo many, eſpecially Chriſtians, with the aduice of his Brethren the Cardinals, he hath ſent vs to the next Tartarian Armie we could find, to exhort the Generall thereof to ceaſe ſuch attempts, and to repent of that which they haue done. The Meſſengers went and came diuers times betwixt, euery time in change of Garments, and were very ſollicitous for Gifts and Preſents which the Friers had none to giue. And beſides they denyed to performe the Ceremonies of kneeling to Baioth-noy, leſt they ſhould thereby intimate a ſubiection of the Pope to the Tartars: whereupon hee conſulted to put them all foure to death, to which a Meſſenger ſent from the Great Cham would not conſent. The Friers only would put vp their hoods and bow the head: whereat a Tartar asked whereas you Chriſtians adore ſtockes and ſtones, that is Croſſes imprinted on them; why doe you refuſe to doe ſo to Baioth-noy, whom Cham the Sonne of God hath commanded to be adored. Aſcelinus anſwered, Chriſtians adore not ſtockes and ſtones, but the ſigne of the Croſſe theron, for his ſake which dyed on a Croſſe, adorning it with his mẽbers as precious Iewels and conſecrating it with his bloud, purchaſing thereby our ſaluation. So cannot wee doe to your Lord. Baioth-noy ſent them word, that hee would ſend them with their Letters to the Cham, which they refuſed. Then he ſent for the Letters which were tranſlated firſt into Perſian, and thence into the Tartar Language. Hee held them there with many Trickes and Illuſions, many weeks with hard fare and ill vſage. And after much adoe he returned with Baioth-noys anſwer, hauing firſt had a Meſſenger with Letters from the Cham.

The foure were Aſcelinus, Alberike, Alexander, and Simon.

See a like diſtinction of Ethnikes, Aug. in Pſal. 113.

BAioth-noys Letter was this to the Pope. The word of Baioth-noy. Pope, know this; thy Meſſengers came and brought thy Letters to vs. Thy Meſſengers ſpake great words; we know not whether thou gaueſt them ſo in charge, or whether they ſpake it of themſelues. In thy Letters thou hadſt written; yee kill, ſlay, and deſtroy many men. The precept of God ſtable and firme, who containeth the face of the whole world, vnto vs is this. Whoſoeuer ſhall heare the Statute on their owne Land, let them yeeld Water and Patrimonie, and let them deliuer power to him which contayneth the face of the whole World. But whoſoeuer will not heare the Precept and Statute, but ſhall doe otherwiſe, let them be rooted out and deſtroyed. Now we ſend to you touching that Satute and Precept. If yee will yeeld Water and Patrimonie on our Land, it is meet that thou Pope thy ſelfe in thine perſon come to vs, and to him which contayneth the face of the whole Earth: and if thou wilt not heare the ſtable Precept of God and of him which contayneth the face of the whole Earth, wee know not, God knowes. It is meet that before thou commeſt, thou ſendeſt Meſſengers, and that thou ſignifieſt to vs whether thou commeſt or no; whether thou wilt compound with vs, or be Enemie. And ſend an Anſwere of the Precept quickly to vs. This Precept by the hands of Aybeg and Sargis, we haue ſent in the moneth of Iuly, the twentieth day of the Moone. In the Territorie of the Caſtle Sitiens.

THe Copie of the Chams Letters to Baioth-noy. By the Precept of the liuing God Cingiſ-cham the Sonne of God, ſweete and venerable ſaith, that God is high ouer all, hee is God immortall, and vpon Earth Cingiſ-cham, is Lord alone. Wee will that this come into euery place to the hearing of all, to the Prouinces obeying vs, and to the Prouinces, obeying againſt vs. It is therefore meete that thou O Baioth-noy excite them and make it knowne to them, that this is the commandement of the liuing and immortall God: that thou alſo inceſſantly make knowne thy deſire touching this, and notifie my commandement in all places, where a Meſſenger may come. And whoſoeuer ſhall gainſay thee ſhall be hunted, and his Land ſhall be waſted. And I aſſure thee, that whoſoeuer ſhall not heare this my Mandate, ſhall bee deafe; and whoſoeuer ſhall doe according to this my iudgement, knowing peace and not doing it, ſhall be lame. Let this my Ordinance come to the knowledge of all. Whoſoeuer ſhall heare and neglect to obſerue it ſhall be deſtroyed and ſlaine. Manifeſt this O Baioth-noy. And whoſoeuer deſireth the profit of his Houſe, and will ſerue vs, ſhall bee ſaued and honoured. And whoſoeuer ſhall contradict, ſtudie thou to correct them at thine owne pleaſure.

Vnto

Digitized by Google

V. Bel. l. 32 c. 90. * This ſeemes to be that Sartach in Rubruq. Ercalthays pretended Letter in Vincent. 6. 91.

Vnto Lewis the French King were ſent certayne Meſſengers from a great man, ealled Ercalthay; * and there was preſent Frier Andrew of Lontumel a Dominican, who knew Dauid the chiefe of them, hauing ſeene him in the Armie of the Tartars. Theſe brought Letters in Perſian and Arabike Letters. They reported alſo that a great King of the Tartars called Cham was become a Chriſtian, with moſt of his followers. And now the ſaid Ercalthay had receiued Baptiſme and was come forth from Cham with a great Armie to aduance the Chriſtian Faith, and to deſtroy the Aduerſaries thereof; and much deſired the French Kings loue. They thought alſo that the ſaid Ercalthay would the next Eaſter beſiege Baldach. Theſe told the King alſo of the Tartarian Affaires. Whereupon he ſent Meſſengers with Letters and Iewels to Ercalthay, with a Tent or Chappell of Scarlet fairely embroydered, with the Storie of the Paſſion, with Ornaments thereto and things fitting for Diuine Seruice, with a piece of the wood of the Holy Croſſe, exhorting him to proceed in the Faith. The Meſſenger were the foreſaid Frier Andrew with two other Friers and two Clerkes. Tranſcripts of all were ſent into France.

CHAP. III.

Relations touching the Tartars, taken out of the Hiſtorie of R. WENDOVER, * and MAT. PARIS: with certayne Epiſtles of the ſame ſubiect.

* Hee was Author of a great part of that hiſtory, which is wholly aſcribed to Paris by the moſt. Dacia is here, as often by later Authours corruptly taken for Denmarke. The Dacia of the ancients comprehended Tranſiluania, Walachia, and Moldauia.

ANno 1239. the Tartars, inhumane Nations, which had made great ſlaughters, and had with hoſtile forces inuaded the borders of Chriſtendome, in the greater Hungarie were vanquiſhed and moſt of them ſlaine, beeing encountred by fiue Kings, Chriſtians and Saracens, herein confederate. After which the King of Dacia and the King of Hungarie cauſed the Confines (before by the Tartars brought in manner to a Wilderneſſe) to bee inhabited by Chriſtians, which they ſent thither. Of which out of Dacia, alone went more then fortie ſhips.

Anno 1240. the deteſtable people of Satan, to wit, an infinite number of Tartars brake forth from their Mountayne-compaſſed, and Rocke-defended Region, like Deuils looſed out of Hell (that they may well be called Tartarians, as Tartareans) and like Graſhoppers couering the face of the Earth, ſpoyling the Eaſterne Confines with fire and Sword, ruining Cities, cutting vp Woods, rooting vp Vineyards, killing the people both of Citie and Countrey. And if they ſpared any, they vſed them in the fore-front of their battels to fight againſt their Allies, that if they were therein faint or fayned, themſelues at their backes might kill them: if otherwiſe it was without reward. They are rather Monſters then men, thirſting and drinking bloud, tearing and deuouring the fleſh of Dogges and Men; clothed with Oxe-hides, armed with Iron Plates; in ſtature thicke and ſhort, well ſet, ſtrong in bodie; in Warre inuincible, in labour infatigable, behind vnarmed; drinking the bloud of their beaſts for Dainties, &c. Theſe Tartars of deteſtable memory, are thought to be deſcended of the ten Tribes which went away (forſaking the Law of Moſes) after the golden Calues; whom Alexander the Macedon ſought to incloſe in the Caſpian hils; to which labour, exceeding humane power, hee inuoked the aſſiſtance of the God of Iſrael, and the tops of the hils ioyned together, and the place became inacceſſible and impaſſible. And though it be doubtfull, becauſe they vſe not the Hebrew Tongue, nor Law of Moſes, nor are gouerned by any Lawes; yet is it credible, that as their hearts then in Moſes gouernment were rebellious, Reprobately-ſenſuall and Idolatrous, ſo now more prodigiouſly their heart and Language is confounded, and their life immane and beaſtly inhumane. They are called Tartars of a certayne Riuer called Tartar, running alongſt their hils.

A Caluiſh conceit. See Brierwood and my Pilgr. l. 4. c. 2. & l. 5. c. 14.

Anno 1241. that inhumane and brutiſh, lawleſſe, barbarous and ſauage Nation of Tartars, horribly ſpoyling the North and North-eaſt parts of the Chriſtians, cauſed great feare and horrour ouer all Chriſtendome. For they had now brought in manner to a Wilderneſſe, Friſia, Gothia, Polonia, Bohemia, and both Hungarias, the moſt part of the Princes, Prelates and people beeing fled or ſlaine: as by this Letter appeareth.

TO the Beloued and alway worthy to be beloued Lord, our Father in Law, the Illuſtrious Prince the Duke of Brabant, H. by the grace of God Earle of Loraine, Palatine of the Saxons, his humbleſt ſeruice. The perills foretold in holy Scripture, now breake forth becauſe of our ſinnes. For a certaine cruell and innumerable people, ſauage and lawleſſe, inuadeth and poſſeſſeth the Confines next bordering to vs, and are now come to Poland, many other Lands being paſſed and peoples deſtroyed. Whereof aſwell by our owne Meſſengers, as by our beloued Couſin the King of Bohemia, we are fully certified and are inuited ſpeedily to ſuccour and defend the faithfull. For we know for certayne that about the Octaues of Eaſter, the Tartarian Nation will inuade cruelly and forcibly the Lands of the Bohemians, and if not pre- preuented, will there perpetrate vnheard-of slaughter. And because our next neighbours house is now on fire, and the next Countrey lieth open to waste, and some are alreadie wasted, we earnestly and pitifully entreat the ayde and counsell of God and of our neighbour-brethren for the vniuersall Church. And because delay is full of danger, with all our hearts we beseech you, that you make all possible speed to arme as well for your as our deliuerance, making strong preparations of store of Souldiers; diligently exciting the noble, mightie and courageous, with the people subiect to them, that yee may haue them in readinesse, when we shall next direct our Messengers to you. And we, by the ministerie of our Prelates, Preachers, and Minors, cause the Crosse (because the businesse belongs to him which was crucified) to be generally preached, fasts and prayers to be appointed, and our Lands in common to be called to the warre of Iesus Christ. Crusades against the Tartars.

Digitized by Google

Hereto wee adde that a great part of that detestable Nation, with an other Armie adioyned to them, wasteth Hungaria with vnheard-of tyrannie, insomuch that the King is said to haue retayned but a small part to himselfe. And to speake much in few words, the Church and People of the North is so oppressed and brought to such Straits, as it neuer was so scourged since the World began. Dated the yeere of grace 1241. on the day on which is sung Lætare Ierusalem:

And this was the Letters sent to the Bishop of Paris by the Duke of Brabant. The like was written by the Arch-bishop of Cullen to the King of England. Therefore for this grieuous tribulation, and for the discord betwixt the Pope and the Emperour, so hurtfull to the Church, there are appointed fasts and prayers, with larger Almes in diuers Regions, that our Lord being pacified with his people, who as a magnificent triumpher is as strong in a few as in many, may destroy the pride of the Tartars. The French Kings mother, Queene Blanch, with deepe sighs and plentifull teares spake hereof to her sonne. What shall we doe my dearest sonne about this lamentable euent, the terrible rumour whereof is comne to our Confines? generall destruction of vs all and of holy Church hangs ouer our times by the impetuous inuasion of the Tartars. The King with mournfull voice, not without the Spirit of God, answered: The heauenly comfort, Mother, exalt vs; and if they come on vs, either we shall send againe those Tartarians to their Tartarean places whence they came; or they shall exalt vs to Heauen.

A deuout Queene and a Saint King.

Diuine apophthegme.

THe Emperour certified hereof, wrote to the Princes, and especially to the King of England in this forme. Frederike Emperour &c. to the King of England greeting. Wee cannot conceale, though it somwhat lately came to our eares, but giue you notice of a thing which concerneth the Roman *Empire (as prepared to the preaching of the Gospell) & all zealous Christian Kingdoms in the World, threatning generall destruction to all Christendom. A barbarous Nation hath lately come from the Southerne * Region, which had long layne hid vnder the torrid Zone, and after towards the North by force possessing Regions long remayning is multiplied as the Canker worme, called* Tartars wee know not of what place or originall; not without the fore-seene iudgement of God is reserued to these last times, to the correction and chastisement of his people, God grant not losse of all Christendom. A publike destruction hath therefore followed, the common desolation of Kingdomes, and spoile of the fertile Land, which that wicked people hath passed thorow, not sparing sexe, age, or dignitie, & hoping to extinguish the rest of mankind, whiles it alone goeth about to domineere and reigne euery where by their immense and incomparable power and number. Now all things which they haue beene able to set eye on being put to death and spoyle, leauing vniuersall desolation behind them, these Tartarians (yea Tartareans*) when they had come to the well peopled Colonie of the* Cumani (prodigall of their liues, hauing Bowes their most familiar Armes, with Darts and Arrowes which they continually vse and are stronger in the armes then other men) they vtterly ouerthrew them, and with bloudy sword killed all which escaped not by flight. Whose neighbourhood scarcely warned the Rutheni not farre distant to take heed to themselues. For they suddenly flie thither, to prey and spoile as the wrath of God and lightning hurles it selfe, and by their sudden assault and barbarous inuasion take Cleua the chiefe Citie of the Kingdome; and all that noble Kingdome was wasted to desolation, the Inhabitants being slayne. Which yet the neighbouring Kingdome of the Hungarians who should haue taken warning, neglected: whose sluggish King too secure, being required by the Tartars messengers and letters, that if he desired that he and his should liue, he should hasten their fauour by yeelding himselfe and his Kingdom; yet was not hereby terrified and taught to fortify against their irruptions: but they ignorant or insolent contemners of their enemies, secure in their enemies approach, trusting in the native fortification of the place, vnexpectedly compassed and oppressed at vnawares by them entring like a whirlewind, opposed their Tents against them. And when the Tartars Tents were fiue miles from the Hungarian, the Tartarian fore-runners in the dawning of the morning, rushed suddenly and compassed the Hungarians, and first slaying the Prelates and chiefe men, killed an infinite number, with such vnheard-of slaughter as scarcely is recorded euer to haue hapned in one battell. The King hardly escaped by flight on a swift Horse, which fled with a small companie to the brotherly portion of the Hyllirian Kingdome, there to be protected; the Enemie possessing the Tents and spoyles. And now wasting the nobler and greater part of Hungarie beyond Danubius, consuming all with fire and sword, they threaten to confound the rest, as by the venerable Bishop Vatiensis the Ambassadour of the said Hungarian King, notice is giuen to our Court first as he passed, being destined to the Roman Court. Wee are also hereof fully certified by the Letters of our deare sonne Conrade, elect King of Romans alway Augustus, and heire of the Kingdome of Ierusalem; and of the King of Bohemia, the Dukes of Emperour Fr. 2. this Letter to King Henr. 3.

* An errour, as vsually such shadowes attend fame: like the former of inclosed Iewes. And indeed the Tartars were so base and so remote, that till they like Nilus ouerflowed the Earth, they were vnknowne, yea, then also; their sudden storms, and vnknowne originall adding to that terrour, with which they then amazed, and withall affrighted the World, as these Letters testifie.

Digitized by Google

Austria and Bauaria; by the Messengers words also instructed experimentally of the Enemies neerenesse. Nor could wee learne these things without great griefe. Truly, as the report goeth, their undetermined damnable Armie, by our Lords sufferance, hath proceeded divided purposely in three parts. For one being sent by the Pructeni, and entring Poland, the Prince and Duke of that Land were slayne by them, and after that all the Region spoyled. The second hath entred the bounds of Bohemia, and being entred hath made stay, the King manly opposing himselfe. The third hath runne therow Hungaria, bounded by Austria. Whence the feare and trembling having beginning from furie, doe excite and invite all; necessitie vrgeth to withstand them, the danger being neere; the generall destruction of the world, and specially of Christendome, calls for speedie helpe and succour. For this People is brutish, and without law, ignorant of humanitie: yet followers, and hath a Lord whom it obediently obserueth and worshipps, and calls, The God of the earth. The men are of short stature, but square and well set, rough and courageous, at the becke of their Leader rushing on any difficulties: haue broad faces, frowning lookes, horrible cries agreeing to their hearts. They weare raw Hides of Oxes, Asses, or Horses, with Iron plates sewed on for defensiue Armes hitherto: but now, with griefe we speake it, out of the spoiles of conquered Christians, they are more decently armed, that in Gods anger wee may be the more dishonourably slayne by our owne weapons. They are also furnished with better Horses, fed with daintier fare, adorned with fairer rayment. The Tartars are incomparable Archers; carrie sewed skins artificially made, by which they passe Riuers and waters without losse. When food fayles, their Horses are sayd to be content with barkes and leaues of Trees, and roots of Herbs: whom yet they finde swift and hardy. And we fore-seeing all those things, often by Letters and Messengers are mindfull to request your excellence, as also other Christian Princes, earnestly solliciting and warning, that peace and loue may flourish amongst Rulers, and discord being appeased (which often endamage Christendome) agreeing together to set stay to them which haue lately shewed themselues; forasmuch as fore-warned are fore-armed, and that the common enemies may not reioyce, that to prepare their wayes, so great dissentions breake forth amongst Christian Princes. Oh God, how much and how often would wee haue humbled our selues, doing the vtmost that the Roman Bishop might haue surceased from the scandall of dissention against vs, which is gone thorow the World; and would more temperately haue reuoked his passions from impetuous rashnesse, that wee might bee able to quiet our subiects by right, and rule them more peaceably; nor that he would protect those Rebels, the greatest part of which is by him fostered: that things being setled, and the Rebels awed against whom wee haue wasted much treasure and labour, our power might bee aduanced against the common Enemies. But Will being to him for a Law, not ruling the slipperie running of his tongue, and disdayning to abstayne from manifold dissention which he hath attempted; by his Legats and Messengers hee hath commanded the Crosse to be published against mee the Arme and Aduocate of the Church, which hee ought to haue exercised against the tyrannie of the Tartars or Saracens, inuading and possessing the Holy Land, whiles our Rebels insult and consult grieuously against our honour and fame. And now that our greatest care is to free our selues from domestike and familiar Enemies, how shall wee also repell Barbarians? seeing that they by their spies which euery where they haue sent before, they (howsoeuer directed without Diuine Law, yet well trayned in Martiall stratagems) know the publike discord, and the vnfortified and weaker parts of the Lands: and hearing of the heart-burning of Kings, and the strife of Kingdomes, are more encouraged and animated, O how much doth triumphing courage adde to strength? Wee will therefore by Gods prouidence conuerted, apply our strength and industrie to both, that wee may drive away the scandall domesticall and barbarous on this side and on that, from the Church. And we haue expressely sent our deare sonne Conrade, and other Princes of our Empire, that they may powerfully withstand the assaults of our barbarous Enemies, and represse their entrie. And heartily wee adiure your Maiestie in behalfe of the Common necessitie, by our Lord Iesus Christ, that taking heed to your selfe, and to your Kingdome (which God keepe in prosperitie) with instant care and prouident deliberation, you diligently prepare speedy ayds of strong Knights, and other armed men and Armes: this we require in the sprinkling of the bloud of Christ, and the league of * affinitie in which wee are ioyned. And so let them be ready with vs manfully and prouidently to fight for the deliuerance of Christendome, that against the Enemies now proposing to enter the confines of Germanie, as the Gate of Christendome, by united forces victorie to the praise of the Lord of Hosts may be obtayned. Neither let it like you to passe ouer these things with dissimulation, or to suspend them by deferring. For if (which God forbid) they inuade the Germane confines without obstacle, let others looke for the lightnings of a sudden tempest at the doores; which we beleeue to haue hapned by Diuine Iudgement, the world being diuersly infected, the loue of many waxing cold (by whom faith ought to be preached and conserued) and their pernicious example staining the world with Vsuries, and diuers other kinds of Simoine and Ambition. Let your Excellency therefore prouide; and whiles the common enemies are outragious in the neighbour Regions, wisely consult to resist them: because they haue come out of their Lands with this intent, not regarding the perils of life, that they might subdue to them (which God auert) all the West, and may peruert and subuert the Faith and Name of Christ. And in respect of vnexpected victorie, which hitherto by Gods permission hath followed them, they are growne to that exceeding madnesse, that now they thinke they haue gotten the Kingdoms of the World, and to tame and subiect Kings and Princes to their vile seruices. But wee hope in our Lord Iesus Christ, vnder whose Standard wee haue hitherto triumphed, being deliuered from our Enemies, that these also which haue broke forth of their Tartarean seats, their pride being abated by opposed

The Pope to haue his will against the Emperour, exposeth Christian Princes to mutuall quarrels, which he shold haue opposed to the Tartars, neuer ceasing till he had ruined that Familie and the Empire.

Tartar Spies.

This Emperor Fred. 2. married Isabel Sister to K. Henr. 3.

ſed forces of the Weſt, theſe Tartars ſhall be thruſt downe to their Tartara (or Hell) Nor ſhall they boaſt to haue paſſed ſo many Lands, ouercome ſo many peoples, perpetrated ſo many miſchiefes vnauenged, when their vnwarie Deſtinie, yea Sathan, ſhall haue drawne them to the conquering Eagles of puiſſant Imperiall Europe to their deaths. Where Germanie voluntarily raging and prone to Armes, France the mother and nurſe of Soulderie, warlike and daring Spaine, fertile England potent in men and a furniſhed Nauie, Almaine full of impetuous Warriours, Strip-ſtrong Denmarke, vntamed Italie, Burgundie ignorant of Peace, vnquiet Apulia; with the Pyraticall and inuincible Iles of the Greeke, Adriaticke and Tyrrhene Seas, Creet, Cyprus, Sicil, with the Sea neighbouring Ilands and Regions, bloudie Ireland, with nimble Wales, mariſhie Scotland, Icie Norway, and euery Noble and famous Region in the Weſt, will cheerfully ſend their choiſe Soulderie vnder the Colours of the quickning Croſſe, which and not onely rebellious men but aduerſe Deuils dread. Dated in our returne after the yeelding and depopulation of Fauentia, the third of Iuly. Dacia nauali.

Some (Papalines) ſuſpected that the Emperour had hatched this Tartar-peſtilence like Lucifer or Antichriſt, to get the Monarchie of the world and to ſubuert Chriſtiany, and that the ſecret Counſels and wayleſſe wayes of the Tartars were fraught with Imperiall Counſels: For they conceale their Language, varie their Armes, and if one be taken, knowledge of them or their purpoſe can by no tortures be extorted from him. And where (ſay they) ſhould they lurke, in which of the Climats till this time? whence their ſo ſecret and fraudulent Conſpiracie? They are Hircans and Scythians, ſauage bloud-ſuckers, who with the confederate Cumani, through the Emperours deuiſe, haue ouerthrowne the King of Hungarie, to make him ſeeke ſhelter vnder the Imperiall wings, and doe him homage, &c. Millice mad.

Needs muſt they goe whom the Deuill driues: or how elſe but by mad malice, and furious faction, or an Antichriſtian miſt, could ſuch impoſſibilities haue beene conceiued? Of their driuing the Turkes and the Choeroſmines out of Perſia is elſe-where ſpoken. Of the Popes entertainment of the Tartarian Meſſengers, Anno 1248. cloſe Conferences with them and gifts to them, with diuers other diſcourſes in the ſaid author or Authors, I omit. Onely this Epiſtle following, as containing both the ſtrange aduentures of an Engliſhman, and his relations of the Tartars from better experience, I could not but adde heere, making ſo much to the Readers purpoſe and ours. It was written by one Yuo of Narbone a Clergie man, which being accuſed of Hereſie to Robert de Curzun the Popes Legat, fled, and liued one while with the Patarines, another with the Beguines, and at laſt writ this Letter containing a diſcourſe of his trauels, amongſt them in Italie and Germanie. He begins Giraldo Dei gratia Burdegalenſi Archiepiſcopo, Yuo dictus Narbonenſis ſuorum olimnouiſſimus Clericorum, ſalutem, &c. and after ſome premiſſes of the Patarines, and Beguines (too long for this place) hee proceeds; Hoc igitur & multis alijs peccatis inter nos Chriſtianos emergentibus iratus Dominus, &c. In Engliſh, Our Lord therefore being angry with this and other ſinnes falling out amongſt vs Chriſtians, is become as it were a deſtroying enemie. Selib. 8.c.6 & 4.

Part of an Epiſtle written by one YVO of Narbona vnto the Archbiſhop of Burdeaux, containing the confeſſion of an Engliſhman, as touching the barbarous demeanour of the Tartars, which had liued long among them, and was drawne along perforce with them in their expedition againſt Hungarie: Recorded by Matthew Paris in the yeare our Lord 1243.

THe Lord therefore being prouoked to indignation, by reaſon of this and other ſinnes committed among vs Chriſtians, is become, as it were, a deſtroying enemy, and a dreadfull auenger. This I may iuſtly affirme to bee true, becauſe an huge Nation, and a barbarous and inhumane people, whoſe Law is lawleſſe, whoſe wrath is furious, euen the rod of Gods anger, ouerrunneth, and vtterly waſteth infinite Countries, cruelly aboliſhing all things where they come, with fire and ſword. And this preſent Summer, the foreſaid Nation, being called Tartars, departing out of Hungarie, which they had ſurpriſed by treaſon, layd ſiege vnto the very ſame Towne, wherein I my ſelfe abode, with many thouſands of Souldiers: neither were there in the ſaid Towne on our part aboue Fifty men of warre, whom, together with twenty Corſſe-bowes, the Captaine had left in Garriſon. All theſe, out of certaine high places, beholding the enemies vaſte Armie, and abhorring the beaſtly cruelty of Antichriſt his complices, ſignified forthwith vnto their Gouernour; the hideous lamentations of his Chriſtian ſubiects, who ſuddenly being ſurpriſed in all the Prouince adioyning, without any difference or reſpect of condition, Fortune, ſexe, or age, were by manifold cruelties, all of them deſtroyed: with whoſe carkeſſes, the Tartarian chieftaines, and their brutiſh and ſauage followers, glutting themſelues, as With delicious cates, left nothing for vultures but the bare bones. And a ſtrange thing it is to conſider, that the greedy and rauenous vultures diſdained to pray vpon any of the reliques, which remained. Old and deformed Women they gaue, as it were for daylie ſuſtenance, vnto their Canibals: the beautifull deuoured they not, but ſmothered them, lamenting and ſcritching, with forced and vnnaturall rauiſhments. Like barbarous miſcreants, they quelled Virgins Neuſtat.

Digitized by Google

vnto death, and cutting off their tender paps to present for dainties vnto their Magistrates, they engorged themselues with their Bodies.

Howbeit, their spials in the meane time discrying from the top of an high mountaine the Duke of Austria, the King of Bohemia, the Patriarch of Aquileia, the Duke of Carinthia, and (as some report) the Earle of Baden, with a mighty power, and in battell aray, approching towards them, that accursed crew immediatly vanished, and all those Tartarian Vagabonds retired themselues into the distressed and vanquished land of Hungarie; who as they came suddenly, so they departed also on the sudden: which their celeritie caused all men to stand in horrour and astonishment of them. But of the said fugitiues, the Prince of Dalmatia tooke eight: one of which number the Duke of Austria knew to bee an Englishman, who was perpetually banished out of the Realme of England, in regard of certaine notorious crimes by him committed. This fellow on the behalfe of the most tyrannicall King of the Tartars, had beene twise, as a messenger and Interpreter, with the King of Hungarie, menacing and plainely foretelling those mischiefes which afterward happened, vnlesse he would submit himselfe and his Kingdome vnto the Tartars yoke. Well, being allured by our Princes to confesse the truth, he made such oathes, and protestations, as (I thinke) the Deuill himselfe would haue beene trusted for. First therefore hee reported of himselfe, that presently after the time of his banishment, namely, about the thirtieth yeare of his age, hauing lost all that he had in the Citie of Acon at Dice, euen in the midst of Winter, being compelled by ignominious hunger, wearing nothing about him but a shirt of sacke, a paire of shooes, and a haire cap onely, being shauen like a foole, and vttering an vncoth noyse as if hee had beene dumbe, he tooke his iourney, and so trauelling many Countries, and finding in diuers places friendly entertainment, he prolonged his life in this manner for a season, albeit euery day by rashnes of speech, and inconstancy of heart, hee endangered himselfe to the Deuill. At length, by reason of extreame trauaile, and continuall change of ayre and of meates in Caldea, hee fell into a grieuous sickneſſe, insomuch that he was weary of his life. Not being able therefore to goe forward or backward, and staying there a while to refresh himselfe, hee began (being somewhat learned) to commend to writing those wordes which he heard spoken, and within a short space, so aptly to pronounce and to vtter them himselfe, that he was reputed for a natiue member of that Countrie: and by the same dexteritie he attained to manie Languages. This man, the Tartars hauing intelligence of by their spies, drew him perforce into their societie: and being admonished by an oracle or vision, to challenge dominion ouer the whole earth, they allured him by many rewards to their faithfull seruice, by reason that they wanted Interpreters. But concerning their manners and superstitions, of the disposition and stature of their bodies, of their Countrie and manner of fighting, &c. he protested the particulars following to be true: namely, that they were aboue all men, couetous, hastie, deceitfull, and mercilesse: notwithstanding, by reason of the rigour and extremitie of punishments to be inflicted vpon them by their superiours, they are restrained from brawlings, and from mutuall strife and contention. The ancient founders and fathers of their tribes, they call by the name of Gods, and at certaine set times they doe celebrate solemne Feasts vnto them, many of them being particular, and but foure onely generall. They thinke that all things are created for themselues alone. They esteeme it none offence to exercise cruelty against rebels. They be hardy and strong in the breast, leane and pale-faced, rough and huffe-shouldred, hauing flat and short noses, long and sharpe chinnes, their vpper jawes are low and declining, their teeth long and thin, their eye-browes extending from their fore-heads downe to their noses, their eyes inconstant and blacke, their countenances writhen and terrible, their extreame ioynts strong with bones and sinewes, hauing thicke and great thighes, and short legs, and yet being equall vnto vs in stature: for that length which is wanting in their legs, is supplyed in the vpper partes of their bodies. Their Countrey in old time was a land vtterly desert and waste, situated farre beyond Chaldea, from whence they haue expelled Lyons, Beares, and such like vntamed beasts, with their bowes, and other engines. Of the hides of beastes being tanned, they vse to shape for themselues light, but yet impenetrable armour. They ride fast bound vnto their Horses, which are not very great in stature, but exceedingly strong, and maintained with little prouender. They vse to fight constantly and valiantly with Iauelins, maces, battle-axes, and swords. But especially they are excellent Archers, and cunning warriers with their bowes. Their backs are sleightly armed, that they may not flee. They withdraw not themselues from the combate, till they see the chiefe Standerd of their Generall giue backe. Vanquished, they aske no fauour, and vanquishing, they shew no compassion. They all persist in their purpose of subduing the whole world vnder their owne subiection, as if they were but one man, and yet they are moe then millions in number. They haue 60000. Courriers, who being sent before vpon light Horses to prepare a place for the Armie to incampe in, will in the space of one night gallop three dayes iourney. And suddenly diffusing themselues ouer an whole Prouince, and surprising all the people thereof vnarmed, vnprouided, dispersed, they make such horrible slaughters, that the King or Prince of the land inuaded, cannot finde people sufficient to wage battell against them, and to withstand them. They delude all people and Princes of regions in time of peace, pretending that for a cause, which indeed is no cause. Sometimes they say that they will make a voyage to Collen, to fetch home the three wise Kings into their owne Countrey; sometimes times to punish the auarice and pride of the Romans, who oppressed them in times past; sometimes to conquer barbarous and Northern nations; sometimes to moderate the furie of the Germans with their owne meeke mildnesse; sometimes to learne warlike feates and stratagems of the French; sometimes for the finding out of fertile ground to suffice their huge multitudes; sometimes againe in derision they say, that they intend to goe on Pilgrimage to Saint Iames of Galicia. In regard of which sleights and collusions certaine vndiscreet Gouernours concluding a league with them, haue granted them free passage thorow their Territories, which leagues notwithstanding being violated, were an occasion of ruyne and destruction vnto the foresaid Gouernours, &c.

Digitized by Google

To the Reader.

I Found this Booke translated by Master Hakluyt out of the Latine. But where the blind leade the blind both fall: as here the corrupt Latine could not but yeeld a corruption of truth in English. Ramusio, Secretarie to the Decemviri in Venice, found a better Copie and published the same, whence you haue the worke in manner new: so renewed, that I haue found the Prouerbe true, that it is better to pull downe an old house and to build it anew, then to repaire it; as I also should haue done, had I knowne that which in the euent I found. The Latine is Latten, compared to Ramusios Gold. And hee which hath the Latine hath but Marco Polos Carkasse, or not so much, but a few bones, yea, sometime stones rather then bones; things diuers, auerse, aduerse, peruerted in manner, disioynted in manner, beyond beliefe. I haue seene some Authors maymed, but neuer any so mangled and so mingled, so present and so absent, as this vulgar Latine of Marco Polo; not so like himselfe, as the three Polos were at their returne to Venice, where none knew them, as in the Discourse yee shall find. Much are wee beholden to Ramusio, for restoring this Pole and Load-starre of Asia, out of that mirie poole or puddle in which he lay drowned. And, O that it were possible to doe as much for our Countriman Mandeuill, who next this (if next) was the greatest Asian Trauellor that euer the World had, & hauing falne amongst theeues, neither Priest, nor Leuite can know him, neither haue we hope of a Samaritan to releeue him. In this I haue indeuoured to giue (in what I giue) the truth; but haue abridged some things to preuent prolixitie and tautologie in this so voluminous a Worke, leauing out nothing of substance, but what elsewhere is to be found, in this Worke: and seeking rather the sense then a stricter verball following our Authours words and sentence. As for the Chapters I find them diuersly by diuers expressed, and therefore haue followed our owne method.

CHAP. IIII.

The first Booke of MARCVS PAVLVS VENETVS, or of Master MARCO POLO, a Gentleman of Venice, his Voyages.

§. I.

The Voyages of Master M. NICOLO and M. MAFFIO from Constantinople to the Great CAN, and their comming home to Venice: their second Voyage with the Authour and returne.

IN the time of Baldwin Emperour of Constantinople, * where vsually remayned a Magistrate of Venice, called Messer lo Dose, in the yeare of our Lord 1250. Master Nicolo Polo, Father of Master Marco, and M. Maffio his Brother, Noble, Honourable and Wisemen of Venice, beeing at Constantinople with store of Merchandize, kept many Accounts together. At last they determined to goe into the Great (or Euxine) Sea, to see if they could increase their stocke, and buying many faire and rich Iewels. They departed from Constantinople and sayled by the said Sea to a Port called Soldadia: * from whence they trauelled after by Land to the Court of a great Lord of the Tartars, called Barcha, who resided in the Cities of Bolgara and Assara, and was reputed one of the most liberal and courteous Princes that euer had beene amongst the Tartars. He was very well pleased with their comming, and did them great honour. They hauing made shew of their Iewels, and seeing they pleased him, freely bestowed them on him. He, loth

* Of Baldwins conquering of Constantinople and the Empire of the Latines there, Ramusio hath giuen a long discourse: see also Knolles Turkish Historie: & sup. tom. 1. l. 8. c. 6 to be exceeded in liberalitie, cauſed twice the value to bee giuen them, and beſides great and rich gifts. Hauing ſtayed one yeare in the Countrey of the ſaid Prince, whiles they thought to returne to Venice, there ſuddenly aroſe Warre betwixt the ſaid Barcha and another named Alau, Lord of the Eaſterne Tartars. Theſe Armies fighting together, Alau had the Victorie, and the Armie of Barcha receiued a great ouerthrow. By reaſon whereof, the wayes beeing not ſecure, they were not able to returne that way which they came. And hauing conſulted how to returne to Conſtantinople, they were aduiſed to goe ſo farre to the Eaſt, that they might compaſſe the Realme of Barcha, by vnknowne wayes: and ſo they came to a Citie called Ouchacha, which is in the Confines of the Kingdome of this Lord of the Tartars on the Weſt, and paſſing further, they went ouer Tigris (one of the foure Riuers of Paradiſe) and after that a Deſart of ſeuenteene dayes Iourney, without Citie, Caſtle, or Fort, finding only Tartars, which liue in the fields in certayne Tents, with their beaſts. Beeing paſt the Deſart they came to a good Citie called Bocara, (the name alſo of the Prouince) in the Region of Perſia, which was ſubiect to a King called Barach: in which place they ſtayed three yeares before they could goe forward or backward, by reaſon of great warres betwixt the Tartars.

* Called by Abilfada Ismael, Segdat, and placed in Chirmia (not Armenia) on the North-side of the Euxine Sea. Frier Bacon before cals it Soldaia in Cassaria.

Bocara, or Boghar in Baſtria, of which ſee M. Ienkinſon.

At that time a certayne Wiſeman was ſent Ambaſſador from the ſaid Prince Alau to the Great Can, who is the greateſt King of all the Tartars, reſiding in the Confines of the Earth, betwixt the North-eaſt and the Eaſt, called Cublai Can: who being comne to Bocara, and finding there the ſaid two brethren which had now well learned the Tartarian Language, he reioyced aboue meaſure, and perſwadeth theſe Weſterne men or Latines to goe with him, to the preſence of the Great Emperour of the Tartars; knowing that hee ſhould gratifie him in this, and the men notwithſtanding ſhould be entertayned with great honour, and rewarded with large gifts; eſpecially, ſeeing through the manifold conference had with them, he now perceiued their pleaſing behauiour. Thoſe men therefore conſidering, that they could not eaſily returne home without danger, conſulting together, ioyne with the ſaid Ambaſſadour, and iourney with him to the Emperour of the Tartars, hauing certayne other Chriſtians in their Company, whom they brought with them from Venice, and departing towards the North-eaſt and the North, were a whole yeare in going to the Court of the ſaid chiefe King of the Tartars. The cauſe of their long time in this Iourney, was the Snowes and Riuer Waters much increaſed, ſo that they were forced in their trauell to ſtay the waſting of the Snow, and decreaſing of the flouds.

They come to the Great Can.

Being therefore brought before the preſence of the Great Can, they were moſt courteouſly receiued of him. He queſtioned them concerning many things, as of the Countries of the Weſt, the Romane Emperour, and other Kings and Princes, how they carried themſelues in Gouernment, and in Warlike affaires, how Peace, Iuſtice, and Concord continued among them; alſo what manner of life, and cuſtomes were obſerued with the Latines; and eſpecially of the Pope of the Chriſtians, of the things of the Church and the Religion of the Chriſtian Faith. And M. Nicolo and M. Maffeo, as Wiſemen told him the truth, alway ſpeaking well to him, and orderly in the Tartarian Tongue. Inſomuch that hee often commanded they ſhould bee brought to his preſence, and they were very acceptable in his ſight.

Hauing well vnderſtood the Affaires of the Latines, and reſting ſatisfied with their anſwers, the Great Can intending to ſend them his Ambaſſadours to the Pope, firſt, conſulted with his Barons, and then calling to him the two Brethren, deſired them for his loue to goe to the Pope of the Romans, with one of his Barons called Chogatall, to pray him to ſend an hundred Wiſemen, and learned in the Chriſtian Religion vnto him, who might ſhew his Wiſemen, that the Faith of the Chriſtians, was to bee preferred before all other Sects, and was the only way of ſaluation; and that the Gods of the Tartars were Deuils, and that they and others the people of the Eaſt were deceiued in the worſhip of their Gods. Hee gaue them alſo in charge to bring in their returne from Ieruſalem, of the Oyle of the Lampe which burneth before the Sepulchre of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, to whom hee had great deuotion, and held him to bee true God. They therefore yeelding due reuerence to the Great Can, promiſe that they will faithfully execute the charge commited vnto them, and preſent the Letters which they receiued from him, written in the Tartarian, to be deliuered to the Biſhop of Rome.

They are ſent Ambaſſadours from the Can to the Pope.

He (according to the cuſtome of his Kingdome) commanded a Golden Tablet to bee giuen them ingrauen and ſigned with the Kings marke; carrying the which with them throughout his whole Empire, in ſtead of a Paſſe-port, they might bee euery-where ſafely conueyed through dangerous places, by the Gouernours of Prouinces and Cities, and receiue expenſes from them; and laſtly, how long ſoeuer they would ſtay in any place, whatſoeuer they needed to them or theirs, ſhould be miniſtred vnto them. Taking their leaue therefore of the Emperour, they take their Iourney, carrying the Letters and Golden Tablet with them. And when they had rid twentie dayes Iourney, the Baron aforeſaid aſſociated vnto them began to fall grieuouſly ſicke. Whereupon conſulting and leauing him there, they proſecute their intended Iourney, beeing euery-where courteouſly receiued by reaſon of the Emperours Tablet. Yet in very many places they were compelled to ſtay, by occaſion of the ouer-flowing of Riuers, ſo that they ſpent three yeares, before they came vnto the Port of the Citie of the Armenians, named Giazza. From Golden tablet vſed as a Commiſſion vnder the broad Seale.

Giazza

Digitized by Google

Giazza they goe to Acre, to wit, in the yeere of our Lord 1269. in the moneth of Aprill.

But hauing entred into the Citie of Acre, they heard, that Pope Clement the fourth was lately dead, and that no other was substituted in his place: for the which they were not a little grieued. At that time, there was a certaine Legate of the Apostolicall Sea at Acre, to wit, Master Tibaldo de Vesconti di Piacenza, to whom they declared all they had in commission, from the Great Can: and he aduised them, to expect the Creation of a new Pope. In the meane space therefore departing to Venice to visit their Friends, (purposing to remayne there vntill another Pope were created) Master Nicolo found that his wife was dead, whom (at his departure) hee had left great with child, but had left a sonne, named Marco, who was now * nineteene yeeres of age. This is that Marco which ordayned x this Booke, who will manifest therein all those things which he hath seene. Moreouer, the Election of the Pope of Rome was deferred two yeeres.

They (fearing the discontentment, and disquieting of the Emperour of the Tartars, who (they knew) expected their returne) goe backe againe to Acre to the Legate, carrying with them Marco aforesaid, and (hauing gone to Ierusalem, and fetched of the Oyle) with the Legats Letters, testifying their fidelitie to the Great Chan, and that a Pope was not yet chosen, they went againe towards Giazza. In the meane time whiles they were going, Messengers came from the Cardinals to the Legate, declaring vnto him, that he was chosen Pope: and he called himselfe d Gregorie. Hearing this, presently sending Messengers, hee calleth backe the Venetians, and admonisheth them not to depart, preparing other Letters for them, which they should present vnto the Great Chan of the Tartars; with whom he also ioyned two Preaching Friars, men famous for their honest conuersation and learning, whereof the one was called Friar Nicolo Danicenza; the other, Friar Guielmo da Tripoli. To these hee gaue Letters, and Priuiledges, and authoritie to order Priests and Bishops, and of all absolution as if himselfe were present, with Presents also of great value, and Crystall vessels to present the great Chan, together with his Benediction. They came to Giazza, a Port of the Sea in Armenia. And because Bentiochdare the Sultan of Babylon leuying a great Armie had then inuaded the Armenians, the two Friars mentioned, began to bee afraid of themselues, and deliuering the Letters and Presents to Master Nicolo, and Maffio, and Marco, desiring to auoide the danger of the wayes, and perill of warres, remayned with the Master of the Temple, and returned with him.

But the three Venetians exposing themselues to all danger, with many labours, and much difficultie trauelled many dayes, alwaies towards the North-east and North, till they after three yeeres and a halfe came vnto the Emperour of the Tartars, vnto the Citie called Clemensu: for in the Winter time their iourney had often and long hinderances, by reason of the snow and extreme cold, and inundations of waters. Moreouer, King Cublai hearing that they were comming, who were yet very farre off, sent Messengers fortie dayes iourney to meet them, who should conduct them, and minister all necessaries for the iourney.

Going therefore to the Kings Court, and being brought to his presence, they fell downe before him on their faces, yeelding the accustomed reuerence. Of whom being curteously receiued, they are willed to arise, and he commandeth them to declare, how they passed the diuers dangers of the wayes, and what they had treated with the Bishop of Rome. Then they orderly declare all things, and giue the Emperour the Popes Letters and Presents which they brought. Whereat the Chan wonderfull reioycing, commended their faithfull cares. The Oyle also brought from the Lampe of the Lords Sepulcher, and offered vnto him, hee reuerently receiued of them, and commanded it should bee honourably preserued. And asking of Marco, who hee was, Master Nicolo answered, that he was his Maiesties seruant and his sonne. Hee entertayned him with a friendly countenance, and caused him to write amongst other his honourable Courtiers: Whereupon he was much esteemed of all the Court, and in a little space learned the customes of the Tartars, and foure diuers Languages, being able to write and reade them all.

The great Chan to make his wisedome more apparent, committed an Embassage vnto him to be performed in a Citie called Carahan, vnto the which he could scarcely attayne in sixe moneths space. But he, carrying himselfe wisely in all things, discharged what hee had in comission, not without the commendation and fauour of the Prince. And knowing the Emperour was delighted with nouelties in the Countries which he passed thorow, he diligently searched the customes and manners of men, and the conditions of the Countries; making a memoriall of all which he knew and saw, to pleasure the Great Chan. And in sixe and twentie * yeeres which he continued one of his Court, he was so acceptable to him, that he was continually sent thorow all his Realmes and Signiories, for the affaires of the Great Chan, and sometimes for his owne, but by the Chans order. And this is the true reason that the said Master Marco learned and saw so many nouelties of the East, which follow in order diligently written.

But these Venetians hauing stayd in that Court many yeeres, and growne very rich in Iewels of great value, were inflamed with desire to visit their Countrey, fearing that if the Chan (now old) should die, they should not bee able to returne. One day Master Nicolo seeing the Chan merrie, craued licence to depart in the name of all three. Whereat hee was moued, and asked why Acre or Acon, then in possession of the Christians, see before l.8.c.4.

Pope Clement the fourth.

* Another copie hath 15.

x For the Booke was written by a Gentleman of Genoa from his mouth: and therefore still in Ramusio Marco is mentioned in the third person, and not in the first: at least much of it was so written and the whole published by both.

d The tenth of that name.

Letters, and Preaching Friars sent vnto the Tartar.

The Citie Clemensu.

The adoration of the Tartars.

Marcus Paulus made one of the Chans Clerkes, and a Courtier.

Marcos Legation.

His wisedome in trauelling to a farre Countrey.

* This 26. yeers are to be reckoned to the time in which this booke was written, from 1272. to 1298. as in the Relation appeareth. The sense is that it was 26. yeers since he began to be a Courtier.

They desire to returne.

Digitized by Google

why they would put themſelues on ſo dangerous a iourney: and if they wanted riches, he would giue them twice as much as they had: and in great loue would not permit their departure. Yet in the meane ſpace it happened, that a King of the Indians, named Argon, ſent three wiſe men vnto the Court of Great Cublai, whoſe names were Vlatai, Apuſca, Coza, to treat with him, that he wold deliuer him a wife; for his wife named Bolgana, being lately dead, begged this grace of the King at the point of death, and left in her Wil, that he ſhould not marrie a wife of another Familie then her owne, which was of Catay. King Cublai therefore yeelding to his requeſt, cauſed to be ſought out for them a faire young Mayden of ſeuenteene yeeres of age, named Cogatin, deſcended of the ſaid Queenes ſtocke, and to be the wife of Argon.

Argon, a King of the Indians. Argon is a Nation of India. And this King gouerned the ſame.

The will of Queene Bolgana.

Cogatin.

Theſe Embaſſadors departing, rode eight moneths the ſame way they came, but found ſo hot warres betwixt the Tartars, that they were conſtrayned to returne: and acquainted the Chan with their proceedings. Meane-whiles, Maſter Marco had returned from the parts of India, where he had beene employed with certaine ſhips, and declared to the Chan the nouelties of the places, and the ſecuritie of thoſe Seas: which words hauing paſſed him, the Embaſſadours conferred with the Venetians, and agreed that they with the Queene ſhould goe to the Great Chan, and deſire leaue to returne by Sea, and to haue the three Latines, men skilfull in Sea affaires, with them to the Countrey of King Argon. The Great Chan was much diſpleaſed with their requeſt, yet vpon their petition granted it: and cauſed Nicolo, Maffio and Marco to come to his preſence, and after much demonſtration of his loue, would haue them promiſe to returne to him, after they had ſpent ſome time in Chriſtendome, and at their owne houſe. And he cauſed to giue them a Tablet of Gold, in which was written his commandement, for their libertie and ſecuritie thorow all his Dominions, and that expenſes ſhould bee giuen them and theirs, and a Guide or conuoy for ſafe paſſage; ordayning alſo that they ſhould be his Embaſſadours to the Pope, the Kings of France, of Spayne, and to other Chriſtian Kings. Hee cauſed fourteene ſhips to be prepared, each hauing foure Maſts and able to beare nine Sayles in ſayling, the forme of which is too long here to relate. Foure of them, or fiue, had from two hundred and fiftie to two hundred and ſixtie Mariners each of them. In theſe ſhips the Embaſſadours, the Queene, and Nicolo, Maffio, and Marco, ſet ſayle, hauing firſt taken leaue of the Great Chan, who gaue them many Rubies and other precious gems, and expenſes for two yeeres.

After three moneths they came vnto a certaine Iland, named Iaua, and from thence ſayling through the Indian Sea; after eighteene moneths, they come vnto the Countrey of King Argon, ſixe hundred men of the Mariners and others, and but one of the Women and Damſels died in the iourney, and onely Coza of the three Embaſſadours was liuing. When they came to the Countrey of King Argon, they found that hee was dead, and that one Chiacato gouerned the Kingdome, for his ſonne being young. They ſent to acquaint him with their buſineſſe; who anſwered, that they ſhould giue her to Caſan the Kings ſonne, then in the parts of Arbor ſecco, in the Confines of Perſia with ſixtie thouſand perſons for the guard of certaine paſſages againſt the enemie. Hauing done ſo, Nicolo, Maffio, and Marco returned to Chiacato, and ſtayed there nine moneths. After this, taking leaue, Chiacato gaue them foure Tables of Gold, each a cupit long, fiue fingers broad, of the weight of three or foure Markes: in which was written, that in the power of the eternall God, the name of the Great Chan ſhould bee honoured and praiſed many yeeres; and euery one which ſhould not obey, ſhould be put to death, and his goods confiſcate. It was further contayned, that theſe three Embaſſadours ſhould be honoured, and ſeruice done them in all Lands and Countries, as to his owne perſon: and that Horſes, Conuoyes, expenſes and neceſſaries ſhould be giuen them. All which was duly put in execution, that ſometimes they had two hundred Horſes for their ſafeguard. In this their trauell they heard that the Great Chan was dead, which tooke from them all hope of returning thither. They rode till they came to Trabeſonde, and from thence to Conſtantinople, and after to Negroponte, and at laſt came with great riches ſafe to Venice, Anno 1295. And thus much may ſerue for a Preface to the following worke, whereby might appeare, how Marco Polo could come to the knowledge of the things therein contayned.

To ſupply a little more, deliuered by Tradition and recorded by Ramuſio: he ſayth that theſe three being comne to Venice, like Vlyſſes in Ithaca, none knew them; all eſteeming them long ſince dead. Beſides, their voyage had ſo altered them, that they ſeemed rather Tartarians then Venetians, hauing in manner forgotten their natiue Language; their habite alſo was of thicke Cloth, like Tartars. They went to their houſe in Saint Iohn Chryſoſtomes Street, and is there ſtill to be ſeene, then a faire Palace, and now called, The Court of millions: which name it had by reaſon of Marcos relations of ſo many millions in this worke, and in his diſcourſes of the Great Chans incredible wealth. They found there inhabiting ſome of their kindred, nor knew how to make themſelues knowne. Therefore, as I haue often heard of Magnifico Meſſer Gaſparo Malipiero, a very old Gentleman of ſingular integritie, from the report of his Father and Grandfather, &c. they agreed to inuite many of their kindred to a feaſt, prepared in honourable manner with much Magnificence: in which at firſt all three came forth in Crimſon Sattin ſutes, and after the Gueſts were ſet, ſtripped themſelues, and gaue them to the Seruitors, comming forth in Crimſon Damaske; and at the next ſeruice in Crimſon Veluet, and after in the common

Digitized by Google

mon habit, giuing ſtill the former to the ſeruitors. Dinner ended and the Seruitors put foorth, Marco brought forth their three habits of thicke Cloath in which they had comne home, and thence tooke and ſet on the Table an incredible quantitie of Iewels artificially ſewed therein, which was no leſſe maruell to the beholders, then euidence of their being of the Polo family as they pretended. Maffio was made a Magiſtrate in Venice, Marco was daily frequented with the youth; and all wanne great reputation. In few moneths after, Lampa Doria Generall of a fleet of Genois being come to the Ile Curzola with ſeauentie Galleyes, Andrea Dandolo was ſent againſt them, and in that Fleet Marco was made Captaine of a Galley, which by diſaduenture of Warre was taken, and he carryed priſoner to Genoa. Where his ſtrange trauels being made knowne, a certaine Gentleman daily reſorting to him (as did the whole Citie in admiration) cauſed and helped him to write this ſtorie, hauing ſent to Venice for his Notes. The booke was firſt written in Latine, and thence tranſlated into Italian. One of which Latine Copies very ancient and haply copied out of Marcos originall, I haue ſeene and compared with this which I heere Publiſh, lent me by a Gentleman of this Citie of the houſe of the Ghiſi my ſpeciall friend, which holds it in ſpeciall eſteeme. No price might ranſome him, inſomuch that his Father wanting an heyre to his wealth married againe, and had by his wife three Children. Marcos worthineſſe obtained that which no moneys worth could doe, and being at libertie hee returned and marryed, and had two Daughters (but no ſonne) Moretta and Fautina, &c.

That Gentleman of Genoa made a Preface to the Booke, and Franciſco Pipino a Frier Preacher which tranſlated the ſame, Anno 1320. out of the Vulgar (the Latine being rare, as well it might before Printing and perhaps neuer ſeene of him) into Latine. Both thoſe Prefaces are in Ramuſio: the latter commends M. Polo for a deuout and honeſt man, and ſaith his Father confirmed the truth of this Booke, and his vncle Maffio on his Death-bed to his Confeſſor. Pipino abbreuiated the Booke and perhaps gaue occaſion to that corruption which was after increaſed by others.

§. II.

Obſeruations of M. POLO, of Armenia, Turkie, Zorzania, Baldach, Perſia, Chirmain, Cobniam, Ormus, Knaue-fooles Paradiſe, and other Eaſterne parts in Aſia, and Armenia the leſſe.

THere are two Armenia's, the greater and the leſſe. In the leſſe the King abides in a Citie called Sebaſtoz, which in all his Countrey obſerueth Iuſtice and good Gouernment. The Kingdome it ſelfe hath many Cities, Fortreſſes and Caſtles: the ſoyle alſo is fertile, and the Countrey lacketh no neceſſary thing, nor doth it want game of Beaſts and fowle: the ayre is not very good. The Gentlemen of Armenia in times paſt were ſtout warriours, but become now effeminate and nice, giue themſelues to drunkennes and ryot. There is a certaine Citie in this Kingdome ſeated neere the Sea, named Giazza, hauing an excellent Hauen whither many Merchants reſort from diuers Countries, euen from Venice and Genua, by reaſon of the diuers marchandiſes brought thither, eſpecially Spices of ſundry ſorts, and certaine other precious riches brought thither out of the East Countries for trading: for this place is as it were a certaine part of all the East Countries.

The manners of the Inhabitants.

Giazza.

In Turchomania are three ſorts of Nations; to wit, the Turchomans or Turke-men, which obſerue the law of Mahumet. They are men vnlearned, rude, and wilde, inhabiting the Mountaines and inacceſſible places, where they know are paſtures; for they liue onely of their beaſts. There are good Horſes, called Turke-men, (or Turkie horſes) Mules, of great eſtimation. The other Nations are Grecians and Armenians, who poſſeſſe the Cities and Townes, and beſtow their labour on Marchandiſe and Artes. They make the beſt Carpets in the world. And they haue many Cities, the chiefe whereof are Cogno, or Iconium, Ceſarea, and Sebaſte, where Saint Baſil ſuffered Martyrdome for Chriſt, and they acknowledge one of the Kings of the Tartars for their Lord.

Turchomania, or Turkie.

Armenia the greater, being a very large Prouince, tributary to the Tartars, hath many Cities and Townes. The chiefe Citie thereof is called Arzuiga, and the beſt Bukram is made there. Moſt wholſome hot waters alſo ſpring there, for the waſhing and curing of mens bodies. And the other more famous Cities next to the Metropolis, are Argiron and Darziz. In the Summer time, very many Tartars reſort thither with their Flockes and heards, allured through the fatnes of the paſture: and againe in the Winter depart for a certaine time by reaſon of the abundance of Snow. The Arke of Noah remained in the Mountaines of this Armenia. This Countrey hath the Prouince of Moſull and Meridin, bordering on the Eaſt. But on the North is *Zorzania, in the confines of which a Fountaine is found, from which liquor-like oyle floweth, yet is it vnprofitable for the ſeaſoning of meat, but very fit for the making and maintaining of Lampes, and to anoint other things enough to lade Camels.

Of the Georgians

In Zorzania is a King called alway Dauid Melicz, or King Dauid: One part of the Prouince is ſubiect to him, the other payeth tribute to the King of the Tartars. The Woods there are of Boxe-tree. The Countrey abutteth on the two Seas, Mar-maggiore, and that of Abaccu, Georgia.

(or

Digitized by Google

(or the Caſpian) which containeth in Circuit twentie eight hundred Miles, and is like a Lake, not mingled with other Seas. In it are many Ilands, Cities and Caſtles, ſome of which are inhabited by thoſe which fled from the Tartars out of Perſia. The people of Zorzania are Chriſtians, obſeruing the rites of the Chriſtians. They keepe their hayre ſhort, like the Weſterne Clergie. The Inhabitants haue many Cities and Caſtles, and abound with Silke, of the which they make very faire Cloathes.

Moxul. Moxul is a Prouince in which dwell people of many ſortes, one called Arabi which are Mahumetans, other are Chriſtians, ſome Neſtorians, others Iacobites, and others Armenians: and they haue a Patriarch called Iacolit, which ordaineth Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and Abbots, and ſends them thorow all parts of India, and to Cairo and Baldach, and all parts where Chriſtians dwell, as doth the Pope of Rome. And all the cloathes of Gold and of Silke called Moſſulines are wrought in Moxul. But in the Mountaines of this Kingdome dwell the people called Cordi, whereof ſome are Neſtorians, other Iacobines, and ſome followers of Mahumet. They are wicked men and rob Merchants. Neare to them is another Prouince, called Mus and Meridin, wherein growes infinite ſtore of Cotton or Bombaſt, whereof they make Buckrams and other workes. They are all vnder the Tartars.

Baldach is a great Citie, in which was the Chalifa that is the Pope of all the Sarcens. A Riuer runnes thorow it, from whence to the Sea is ordinarily ſeauenteene dayes iourney. They ſayle by a Citie called Chiſi: but before they come thither is Balſara, about which grow the beſt Dates in the world. In Baldach are many cloathes of Gold and Silke: there are wrought Damaskes and Veluets with diuers figures of creatures. All the pearles (in manner) in Chriſtendome come thence. In that Citie is ſtudyed the law of Mahomet, Negromancie, Phyſicke, Aſtronomie, Geomancie, and Phiſnomie: It is the chiefe Citie in thoſe parts. When the Tartars begãn to raigne, there were foure Brethren, the eldeſt of which, Mongu raigned in Sedia. Theſe purpoſing to ſubdue the world, went one to the Eaſt, another to the North, to the South a third, which was Vlau, and the other to the Weſt. In the yeare from the Incarnation of our Lord 1250. Vlan hauing a great Army of one hundred thouſand Horſe, beſides Foot, yet vſed policie, and hauing hid a great part of his men brought by fained flight, the Calipha into his ambuſh, and tooke him, and the Citie: in which he found infinite ſtore of treaſure, inſomuch that he wondered.

Baldash. Chiſi. Balſara. Vlau Alau, or Haalon.

He ſent for the Caliſa, and reproued him that in that warre hee had not therewith prouided himſelfe of Souldiers for defence: and commanded that hee ſhould be incloſed in that Tower, where his Treaſure was, without other ſuſtenance. This ſeemed a iuſt iudgement from our Lord Ieſus Chriſt on him. For he in the yeare 1225. ſeeking to conuert the Chriſtians to Mahumet: And taking aduantage on that place of the Goſpell, that hee which hath Faith aſmuch as a graine of Muſtard-ſeed, ſhould be able to remoue mountaines, he Conuerted all the Chriſtians, Neſtorians, and Iacobites, and propounded to them in ten dayes to remoue certaine Mountaines, or turne Mahumetans, or be ſlaine, as not hauing one man amongſt them which had the leaſt faith. They therefore continued eight dayes in Prayer: after which a certaine Shoomaker by reuelation to a Biſhop, was deſigned to performe it. This Shoomaker once tempted to luſt by ſight of a young Woman in putting on her Shooe, zealouſly had fulfilled that of the Goſpell, and literally had put out his right eye: He now on the day appointed with other Chriſtians following the Croſſe and lifting his hands to Heauen, prayed to God to haue mercy on his people, and then with a loude voyce commanded the Mountaine in the name of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghoſt to remoue, which preſently with great terrour to the Caliſa and all his people was effected. And that day is ſince kept holy, with faſting alſo on the euen.

Tauris. Tauris is a great Citie in the Prouince of Hirace. It is a moſt populous Citie. They liue of Arts and Merchandiſe. They make Cloathes of gold and ſilke. Foraine Merchants make there great gaine, but the Inhabitants are generally poore: a mixed people of Neſtorians, Armenians, Iacobites, Georgians, and Perſians, and Mahumetans. Theſe laſt are perfidious and treacherous, thinking all well gotten which they ſteale from men of other Religions. And this wickedneſſe of the Saracens hath conuerted many Tartars thereto. If the Chriſtians kill them in their robberie, they are reputed Martyrs. From Tauris to Perſia are twelue dayes iourney. In the confines of Tauris is the Monaſterie of Saint Barſam, the Monkes whereof are like Carmelites; they alway make girdles which they lay on the Altar, and giue to their friends, which deuoutly eſteeme of them.

Deuils Martyrs

Perſia containeth eight Kingdomes: whereof the firſt is called Caſibin, the ſecond Curdiſtan, the third Lor, the fourth Supliſtan, the fift Spaan, the ſixt Siras, the ſeauenth Soncara, the eight Timochaim, which is neere Arboreſecco towards the North. Faire and great Horſes are there, whence they are ſold into India. There are alſo very goodly and excellent Aſſes ſold dearer then the Horſes, for that they eat little, carrie much and farre. They haue Camels but not ſo ſwift. Theſe are neceſſary in thoſe Countries, which ſometime in a long way yeeld no graſſe. The people in thoſe Countries are very wicked, contentious, Theeues, and Murtherers, profeſſing the faith of Mahumet. Merchants are euery where ſlaine by thoſe Theeues, vnleſſe they trauell in troupes. Yet are there excellent Artificers in the Cities, who make wonderfull things in gold, ſilke, silke, and Embroyderie. They abound with Silke-wormes, Wheat, Barley, Milium, and other kindes of Corne: and haue also plenty of Wine and fruits. And though their Law forbid wine, yet they haue a glosse to correct or corrupt the text, that if they boyle it, then it changeth the taste, and therefore the name also of Wine. Fine distinction, as in a Popish fasts.

The eight Kingdome of Perſia. Horſes. Aſſes. The Inhabitants.

Digitized by Google

Iasdi is a great Citie in the confines of Persia, where much Trading is exercised. It hath also cunning Artificers who labour in Silke. Iasdi.

Chiermain is a Kingdome in the confines of Persia to the East, subiect to the Tartars. In the veines of the Mountaines the stones are found, commonly called Turchisses; veines also of Azzaio and Andanico. There are also made all Armes and munition for warre, and by the Women excellent needle-workes in Silkes, with the portraitures of all sorts of Creatures verie admirable. There are the best Falcons in the world, verie swift of flight, red brested, and vnder the trayne, lesse then those of other Countries. Proceeding further, you goe through a great Plaine, and hauing ended eight dayes iourney, you come vnto a certaine descent. In the Plaine many Partridges are found, and also Castles and Townes. But in that steepe descent are many trees and those fruitfull, but no habitation is there but of Shepheards. This Countrey in the winter time hath intollerable cold.

After this you come vnto a certaine great Plaine, where a certaine Citie is seated, named Camandu, which in times past was great, but is now destroyed by the Tartars, and the Countrey is called Reobarle. There grow Pomgranats, Quinces, Adams-apples, and diuers others fruits, which grow not in our cold Countries. It hath also very great Oxen, and all white, thin hayred with thicke blunt short hornes, with a Camels bunch on the backe, accustomed to beare great burthens. And when the packe-saddles are set vpon the bunch, they bow the knee like Camels, and hauing receiued the burthen rise againe, being so taught by men. The Sheepe of that Countrey are no lesser then Asses, bearing so long and broad a tayle, that they weigh thirty pound weight. They are very faire and fat, and good meat. Moreouer, in the plaine of this Countrey are many Cities and Townes, with high walls of Mud to defend them from the Caraunas, that is Mestizos, or mingled people of Indian women and Tartars, ten thousand of which bee conducted by one Nugodar, the nephew of Zagathai who ruled in the greater Turkie. This Nugodar hearing of the Malabars subiect to Soldan Asidin, without his Vncles knowledge went and tooke Dely with other Cities, and erected a new Seignorie, and mixing with the Indian women procreated these Caraunas, which goe vp and downe to rob and spoyle in Reobarle and other Countries. There they learned magicall and diabolicall Arts, by which the ayre is so darkned in the day time for a long space, that none may see them or preuent them. M. Marco one time thorow such darknesse did almost fall into their hands, but made shift to escape to a Castle called Consalmi: but many of his company were taken or slaine. Camandu. Oxen with a bunch on the backe. Sheepe of the bignes of Asses Their Inchantments. The Authors danger.

That Plaine whereof I now speake, is fiue daies iourney extended towards the South. But at the end therof, the way beginneth by litle and litle to descend for twenty miles together, & the way it selfe is very bad, and not without danger by reason of Theeues. At length you come to very goodly Plaines, which extend themselues two dayes iourney in length, and the place it selfe is called Ormus. That Countrey aboundeth with Riuers of water and Palme trees. There is also plenty of diuers Fowles, especially of Poppin-jayes, which are not like to ours. From hence you come vnto the Ocean, where on an Iland is seated, a Citie called Ormus, whereto many Merchants resort, bringing Spices, Pearles, precious Stones, cloath of Gold and Silkes, and Elephants teeth, and all other precious things from India. That Citie is a great Mart, hauing Cities and Castles vnder it, and is head of the Kingdome Chermain: the King is called Ruchinedin Achomach, who yeelds obedience to the King of Chermain. He makes himselfe heyre, if any Merchant dyes there. In Summer they by reason of the heat betake themselues to their Garden houses built on waters. And from nine till noone there blowes a winde with such extreame heat from the sands, that it swallowes vp a mans breath and stifleth him, which makes them lye in the water. The King of Chermain sent an Armie of sixteene hundred Horse, and fiue thousand Foot, against the Lord of Ormus for not paying his tribute, which were all surprised and stifled with that winde. The Inhabitants of the place eate no Bread made of Corne and flesh, but feed vpon Dates, salt Fish, and Onions. They haue not very sound Ships: for they fasten them not with yron nayles (by reason that the wood is brittle and would cleaue) but with woodden pins, with certaine threds made of the shels of Indian Nuts. These shels are dressed after the manner of Leather, out of the which, threds are cut, and of the thrids exceeding strong cordes are made, which are able to indure the force and violence of the water, and are not easily corrupted thereby. Those Ships haue one Mast, one sayle, one beame, and are couered but with one decke. They are not chalked with Pitch, but with the Trane of Fishes. And when they crosse the Sea to India, carrying Horses and other fraight with them, they lose many Ships, because that Sea is very tempestuous, and the Ships are not strengthened with yron. The Inhabitants of that Countrey are blacke, and addicted to the Law of Mahumet. It is the custome of this Countrey, when any Master of a family dyeth, that the wife left behind him should mourne for him foure weekes, once a day. They haue women which professe the practise of mourning and are thereto hired, to mourne daily for their dead. Ormus. Parrats. Their Ships An outward shell which growes vpon the Caco Nut, and yeelds a thready substance.

Returning

Returning from Ormus to Chermain is a fertile Plaine, but the bread made there, cannot bee eaten of them, who are not accuſtomed thereunto, it is ſo bitter by reaſon of the bitter water put therein, whereof are ſtore of hot Bathes good againſt diſeaſes.

A Deſart in which is Salt, bitter, laxatiue, greene water.

Going from Chermain in three dayes riding you come to a Deſart, which continued till you come to Cobinam, ſeuen dayes Iourney, which is extended. In the firſt three dayes you ſhall haue no water, ſaue a very few, and thoſe ſalt and bitter, of a greene colour in ſhew, as if it were the iuyce of Herbs: and whoſo taſteth but a little thereof, cannot eſcape looſeneſſe of the belly. The like alſo hapneth, if any taſte the Salt made of that water. It is therefore needfull, that Trauellers carrie ſome water with them, if they will not be indangered through thirſt. The beaſts alſo which are compelled to drink that water, eſcape not without ſcouring. In the fourth day they find a freſh Riuer vnder ground: the three laſt dayes are as the firſt.

Cobinam. Tutia and Spodio.

Cobinam is a great Mahumetan Citie; goodly, and great Looking Glaſſes of Steele, are made there. Tutia alſo which cureth the eyes; and Spodio and that, after this manner. That Country hath Mines, out of which they digge Earth, which they boyle caſting it into a fierie Fornace, an Iron grate receiuing the aſcending vapour from aboue, in the which, the conglutinated and clammie vapour becommeth Tutia. But the groſſer matter remayning in the fire, is called Spodio. The Inhabitants of this Countrey, are followers of Mahumet.

A Deſart of eight dayes Iourney.

Leauing the Citie Cobinam, you meet with another Deſart eight dayes Iourney in length, and in it there is great dryneſſe: it wanteth trees, and fruits, and waters which it hath are very bitter, ſo that the very beaſts refuſe to drinke them except they mixe meale therewith, and Trauellers carrie water with them. But hauing paſſed ouer this Deſart, you came to the Kingdome Timochaim.

Timochaim in the North Confines of Perſia, where many Cities and Caſtles are. There is a great Plaine in which a great tree groweth, called the tree of the Sunne, which the Chriſtians call, Tree of Sun, or Arbor Secco. a Ricci.

The dry Tree. This tree is very great and thicke, and hath leaues, which on the one ſide are white, and on the other ſide greene. It produceth prickly ſhales like thoſe of a Cheſnut, but nothing in them. The wood is ſolide and ſtrong, yellow like Boxe. There is no tree within one hundred miles, except on one ſide, on which are trees within ten miles. In this place the Inhabitants ſay, that Alexander the Great fought with Darius. The Cities are plentifull of good things, but Mahumetan, and of temperate Aire. It hath alſo goodly men, but ſpecially women, the moſt beautifull in my iudgement in the World.

Mulehet.

Mulehet is in Saracen Language, as much to ſay as a place of Heretikes, and of this place they call the men Mulehetici, that is, Heretikes in their Law, as with vs Patarines. Hauing ſpoken of the Countrey, the old man of the Mountayne ſhall bee ſpoken of, of whom Marco heard much from many. His name was Aloadine, and was a Mahumetan.

Aloadine the old man of the Mountayne.

Hee had in a goodly Valley betwixt two Mountaynes very high, made a goodly Garden, furniſhed with the beſt trees and fruits he could find, adorned with diuers Palaces and houſes of pleaſure, beautified with gold Workes, Pictures, and Furnitures of ſilke. There by diuers Pipes anſwering diuers parts of thoſe Palaces were ſeene to runne Wine, Milke, Honey and cleere Water. In them hee had placed goodly Damoſels ſkilfull in Songs and Inſtruments of Muſicke and Dancing, and to make Sports and Delights vnto men whatſoeuer they could imagine. They were alſo fairely attyred in Gold and Silke, and were ſeene to goe continually ſporting in the Garden and Palaces. He made this Palace, becauſe Mahomet had promiſed ſuch a ſenſuall Paradiſe to his deuout followers. No man might enter: for at the mouth of the Valley was a ſtrong Caſtle, and the entrance was by a ſecret paſſage.

Knaue-fooles Paradiſe.

Alaodine had certaine Youthes from twelue to twentie yeares of age, ſuch as ſeemed of a bold and vndoubted diſpoſition, whom hee inſtructed daily touching Mahomets Paradiſe, and how hee could bring men thither. And when he thought good, he cauſed a certaine Drinke to bee giuen vnto ten or twelue of them, which caſt them in a dead ſleepe: and then hee cauſed them to be carryed into diuers Chambers of the ſaid Palaces, where they ſaw the things aforeſaid as ſoone as they awaked; each of them hauing thoſe Damoſels to miniſter Meates and excellent Drinkes, and all varieties of pleaſures to them; inſomuch that the Fooles thought themſelues in Paradiſe indeed. When they had enioyed thoſe pleaſures foure or fiue dayes, they were againe caſt in a ſleepe, and carryed forth againe. After which, hee cauſed them to be brought into his preſence, and queſtioned where they had beene, which anſwered, by your Grace, in Paradiſe, and recounted before all, all before mentioned. Then the old man anſwered, This is the commandement of our Prophet, that whoſoeuer defends his Lord, he make him enter Paradiſe: and if thou wilt bee obedient to mee, thou ſhalt haue this grace. And hauing thus animated them, hee was thought happie whom the old man would command, though it coſt him his life: ſo that other Lords and his Enemies were ſlaine by theſe his Aſſaſines, * which expoſed themſelues to all dangers, and contemned their liues. Hereupon hee was eſteemed a Tyrant, feared in all thoſe parts; and had two Vicars one in the parts of Damaſco, and another in Curdiſtan: which obſerued the ſame order with young men. Hee vſed alſo to rob all which paſſed that way. Vlaus in the yeare 1262. ſent and beſieged his Caſtle, which after three yeares ſiege they tooke, ſlue him and ruined his Paradiſe, not being able for want of victuall to hold out longer.

* It is likely that the Aſſaſines mentioned in the eight & ninth Bookes were branches of this ſtock, Diſciples of his Syrian Vicar: or this of them.

Digitized by Google

§. III.

Of Sapurgan, Balac, Thaican, Scassem, Balaxiam, Bascia, Chesmur, Vochan, Samarchan, Carchan, Peym, the dreadfull Desart of Lop and Tanguth.

DEparting from the foresaid place, you come vnto a certayne Country pleasant enough, which hath Hils, Plaines, and excellent Pasture, and lastly, fruits in great plentie: for the soyle thereof is very fruitfull. This continues sixe dayes, and then you enter a Desart of fortie or fiftie miles, without water. After this you come to the Citie Sapurgan, where plentie of all victuall is found; especially, Pompions the best in the World, sweet like Honey.

Large pleasant Countrey. A Desart. Sapurgan. Pompions.

Passing from thence, we came vnto a certayne Citie, named Batach, which in times past was great and famous, hauing sumptuous Marble Palaces: but now ouerthrowne by the Tartars. In this Citie they report, that Alexander tooke the Daughter of King Darius to wife. To this Citie (on the East and North-east) continue the Confines of Persia. But if you goe from hence, and proceed betweene the East, and the North-east, you cannot finde any Habitation for two dayes Iourney: because the Inhabitans of the place hauing endured so many grieuances by Theeues and Robbers, are compelled to flye vnto the Mountaynes, to wit, places of more safetie. Many waters are found there, and very much game of wild beasts: Lyons also are there. And because Trauellers find no food in that Iourney, they carrie victuals with them, which may suffice them for two dayes.

Stityta. Balach, perhaps in Susa.

That two dayes Iourney ended, which we mentioned, we met with a certayne Castle, called * Thaican; where is great plentie of Corne, and very goodly fields. The Mountaynes also on the South are high, some of which are of white and hard Salt, and the Inhabitants thirtie dayes Iourney about fetch it from thence, being the best World, so hard that they must breake it with Iron Instruments, so much that the whole World may haue sufficient Salt from thence. The other Mountaynes haue store of Almonds and Pistaches. Going betweene the East and North-east from hence the Countrey is fruitfull, the Inhabitants Murtherers, Perfidious, Mahumetans, Drunkards: Their Wine is boyled and excellent. They goe bare-headed, saue that the men bind vp their heads with a certaine string of ten hanfuls long. But they make them clothing of the skinnes of the wilde beasts which they take, as Breeches and Shooes, and vse no other Garments.

Thracian. Salt-mountaynes.

After three dayes Iourney is the Citie Scassem seated in a Plaine, and hath many Castle, in the Mountaines round about it. A certaine great Riuer also floweth through the middle thereof. There are many Porcupines in that Country, which they hunt with Dogges by the Hunters: and they contracting themselues with great furie, cast their prickly Quils against the men and the Dogges, and wound them. That Nation hath a particular language: the sheepherds thereof abide in the Mountaynes, hauing made Caues for their Habitation. You goe hence three daies Iourney without any Habitation at all, to the Prouince Balaxiam.

Scassem. Porcupines. Porci spinosi.

Balaxiam is a Mahumetan Prouince, and hath a peculiar Language. Their Kings who succeed one another by hereditarie right, are reported to haue deriued their discent from Alexander the Great, and from the Daughter of Darius, and are called Zulcarnen, which is to say, Alexander. There are found the Ballasses, faire precious stones, and of great value. No man without danger of life, dare either digge such stones, or carrie them out of the Countrey, but with the licence and consent of the King: for all those stones are the Kings, and he sendeth them to whom he pleaseth, either for a Present, or payment of Tribute: he exchangeth also many for Gold and Siluer. And this hee doth lest the stone whereof there is such plentie should become viler and cheaper. Other Mountaynes also in this Prouince yeeld stones, whereof the best Azure is made, the like whereof is not found in the World. The Mines also yeeld Siluer great store, and Brasse and Lead. The Countrey it selfe is very cold. It hath many Horses, and those excellent, great, and swift, which haue so hard and strong hoofes on their feet, that they need no Iron Shoots, although they runne through Rockes. It is said that not long since there were Horses of the Race of Alexanders Bucephalus, all with his forehead-marke, in the possession only of the Kings Vncle, who was slaine for denying the King to haue of them: whereupon his Widow in angry spite destroyed the whole Race. There are also excellent Falcons. The soyle thereof beareth notable Wheate, and Barley without huskes, and Oyle made of Nuts and Susimane, which is like to flaxe seed, more sauourie then other Oyle. There are strait passages and many stormie places. The men are good Archers and Huntsmen, clothed with beasts skinnes. The hils are steepe and high, large plaines, Riuers alongst the ruptures; and if any haue an Ague with abiding two or three dayes on the hils he recouereth, which Marco proued in himselfe after a yeares sickneſſe. The women in the skirts of their Garments put sixtie or eightie yards of Cotton, the greatest Bumsie Boncer seeming the goodliest Lasse.

Balaxiam. Couragious Horses, and vnshod. Bucephalus breed.

Baſcia. The Prouince Baſcia is ten dayes Iourney toward the South, diſtant from the Countrey Balaxiam. And the Countrie it ſelfe is very hot: whereby it commeth to paſſe, that the people are browne: they are expert Magicians, and continually attend thereto. They haue a peculiar Language: and weare Golden and Siluer Eare-rings with Pearles and ſtones artificially wrought in them. They eate fleſh and Rice, and are Idolaters, craftie and cruell.

Cheſmur. The Prouince Cheſmur is ſeuen dayes Iourney diſtant from Baſcia. The Inhabitants thereof haue a peculiar Language, and are Idolaters; beyond all others cunning Inchanters, forcing their Idols to ſpeake, and darkning the day. They are the chiefeſt Idolaters, and Idols are deſcended from them. From thence you may goe to the Indian Sea. The men and women are browne, not wholly blacke, the heate ſome-what tempered: their food is fleſh and Rice, yet are they exceeding leane. There are many Cities and Townes there. Their King is tributarie to none. There are certaine Heremites in this Prouince, who in Monaſteries and Cels worſhip Idols, honouring their Gods with great abſtinence of meate and drinke, and obſerue great Chaſtitie, are very cautelous not to offend their Idols, and liue long. Of theſe are many Abbeyes, and the people giue them great reuerence. The men of this Prouince kill no quicke creatures, and ſhed no bloud: and if they will eate fleſh, it is neceſſary that the Saracens which liue amongſt them, kill the creature. Corall is here ſold dearer then any where. Wee will leaue the way to India now and returne to Balaxiam and direct our way towards Catay, betwixt the East and North-east. Beyond Balaxiam is a certaine Riuer, whereon ſtand many Caſtles and Villages belonging to the King of Balaxiams Brother: and after three dayes Iourney is the Prouince Vochan, hauing in length and breadth three dayes Iourney. The Inhabitants thereof haue a peculiar Language, and worſhip Mahumet. They are good Liuers, ſtout Warriours, and good Hunters: for that Countrey aboundeth with wild beaſts. If you depart hence betwixt the North-east and the East, you muſt aſcend for three whole dayes together, vntill you come vnto an exceeding high Mountayne, then the which, there is ſaid to bee none higher in the World. There alſo betweene two Mountaynes, a great Lake if found, whence by a Plaine runneth a very goodly Riuer, neere vnto which are excellent Paſtures, ſo that in them a leane Horſe, or an Oxe, may bee fatted in ten dayes. There is alſo plentie of wild beaſts: eſpecially, exceeding great wild ſheepe, hauing hornes ſome of them ſixe palmes or ſpans long, of the which they make diuers kinds of veſſels. That Plaine contayeth twelue dayes Iourney in length, and is called Pamer; nor is there any humane Habitation there, and Trauellers muſt carry victuals with them. No Bird alſo appeareth there, by reaſon of the cold, and (it is reported for a Miracle) if fire be kindled there, it is not ſo bright nor ſo effectuall to boyle any thing, as in other places. From hence the way leadeth fortie dayes further, betweene the East and the North-east through the Mountaynes, Hils, and Valleyes, in the which many Riuers are found, but no humane habitation, nor any herbe: and the Countrey it ſelfe is called Beloro. Habitations of men are ſeene in the top of thoſe high Mountaynes, but ſuch as are ſauage, wicked, Idolatrous; who liue by hunting, and are clothed with the skinnes.

Vochan.

Higheſt mountayne.

Pamer.

Beloro.

Caſchar. After this you come to the Prouince Caſchar, which is tributarie to the great Cham and a Mahumetan. In it are Vines, greene Gardens, fruitfull trees, Cotton, Flaxe, and Hempe, and a fertile ſoyle. The Inhabitants haue a peculiar Language, and are Merchants, and Artificers, who are ſo couetous that they eate that which is bad, and drinke worſe. Some Neſtorian Chriſtians are found there, who alſo haue their Churches. The Countrey inlargeth it ſelfe fiue dayes Iourney.

Samarchan is a great and famous Citie in that Countrey, where are goodly Gardens and a fertile Plaine. It is ſubiect to the Nephew of the Great Cham. In it the Chriſtians dwell with the Saracens, whence little agreement is betwixt them. It is reported, that in this manner a Miracle hapned, the brother of Great Cham, named Zagatai, gouerned that Countrey, about one hundred yeares agoe, being perſwaded to become a Chriſtian, the Chriſtians through his fauour built a Church, in honour of Saint Iohn Baptiſt, with ſuch cunning that the whole Roofe thereof, was ſupported by one Pillar in the midſt, vnder which was ſet a ſquare ſtone, which by fauour of their Lord was taken from a building of the Saracens. Zagathais Sonne ſucceeded after his death in the Kingdome, but not in the faith: from whom the Saracens obtayned that the Chriſtians ſhould be compelled to reſtore that ſtone. And when they offered a ſufficient valuable price, the Saracens refuſed to receiue any other compoſition then the ſtone. But the Pillar lifted vp it ſelfe, that the Saracens might take away their ſtone, and ſo continueth.

Carchan. Departing againe from this Citie, you come into the Prouince Charchan, about fiue dayes Iourney in length. This Prouince hath plentie of all victuals, beeing ſubiect to the Dominion of the Nephew of Great Cham. The Inhabitants worſhip Mahumet, yet among them certaine Neſtorian Chriſtians dwell. They are great Artificers, and haue moſt of them great legges, and a great Wenne or Bunch in the throat, by reaſon of the waters which they drinke.

Wennes by bad waters happen alſo in the Alpes.

Cotam the name of a Prouince and chiefe Citie.

The Prouince Cotam followeth betweene the East and the North-east. It is ſubiect to the Dominion of the Nephew of Great Cham, and hath many Cities and Townes. The chiefe Citie thereof is called Cotam. The Prouince is extended eight dayes Iourney in length. There is no want therein of any thing, appertayning to the maintenance of life. It hath plentie of Cotton,

Digitized by Google

ton, Flaxe, Hempe, Corne, and Wine. But the people are not warlike, yet good Artificers and Merchants. They acknowledge Mahumet.

Proceeding further through the same Countrey, you meet with the Prouince Peim, extended fiue dayes Iourney in length. It is subiect to Great Can, and hath many Cities and Castles. The chiefe Citie thereof is called Peim, neere which runneth a Riuer; wherein precious-stones are found, to wit, Iasper stones and Chalcedonie. The Inhabitants of the Countrey worship Mahumet, and are Artificers and Merchants. There is a custome in this Prouince, that when any marryed man goeth into another place and returneth not home within twentie dayes, it shall be lawfull for the Wife to marrie another Husband, and the men also whereseoeuer they goe doe the like. All those Prouinces aforesaid, to wit, Caschar, Cotam, Peim, to the Citie of Lop, are in the bounds of Great Turkie.

Peim.

Adulterous custome.

Great Turkie, or Turcomania.

Ciarcian is subiect to the Tartars, the name of the Prouince and chiefe Citie; it hath many Cities and Castles. Many precious stones are found there in the Riuers, especially Iaspers and Chalcedonies, which Merchants carrie euen to Ouchach to sel, and make great gain. From Peim to this Prouince, and quite thorow it also, it is al Sand, with many bad waters and few good. When any Armie passeth through this Prouince, all the Inhabitants thereof with their Wiues, Children, Cattel, and all their houshold stuffe, flie two dayes Iourny into the sands, where they know good waters are, and stay there: and carrie their Corne thither also to hide it in the sands after Harueſt for like feares. The wind doth so deface their steps in the sand, that their Enemies cannot find out their way. Departing from this Prouince, you are to trauell fiue dayes Iourney thorow the sand, where no other water almost then that which is bitter is to be found, vntill youcome vnto the Citie named Lop.

Ciarcian.

Lop is a great Citie, from whence is the entrance of a great Desart, called also Lop, seated betweene the East and the North-east. The Inhabitants are Mahumetans, subiect to the Great Can. In it Merchants who desire to passe ouer the Desart, cause all necessaries to be prouided for them. And when victuals beginne to faile in the Desart, they kill the Asses and Camels and eate them. They most willingly vse Camels, because they are sustayned with little meate, and beare great burthens. They must prouide victuals for a moneth to crosse it ouer-thwart; for to goe thorow the length, would aske a yeares time. They goe thorow the sands and barren Mountaines, and daily find water, yet is it sometimes so little, that it can scarsly suffice fiftie or one hundred men with their beasts: and in three or foure places the water is salt and bitter: the rest (which are eight and twentie) good. In it are neither beasts nor birds. They say that there dwell many spirits which cause great and meruailous Illusions to Trauellers to make them perish. For if any stay behind that he cannot see his company, he shall be called by name, and so going out of the way is lost. In the night they heare the noyse as it were of a company, which taking to bee theirs they perish likewise. Other apparances as of their companions, or of enemies haue caused some to miscarrie. Consorts of Musicall Instruments are sometimes heard in the Ayre, likewise Drummes, and noyses of Armes. They goe therefore neere together, hang Bels on their beasts neckes, and set markes if any stay.

Lop.

Desart of Lop.

Illusions of Deuils. It seemeth that the compasse was not then found out, which of later times they vse in Desarts, as in the Sea.

Hauing passed ouer the Desart, you come vnto the Citie Sachion, betwixt the East and North-east, subiect to the Great Can, in the Prouince of Tanguth, where among the Worshippers of Mahumet, a few Nestorian Christians are found. Many Idolaters are also there, who haue their proper Language. The Inhabitants of this Citie, liue not of Merchandize, but the fruits of the Earth. This Citie hath many Monasteries, consecrated to diuers Idols, in the which many Sacrifices are offered, and great reuerence. And when a Sonne is borne vnto a man, hee presently commendeth him to some Idoll, and in honour thereof, nourisheth a sheepe that yeere in his house, which he presenteth before it together with his Sonne, the next Festiuall Day of that Idoll, with many Ceremonies and great reuerence. Afterward the flesh of the sheepe is boyled, and left so long before the Idoll, while their Prayers are finished, which they make for the conseruation of their Sonne, and the Idoll hath sucked out the sauour of the meate, after which their fancie all his kindred being gathered together, eate that flesh at home with great deuotion and ioy: but orderly keepe the bones in certayne vessels. The Priests haue the feete, head, inwards, skinne, and some part of the flesh for their share. In celebrating the Funerals of such as were of esteeme, the dead bodies are burned after this manner. The kindred send for the Astrologers, and tell them what yeare, moneth, day, and houre, hee who dyed was borne: who perceiuing the constellation, declare the day when hee is to be burned: so that when the Planet fits not, they reserue the dead bodie sometimes seuen dayes, and sometimes sixe monethes, preparing a Cheſt for it at home, and ioyning the sides together with such cunning Art, that no stinke can issue forth. They also imbalme the bodie it selfe with Spices, and couer the Cheſt fairely painted with a costly cloth: and euery day that the dead corps is kept at home, at the houre of Dinner, a Table is prepared neere the Cheſt, setting wine and meate thereon for the space while one might well eate a mealeſ-meat, supposing that the soule of the dead, feedeth of the sauour thereof. The Astrologers sometime forbid to carrie it forth at the chiefe gate, pretending some disastrous starres thereto, and cause them to carrie it out another way, and sometimes breake the Sachion.

Tanguth.

The Sacrifice of the Birth-day.

The Rites of Funerall.

Astrologers.

Digitized by Google

wall which is oppoſite to that place which the Planet makes more luckie; for otherwiſe the ſpirits departed would bee offended and hurt thoſe of the houſe. And if any ſuch euill happen, they aſcribe it to the dead thus wronged. When the bodie is carryed through the Citie to be burned without, woodden Cottages are erected in the way, with a porch couered with Silkes, in which they ſet the bodie, and ſet before it Bread, Wine, and Fleſh, and Delicate Cates, ſuppoſing the ſpirit to be refreſhed therewith, which muſt bee preſently preſent at the burning of the bodie.

And when they come vnto the place of burning, they write and paint vpon Papers made of the barkes of Trees, the Images of Men and Women, Horſes, Camels, Money, and Garments. (All the Inſtruments of the Citie meane-while reſounding) all which are burned together with the dead bodie. For they ſay, that that dead man ſhall haue ſo many Men-ſeruants, and Mayd-ſeruants, Cattell, and Money, in another life, as reſemblances, and Pictures were burned together with him, and ſhall perpetually liue in that honour and riches.

The Prouince Chamul lyeth in the great Prouince Tanguth, ſubiect to the Great Can, hauing many Cities and Townes: the chiefe Citie is called Chamul. The Land butteth vpon two Deſarts, to wit, the great Deſart, whereof wee haue ſpoken before, and a certaine other, that is leſſe, of three dayes Iourney. It aboundeth with ſuch things, which a man needeth for the ſuſtentation of life. The Inhabitants are Idolaters, haue a peculiar Language, and ſeeme to bee borne for none other purpoſe, but to apply themſelues to ſporting, ſinging, dancing, writing and reading after their faſhion, playing on Inſtruments, and to giue themſelues delight. When any Traueller paſſing by, turneth into any mans houſe for entertaynment, the Maſter of the Family receiueth him with great ioy, and commandeth his Wife and all the Family, that they as long as he will abide with them, obey him in all things. In the meane ſpace, he departeth not to returne ſo long as the Gueſt remayneth in his houſe. And meane-while hee lyeth with the Wife, Daughter, and the reſt, as with his owne Wiues. The women of that Countrey are beautifull, and readie to obey all thoſe Commandements of their Husbands, who are ſo beſotted with this folly, that they thinke it a glorious thing for them, and acceptable to their Idols, for which they proſper with plentie of all things. Mangu Can hauing heard of this folly, commanded them to obſerue this deteſtable cuſtome no longer; which they did about three yeares, and then ſeeing not their wonted fertilitie, and troubled with ſome Domeſticall croſſes, ſent Ambaſſadours to the Can, and inſtantly entreated, that he would reuoke ſo grieuous an Edict, and not aboliſh that Tradition which they had receiued from their Elders. The Can anſwered, ſeeing you deſire your reproch and ſhame, let it be granted you. Goe and doe herein after your wont. The Meſſengers returning with this Anſwer, brought great ioy to all the people: this cuſtome is obſerued by that people vntill this day.

Iouiall Lads.

Bawdes to their owne Wiues.

Kind Cuckolds.

After the Prouince of Camul, followeth the Prouince of Chinchintalas, which on the North boundeth vpon the Deſart, and is ſixteene dayes Iourney in length, ſubiect to the Dominion of Great Cham. It hath Cities and many Caſtles. The people thereof are diuided into three Sects. Some few acknowledge Chriſt, and theſe are Neſtorians: others worſhip Mahumet, the third, adore Idols. In this Prouince there is a Mountaine where are Mines of Steele and Andanicum, and alſo Salamanders, of the which cloth is made, which, if it bee caſt into the fire, cannot bee burned. But that cloth is made of the Earth in this manner (as one of my companions, a Turke named Curcifar, a man indued with ſingular induſtrie, informed me) who had the charge of the Minerals in that Prouince. A certaine Minerall of Earth is found in that Mountayne, which yeeldeth threeds, not vnlike to Wooll, which being dryed in the Sunne, are bruiſed in a brazen Morter, and afterward waſhed, and whatſoeuer earthy ſubſtance cleaueth vnto them, is taken away: laſtly, thoſe threeds ſo purged and made ſmall, are ſpunne like other Wooll, and wouen into cloth. And when they will whiten thoſe clothes, they caſt them into the fire for an houre, and then they are taken out of the flaming fire vnhurt, whiter then Snow. After the like manner they cleanſe them, when they haue taken any ſpots: for no other waſhing is added to them, beſides the fire. But touching the Salamander, the Serpent, which is reported to liue in the fire, I could ſearch out nothing in the Eaſt Countries. They ſay, there is a certayne Napkin at Rome, wouen of the Salamander, wherein the Handkerchiefe of the Lord is kept wrapped vp, which a certayne King of the Tartars ſent vnto the Biſhop of Rome.

This Chapter is not in Ramuſios Italian Copie which I haue (printed 1559.) yet is it mentioned there among the Prouinces of Tanguth.

And I haue not a little trauelled in Trauellers to find this Salamander, but haue found not a little; no Midwife to my throwes; which makes mee throw away that conceit.

After you are paſt this Prouince, you go betwixt the Eaſt and North-eaſt ten dayes Iourney, in which few Habitations or things remarkable are found; and then you come to the Prouince Succuir, which hath many Habitations and Townes. The chiefe Citie thereof is called Succuir. In this Prouince, among many Idolaters, a few Chriſtians are found: they are ſubiect to the Great Can. They apply not themſelues to Merchandize, but liue of the fruits of the Earth. The beſt Rhubarbe is found in great quantitie in this Prouince, which is carryed thence by Merchants, to diuers parts of the World. Strangers dare not go to the Mountaynes where it growes, by reaſon of venemous herbs, which if their beaſts ſhould eate them would loſe their hooſes; but thoſe of that Countrey know and auoyd them. The generall name of this Prouince, and of the two following is Tanguth.

Succuir.

Rhubarbe. Of this Ramuſio hath giuen a large diſcourſe from the Relation of Chaggi Meneret, which had beene in theſe parts.

Digitized by Google

Campion is a great Citie, the principall in the Countrey of Tanguth. In it are Christians (which haue there three great and faire Churches, Mahumetans, and Idolaters. The Idolaters haue many Monasteries, where they worship their Idols. Moreouer, those Idols are made either of stone, wood, or clay, some ouer-layed with gold, and very artificially wrought. Among these, some are so great, that they containe ten paces in length, fastned to the earth, as if they lay vpright, neere vnto the which, little Idols are placed, which seeme to giue reuerence to the greater, and both are much reuerenced. The Religious men seeme to liue more honestly then other Idolaters, abstayning from certaine things, as Lecherie, and other things; although Lecherie seemes no grieuous sinne: for they say, if a woman seekes for loue to a man, he may vse her without sinne, but not, if he seekes first to her. They reckon the whole circuit of the yeere by Moones. In these Moones, they obserue fiue, or foure, or three dayes, wherein they kill no Beast, or Bird, nor eat Flesh (as is the vse with vs on Friday, Saturday, and Vigils.) The Lay-men marrie twentie or thirtie wiues, as they are able to maintayne: yet the first is accounted the more worthie, and more legitimate. The husband receiueth no dowrie from the wife, but hee himselfe assigneth conuenient dowrie, in Cattell, seruants, or money, according to his abilitie. If the wife become hatefull to the husband, it is lawfull for him to diuorce her from him, as he pleaseth. They take for wiues their Kinswomen or Mothers in law. Marco, together with his Father, and Vncle, remayned a yeeres space in this Citie, for the dispatch of certaine affaires.

Campion. Christian Churches. Idolatrous Monasteries. Idols of diuers kinds. The yeere of the Moone. Their many wiues.

From the Citie Campion, you goe twelue dayes iourney to the Citie Ezina, bordering vpon a sandy Desart towards the North, containe in the Prouince of Tanguth. Many Camels are there, and many other beasts; and Hawkes of diuers kinds. The Inhabitants are Idolaters, liuing of the fruits of the Earth, forbearing merchandise.

Ezina.

§. IIII.

Of Carchoran, the Originall, proceedings and exploits of the Tartars; of Priest IOHN and his discendants. Customes of the Tartars. Of Bargu, Erginul, Xandu the Cans Citie and Palace; of Muske: of strange Sorcerers, and austere Monkes.

ALl the Prouinces and Cities aforesaid, Sachion, Chemul, Chinchitalas, Succuir, Campion, and Ezina, pertayne to Tanguth. Hauing passed ouer the foresaid Desart, you come vnto the Citie Carcoram, which is in circuit three miles, strongly rampierd with earth, for they want stone. Neere it is a great Castle, and in it the Gouernors faire Palace. This was the first place neere which in old times the Tartars assembled themselues. And now we will declare how they began to raigne. They dwelt in the North parts, to wit, in Cionza and Bargu, where are many and great Playnes without Cities and Townes, but goodly Pastures, Riuers and waters. They had not a Prince of their Nation, but payed tribute to a certayne great King, named as I haue heard, in their language Vncan, which in some mens opinion in our tongue signifieth, Presbyter (or Priest) Iohn. To him the Tartars gaue yeerely the tenths of all their beasts. In processe of time, the Tartars so encreased in multitudes, that Vncan was afraid of them, and thought to disperse them into seuerall parts of the world. And therefore when any rebelled he sent three or foure of an hundred of the Tartars into those parts, so diminishing their power; and the like he did in his other occasions, deputing some of their principals to that purpose. They seeing their ruine intended and loth to be separated one from another, went from the places where they dwelt to the Desart towards the North, where by remotenesse they might be safe, and denyed to Vncan their wonted Tribute.

Carchoran, vide Rubr. of Caracarum. The originall of the Dominion of the Tartars.

It hapned that about An. 1162. the Tartars hauing continued some time in those parts, chose a King among themselues, a wise and valiant man, named Cingis Can. He began to reigne with such iustice, that he was beloued and feared of all as a God rather then a Prince, in somuch that his fame brought all the Tartars in all parts to his subiection. And hee seeing himselfe Lord of so valiant men would needs leaue those Desarts, and commanding them to prouide Bowes and other weapons, began to subdue Cities and Prouinces, in which Conquests hee placed such iust Gouernours, that the people were not offended. The chiefe of them hee carried alongst with him with great prouisions and gifts. Seeing therefore that he was aduanced to so great glorie, and power, he sent Embassadors politikly to Vncan to intreate, that he would bestow his daughter vpon him to be his wife. Which he taking, in very euill part, answered with indignation, and reiecting the Embassadors of Cingis, said, doth my seruant demand my daughter? Get ye out of my sight and tell your Master, if he euer make such demand againe, I will make him die a miserable death. But King Cingis, leuying a great Armie, went forth with an hostile minde, and incamped in a certaine great Plaine, named Tanduc, sending vnto the King, and signifying vnto him, that he should defend himselfe. But he, comming with a mightie Armie, descended to the Playnes, and pitched his Tents within ten miles of the Campe of the Tartars. Then Cingis commanded his Astrologers to shew him, what euent and successe the battell should haue. They cutting a Reed

The fruit of a wilde gouernment. Cingis goeth forth against Vncan. Tanduc. He consulteth with the Magicians.

Digitized by Google

lengthwise in two parts, set the pieces themselues into the ground, and wrote vpon the one, Cingis; and on the other, Vmcan; and said vnto the King: In the meane space, while we reade the Coniurations, it shall come to passe by the Idols power, that these two parts of the Reed shall fight together: And whose part shall ascend vpon the other, that King shall obtayne victorie in the battell. The multitude therefore running together to behold that spectacle, the Astrologers beganne to mumble their prayers, and reade their inchantments, when presently the parts of the Reed being moued, fought together, vntill at length the part of Cingis ascended vpon the part of Vmcan. Which being seene, the Tartars assured of the future victorie, were encouraged to the battell, and Vmcan being slayne, the Victorie, and Kingdome, and Vmcans daughter remayned to Cingis. Cingis raigned sixe yeeres after this, in the which hee got many Prouinces: and lastly, when he endeuoured to winne a certaine Castle, called Thaigin, and came somewhat neere, being shot in the knee with an Arrow, he died, and was buried in the Mountaine Altai.

Hee vanquisheth the Enemie by warre.

He dieth with the shot of an Arrow.

Cingis Can.
Cyn Can.
Bathyn Can.
Esu Can.
Mongu Can.
Cublai Can.
Altai the Sepulcher of the Kings of the Tartars.

The first King of the Tartars, was called Cingis; the second, Cyn Can; the third, Bathyn Can; the fourth, Esu Can; the fifth, Mangu Can; the sixth Cublai Can, whose power is greater then all his Predecessors, hauing inherited theirs, and adding by Conquest in manner the rest of the World. For he liued neere sixtie yeeres in his Gouernment. The name Can signifieth Emperor. All the great Cans, and Princes of that bloud of Cingis, are carried to the Mountaine of Altai to be buried, wheresoeuer they die, although one hundred dayes iourney from it. And they which carrie the Corpse to the buriall, kill all those that they meet in the way, saying: goe, and serue our Lord the King in another life. They kill also the better Horses. When the bodie of great Cham Mongu, the Predecessor of Cham Cublai, was brought vnto the Mountaine Altai to bee buried, the Souldiers accompanying the funerall, are reported to haue slayne aboue ten thousand men, vpon the foresaid occasion.

Their cruell custome of funerals.

The marriages of the Tartars.

The Tartarean women are most faithfull to their husbands. Adulterie is a great shame with them: yet it is accounted lawfull, and honest, that euery one may marrie as many wiues as he is able to maintayne, although the first be iudged to be more principall and honorable then the rest.

Womens concord and industrie.

These liue together in the same house without one ill word in admirable concord, make their merchandises, buy, and sell, and chaffer all things necessarie to their husbands and households, the men medling with nothing but their hunting, hawking, and things pertayning to Armes. They haue the best Falcons in the World, and so they haue of Dogs. They liue onely of Flesh and Milke, and what they take in hunting. They eat Horses, Camels, Dogs, if fat; and drinke Mares milke, called Chemurs, so vsed, that it is like white [a] Wine. If the father dies, the sonne may haue all his wiues except his owne mother and sisters. So, the brother being dead, it is lawfull for the brother who remayneth aliue, to marrie the widdow of the brother. The husbands receiue no dowrie from the wiues, but they themselues assigne dowry to the wiues, and their mothers. Through the multitude of wiues, the Tartars haue many children. Nor is the multitude of Wiues very burdensome vnto the Tartars, seeing they gaine much through their labours. Besides, they are very carefull for the gouernement of the familie, and preparation of food: and with no lesse care, execute the other duties of the house. But the men apply themselues wholly to hunting, fowling, and exercise of Armes. The Tartars nourish many herds of Oxen, flocks of Sheepe, and other Beasts, and Cattell, and abide with them, in places of Pasture, in the Summer time, in the Mountaines, and colder places, where they finde Pasture, and Wood; but in the Winter, they remoue vnto the hotter Countreyes, where they finde Pasture for their Cattell: and goe forth-on two or three moneths together. Their houses are couered with sticks and felts, ordinarily round, which they carrie with them on Carts or Waggons of foure wheeles, whithersoeuer they goe. For they can fold and extend them, set them vp, and take them downe: and they turne the doore of them alwaies to the South. They haue also neat Carts of two wheeles (couered with Felt so well that rayne cannot pierce them) drawne by Oxen, and Camels, wherein they carrie their wiues, children, and necessarie household-stuffe with them, and defend them from the iniurie of foule weather, and rayne.

[a] Cosmos.

Their substance of Cattell.

Cottages.

The Tartars, if they be rich, are clothed with Sables, Ermins, and Cloth of gold, and all their furniture it costly. Their Armes are Bowes, Swords, Polaxes, and some Lances, but they can best vse their Bowes, whereto they are vsed from their childhood. They are hardie, valorous, cruell, will continue two dayes and nights on horseback armed; exceeding patient of difficulties, and exceeding obedient to their Lords. Their Cattell also are hardie.

The Tartars religion.

The Law and Faith of the Tartars is this. They say, that there is a great God, high and heauenly, of whom with daily incense they desire good vnderstanding and health. They haue another, which they call Natigay, which is like an Image couered with Felt, or some other thing, which euery one hath in his house. To this God they make a wife and children, placing the wiues Image at the left hand, and the representations of children before his face: This they call, The God of earthly things, which keepeth their Children, and their Beasts, and Corne; and giue it great reuerence. Before they eat themselues, they anoynt the mouthes of the Images with the fat of the sodden Flesh, and they cast the broth out of doores, in honour of other Spirits.

Digitized by Google

Spirits, saying, that their God with his familie haue had their part; and after they eate and drinke at pleasure.

If the sonne of any Tartar die, who hath not yet beene married, and also the daughter of another die vnmarried, the parents of both the deceased parties meet together, and make a marriage betweene the dead: and making a draughter in writing, of that contract, they paintmen and women for seruants, Horses and other creatures, with clothes of all sorts and moneyes, in paper, and burne them together with the writing of contract; by the fumes whereof, they say that all these things are carried to their children in another world, where they are married, and the fathers and mothers thinke they are ioyned together through such a bond of affinitie, as if those marriages had beene celebrated, while the married couple yet liued. Painted Marriages.

When the Tartars goe to warre, their Prince conducteth about one hundred thousand Horse, appointing Heads ouer tens, hundreds, thousands, ten thousands, by which orderly subordination, commands are easily effected. Euery hundred is called a Tuc; ten, a Toman. When they set forth they send out men euery way, as Scouts that no Enemie may assault them vnprouided. Of Horse and Mares, there are for euery man about eighteene. They carrie also their like Felt houses vnder the which, they shelter themselues in the time of rayne. When there falls out some important employment, they will ride ten dayes together without victuals boyled, and liue of the bloud of their Horses, cutting a veyne and sucking it. They haue Milke dryed like Paste, which they make, boyling the Milke, and taking the Creame which swims on the top, put it in another vessell, and thereof make Butter: After, they set the Milke in the Sunne, and drie it; and when they goe in the Armie, carrie ten pounds thereof, and euery morning take halfe a pound, and put it into a little Flaske or Bottle of Leather, with as much water as he pleaseth: which while he rides, beats together: and this is his dinner. When they encounter with their Enemies, they ride here and there shooting, and sometimes make shew of flight, shooting as they flee, and finding the Enemies broken, redintegrate their forces, and pursue the victorie: hauing their Horses at command, with a signe to turne any way. But now the Tartars are mixed in diuers parts, and so are their fashions. Their warefare

They punish malefacters after this manner. If any steale a thing of small value, and hath not deserued to be depriued of life, he is seauen times beaten with a Cudgell, or seauenteene, or seauen and twenty, or thirty seauen, or forty and seauen, giuing the strokes according to the measure and qualitie of the offence, and that vnto an hundred; some doe often times dye, through these strokes. But if any haue stollen an Horse, or another thing, for the which hee deserueth to dye, he is cut a sunder with a Sword in the middle: but if hee will redeeme his life, he shall restore the theft nine fold. Such as haue Horses, Oxen or Camels, brand them with their markes, and send them to the pastures without a keeper. The mulct or penaltie of nine fold. The markes of the heards of Cattell.

Leauing the Citie of Caracboran, and the Mountaine Altai, you come vnto the champaine Countrey of Bargu, which extendeth it selfe Northwards about sixtie dayes iourney in length. The Inhabitants of those places are Mecriti, and they are subiect to great Chan, vsing the manners of the Tartars. They are wilde men, and eate the flesh of Beasts which they take by hunting, especially of Stagges, whereof they haue great plentie, and they make them so tame, that they may ride them. They want Corne and Wine. In the Summer they exercise great hunting and taking of wilde Beasts and Fowle, with the flesh whereof they may liue in the winter: For in Winter, as well fowle as other liuing creatures flie from thence, by reason of the exceeding and vntolerable cold of that Countrey. After the end of fortie dayes iourney, you come vnto the Ocean, neere which is a Mountaine where Astori, and strange Falcons breed, which are carryed thence vnto the Court of great Chan. Bargu. Medita Strange Falcons. This is either a coniecture or by relation hardly credible.

Heere we must returne vnto the Citie Campion. If therefore you proceed further fiue dayes iourney from the Citie Campion towards the East, (in the places lying in the middle, horrible voyces of Deuils are heard in the night time) you come to the Kingdome Erginul, in the Prouince of Tangut, subiect to the great Cham. In this Kingdome are many other Kingdomes which are Idolators. There are some Nestorian Christians, and Turkes. There are many Cities and Castles, of which Erginul is chiefe. From hence, if you proceed further to the Southeast, you may goe to the part of Cathai, going Southeast towards Cathai, there is a certaine famous Citie named Cinguy, (the name also of the Prouince) tributarie vnto great Chan: contained in Tangut: the people are some Christians, some Mahumetans, others Idolators. Their are also found wilde Oxen, neere as great as Elephants, very faire, hauing white and blacke hayre, short in other parts, and on the shoulders three palmes long, fine and white beyond silke: of which Marco brought some to Venice as a rare thing. Many also of these Oxen are tamed, and made to engender with tame Kine, and the breed of them are fitter for businesse then any other creatures, beare great burthens, are yoaked to the plow, and doe twise as much as others. The best Muske in the world is found in this Prouince, and is of a goodly beast of the bignesse of a Goat, hauing grosse hayre like a Stagge, feet and tayle like a Gazella but without hornes; it hath foure teeth, two aboue, and two beneath, of the length of three fingers, subtle, and white as Iuorie, and is a faire beast to see to, when the Moone is at full, neare the nauill vnder the belly there growes Night walking Spirits. Erginul. Cathai. Wilde Oxen of the bignesse of Elephants. Muske.

to

Digitized by Google

to this beast an impostume or bladder full of blood, and at the full then they goe to hunt the said beasts and take away that swelling, which is dryed in the Sunne, and is the best Muske: the flesh also is good to eate. Master Marco brought to Venice the head and feet of this beast dryed. The men liue of Merchandise and Arts, and haue aboundance of Corne: they are Idolaters, of a fat body and a little Nose, blacke hayred, hauing no beard but foure hayres on their chin. The women are faire and white. And when the men desire to marry wiues, they rather seeke the beautifull, then the noble or rich. Whereby it commeth often to passe, that a great and Noble man marryeth a poore wife, but beautifull, assigning dowrie to her mother there. This Prouince extendeth it selfe fiue and twentie dayes iourney in length, and is very fertile. In it are exceeding great Feasants, hauing traynes eight or ten handfuls long. Many other kindes of Birds are also found there, which haue very goodly feathers, distinguished with diuers and excellent colours.

Beautie preferred before Nobilitie and riches.

Feasants.

Egregaia. Proceeding further towards the East, after eight dayes iourney, you meet with the Prouince Egrigaia, in the which are many Cities and Castles, all still in Tanguth. The principall Citie is called Calacia. The Inhabitants thereof are Idolaters, there are three Churches of Nestorian Christians, and are subiect to the great Chan. In the Citie Calacia, Chamlets are made, wouen of white wooll and the hayre of Camels, then the which, there are scarce any fairer found in the world.

Going to the East from the Prouince Egrigaia, the way leadeth vnto the Prouince Tenduch, in the which are many Cities and Castles: where also Presbyter Iohannes vseth to abide, who now payeth tribute to great Chan. This King of that progenie of Prieste Iohn is named George, and is a Priest and a Christian, and most of the people are Christians. All the Great Chans, after his death who was slaine in battell by Cingis, gaue their Daughters to those Kings to wife. This King George holds not all that Priest Iohn before held, and is the fourth of that progenie. There is a Nation there called Argon, more goodly men and fitter for Merchandise then the rest, descended of Idolaters and Mahumetans. There are also two Regions where they raigne, which in those parts are called Og and Magog, but they which dwell there call them Vng and Mongul: in Vng are Gog, and in Mongul the Tartars. Riding East seauen dayes towards Catay, are many Cities peopled with Idolaters, Mahumetans, and Nestorians. There is one Citie called Sindicin, where very faire and excellent Armes are made of diuers sorts, fit for Armies. In the mountaines of this Prouince are great Mines of siluer, and manifold game of wilde beasts, and the Countrey of the mountaines is called Idisa. Three dayes iourney distant from the foresaid Citie, standeth another Citie Iangamur, that is White Lake, wherein is a Palace, in which the great Chan most willingly remaineth, because there are many Lakes and riuers, many Swannes, and in the plaines, Cranes, Feasants, and Partridges, and store of other fowle. There are fiue sorts of Cranes there: some haue blacke wings like Crowes, others are white and bright, hauing their feathers full of eyes like Peacocks, but of a golden colour, the necke blacke and white very beautifull; a third sort of bigneste not vnlike ours; a fourth, little and very faire, intermingled with red and blew colours; the fifth, of a grizell or gray colour, hauing red and blacke heads, and these are very great. And neere vnto this Citie lyeth a certaine valley where many Cottages are, in the which an exceeding number of Partridges is maintained, which are kept for the King, comming to lodge there for a time.

Gog and Magog

The Citie Sindicin.

Idisa.

Cianganor.

Fiue sorts of Cranes.

Xandu. This Citie is three dayes iourney Northeastward to the Citie Xandu, which the great Chan Cublay now raigning, built; erecting thereing a maruellous and artificiall Palace of Marble and other stones, which abutteth on the wall on one side, and the midst of the Citie on the other. He included sixteene miles within the circuit of the wall on that side where the Palace abutteth on the Citie wall, into which none can enter but by the Palace. In this inclosure or Parke are goodly meadowes, springs, riuers, red and fallow Deere, Fawnes carryed thither for the Hawkes, (of which are there mewed aboue two hundred Gerfalcons which he goeth once a weeke to see) and he often vseth one Leopard or more, sitting on Horses, which hee setteth vpon the Stagges and Deere, & hauing taken the beast, giueth it to the Gerfalcons, and in beholding this spectacle he taketh wonderfull delight. In the middest in a faire Wood hee hath built a royall House on pillars gilded and vernished, on euery of which is a Dragon all gilt, which windeth his tayle about the pillar, with his head bearing vp the loft, as also with his wings displayed on both sides: the couer also is of Reeds gilt and varnished, so that the rayne can doe it no iniurie, the reeds being three handfuls thicke and ten yards long, split from knot to knot. The house it selfe also may be sundred, and taken downe like a Tent and erected againe. For it is sustained, when it is set vp, with two hundred silken cords. Great Chan vseth to dwell there three moneths in the yeare, to wit, in Iune, Iuly, and August. On the eight and twentieth day of August, he departeth to make a solemne sacrifice. He hath an herd of white Horses, and white Mares, about ten thousand of the milke whereof none may drinke except hee be of the progenie of Cingis Can, except one family, called Boriat, priuiledged hereto by Cingis for their valour. And these beasts as they goe vp and downe feeding are much reuerenced, nor dare any goe before them or hinder their way. The Astrologers or Sorcerers tell Chan that on the twentie eight of the Moone of August, he Hunting with Leopards.

A goodly house of pleasure.

A solemne Sacrifice.

Mares milke.

Digitized by Google

he ſhould diſperſe that milke heere and there, for the honour of all ſpirits and his Idols, that they might be carefull preſeruers of all thoſe things which he poſſeſſeth.

There are two ſorts of Idolaters, Sorcerers called Thebeth and Cheſmir, which in the midſt of ſtormes aſcend the Palace and ſuffer no rayne to fall thereon; which they make the people beleeue comes to paſſe by their ſanctitie: and therefore they goe ſlouenly and regardleſſe of their perſons, neuer waſhing nor combing themſelues. They alſo haue a horrible cuſtome to dreſſe and eate ſuch as are comdemned to death, but not thoſe which dye naturally. They are called alſo Bachſi, which is the name of their Order, as Friers Predicants or Minors with vs. They ſeeme by Magicke to doe what they liſt, when the great Can in his Hall ſits at his Table, which is eight yards high: and in the midſt of the hall a good diſtance from the table is a great Cupboard of plate furniſhed: They cauſe that the peeces full of Wine or Milke or other viands of themſelues, fill the goblets without any hand touching them, and goe ten paces in the ayre into the great Cans hand; and when he hath drunke, returne to their place. This they doe in the preſence of any man, when their Lord commands. Theſe Bachſi alſo when they will make feaſts to their Idols, goe to the Can and ſay; Sir, know that if our Idols be not honoured with Sacrifices, they will bring plagues to Corne and Beaſts. And therefore wee pray you to giue the fleſh of ſo many Sheepe with blacke heads, and ſo many pounds of Incenſe and Lignum aloes, that we may make them due ſacrifice and honour. This they ſpake not to him themſelues, but by certaine Lords deputed to that Office, who ſpeake to the Can and obtaine it. On the feaſt day they ſacrifice the ſaid beaſts, and ſprinkle the broath before the Idols. The Kings Magicians.

They haue great Monaſteries ſome of the bigneſſe of a Citie, in ſome of which are about two thouſand Monkes which ſerue Idols, ſequeſtred from the Laitie in their ſhauing and garments. For they ſhaue their heads and beards, and were a religious garment. Theſe in the ſolemnities of their Idols ſing with ſolemne ſongs and lights, ſome of them may marry. There are ſome of great abſtinence called Senſim, leading an auſtere life, for they eate nothing but Meale mingled with water till all the Flower be gone, and eate the branne without any ſauour. Theſe worſhip the Fire; and the men of other rules ſay that theſe which are ſo auſtere, are Heretikes againſt their Law, becauſe they worſhip not Idols as they doe; and there are great differences betwixt them: and theſe marry not in any caſe. They ſhaue their Head and Beard: they weare blacke hempen garments, and bright yellow. They ſleepe in thicke Mats, and liue the ſeuereſt life in the world. Shauings. Auſteritie.

§. V.

Of CVBLAI CAN, his Raigne and Acts, Magnificent feaſts and Huntings, Court and Counſell. His Citie Cambalu and glorious Palace.

IN this Booke I purpoſe to write of all the great and maruellous Acts, of the preſent Can called Cublai Can, which is in our Tongue Lord of Lords, the greateſt Prince in peoples, Cities and Treaſures, that euer was in the world. Hee being diſcended from the Progenie of Chingis, the firſt Prince of the Tartars, is the ſixth Emperour of that Countrey, beginning to raigne in the yeare of our Lord 1256. being twentie ſeauen yeares old, and ruling the people with great wiſedome and grauitie. He is a valiant man, exerciſed in Armes, ſtrong of bodie, and of a prompt minde for the performance of matters, before he attained to the dignitie of the Empire (which by his wiſdome he did againſt the will of his Brethren) he often ſhewed himſelfe a valiant Souldier in the warres, and carryed himſelfe like a wiſer and bolder Captaine, then euer the Tartars had. But ſince he ſwayed the Kingdome, he went but once into the Field, but ſends his Sonnes, and other Captaines in expeditions. Heere begins the ſecond Booke of Marco Polo, of which I thoght good to aduertiſe the Reader: as for the Chapters, the Latine and Remuſio ſo differ, that I haue left both and obſerued our owne diuiſions.

In the yeare of our Lord 1286. his Vncle named Naiam, being thirtie yeares of age, and hauing the command of many people, and Countries, ſo that hee was able eaſily to bring together foure hundred thouſand Horſe. Being puffed vp through youthfull vanitie, would now no longer be ſubiect, but would needs take away the Kingdome from his Lord Cubai, and ſent to another great Lord named Caydu, Lord of the parts towards great Turkie, who was nephew of the Emperour Cublai, yet hated him, who yeelding conſent to Rebellion, promiſed to come in proper perſon with an hundred thouſand Horſe. Cingis or Chingis Can. Naiams rebellion. Caydu.

Both of them began to gather Forces, which could not bee done ſo ſecretly but Cublai heard of it, and preſently tooke order to ſet guard to the wayes that no intelligence might paſſe that way: and then aſſembled all the Forces within ten dayes iourney of Cambalu with great ſpeed, ſo that in twentie dayes, were gathered together three hundred & ſixtie thouſand Horſe, and one hundred thouſand Foot, a great part of them Falconiers and men of his Houſhold. With theſe hee made all haſte day and night towards Naiams Countrey, where at the end of twentie fiue dayes he arriued, altogether vnlooked for: and reſted his men two dayes. Then hee called his Aſtrolo-

Digitized by Google

Astrologers, and caused them before all the Armie to diuine who should haue victorie (a thing they alway vse to incourage their men) and they promised it to Cublai. One morning whiles Naiam was sleeping negligently in his Tent, hauing not so much as sent out any scouts to espie, Cublai made shew of his Armie vpon a hill to Naiams. Hee himselfe sate in a certaine Castle of wood, full of Archers and Crosse-bow men, borne by foure Elephants; on the top whereof was the Royall Standard with the Images of the Sunne and Moone. Hee deuided his Armie into three wings, of which he sent that on the right hand and the other on the left against Naiams Armie: To euery ten thousand Horse were assigned fiue hundred Foot with Lances, taught to leape vp behind the horse-men if any occasion of flight happened, and suddenly on aduantage to light and slay the enemies horses with their lances. Caidu was not yet come. The battels ioyned and made a cruell fight, which continued from morning till noone: and then was Naiam taken and brought before Cublai, who commanded that he should be sewed betwixt two Carpets, which should be tossed vp and downe till the breath were out of his bodie, that so the Imperiall blood might not be exposed to the Sunne and the ayre. The remainder of his people sware Obedience to Cublai, which were foure Nations, Ciorza, Carli, Barscol, and Sitingui.

Naiam was secretly baptised, and by profession a Christian, but no follower of the workes of Faith, and signed his principall Ensigne with the signe of the Crosse, hauing with him infinite store of Christians which were all slaine.

The Iewes and Saracens, that were in the Armie of Cublai, began to vpbraid the Christians with this disaster of the Crosse, who thereupon complained to Cublai. Hee then sharply reproouing the Iewes and Saracens, turning to the Christians saith; Surely, your God and his Crosse, would not giue any ayde to Naiam, but be not you therefore ashamed, because God beeing good and iust, ought not at all to defend Iniustice and Iniquitie. Naiam was a Traytour to his Lord, and contrary to all equitie raised rebellion, and sought the helpe of your God in his mischieuous purpose. But he as a good and vpright God, would not fauour his Designes. He returned after this with great triumph to Cambalu, and stayed there till Easter. On that day he called the Christians before him, and kissed their Gospels, and made his Barons doe the same. The like hee doth in the great Feasts of Saracens, Iewes, and Ethnikes, that Sogomamber Can the God of the Idols, Mahumet, Moses, or whosoeuer is greatest in heauen might helpe him. Yet he made best shew of liking to the Christian Faith, but pretended the ignorance of the Professors, and the mightie acts of the Sorcerers, to his not professing it.

Now for rewarding his Souldiers, he hath twelue Barons or wise Counsellours, which giue him notice of each Captaynes merit, who raiseth them command of one hundred to a thousand, and from one thousand to ten thousand, and so forward, giuing them Vessels of Plate and Tablets. The Captayne of one hundred hath a Tablet of siluer, and the Captayne of one thousand of Gold, or siluer gilded; the Captayne of ten thousand hath a Tablet of Gold with a Lions head on it: the weight of the Tablets differ also according to the worth and weight of the dignitie. On the said Tablet is written a command in this manner. By the strength and power of the great God, and by the Grace which he hath giuen to our Empire, the name of Can be blessed, and let them all dye and be destroyed which will not obey him. All they which haue these Tablets haue priuiledges in writing, of all things which they are to doe or demand. And the Generals when they ride in publike, they haue a cloth borne ouer their heads; and when they sit, sit on a Chaire of siluer. Their Tablet is of three hundred Saggi (fiftie ounces of Gold) with the Images of the Sunne and Moone. They whose Tablet haue a Gerfalcon, may take with them for their guard the whole Armie of a great Commander.

Cublai person described.

Cublai is a comeley and faire man of a meane stature, of a red and white face, blacke and goodly eyes, well fashioned nose, and all the lineaments of his bodie consisting of a due proportion.

His Wiues and Concubines.

He hath foure wiues which he accounteth lawfull, and the first-borne of them succeedeth him in the Kingdome. And euery one of these is called Empresse, and holdeth a peculiar Court, and that Princely in a proper Palace, hauing about three hundred chosen Hand-mayds, and Mayd-seruant, and many Eunuch seruants, and at least ten thousand persons in their Family. The King hath also many Concubines.

Vngut.

There is a certaine Nation of faire people, Tartars, called Vngut, whether euery second yeare he sendeth Ambassadors to purue the faireſt Lasses for him of greatest esteeme for beautie, which bring him foure or fiue hundred more or lesse, as they see cause. There are Prayers or Examiners appointed, which take view of all their beauties, examining Eyes, Nose, Mouth, &c. apart; and set price on them at sixteene, seuenteene, eighteene, nineteene, twentie or more Carrats. And they bring those of that rate which their Commission appoints. These hee causeth to bee reuiewed by other Examiners, and of so many chuseth perhaps thirtie for his Chamber of the chiefe; which he puts to some of his Barons Wiues, to see if they snore not in their sleepe, if in smell or behauiour they be not offensiue. Those which are approoued are by fiues diuided, each fifth part wayting three dayes and nights in his Chamber by course, the other in the next Lodgings preparing whatsoeuer these command them. The lesse prized are put to Cookerie, and other noble Officers. And sometimes the Can bestowes them on Gentlemen with great portions.

The

Digitized by Google

The men of that Countrey esteeme it a grace and credit to haue Daughters worthy his liking: and thinke themselues borne vnder an ill Planet, if they haue not for his turne.

Cublai hath two and twentie Sonnes by his foure legitimate Wiues, and the first-borne of his first Wife was called Cingis, who should haue succeeded him in the Empire, if hee had not dyed before his Father. He left a Sonne named Temur, a valiant man, wise, and exercised in Armes, who is to succeed his Grand-father in the Empire, in stead of his deceased Father. But by his Hand-mayds and Mayd-seruants, he hath fiue and twentie Sonnes, all which are daily exercised in feats of Armes, and are great Lords. Seuen of his Sonnes by his Wiues are Kings of great Prouinces, and maintayne their states with great reputation. His children. Temur.

Three moneths of the yeere, to wit, December, Ianuarie, and Februarie, Cublai remayneth ordinarily in Cambalu which is at the North-east border of Cataio, and there on the South part by the new Citie is seated a great Palace. First, there is a square Wall, each square being eight miles, with a deep Ditch enuironing, and a Gate in the middle of each: after which is the space of a mile in circuit where Souldiers stand. After this is another circuit of sixe mile square, with three Gates on the South square, and three on the North: that which is in the midst being in both the greater, and kept shut, except when the Can passeth that way; the other alway open to others. In each corner of this Wall and in the midst is a faire Palace, eight in all, very large, in which are kept the Cans munitions and furnitures of all sorts, for Horses in one, in another Bowes and shooting Artillerie, in a third Coslets, Curasses and leather Armours, and so in the rest. Within this circuit is another wall-circuit, very thicke, and ten paces high, all the battlements white; the wall square, each square a mile in length, with sixe gates as the former, and eight Palaces also very great, wherein are the Cans prouision. Betwixt these two last walls are many faire trees and medowes, in which are Deere, Muske beasts, with other game, and store of grasse, the paths being heighthned two cubits to spare it, no durt, nor plashes of water being therein. Within this last wall is the Palace of the great Can, the greatest that hath beene seene, abutting with the wall on the North and South and open spaced where the Barons and Souldiers passe. It hath no seeling, but a very high roofe: the foundation of the pauement ten palms high, with a wall of marble round about it, two paces wide, as it were a walke. In the end of the wall without, is a faire Turret with Pillars. In the walls of the Halls and Chambers are carued Dragons, Souldiers, Birds, Beasts, of diuers kinds, histories of Warres, gilded. The roofe is so made, that nothing is seene but Gold and Imagery. In euery square of the Palace is a great Hall of marble, capable of great multitudes. The Chambers are disposed the best that may be deuised: the roofe is red, greene, azure, and of all coloures. Behind the Palace are great Roomes, and priuate store-houses for his treasures and Iewels, for his women, and other secret employments. Ouer against the said Palace of the Can, is another for Cingis his sonne, whose Court, was in all things like his Fathers. Neere this Palace towards the North is a Mount made by hand, a mile in compasse, one hundred paces high; beset with trees that are alwaies greene. Vnto this mountaine, the king commandeth all the best trees, to be brought from remote parts, lading Elephants with them, for they are taken vp with the roots, and are transplanted in this Mountaine. And because this Mountaine is alwaies greene it is called, The greene Mountaine. And where the earth of that Mount was taken away, are two Lakes answering each other, with a pretie Riuer filling them, stored with fish, and so grated that the fish cannot get forth. The greene Mountaine. Two Lakes.

The Citie of Cambalu in the Prouince of Cathai, seated on a great Riuer, was famous, and regall, from antiquitie. And this name Cambalu signifieth, The Citie of the Lord, or Prince. This Citie the great Can remoued vnto the other side of the Riuer where the Palaces are: for he vnderstood by the Astrologers, that it should rebell against the Empire *. This new built Citie is called Taidu: and he made all the Catayans to goe out of the old Citie into the new: which contayneth in compasse foure and twentie miles, euery side of the square contayning sixe miles. It hath walls of earth ten paces thicke at the bottome, and at the top but three, by little and little ascending thinner: the batlements are white. Euery square of the wall hath three principall Gates, which are twelue in all, hauing sumptuous Palaces built ouer each of them. There are also excellent Palaces in the angles of the walls, where the Armes of the Garrison (which are one thousand at each Gate) are kept. The buildings are squared out, & the streets laid very straight by line, throughout this Citie, so that from one Gate a free prospect openeth thorow the Citie, to the opposite Gate, hauing very goodly houses built on both sides, like Palaces with Gardens and Courts, diuided to the Heads of Families. In the middle of the Citie, a certaine sumptuous house is built, wherein hangeth a very great Bell, after the third knolling whereof in the night no man may goe out of his house, vntill the beginning of the day following, except it be for speciall cause, as for a woman in trauell, &c. And they are compelled to carrie a light with them. Cambalu. *The long storie of this rebellion is omitted. Taidu. Palaces. The equalitie of the streets.

Without the Citie of Cambalu are twelue great Suburbs, three or foure miles long, ioyning vpon each of the twelue Gates, more inhabiting the Suburbs then the Citie: heere Marchants and Strangers keepe, each Nation hauing a seuerall Store-house or Burse in which they lodge. No dead corps of any man is buryed within this Citie, but the bodies of Idolaters are burned Suburbs large.

Digitized by Google

Burial without the Citie.

burned without the Suburbs, where the dead bodies of other ſects are buryed. And becauſe an huge multitude of Sorcerers conuerſe alwayes there, they haue about twentie fiue thouſand Harlots in the Suburbs and in the Citie, and theſe haue a Captaine appointed ouer euery hundreth, and thouſand; and one Generall; whoſe office is, that when Embaſſadours come, or ſuch as haue buſineſſe with the Can whoſe charges he findeth, this Captaine giueth euery Embaſſadour and euery man of his family, change of women nightly at free coſt: for this is the Queanes tribute. The Guards euery night caſt thoſe in priſon which they finde walking late: and if they be found guiltie they are beaten with Cudgels: for the Bachſi tell them that it is not good to ſhed mans blood. But many dye of thoſe beatings.

Harlots of the Suburbs.

The great Can hath in his Court twelue thouſand Horſe-men, which they call Caſitan, faithfull Souldiers of their Lord, who guard his perſon more for ſtate then feare. And foure Captaines haue the charge of theſe, whereof euery one commandeth three thouſand. When one Captaine with three thouſand Souldiers within the Palace, hath guarded the King for three dayes and nights, another Captaine with his Souldiers againe ſucceedeth: and ſo throughout the whole yeeare, this courſe of watching by courſe is obſerued.

The number of the horſe-men of the Courtiers.

The Guard.

Solemn feaſts.

When through occaſion of any feaſtiuall day hee keepeth a ſolemne Court, his Table being higher then the reſt of the Tables, is ſet at the North part of the Hall, and his face is to the South, hauing the greateſt Queene on his left hand, to wit, his principall wife, and his Sonnes, and nephews, and they of the blood royall on his right. Yet their table is in a lower place, ſo that they ſcarce touch the Kings feet with their heads; the ſeat of the eldeſt being higher then the reſt. The Barons and Princes, ſit in a lower place then that. Their wiues alſo keepe the like order, firſt the Cans ſonnes wiues and his kinſmens, ſits lower on the left hand, and after, thoſe of the Lords and of euery Captaine, and Noble-man, each in her degree and order. And the Emperour himſelfe, while he ſitteth at his table, may caſt his eyes vpon all that feaſt with him in that Hall. There are not Tables for all to ſit, but the greateſt part of the Souldiers and Barons eate on Carpets. At all the doores ſtand two giantly fellowes with Cudgels, to ſee that none touch the Threſhold, which if hee doe they take his garments away; which he muſt redeeme with ſo many blowes as ſhall be appointed, or elſe loſe them. They which ſerue the King ſitting at the table, all of them couer their mouthes with Silke, leaſt their breathing ſhould by any meanes touch the Kings meat or drinke. And when he hath minde to drinke, the Damoſell which giues it, goeth back three paces and kneeles downe, and then the Barons and all the people kneele, and the Muſicians ſound their Inſtruments. There is no cauſe why I ſhould write any thing concerning the meats which are brought to the Table, how daintie and delicate they are, and with what magnificence and pompe they are ſerued in. All the Tartars obſerue this cuſtome, to celebrate the Birth day of their Lord moſt honourably. The Feſtiuall birth day of Cublai, is kept the twentie eight of September, and this day hee accounteth more ſolemne, then any of the whole yeare, except the firſt of February, wherein they begin their yeare. The King therefore in his Birth day is cloathed with a moſt precious garment of Gold, and about two thouſand Barons and Souldiers, are cloathed of the ſame colour of gold (though of Silke ſtuffe) and a girdle wrought with gold and ſiluer, which is giuen them with a payre of ſhooes: ſome weare Pearles and Gemmes of great price, namely, the Quiecitarie, which are next to the Can: and theſe garments are not worne but on their thirteene ſolemne Feaſts according to the thirteene Moones of the yeare; all then cloathed like Kings. This cuſtome is alſo obſerued with the Tartars, that on the birth day of great Cham, all the Kings, Princes, and Nobles, which are ſubiect to his Dominion, ſhould ſend preſents vnto him, as to their Emperour. And they who deſire to obtaine any place of Dignitie or office of him, offer their requeſts vnto twelue Barons appointed for this purpoſe, and what they decree, is all one, as if the Emperour himſelfe had anſwered them. All people alſo, of what Faith or ſect ſoeuer, whether Chriſtians, or Iewes, Saracens, or Tartars, and other Pagans are bound, ſolemnly to call vpon their Gods, for the life, ſafetie, and proſperitie of Great Can.

The order of them that ſit downe.

Threſhold threſhing.

The Noble-men that carry diſhes, couer their mouthes.

The ceremonies while the King drinketh.

Conſorts of Muſicke.

The birth day of Cublai.

New Moone feaſt.

The preſents of the men of Dignitie, ſubiect vnto him

The like Cuſtome is ſtill vſed by the Mogull, as alſo the New-yeares day.

The twelue Barons.

The prayers of diuers Religions.

On the day of the Kalends of February, which is the beginning of the Tartars yeare, great Can and all the Tartars, whereſoeuer they are, celebrate a very great and ſolemne Feaſt, and all aſwell men as women, deſire to bee cloathed in white Garments. For they beleeue, that the white garment is a token of good lucke: Therefore that fortune might fauour them all the yeare, they weare white in the beginning of the yeare. Moreouer the Rulers of Cities, and Gouernours of Prouinces, mindfull of their dutie, ſend vnto their Emperour on this day preſents of Gold and Siluer, Pearles and Precious ſtones, many white Cloathes, and other white things, and many Horſes of a white colour: the reſt of the Tartars at the beginning of the yeare, ſend white preſents one to another. It is the cuſtome of thoſe which bring preſents, if they can, of each to preſent nine times nine; as if they ſend Horſes, to preſent nine nines, that is eightie one, and ſo of Gold, of Cloaths, & other things, that ſomtimes he hath by this reckoning one hundred thouſand Horſes. Alſo at this good lucke, all the Elephants which the Emperour hath (fiue thouſand in number) are brought vnto the Court, couered with Tapiſtrie, wherein the ſimilitudes of diuers Beaſts and Fowles are portrayed, carryiug vpon their ſhoulders two Cheſts full of golden and ſiluer

New-yeres day

The white colour accounted eminous.

New-yeares gifts.

See Sir T. Roe of the preſents to the Mogull.

The Kings Elephants.

Digitized by Google

Siluer vessell. Many Camels also are brought, couered with faire Silken clothes, which bring other things, necessarie for the Court. And this day in the morning, all the Kings, Captaines, Barons, Souldiers, Physicians, Astrologers, Falconers, and the Gouernours of Prouinces, and Armies, and other Officers of the Emperour, assemble in the great Hall before the King, and they who happen to haue no place there, for the multitude of men, stand in another place where he may see them. All being placed in their order, and degree, one ariseth as it were some Prelate, and crieth out with a loude voyce, Bow downe, and adore. And presently all doe reuerence, bending downe their foreheads to the earth. Then he sayth, God preserue our Lord with long life and ioy; and all answere, God grant. Then he sayth, God encrease and aduance his Empire, and preserue his Subiects in peace, good-will, and prosperitie: and all answere, God grant. And this they doe foure times. The adoration finished, the said Prelate goeth to an Altar richly adorned, on which is a red Table, wherein is written the name of the Can, and taking a Censer, and putting odoriferous Spices therein, they perfume the Table and the Altar with great reuerence, in honour of great Can, and so returne to their places. After which, are offered the gifts whereof we haue spoken; and then the Tables are prepared, and a most solemne Dinner held, eating and drinking with great ioy with their wiues, in manner before described. And lastly, a domesticall Lion is brought vnto the King, which lying at his feet, like a gentle Whelpe, acknowledgeth his Lord.

The Feast.

A tame Lion.

In those three moneths, in which as we said before, the Emperour remayneth in the Citie of Cambalu, to wit, in December, Ianuarie, and Februarie, all the Hunters which the Emperour hath in all Prouinces, round about the Prouince of Cathai, apply themselues to hunting, and offer all the greater wilde-beasts, to wit, Stags, Beares, Roe-buckes, wilde Boares, Deere, and such like, vnto their Gouernours: who (if they be distant from the Emperours Court, lesse then thirtie dayes Iourney) send such beasts taken, by Waynes, and Ships vnto the Emperour, hauing first bowelled them. But such as are fortie dayes iourney distant from his Court, send onely the skinnes, which are necessarie for the making of Armour. Hee hath many Leopards, and Wolues for hunting, and many Lions also, greater then those which are in Babylon, in the haire whereof certaine little beames appeare of diuers colours, to wit, white, blacke and red, and they are accommodated to catch Boares, Beares, Stags, Roe-buckes, wilde Asses, and wilde Oxen; and it is maruellous to see the Lions fiercenesse and dexteritie in the act. Two Lions vse to bee carried in one Wagon, when they goe to hunt, and with them a Dog, with which they are tamed; and they carrie them on this fashion, because of their furie and vnrulinesse: and they must carrie them contrary to the wind; for else the beasts would scent them, and flee. Hee hath many tame Eagles, which are so fierce, that they take Hares, Roe-buckes, Deere, and Foxes: among which some of them feare not with great violence to seize vpon Wolues, and vexe them so sore, that without labour and danger, they may be taken by men.

The office of the Prouincial Hunters.

Tame Leopards, and Lions.

Eagles.

The great Can hath in his Court two which are brethren, one called Bayan, the other Minghan, called in the Tartar language, Cuuies, that is, Masters of the Game, whereof either hath the charge of ten thousand men: they which are vnder one of them, are clothed in red; the other in skie-colour, alway when they hunt. These keepe diuers sorts of Dogs, to the number of fiue thousand Mastiues and other. In hunting they goe with their people, one on the right, and the other on the left hand of the King: and they take vp so great a length of the Playne, that from one end to the other is a dayes iourney, so that no beast can escape them; and it is great pleasure when the Can goes in the midst, to see the Dogs follow Harts, Beares, and other kinds. And these Brethren are bound by couenant, from the beginning of October to the end of March, to bring to the Court, one thousand heads of beasts and birds, besides Quailes, and fishes the best they can, in great proportion.

The Masters of the Game.

The moneth of March comming in, great Can departeth from the Citie of Cambalu, and proceedeth North-eastward towards the Ocean distant thence two dayes iourneyes, bringing with him about ten thousand Falconers, who haue Falcons, Hawkes, Gerfalcons, and other kinds of Fowles of prey fit for hawking. These Falconers disperse themselues by an hundred of two hundred in a Companie: and the birds that are taken, for the most part, are brought vnto the King, who by reason of his Gout, sitteth in a woodden house, which two Elephants carrie, couered with the skins of Lions, and within hanged with cloth of Gold, hauing with him for his recreation, twelue choice Hawkes, and twelue fauoured Courtiers: many Noblemen and Souldiers ride by, who guard the Kings person. Who, when they see Pheasants, or Cranes, or other birds flying in the aire, declare it to the Falconers which are neere vnto the King: and they, signifying the same vnto the King vncouer the Kings House, and let their Falcons and Hawkes flie, and the King sitting on his Bed, beholdeth the pastime of the birds. Other ten thousand men also goe with the King, who in that hawking, runne hither and thither, by two and two, and marke whither the Falcons and Hawkes flie, that are cast from the fist, that (if need bee) they may helpe them. And these, in the Tartars Language, are called Toscaol, that is to say, Watch-men or Markes-men, being skilfull in a certaine kind of whistle, wherewith they call in the Hawkes that are flowen. Nor is it needfull, that the Falconer who let the Hawkes flie, Hawking.

10000. Falconers.

The Kings Horse-litter.

Toscaol.

The markes of the Hawkes.

should follow her, seeing they, of whom I now speake, are busily imployed in taking vp the Hawkes, and are carefull that by no meanes they bee hurt or lost. And euery flying Hawke carrieth a little table of siluer on her foot, signed with the marke of her Master or Falconer, that if shee bee lost, shee may bee restored to her owner. But if the marke cannot be knowne, the Hawke is deliuered to a certaine Baron, who for this cause is called Bulangazi, to whom are brought all lost things (otherwise the Finder would be counted a Thiefe) and to him Losers resort to inquire of things lost. He hath a most eminent place, noted by his Ensigne, that in so great an assembly of people he may be knowne.

Whiles they are thus busied in sporting and hawking, they come vnto a certaine great Plaine, called Caczarmodin, where the Tents of the King and all the Courtiers are prepared, about ten thousand in number. The first and chiefe is the Cans Pauilion, vnder which ten thousand Souldiers stand; besides Barons and Noble-men, with the doore to the South: sustayned with three Pillars, wrought with diuers curious and excellent carued workes, and couered with the skinnes of Lions (and strakes of diuers colours) which keepe out rayne. But within, the walls of the Pauilions are couered with most costly skinnes of Armelines and Sables, although in those Countries these skinnes are accounted most precious, that sometimes skinnes worth two thousand Sultanines of gold are scarce sufficient for one paire of Vests. The Tartars call the Sable, the Queene of Furres. The Cordes, wherewith these Pauilions are supported, are of silke. There are also other Pauilions erected, wherein the Wiues, Sonnes, and Hand-maides of the King remaine. Further also, the Falcons, Hawkes, Owles, Garfalcons, and other Birds, which serue for Hawking, haue their Tents wherein they are contayned. For, there is so great a multitude of Tents, that to them that come thither, a farre off it seemeth that a famous Citie is built there. The King remayneth all March in that Plaine, and taketh innumerable Beasts and infinite multitudes of Fowle. For no man may else hunt in all the Prouinces of that Kingdome, at the least within fiue dayes iourney one way, ten another, and fifteene a third way of the Cans Court: nor keepe an hunting Dogge, or an Hawke: and specially, from the beginning of March vntill the moneth of October, no man is permitted to vse any deuice or engine whatsoeuer, to take Stagges, Deere, Roe-bucks, Hares, lest he should hinder their breede: and hereupon it is that there are such store.

The number and order of the Pauilions.

The huge price of Armelines, and Sables.

Hunting forbidden.

Barke or Paper money.

It is incredible what multitudes of People, Merchants, and merchandises of all sorts are seene in Cambalu. The Money of the Great Can is not made of gold or siluer, or other metall, but they take the middle barke from the Mulberrie Tree, and this they make firme, and cut it into diuers and round pieces, great and little, and imprint the Kings marke thereon. Of this matter therefore, the Emperour causeth an huge masse of money to bee made in the Citie of Cambalu, which sufficeth for the whole Empire: and no man vnder paine of death may lawfully coine any other, or spend any other money, or refuse it in all his Kingdomes and Countries. Nor any comming from another Kingdome, dare spend any other money in the Empire of Great Can. Whereby it commeth to passe, that Merchants often comming from farre remote Countries and Regions vnto the Citie of Cambalu, bring with them gold, siluer, pearle, and precious stones, and receiue the Kings money for them. And because this money is not receiued in their Countries, they change it againe in the Empire of Great Can for merchandise, which they carrie away with them. He also payeth stipends to his Officers and Armies of the mentioned money; and lastly, whatsoeuer thing he needeth in his Court he buyeth with this money. Wherefore, there is not a King to be found in the World, who exceedeth him in Treasure, not expended on the Mint as elsewhere.

Cambalu, the Mint of money.

The Great Can hath twelue Barons, as is said before, which are his Counsell of Warre, and dispose of martiall affaires, and the exalting or disgracing of Captaines and Souldiers. Their office is called Thai, that is, The high Court, because they haue none aboue them but the Can. Other twelue Barons are appointed Counsellors for the foure and thirtie Prouinces, which haue a faire Palace in Cambalu, in which is for euery Prouince a Iudge & many Notaries. These haue power to choose Gouernours of the said Prouinces, and present their names to the Can which confirmes them. These also haue the charge of the Treasure to exact and dispense the same. Their office is called Singh, that is, The second Court, subiect to none but the Can, yet reputed lesse noble then the former, that being a martiall State.

Digitized by Google

§. VI.

The Cans prouisions for Embassadors and for Posts; against Dearth; for High-wayes; for the Poore in Cambalu, for Astrologers; Tartars Wine, Fuell, Religion, Opinions, Behauiour, Court-neatnesse: POLOS proceeding from Cambalu Westward. Of Pulisangan, Gouza, Tainfu, Pianfu, Thaigin, Cacianfu, Quenzanfu, Sindinfu, Thebeth, Caindu, Caraian, Carachan, Cardandan and Vociam.

WIthout the Citie of Cambalu, many publike wayes conduct to the neighbouring Prouinces, and in euery one of them alway at the end of fiue and twentie or thirtie miles, are Lodgings or Innes built, called Lamb, that is, Post-horses, with great and faire Palaces, Chambers furnished with Beds and other Prouisions, meete to entertaine great Men, yea to lodge a King; the prouisions laid in from the next adioyning places: where about foure hundred Horses are in readinesse for Messengers and Embassadors, which there leaue their ridden Horses and take fresh. And in mountaynous places, where are no Villages, he sends People to inhabite, ten thousand at a place where these Lamb are built, which till the ground for their prouisions; and this continueth vnto the furthest limits of the Empire: so that in the publique wayes, throughout the whole Empire, about ten thousand of the Kings Innes are to bee found. And the number of the Horses, appointed for the seruice of the Messengers in those Innes, are more then two hundreth thousand, a thing almost incredible to tell: so that in a little while with change of Men and Horse, intelligence might flie to the Court. And if any wonder how so many men and beasts should be prouided for, hee must consider that the Moores and Gentiles haue many women, and store of children, some hauing thirtie sonnes which follow them armed; and for victuall they sow three seeds, Rice, Panike and Mill, which yeeld an hundred fold: they make not bread, but boile these with Milke or Flesh. Wheat will not so encrease with them: nor suffer they any ground, which will beare, to lye vntilled. And their Cattell alway increase, that each of them carries with him six, eight, or more Horses into the field for his owne person. These Horses also take turnes, that of the foure hundred aforesaid two hundred are in the stables readie, the other two hundred at grasse by monethly courses. Their Cities adioyning to Riuers or Lakes, are appointed also to haue ferry Boats in readinesse for the Posts. And Cities adioyning to Desarts, are sessed at Horses and prouisions thorow those Desarts, but haue contribution from the Can. In cases of great import, the Posse rides with a Gerfalcon Table, and is trussed so that he will ride two hundred miles in a day, or two hundred and fiftie, sometimes also they ride the night, Foot-posts running by with lights, if the Moone shine not. They winde a Horne that the fresh Horses may be brought forth for them to mount presently, and hauing their bellies and heads girded runne as fast as the horse can: and those which are able to endure this excessiue riding are of great reputation.

Postes and Innes.

The Romans also had publike Stables, as appeares by Constantine, Zos. l. 2. and Palladius who in three dayes would ride from the Confines of the Empire to Constantinople, Soc. l. 7. c. 19.

There are also betweene the said Innes other habitations, three or foure miles distant one from another, where there are a few houses wherein Foot-posts dwell, hauing all girdels full of shrill sounding bells. These are alwayes readie, and as often as the Kings Letters are sent vnto them, conuey them speedily to the next habitation: who hearing the sound of the Foot-post comming afarre off, expect him, and receiuing his Letters, presently carrie them to the next watch: and so the Letters passing through diuers hands, are conueyed without any delay, vnto that place whither they ought to come. And it commeth often to passe, that the King vnderstandeth newes, or receiueth new fruits from a place, ten dayes iourney distant, in two dayes: as fruits growing at Cambalu in the morning, the next day at night at Xandu. But all the mentioned Postes are free from all exaction of Tribute, and receiue a good recompence of their labours from the Kings Rent gatherers besides. Some also are appointed to examine these Posts monethly, and to punish their faults.

Foote-postes. Die Post boden.

Their Priuiledges.

He sends yeerly vnto diuers Prouinces, subiect to his Empire, to inquire whether any harme be done to the Corne, by Tempests, Locusts, Wormes, or any other plague. And when he hath notice giuen him, that any Prouince or Citie, hath sustained any damage, he remitteth Tributes to that people for that yeere, and sendeth Graine for victuall and for Seede, out of his owne Garners. For, in the time of great plentie, the King buyeth abundant store of Corne, and keepeth it with great care of Officers, three or foure yeeres in Garners, that when there shall be scarcitie of Corne in one Countrey, that defect may bee supplied out of the Kings Store-houses. Hee selleth his graine for the fourth part of other mens price, and alway prouideth that his store-houses be stored. Likewise, when any murren lighteth among Cattell, hee sends them other Cattell which he hath for Tenths in other Prouinces. And if a thunder-bolt hath stricken any beast of any Herd or Flock, he will haue no Tribute thereof for three yeeres, be the Herd neuer so great: nor custome of a Thunder-stricken ship, thinking God is angrie with them which are so stricken: Likewise, that Trauellers may find the way in all places capable to beare Trees, He hath caused Prouisions against dearth.

Fatherly Royaltie.

Digitized by Google

Hence perhaps the walk from Lahor to Agra was occasioned.

Trees to be planted, a little distance one from another, neare vnto the principall wayes; and in Sandie and desart places, he hath caused to set Stones and Pillars for that purpose: and Officers are appointed to looke to these things. Hee plants Trees the rather because his Astrologers tell him, that planting Trees lengthens the life.

Their Rice-wine.

They make excellent drinke, in the Prouince of Cathai, of Rice and diuers Spices, which in the taste thereof excelleth the sweetnesse euen of Wine. And they who drinke more greedily therof then reason iudgeth to be fit, or the nature of the drinker requireth, sooner become drunke then if they had drunke Wine.

Coales taken out of mines, a thing strange to Polo an Italian, but common with vs, called Sea-cole, because they are brought by Sea from Newcastle, &c. Eneas Syluius and the China Iesuites, haue told wonders of these black stones, a wonderfull diuine bounty indeed to this Land, and specially to this Citie.

Throughout the whole Prouince of Cathai, certaine blacke stones are digged out of the Mountaines, which put into the fire burne like wood, and being kindled preserue fire a long time, as if they be kindled in the Euening, they keepe quicke fire all the night. And many vse those stones, because that though they haue store of wood, yet is there such frequent vse of Stoues and Bathes (thrise euery weeke) that the wood would not serue.

Cans charitie to the Poore.

It is not amisse also, hauing spoken of his Prouisions abroad, to mention his care for the poore of Cambalu. When he heares of any honourable Familie decayed by disaduentures, or of any which cannot worke, and haue no meanes: he causeth to giue to such Families the whole yeares expenses; each of such Families going to the Officers for that purpose, and shewing their Bill of allowance, receiue prouisions accordingly. There is a Palace deputed for those Officers. They are prouided also of garments for Winter, and for Summer; the Can hauing the Tenths of all Wool, and Silke, and Hempe, which he causeth to bee made into Clothes in a house thereto appointed: for all Trades are bound one day in the weeke to worke for him. He prouides also apparell for his Armies, and in euery Citie causeth Cloth to be made of his tithe wooll. You must vnderstand that the Tartars ancient customes knew no almes, but rather vpbraided such as were in necessitie, as hated of God. But the Idolaters, especially these Bachsi, haue propounded it as a good worke acceptable to God, and haue taught him to be thus bountifull, so that in his Court bread is neuer denyed to any which aske: and there is no day in which is not giuen away twentie thousand Crownes in Rice, Millet and Panike, whereby he is esteemed as a God.

The Tenths paid to the Can.

Weekly labour for him.

The Deuill an Angell of light.

Astrologers.

There are also in Cambalu of Christians, Saracens, and Catayans, about fiue thousand Astrologers and Diuiners, which the Great Can prouideth yeerly of foode and rayment, as those poore abouesaid. These haue an Astrolabe in which are marked the signes of the Planets, the houres and points of all the yeere. Herein all these Astrologers, each Religion apart, view the course of the yeere, according to euery Moone, obseruing the disposition of the weather, referring alway to God to doe more or lesse after his owne pleasure. They write also vpon certaine squares (they call them Tacuini) the things which are to come that yeere, which they sell to those that will buy them, and such as speake most truth are most honored. If any intend any great worke, or to goe a farre iourney, and will know the euent before-hand, he makes recourse to these Astrologers, to see it with their eyes in the Heauens, which they doe, comparing the present Constellation with that of his Birth (which they demand of him) so foretelling him the good or euill.

Tartarian computation of times.

The Tartars reckon the computation of their yeeres by twelues, the first signified by a Lion, the second by an Oxe, the third by a Dragon, the fourth by a Dogge, and so thorow the whole twelue: so that if a man be demanded when he was borne; he will answer, such a point of such an houre, of such a day in the yeere Lion (this their fathers exactly set downe in a booke) and when the twelue is complete, they goe ouer the same againe.

Their Religion.

Of their Religion we haue said that they are Idolaters, and for their Gods haue a Table set aloft in the wall of their Chamber, on which is written, a Name representing the High God of Heauen; and there euery day, with a Censer of incense, they adore it in this manner. They lift vp their hands aloft, and strike their teeth thrice, praying it to giue them a good vnderstanding and health; and desire thereof nothing else. Besides, on the ground they haue another statue, called Natigai, The God of earthly things, with his Wife and Children (as before is said) whom likewise they worship with incense, striking * or gnashing the teeth, and lifting vp the hands; and desire thereof temperature of the aire, fruits of the earth, children, and the like. They hold the Soule to be immortal, and that when a man dies, it enters into another bodie better or worse, according to the merits in the former life, as of a poore man to become a Gentleman, and after of a Prince or Lord, and so higher till it be assumpted in God: or if it hath ill deserued to be a poorer man, after a Dogge, alway descending to the lowest ranke of baseneſſe. They haue a comely speech, salute cheerfully and honestly, haue a gracefull carriage, and feed cleanly. They beare great reuerence to their Parents, and if any be vndutifull, or helpless to their necessitie, there is a publike Office designed to this particular, to punish vngratefull or disobedient children. Prisoners are released at three yeeres end, and marked in the cheeke, to be knowne Malefactors.

* Sbattendo i denti.

Opinions of the soule.

Their Customes.

Court reuerence.

The Barons and People which goe to the Grand Can, obserue these Rites. First, within halfe a mile of the place where the Can is, all is hush't and quiet without noyse or cryes, or any loud speech: and euery Baron carries continually a little faire vessell to spit in, after which hee couers it, none daring to spit on the Hall. They haue Furre buskins of white leather, which they put on when they enter the Hall, putting off the former and giuing them to the seruants, lest they should foule the faire artificiall Carpets.

Ten

Digitized by Google

TEn miles off Cambalu, is a certayne great Riuer, named Pulisangan, emptying it selfe into the Ocean, by which many ships with much merchandise ascend. And in that place, there is a very faire Bridge, all of Serpentine stone curiously wrought, contayning three hundred paces in length, and eight in breadth, that ten men may ride abreast. On each side it is fairely mounted with a wall of marble, and Pillars set on a rew: and in the height of the ascent is a great and high Pillar, at the foote whereof is a great Lion, and on the top another. And so quite thorow the Bridge, one pace and halfe distant are Pillars with Lions on the top, and a faire well-wrought marble worke betwixt, to keepe men from falling. An admirable Bridge. Ramusio hath giuen a picture, London more.

Hauing passed ouer the Riuer and Bridge, proceeding thirtie miles westward (in which Palaces are continually seene with Vineyards and fertile Fields) you come to the Citie Gouza, both faire and great, hauing many Monasteries of Idols. Cloth of gold and silkes are made there, and the purest and finest Cambricks or Launes, and many common Innes for Strangers and Trauailers are found in that Citie: The Citizens are Artificers and Merchants. A mile without this Citie the way parteth, one leading West, the other South-east: that to the West leadeth through the Prouince of Cathay, but the other towards the Countrey of Mangi. From the Citie of Gouza to the Kingdome of Tainfu, you ride ten dayes thorow Cataso, alway finding many faire Cities and Castles, well traded with Vineyards and tilled Fields, from whence Wine is carried to Cataio, where it wants. There are many Mulberrie trees for Silke-workes: the People ciuill and Cities very frequent. The Citie Gouza. Parting of the way.

Tainfu is the name of the Kingdome, and of the chiefe Citie which is great and faire, hath much trading with store of munition, fit for the Cans Armies. The Wine about this Citie serueth the whole Prouince. Seuen dayes further westward is a goodly Countrey, beautified with many Castles and Cities, in which also great trade of merchandise is vsed. After which, you come to a Citie very great, named Pianfu, in which there is great abundance of Silke and Trading. Tainfu. Armes.

Westward from Pianfu standeth a very goodly Castle, named Thaigin, anciently built by a King called Dor. In it is a spacious Palace, wherein is a faire Hall, in which are painted all the famous Kings which haue reigned there; a faire spectacle. Of this King Dor they say that he was potent, and was attended onely by young Damsels, whereof his Court had great store. They also when hee listed to take his pleasure, carried him in a small light Chariot thorow the Castle, which is so fortified by Art and Nature, that the Gouernour thereof feared none, no not Vncan his Lord, against whom hee rebelled. But seuen men professing fidelitie and seruice to Dor, tooke him at aduantage in hunting, and brought him captiue to Presbyter Iohn or Vncan, who put him in vile clothes, and appointed him to keepe his Cattell, and set on him a strong guard till two yeeres were ended: after which, hee commanded him to bee brought before him, and attyred him in Princely apparell, and giuing him his pardon after sharpe admonition, sent him so well attended to the repossession of his Kingdome. Dor and his Damsel-court. The King of Achen, and the Mogol, doe likewise in part.

About twentie miles beyond the Castle Thaigin, is the Riuer Caramoran, which by reason of the exceeding bredth and depth thereof, hath no Bridge: and floweth to the Ocean. On the shoare thereof are many Cities and Castles built; wherein much trading is exercised. This Countrey aboundeth with Ginger, Silke, and Fowle, especially Feasants, that three of them are bought for a groat of Venice. There grow Reeds infinite store, so great that some are a foot, some are a foot and halfe in compasse, profitable to many vses. Passing this Riuer, after two dayes iourney is the famous Citie called Carianfu, where many clothes of Gold and Silke are made: heere growes Ginger, Galingale, Spike, and many Spices. The people are Idolaters. Proceeding seuen dayes iourney Westward, many Cities, and Townes, goodly Fields and Gardens are found; and euery where Mulberies for Silke-wormes. And they are Idolaters: but there are also Christians, Turkes, Nestorians, and some Saracens. There is much both of wilde Beasts and Fowle. If you proceed seuen dayes iourney further, you shall come to a certaine great Citie, named Quenzanfu, which is the chiefe Citie of the Kingdome, in which haue raigned many famous Kings: and at this day, the sonne of great Can, called Mangalu, hath the command thereof. That Countrey yeeldeth great plentie of Silke, Cloth of Gold, and all other things necessarie for furnishing of an Armie, and for preseruation of the life of Man. The Inhabitants worship Idols, and there are some Christians, and Turkes, and Saracens. Fiue miles without the Citie standeth the Palace of Mangalu, seated in a Playne, where are many Springs, Riuerets, and places of Game. There is a high wall encompassing fiue miles, where are all wilde Beasts and Fowles, in the midst is an excellent Palace, hauing many Halls and Chambers great and faire, all painted with Gold and Azure, and infinite Marbles adorning. The King with his Courtiers applieth himselfe to hunting of wilde Beasts, and taking of Fowle, and followeth his fathers steps in Iustice and Equitie, much beloued of his people. Caramoran. Carianfu. Quenzanfu. King Mangalu.

Going three dayes Iourney Westward from the said Palace, through a certaine goodly Plaine, where many Cities and Castles are (and abundance of Silke, Merchandise, and Arts) is a mountainous Countrie, where, in the Mountaines and Valleyes are frequent Habitations, and store of Lodgings, of the Prouince of Cunchin. The Inhabitants are Idolaters, and Husbandmen. Also, in Cunchin.

in that Countrie they hunt Lions, Beares, Stags, Roe-buckes, Deere, Wolues. That Plaine is two dayes iourney, and the Countrey is twentie dayes Westward all inhabited, hauing Mountaines, and Valleyes, and many Woods.

Achbaluch Mangi.

After that, twentie dayes towards the West, is a Prouince, named Achbaluch Mangi, that is, The white Citie of the borders of Mangi, which is wel peopled. This Prouince for two daies iourny hath a Plaine, with infinite habitations. After which follow Mountaines, Valleyes, and Woods, all inhabited twentie dayes iourney Westward. It hath store of wild beasts, and of those creatures which yeeld Muske. In this Prouince Ginger groweth in great plentie, as also Corne and Rice.

Mangi. Sindinfu.

After twentie dayes iourney thorow those Hills, is a Playne, and a Prouince in the Confines of Mangi, named Sindinfu. The chiefe Citie hath the same name, great and exceeding rich, being twentie miles circuit about. It hath had many rich and mightie Kings, but the old King dying, left three sonnes Successors of the Kingdome, which diuided the Citie into three parts, compassing euery part with their proper walls, all which notwithstanding were contayned within the former wall. But great Can subiected that Citie and Kingdome to his Dominion. Thorow this Citie runne many Riuers, in many places, and round about, some halfe a mile ouer, some two hundred paces, very deepe, and on them are many Bridges of stone, very faire, eight paces broad, set on both sides with marble Pillars, which beare vp a timber Frame that couers the Bridge; each Bridge hauing streets and shops all along st. When these Riuers are past the Citie, they becom one great riuer, called Quian, which runneth one hundred dayes iourney hence to the Ocean. Neere these Riuers are many Cities and Castles, and ships for Merchandise. Proceeding fiue dayes iourney further, through a certaine Playne, many Cities, Castles, and Villages are found, in which fine Lawnes are in great aboundance. Many wilde Beasts also are there.

Quian.

The greatnesse of the Prouince of Tebeth

After the Playne whereof wee now speake, is the Prouince of Tebeth, which great Can vanquished, and wasted: for in it are many Cities destroyed, and Castles ouerthrowne by the space of twentie dayes iourney. And becaus it is become a Wildernesse, wanting Inhabitants, wilde Beasts, and Lions are there encreased abundantly: and it is needfull that Trauellers carrie victuals with them. Very great Canes grow in this Countrey ten paces in length, and three palmes in thickenesse, and as much from knot to knot. When Trauellers therefore will rest by night secure from Beasts, they take great bundles of the greener Reeds, and putting fire vnder, kindle them. Which make such a cracking, and so great a noyse, that it may bee heard two miles off. Which terrible sound the wilde Beasts hearing, flee away. Moreouer, Horses, and other Beasts which Merchants vse for their iourney, hearing this noyse and cracking, are very much afraid, and many betaking themselues to flight, haue escaped from their Masters: but the wiser Trauellers binding their feet together with Fetters, detayne them with violence.

The subtill deuise of Trauellers.

Iustine in his 18. booke mentioneth the like of the Cyprians. Ælianus V. H. the 4. booke, chapter 1.

Twentie dayes Iourney ended, hauing passed ouer the Prouince of Tebeth, wee meet with Cities, and very many Villages, in which, through the blindnesse of Idolatrie, a wicked custome is vsed: for, no man there marrieth a wife that is a Virgin. Whereupon, when Trauellers and Strangers comming from other parts, passe through this Countrey, and pitch their Pauilions, the Women of that place hauing marriageable daughters, bring them vnto Strangers, desiring them to take them, and enioy their companie as long as they remayne there. Thus the pretier are chosen, and the rest returne home sorrowfull. And when they will depart, they are not suffered to carrie any away with them, but faithfully restore them to their Parents. The Mayden also requireth some toy or small Present of him who hath defloured her, which shee may shew as an argument and proofe of her deflouring. And shee that hath beene loued, and abused of most men, and shall haue many such fauours and toyes to shew to her Wooers, is accounted more noble, and may more easily and honourably be married. And when shee will goe honourably attired, shee hangeth all her Louers fauours about her necke, and the more acceptable shee was to many, of so much the more honour is shee adiudged worthie. But when they are once married to husbands, they are now no more suffered to be coupled with Prange men. And the men of this Countrie are very wary, that they offend not one another in this matter. They are Idolaters, and cruell men, thinking it no sinne if they rob, and exercise theft. They liue by hunting, and the fruits of the earth. Many beasts also are found with them, yeelding Muske called by them, Gudderi. They haue a proper Language, and haue no money, not the Paper money of Can, but spend Corals for money, and are clothed with the skins of beasts, or course Hempe. This Countrey appertayneth to the Prouince of Tebeth: for Tebeth is a very large Prouince, and hath beene sometime diuided into eight Kingdomes, hauing many Cities, and Townes, with many Mountaynes, Lakes, and Riuers, where Gold is found. The women weare Corall about their neckes, and hang it about the neckes of their Idols, as a precious thing. In this Countrey there are very great Dogs, as big as Asses, which take wilde Beasts, specially wilde Oxen, called Beyamini. They are exceeding Necromancers, causing tempests, lightnings, thunderbolts, and many other wonders. There are many sorts of Spices neuer brought into these parts. This Thebeth is (as all the former Prouinces) subiect to the Can.

Whose glorie is in their shame.

Corall money.

Eight Kingdomes of Tebeth.

Caindu.

On the West of the Prouince of Tebeth, bordereth the Prouince of Caindu, sometimes gouerned

Digitized by Google

ned by her owne Kings, now by the Gouernours of the Can. By the West you must not vnderstand that the Countries are in the West, but that wee departing from those parts which are betwixt the East and North-east come hither Westward: and therefore reckon them Westward. The people are Idolaters, haue many Cities, the chiefe called by the name of the Prouince, Caindu, built in the entry of the Prouince. There is a great salt Lake, in which is store of Pearles, white, not round, so abundant, that the price of them would become little worth, if they were suffered to be carried away at mens pleasures. Whereupon, it is prouided vpon payne of death, that none should presume to fish for Pearle in this Lake, without the licence of great Can. There is also a Mountaine in which is found a Minerall of Turkesse stones, confined to the like licence. Many Gadderi are also in this Prouince, which yeeld Muske. That Lake also which ingendreth Pearle in such plentie, aboundeth with Fishes: and the whole Countrey is full of wilde Beasts, that is to say, of Lions, Beares, Stags, Deere, Ounces, Roe-buckes; and diuers kinds of Birds. Cloues are found there in great plentie, which are gathered from small Trees, which haue boughs and leaues like the Bay-tree, but somewhat longer and straighter, white flowers and little, as are the Cloues, and when they are ripe they are blacke and duskie. Ginger, Cinamon, and diuers other Spices grow there in great plentie, which are not brought vnto our Countries. Wine groweth not in it, but in stead thereof they make excellent Drinke of Corne, Rice, and diuers other Spices. The Inhabitants of this Countrey worship Idols, by which they are so besotted, that they thinke they deserue their fauour, if they prostitute their wiues, sisters, and daughters to bee abused by Trauellers. For, when any Stranger commeth amongst them, euery housholder seeketh to giue him entertainment, and goe their way, leauing the femals and house to the Strangers will, and returne not vntill they depart. And the women presently hang vp some signe till he be gone, that when the Master of the familie returneth, he may know he is there still, and goe away againe, staying without till he be departed: which hee doth for the glorie of his Idols, hoping they will be more gracious vnto him. Certaine twigs of Gold are their money, vsing weights, and according to the weight of the twig is the value of the money. And this money is the greater money without stampe. They haue also a lesser, which they make after this manner. They boyle Salt in a Caldron an houres space, of which being congealed, they make little lumps like two-pennie loaues, which being made solid, is signed with the Princes Stampe, and make great profit thereof in sauage places, remote from Cities which haue store of Muske and Gold, and want Chapmen. These bartar their Gold for Salt to vse in their meats. Leauing this Prouince, they proceed fifteene dayes iourney further, and in the meane space meet with Castles, and many Villages, whose Inhabitants haue the same customes, that the Prouince of Caindu hath, and at length they come vnto a Riuer, called Brius, where the Prouince of Caindu is bounded. In this Riuer Gold is found in great plentie, which they call, Di Paiola (washed in vessels to seuer it from the sands and earth.) On the bankes thereof Cinamon groweth in great abundance. This Riuer runneth to the Ocean.

Gadderi. Cloues. Ginger, Cinamon. The Inhabitants are Idolaters and Bawdes. Money of Salt. The Riuer Brius yeelding Gold.

Hauing passed ouer the Riuer Brius, they come westward to the Prouince Caraian, which contayneth seuen Kingdomes. It is subiect to the Great Can, whose sonne, named Sentemur, is made King of that Kingdome, who is rich, wise and iust. The Inhabitants thereof are Idolaters. You ride fiue dayes and finde it all well peopled. They liue of their Beasts and Fruits. The Countrey breedeth excellent Horses: and it hath a peculiar and difficult language. At the end of those fiue dayes is the chiefe Citie, called Iaci, and it is great and famous, hath in it many Merchants and Artificers, and many sorts of People, Idolaters, Christians, Nestorians, and Saracens; but the most Idolaters. It hath Corne, and much Rice, although they eate no bread of Corne, because it is not wholsome, but they make bread of Rice. They make drinke also of it, and diuers Spices very pleasant. They vse white Porcelanes in stead of money, and for ornaments which are found at the Sea. Much Salt is made in this Citie of the water of salt Wells, whereof the King hath great profit. The men of this Countrey care not if any man come to their Wiues, so they giue their consent. There is also a Lake there very full of Fish, contayning an hundreth miles in compasse. Those men eate raw flesh of Hennes, Beefe, Mutton and Buffals, but prepared after this manner. They first breake it into small pieces, and after season it with excellent Spices; but the poorer sort shred it and lay it in Garlicke sawce, and eate it as wee doe boyled meate.

The seuen Kingdomes of Caraian. King Sentemur. The Citie Iaci. Money of Stones. Raw flesh.

Departing from the Citie of Iaci, hauing trauailed ten dayes iourney westward, yee come to the Prouince named, as is the chiefe Citie, Carazan, which Cogatin, sonne of Cublai, gouerneth. The Riuers there yeeld very much gold di paiola, and also that which is more solid, and the Mountaines gold of the veine, and they giue one stone of gold for six of siluer. They spend Porcelanes for money, brought thither from India. The Inhabitants are Idolaters: very great Serpents are bred in this Countrey, whereof some contayne ten paces in length, and in thicknesse ten spannes. They haue two little feet before nigh the head, with three talons or clawes like Lions, and the eyes bigger then a Groat loafe, very shining. They haue their mouthes and jawes so wide, that they are able to swallow a man; great and sharpe teeth: nor is there any man, or other liuing Creature, which may behold those Serpents without terror: there are found lesse, of eight Carazan. Riuers yeelding gold di paiola, that is washed in vessels from the sand & earth. Great Dragons.

Digitized by Google

The taking of them.

eight, sixe, or fiue paces long, which are taken after this manner. In the day time they vse to lie hid, by reason of the heat, in holes, out of the which they goe by night to seeke their prey, and deuoure what soeuer they get, Lions, Wolues, or others: and then goe to seeke water, leauing such a tract with their weight in the sands, as if some piece of timber had beene drawne there. Whereupon the Hunters fasten vnder the sands sharpe Iron prickes in their vsuall tracts, whereon they are wounded and slayne. The Crowes presently ring his knell, and by their craing cries inuite the Hunters, which come and flay him, taking forth his gall, profitable for diuers Medecines (amongst other things, for the biting of mad Dogs, a penie weight giuen in Wine; and far women in trauell, for carbuncles and pushes) and they sell the flesh deare as being exceeding delicate. There are bred great Horses in this Prouince, which by Merchants are carried into India. They vse to take one bone out of the tayle, least he should bend his tayle hither and thither, and esteeme it more comely that it hang downe right. They vse long Stirrups as the Frenchmen; which the Tartars and other Nations for their shooting vse short, because when they shoot, they rise vp. They vse Targets and Armour in the Warres, made of the hides of Buffals: they haue Lances and Crosse-bowes, and poyson all their Arrowes. Some of them which are ill minded, are said to carrie * poyson about them continually, that if they be taken, they may suddenly swallow it and death together, to preuent torture. For which cause the great Lords haue Dogs dung ready, which they force them to swallow, and that forceth them to vomit the poyson. Before the great Can subiected them, they vsed, that when any Stranger which seemed of good presence and parts lodged with them, they slue him by night, supposing that those good parts of that man might abide afterwards in that house: and this was the death of many.

* Poyson and Dogs dung.

A wicked custome.

Cardandan. Vociam.

Going from the Prouince Carazan, after fiue dayes iourney Westward, is the Prouince Cardandan, which also is subiect to great Can. The chiefe Citie thereof is called Vociam. The Inhabitants thereof vse Porcelanes and weighed pieces of Gold in stead of money: for in that Countrey, and many other lying round about, Siluer mines are not found, and they giue one ounce of Gold for fiue ounces of Siluer, and great gayne is made by the change. The men and women of that Countrey couer their teeth with thinne plates of Gold, which they so fit vnto them, that the teeth themselues seeme (as it were) to be set in the plates. The men about their armes and legs make lists, pricking the places with Needles, and putting thereon a blacke indelible tincture. And these lists or markes are esteemed with them a great galantrie. They giue their minds to nothing but riding, hunting, hawking, and exercises of Armes, leauing the household cares to the women, who are helped therein by slaues which they buy or take in Warre. When a woman is brought to bed, shee forsakes the bed, washeth the child and dresseth it, and then the husband * lieth downe and keepes the child with him fortie dayes, not suffering it to depart: is visited meane while of friends and neighbours, to cheare and comfort him. The woman lookes to the house, carrie the husband his broths to his bed, and giues sucke to the child by him. Their Wine is made of Rice and Spice, their meat Rice, and raw flesh dressed, as is before mentioned. In this Prouince there are no other Idols, saue that euery familie adoreth the oldest man in the house, of whom they say come themselues and all they haue. They dwell for the most part, in wilde and mountainous places. But Forrainers come not to those Mountaines, because the ayre would kill them, being in Summer very corrupt. They haue no letters, but make their Contracts and Obligations by tallies of wood, the halfe whereof the one keepeth, and the other, the other: which being afterward payd, the tallie is rendred. There are no Physicians in this Prouince, nor in Casndu, Vociam and Carazan: but when any is sicke, they call the Magicians, or Idoll Priests together, and the sicke partie declareth his disease vnto them: then the Magicians dance, and sound certaine instruments, and bellow forth songs in honour of their Gods, while at length the Deuill entreth into one of them skipping and playing in the dance. Then leauing the dance, they consult with him that is possessed, for what cause that disease happned vnto him, and what is to be done for his recouerie. The Deuill answereth by him, because he hath done this or that, or because he hath offended this or that God; therefore, he fell into this disease. Then the Magicians intreat that God to pardon him that offence, promising, that if the sicke partie recouer, he shall offer a Sacrifice of his owne bloud. But if the Deuill thinke the weake partie to be sicke of such a disease that he caunot be freed from the same, he vseth to answere: This man hath so grieuously offended that God, that he cannot by any sacrifices bee appeased. But if he thinke he shall recouer, he commandeth to offer so many Rammes hauing blacke heads, and to prepare so many Magicians with their wiues, by them to offer Sacrifices, and that God may then bee appeased towards him. Which being heard, his kinsmen quickly cause those things to be done which the Deuill commanded: they kill Rammes, and sprinckle their bloud in the ayre, and the Magicians assembled with their Witches, light great Candles, and perfume the whole house with incense, making fume of Lignum Aloes, and sprinckle the broth of the flesh in the ayre, together with the potion made of Spices: all which being duely performed, they skip about againe in a dance in honour of that Idoll, which is supposed to haue beene fauourable to the sicke, singing, and making an horrible noyse with their voyces: These things

The rarenesse of Siluer.

Golden couerings for the teeth.

* Strabo in his third booke mention th the same to be done with the Spaniards in some places. Apollonius report th the like custome, with the Tibareni. Lerius of the Brasilians.

Tallies of contracts.

The deceitfull medicine of the Magicians.

Digitized by Google

things being done, they aske the poſſeſſed againe, whether by theſe things the Idol be appeaſed. If he anſwer, No, they preſently prepare themſelues to fulfill another command of his. But if he anſwer, that he is ſatisfied, they ſit downe at the Table, and eate the fleſh offered to the Idoll with great ioy, and drinke the confections. And dinner being ended, and the Magicians payed, euery one returneth to his owne home. And when the ſicke hath thus eſcaped the diſeaſe, through the prouidence of God, and hath beene reſtored to health, they attribute it to the Idoll whom they ſacrificed. But if he die, then they ſay, the Idoll was defrauded, and that ſome of the Sacrificers taſted thereof firſt. This is not done to all but to the Richer, the Deuill deluding their blindneſſe.

§. VII.

Of the Prouince of Mien and Bengala, how they were conquered to the Can: Of Cangigu, Amu, Tholoman, Cintigui, and ſome other parts of Cataio. And of the Conqueſt of Mangi.

ANno Dom. 1272. the Great Can ſent an Armie into the Kingdome of Vociam, and Carazan to guard it, to the number of twelue thouſand expert warriors, vnder the conduct of Neſtardin a wiſe Captaine. As ſoone as the King of Mien, and the King of Bengala heard of their comming, aſſembling their forces, they ioyned Horſe and Foot together, about threeſcore thouſand, and about a thouſand Elephants bearing Caſtles, and in euery Caſtle twelue or ſixteene * armed men were placed. With this Armie the King of Mien ſpeedily marched towards the Citie Vociam, where the Armie of the Tartars reſted. Neſtardin comming forth with a manly courage to fight againſt the Enemie, encamped againſt a certaine great Wood, knowing that the Elephants with thoſe Towres were not able to enter into the Wood. Then the King of Mien marcheth forth to meete them. But the Tartarian Horſes perceiuing the Elephants to be preſent, which were placed in the firſt front of the battaile, were terrified with ſo great feare, that they could not by any violence or policy be prouoked againſt the Elephants. The Tartars therefore were compelled to alight from their Horſes, and tying them to the Trees of the Wood, they come to fight on foot againſt the Elephants. In the front of the battaile, all the Tartars purpoſely ſhot a multitude of Arrowes againſt the Elephants, which not able to indure the ſtrokes of the Arrowes, ſpeedily betooke themſelues to flight, and with ſwift courſe went all vnto the next Wood, and brake their Caſtles, and ouer-threw the armed men ſitting in them, which the Tartars ſeeing, runne vnto their Horſes, and getting vp vpon them, furiouſly fall vpon the Kings Armie with great violence: and many of either Armie fell, at length the King of Mien being put to flight, left the victorie to the Tartars, who haſten to the Wood, and taking many Captiues, vſed their helpe to take two hundred of theſe Elephants. And euer ſince Great Can hath vſed Elephants in his Armies which before hee had not accuſtomed. Hereupon alſo he vanquiſhed the Countries of the King of Mien and Bengala, and ſubiected them to his Empire.

* This by relation; for they vſe not to carry aboue three or foure.

His ſtratagem.

Fight & flight of Elephants.

Departing from the Prouince of Cardandan, is a great deſcent, which continueth two dayes and a halfe, nor is there any habitation there, but a very large Playne, in the which, three dayes in the weeke many men meete together for Trading. Many deſcend from the great Mountaines of that Countrey, bringing gold with them to change for ſiluer, to wit, giuing one ounce of gold for fiue ounces of ſiluer: whereupon, many Merchants from forraine Nations come thither, who bringing ſiluer carrie away gold, and bring thither merchandiſes to ſell to thoſe people. For to thoſe high Mountaines, in which, they who gather gold in that Countrey, dwell, no ſtranger can come, ſeeing the way is vnpaſſable and intricate. When you are paſt that Playne, going toward the South, Mien bordereth vpon India, and the way lyeth fifteene dayes iourney in places not inhabited and wooddy, in which innumerable Elephants, Vnicornes, and other wild beaſts wander.

Market in a diſ-habited Playne.

Change of gold and ſiluer.

Vnicornes or Rhinoceroteſ

After that fifteene dayes is found Mien, a great and noble Citie, the head of the Kingdome, and ſubiect to Great Can. The Inhabitants thereof haue a peculiar language, and are Idolaters. In this Citie there was a King, who being readie to die, commanded that neere to his Sepulchre, there ſhould be made two Towres in Pyramide faſhion, one at the head, the other at the feete, both of Marble, of the heigth of ten fathom. On the top was a round Ball. He cauſed one to bee couered all ouer with gold a finger thicke, and the other with ſiluer. And vpon the top round about the Balls, many little golden and ſiluer Bells were hanged, which at the blowing of the winde gaue a certaine ſound. The Moniment or Sepulchre was alſo couered with Plates, partly of gold, partly of ſiluer. He commanded this to be made in honor of his Soule, and that his memorie ſhould neuer decay among men. And when Great Can minded to ſubdue this Citie, hee ſent a valiant Captaine, and the greateſt part of his Armie were Ieſters, of which his Court is alway furniſhed. Theſe winning the Citie, would not violate that Moniment without the Cans knowledge, Mien.

Digitized by Google

knowledge, who hearing that the deceſſed had made it for the honor of his Soule, would not ſuffer it to be ſtirred: for the manner of the Tartars is, not to violate thoſe things which belong to the dead. In this Prouince are many Elephants, wild Oxen, great and faire Stagges and Deere, and other wild Beaſts of diuers kindes.

The pietie of the Tartars towards the dead

Bengala.

The Prouince Bengala bordereth vpon India toward the South, which Great Can ſubdued, when Marco Polo liued in his Court. The Countrey hath a proper King, and peculiar language. The Inhabitants thereof are all Idolaters: they haue Maſters which keepe Schooles and teach Idolatries and Inchantments; a thing common to all the great Men of that Countrey. They eate Fleſh, Rice and Milke: they haue Cotton in great plentie, and by reaſon thereof, much and great trading is exerciſed there: they abound alſo with Spike, Galangal, Ginger, Sugar, and diuers other Spices. Huge Oxen alſo are there, comparable with Elephants in height but not in thickneſſe. Many Eunuches are made in this Prouince, which are afterwards ſold vnto Merchants. This Prouince continueth thirtie dayes iourney, in the end whereof going Eaſtward is the Prouince of Cangigu.

Oxen as bigge as Elephants.

Eunuches.

Cangigu.

The Kings many wiues.

Cangigu hath his proper King and peculiar language. The Inhabitants thereof worſhip Idols, and are Tributaries to Great Can. Their King hath about three hundreth Wiues. Much gold is found in this Prouince, and many Spices, but they cannot eaſily be tranſported, ſeeing that countrey is farre diſtant from the Sea. There are alſo many Elephants in it, and much game of many wild Beaſts. The Inhabitants thereof liue with Fleſh, Milke and Rice. They want Wine, but they make good drinke of Rice and Spices. Aſwell the Men as the Women vſe to embroider their Faces, Necks, Hands, Bellies and Legs, making the Images of Lions, Dragons and Birds, and ſo firmely imprint them that they cannot eaſily bee put out: and the more ſuch Images any one hath, by ſo much is hee eſteemed themore gallant. And there be Profeſſors of this fooliſh Art of fleſh embroiderie, which vſe no other Trade but this Needle-worke, and dying of Fooles-skinnes.

Embroidred Gallants.

Amu.

Amu is an Eaſterly Prouince ſubiect to Great Can, whoſe Inhabitants worſhip Idols, and haue a peculiar language. They abound with Herds of Cattell, and haue plentie of Victuals, and many Horſes and thoſe excellent, which Merchants bring into India. They haue alſo many Buffes and Oxen, becauſe there are delicate Paſtures there. As well Men as Women, weare bracelets of gold and ſiluer of great value on their armes, alſo the like on their legs: but thoſe of the Women are of moſt value. From Amu to Cangigu are fiue and twentie dayes iourney.

Tho'oman.

The Prouince Tholoman is eight dayes iourney diſtant to the Eaſt from Amu, ſubiect vnto Great Can, hauing a peculiar language, and worſhipping Idols. The Men and Women thereof are tall and goodly, of a browne colour. The Countrey is very well inhabited, hauing many and ſtrong Caſtles and Cities. The men are exerciſed in Armes and accuſtomed to warre. They burne the bodies of their dead, and incloſing the Reliques of their bones in a Cheſt, hide them in the Caues of the Mountaines, that they cannot bee touched either of man or beaſt. Gold is in great plentie there, and in ſtead of money they vſe Porcelanes brought from India, as alſo in Cangigu and Amu.

From the Prouince Tholoman, the way leadeth towards the Eaſt on a Riuer, by which are many Cities and Caſtles, and at the end of twelue dayes you come to the great Citie Cintigui. The Countrey is ſubiect to Great Can, and the Inhabitants thereof are addicted to Idolatrie. Excellent Clothes are made in this Countrey of the barkes of Trees, wherewith they are clothed in the Summer. Very many Lions are there, ſo that for feare of them, none dare ſleepe without doores by night. The ſhips which goe vp and downe the Riuer, for feare of the Lions, are not faſtned to the banke. There are great Dogs in the ſame Countrey, ſo hardie and ſtrong, that they feare not to aduenture on the Lion: And it often hapneth, that two Dogs and one Archer kill a Lion: for the Dogs ſet on by the man giue the onſet, and the Lions nature is preſently to ſeeke ſhelter from ſome Tree, that the Dogs may not come behind him: neither yet will his great heart ſuffer him to runne from the Dogs, leſt he ſhould ſeeme afraid; but he holds his ſtately pace, the man meanwhile ſhooting, and the Dogs faſtning on his hinder parts, but with ſuch quickneſſe, that when the Lion turnes on them they are gone. And then doth this magnanimous Beaſt hold on his way againe to ſeeke ſuch Tree ſuccour, that with Bitings and Arrowes he ſometimes comes ſhort, and with expenſe of bloud dyeth by the way. This Countrey aboundeth with Silke, which by Merchants is carried to diuers Prouinces by the Riuer. They liue on Merchandiſe, their money is Paper. They are valiant in Armes. At the end of ten dayes is the Citie Sidinfu, and twentie dayes from thence is Gingui, and foure dayes thence is Pazanfu towards the South, and is in Catai returning by the other ſide of the Prouince. The people are Idolaters and burne their dead. There are alſo certaine Chriſtians which haue a Church: all vnder the Can and vſe Paper money. They make Clothes of Gold, and Silke, and Launes very fine. By this Citie (which hath many Cities vnder it) goes a great Riuer which carries ſtore of merchandiſe to Cambalu, made by many Channels to paſſe thither. But wee will paſſe hence, and proceeding three dayes iourney, ſpeake of Cianglu.

Cintigui.

Cloth made of Barkes: which are now vſed in Congo.

Great and hardie Dogs.

Sidinfu.

Cingui.

Pazanfu.

Cianglu.

Cianglu is a great Citie toward the South of the Prouince of Catai, ſubiect to the Can, the Inhabitants are Idolaters, and burne their dead. Their money is the (Mulberie) Paper coine of the Can.

Can. In this Citie and the Territories they make ſtore of Salt, for that Earth is very ſalt, and out of it they get Salt, after this manner. They heape vp Earth in manner of an Hill, and powre water vpon it, which drawes the ſaltneſſe of the Earth vnto it, and then runnes into certaine Conduits, and is boyled in Pannes till it be congealed to Salt faire and white, to the Cans and their great gaine, being carried into other Countries to ſell. There are great Peaches very good, which weigh two pounds a piece. Fiue dayes iourney beyond the Citie Ciangiu, in Cataio Southward ſtandeth another Citie, named Ciangli (in which way are many Cities and Caſtles, all ſubiect to the Can) through the middeſt whereof runneth a great Riuer, very conuenient for ſhipping laden with merchandiſes. The Salt of Cangiu. Great Peaches Ciangli.

Six dayes iourney thence to the South (all which way hath great Cities and Caſtles of Idolaters) is the noble Kingdome and great Citie Tudinfu, which had his proper King, before it was ſubdued to Great Can, Anno 1272. and hath eleuen Royall Cities, famous for traffick, ſubiect to the iuriſdiction thereof. It is very delectable for Gardens and Fruits, rich in Silkes. The Can ſent to the gouernment hereof one of his Barons, named Lucanſor, with eightie thouſand Horſe: who rebelled againſt his Lord, but was ſlaine by a power of one hundred thouſand vnder two other Barons ſent againſt him, and the Countrey reduced to obedience. Seuen dayes off (riding by many Cities and Caſtles of Idolaters, plentifull of all things) towards the South is the famous Citie, named Singuimatu, vnto the which on the South, a certaine great Riuer runneth, which being diuided by the Inhabitants of the place into two Riuers, floweth partly to the Eaſt towards Cataio, and partly to the Weſt towards Mangi. By theſe Riuers, innumerable Veſſels for multitude, and incredible for their greatneſſe and wealth, bring neceſſaries to both Prouinces. If you goe ſixteene dayes iourney towards the South from Singuimatu, you ſtill meet with Cities and Townes where much trading is exerciſed. The Inhabitants of theſe Countries are Idolaters, ſubiect to Great Can. Tudinfu. Singuimatu.

After that ſixteene dayes, you come vnto a great Riuer, named Caramoran, which is ſaid to flow out of the Kingdome of Vncan or Presbyter Iohn, of the North. It is very deepe, and carrieth Ships of great burthen: it is alſo ſtored with Fiſh. Within one dayes iourney of the Sea there are in this Riuer fifteene thouſand Saile, each of which carrieth fifteene Horſes and twentie Men, beſides Victualls and the Mariners. This is the Cans Fleet kept there in readineſſe, to carrie an Armie to any of the Ilands in the Sea, if they ſhould rebell; or to any remote Region Neere the banke of the Riuer where theſe Ships are kept, is Coiganzu, and ouer againſt it Quanzu, one a great Citie, the other ſmall. After you are paſt that Riuer, you enter into the noble Kingdome of Mangi. And doe not thinke that wee haue handled in order the whole Prouince of Cataio: yea, I haue not ſpoken of the twentieth part. For, M. Polo paſſing by the ſaid Prouince, hath onely deſcribed the Cities in his way, leauing thoſe on both hands, and thoſe betwixt theſe, to preuent tediouſneſſe. Caramoran.

The Prouince of Mangi is the moſt rich and famous that is found in the Eaſt: and An. 1269. had a certaine King, named Fanfur, richer and mightier then any which had reigned there in an hundred yeeres, but a man peaceable and full of almeſdeeds, ſo beloued of his ſubiects, that thereby, and by the ſtrength of the Countrie, he ſeemed inuincible. Whereby it came to paſſe, that the King aſwell as the People, loſt the vſe and exerciſe of Warre and Armes. All the Cities were compaſſed with Ditches, a Bow ſhoot broad, full of Water. Hee held in pay no Horſes, becauſe he feared none. And hence it came to paſſe, that the King giuing himſelfe to pleaſure more then was meete, enioyed continuall delights. He maintayned about a thouſand goodly Laſſes, with which he paſſed his time in pleaſure. He nouriſhed Iuſtice, and preſerued Peace. No man durſt offend his Neighbour, and diſturbe the Peace, for feare of ſeuere vnpartiall puniſhment. So that Artificers would often leaue their Shops full of Wares open by night, and yet none would preſume to enter into them. Trauailers and ſtrangers moſt ſafely walked day and night, throughout that whole Kingdom, fearing no man. The King himſelfe alſo was pitifull and mercifull towards the Poore, and forſooke not them that were oppreſſed with neceſſitie, or pinched with penurie. Beſides, euery yeere hee tooke vp twentie thouſand young Infants, caſt off by their Mothers, which through pouertie were not able to keepe them, which he brought vp, and ſet them when they were growne to ſome Trade, or married the young Men with the Maids which hee had in like ſort educated Fanfur King of Mangi, which is now called China.

Cublai Can was of a differing diſpoſition to Fanfur, and delighted onely in Warres and Conqueſts, and to make himſelfe Great; he ſent a great Armie leuied of Horſe and Foot, and made one, named Chinſan Baian (that is, one hundred eyes) Generall thereof. Hee, therefore comming with his Armie and a Fleet to the Prouince of Mangi, firſt ſummoned the citie Coiganzu to yeeld obedience to his Emperour. Who refuſing the ſame, hee departed without any aſſault giuen to the Citie: and required the ſame of the ſecond Citie; which likewiſe refuſing, he marched forward to the third, and fourth, and receiued the like anſwere of them all. But he aſſaulted the next with great courage, and vanquiſhed the ſame by force, and ſlue euery mothers child therein; which ſo affrighted and terrified the reſt, that they all preſently yeelded. Moreouer, Great Can ſent another great Armie after the former, with both which Armies hee marched againſt the chiefe Citie Quinſai, Chinſan Baian, another Argus in the ſignification of his name.

Digitized by Google

Quinsai, the Kings Court.

Quinsai, where the King of Mangi resided: who mightily terrified, as neuer hauing seene any battell, fled with his wealth and treasures in ships which he had prepared to certaine impregnable Ilands in the Ocean (where he after died) committing the custodie of the Citie of Quinsai to his wife, bidding her to defend it as well as shee could; for being a woman shee need not feare death, if shee were taken. It is to be obserued, that King Fanfur had beene told by his Diuiners, that his Kingdome should neuer be taken from him, but by one which had an hundred eyes: which the Queene knew, and therefore was still in hope not to lose the Citie, howsoeuer streightned; thinking it impossible for one man to haue an hundred eyes. But one day she heard, that the Commander of the Tartars was called Baian Chinsan, that is to say, An hundred eyes, and was much terrified: wherefore, calling for the Commander of the Tartars Armie, thinking him to bee the man which the Astrologers spake of, shee deliuereth the Citie vnto him. Which being heard, the Citizens, and Inhabitants of the whole Prouince, reuolted to the obedience of great Can. The Queene was sent vnto the Court of great Can, and was most honourably receiued by him, and maintayned like a Queene. And now wee will speake of the Cities of * Mangi.

The flight of King Fanfur.

* This name Mangi and China, are so different that they may seem diuers Regions. But the Reader is to obserue, that China is a name to the Chinois vnknowne, and that Kingdome hath appellations diuersly diuersified: either from the Familie reigning (which now is called Ciu, and the Kingdome Min, and Min Ciu, are not farre from Mangi) and by the Tartars, when they reigned, it was called Han, and before, Cheu, which both put together make Han Cheu, without any great dissonance from Mangi: Or else by generall appellations common to all ages, &c. See our following relations of Ricci and Trigautius.

§. VIII.

Of the Cities of Mangi (now called China*) and the rarities thereof: the many wonders of* Quinsai, the Palaces, Pleasures, Rites and Gouernment, obserued by the Natiues, and the Tartars.

Coiganzu.

Coiganzu is a faire and rich Citie, situate towards the South-east, and East in the entrance of the Prouince of Mangi, (from Cataio, whence the Authour passed) where are alway great store of ships, being seated on the Riuer Caramoran. Great store of Merchandise is carried thither. Salt is also made there in great abundance.

The Salt of Coniganui.

Going from Coiganzu, you ride towards the South-east one dayes iourney on a stone * Causie; on both sides whereof are great Fennes with deepe waters, whereon they may passe with ships: neither is there any entrance into Mangi but by shipping (as the Captaine of the Can did) but by this Causie. At the end of that dayes iourney is a Citie called Panghin great and faire. The people make clothes of Gold and of Silke, are Merchants and Idolaters. The Paper money of great Can is receiued throughout that whole Countrey. It is plentifull of all necessaries of life.

* Terraglio.

Panghin.

Caim.

To the Citie Caim, is from Panghin one dayes iourney South-east, and this is also a famous Citie, abounding with fish, and game, of beasts, and fowle: especially Phesants are found there, in exceeding great plentie, as great as Peacocks, of which you may haue three for one Venetian groat.

Phesants.

Tingui.

Proceeding further hence one dayes iourney, you come thorow a well manured and peopled Countrey to the Citie Tingui, which although it be not great, yet hath it exceeding great plentie of victuals. They are Merchants, and very many ships are also there: plentie of beasts and fowles: It is seated to the South-east, and on the left hand towards the East three dayes iourney off is the Ocean: and in the space betweene, are very many Salt pits; and they make great store of Salt. After this, is Cingui a great Citie, whence the Countrey is furnished with Salt, whereof the Can makes great profit, beyond beliefe. They are Idolaters, and haue Paper money. From Cingui riding towards the South-east, you meet with the noble Citie Iangui, vnder the gouernment whereof are other Cities, seuen and twentie in number. And in that Citie resideth one of the twelue Barons which are Gouernours of Prouinces chosen by the great Can. They are Idolaters, and liue of Merchandise. They make Armes and Harnasse for warre. And Master Marco had the sole gouernment thereof by commission of the great Can, three yeeres together in stead of one of those Barons.

Salt pits. Cingui.

Iangui, Head of 27. Cities.

M. Polo Gouernour of Iangui.

* Nanghin is a Prouince to the West, one of the greatest and noblest of Mangi, a place of great Merchandise. They are Idolaters, spend Paper money, haue store of beasts and fowle, wilde and tame. They make clothes of Gold and Silke, and are rich Merchants, and the Countrey is very commodious to the Can, specially by Customes of Merchandise. There is great plentie of Corne. Sianfu is a noble and great Citie in the Prouince of Mangi, and hath twelue rich and great Cities subiect vnto her iurisdiction. They make great store of Silkes and cloth of Gold, haue plentie of game and fowle, and of all things pertayning to a Citie of note: so strong, that it was three yeeres besieged, and could not be vanquished by the Armie of the Tartars, when the Prouince of Mangi was subdued. For it is compassed on euery side with Lakes, that there was was no way vnto it, but on the North: so that ships came and went continually, bringing plentie of victuals: which not a little afflicted great Can. The two brethren Master Nicolo, and Master Maffio, then in his Court, hearing hereof, went to him, and offered their service to deuise certaine Engines after the manner of the West, able to shoot a stone of three hundred weight, thereby to kill men, and ruine houses. The Can appointed them the best Carpenters which were Nestorian Christians, who made three (Mangani) of those Engines in a short space, which were proued and approued before him, and by ships sent vnto his Armie. Planting them therefore against the Citie Sianfu; they began to cast great stones into the Citie: and the first falling vpon a certaine house, brake it for the most part, with the violence thereof. Which the besieged Inhabitants seeing, were very much astonished, and yeelded themselues, and became subiect to the obedience of great Can, on the same conditions with the rest of Mangi; to the great repute of the two Venetian brethren.

Nanghin.

Mangani, a kind of Engines. It hereby appeares that they had not the vse of the Cannon.

From the Citie Sianfu, to a certaine Citie, named Singui, are numbred fifteene miles South-eastward, which although it be not great, yet hath it an exceeding multitude of Ships, being seated vpon the greatest Riuer in the world, called Quian, the bredth of which in certaine places, containeth ten miles, in other eight, and in some sixe. But the length thereof extendeth it selfe aboue an hundred dayes iourney from the head to the Sea. Innumerable other Riuers flow into it, which runne thorow diuers Regions, and are nauigable, and make it so great; incredible store of Merchandise is brought by this Riuer. There are also very many other Cities, in number about two hundred, which participate of this Riuer: it floweth through the bounds of sixteene Prouinces. The greatest commoditie is Salt, wherewith all the Cities which communicate in these waters are stored. Master Marco saw at one time at Singui fiue thousand ships, and yet other Cities on that Riuer haue more. All those ships are couered, and haue but one mast, and one sayle, and vsually carrie foure thousand, and so vpwards, some of them twelue thousand Venetian Cantari. Neither vse cordage of Hempe, except for the mast and sayle, but haue Canes fifteence paces long, which they riue into thinne parts from one end to the other, and binding the cut pieces together, and wreathing them, make very long ropes, so that some of them contayne three hundred fathom in length. And those lines are as strong as Hempen, and serue for hales and cables to draw their ships vp and downe the Riuer, each ship hauing ten or twelue Horses for that purpose. On that Riuer in many places are rockie hillockes, on which are built Monasteries to their Idols: and all the way are Villages and places inhabited.

Singui.

Quian.

Cayngui is a little Citie, vpon the foresaid Riuer South-eastward, where euery yeere is brought store of Corne and Rise, carried the most part to Cambalu. For they may passe thither by Lakes and Riuers, and by one deepe large hand-made Riuer, which the Can caused to be made for passage from one Riuer to another, and from Mangi to Cambalu without going to Sea. Which worke is goodly and wonderfull for the site and length, and more for the profit thereby to the Cities. Hee hath made also great Causies to goe on land by those waters commodiously. In the mids of the said Riuer is an Iland of a Rocke, on which is erected a great Temple and Monasterie, in which are two hundred Idolatrous Monkes. This is the Mother-temple and Monasterie of many others.

Cayngui.

Hand-made Riuer.

Cinghianfu is a Citie of Mangi, rich in Merchandise, plentifull of game, of wilde beasts and fowle, and of victuall. In it are two Churches of Nestorian Christians, built Anno 1274. when the great Can sent Gouernour thither, Marsachis a Nestorian, which built them.

Cinghianfu.

From the Citie Cinghianfu, in three dayes iourney South-eastward, you find many Cities and Castles all Idolaters, and at last come to the Citie Tinguigui, a great and faire Citie, abounding with all kinde of victuals. When Chinsam Baian, Generall of the Armie of the Tartars conquered the Prouince of Mangi, he sent many Christians (called Alani) against this Citie, which was double walled; into the inner they retired; into the other the Alans entred, and found there abundance of Wine, whereof after a bad iourney, they began to drinke so largely, that they were all drunke: and the Citizens in their sleepe suddenly falling vpon them, slue them all, none escaping. But Baian hearing this, sent another great Armie against those Citizens, which shortly vanquishing the Citie, in reuenge, put them all to the sword, leauing none aliue.

Tinguigui.

The great and excellent Citie Singui, containeth in circuit twentie miles. Great multitudes of people are in it: it hath many rich Merchants, and cunning Artificers, and it hath also very many Physicians, and Magicians, and Wisemen or Philosophers. In the Mountaines of this Citie, Rhubarb and Ginger grow in great plenty. This Citie hath sixteen Cities vnder the iurisdiction thereof, where much trading is vsed, and very many curious Arts are exercised. Very many Silkes are made there. The word Singui, in their language, signifieth, The Citie of the Earth, as also they haue another Citie, which they call Quinsai, that is to say, The Citie of Heauen. From Singui one dayes iourney is Vagin, where is also abundance of Silke, and cunning Artificers with many Merchants.

Singui.

Physicians and Philosophers.

Rhubarbe.

GOing from Vagin three dayes, continually you find Cities, Castles, and Villages, well peopled and rich. The People are Idolaters, vnder the Can: at the end of those dayes you

Digitized by Google

Quinſai, the Earthly Citie of Heauen. O how much better is the heauenly Citie on Earth in grace, & more then moſt incomparable that heauenly Citie of Heauen in glorie? ap. 21. & 22.

comie to Quinſai, which for the excellency hath that name (interpreted Citie of Heauen) for in the World there is not the like, in which are found ſo many pleaſures, that a man would thinke he were in Paradiſe. In this Citie Maſter Marco Polo hath often beene, and conſidered the ſame with great diligence, obſeruing the whole ſtate thereof, ſetting downe the ſame in his memorials, as here ſhall be declared briefly. This Citie by common opinion, is an hnndred miles in circuit; for the ſtreets and channels thereof are very wide. There are Market places exceeding large. On the one ſide a cleere Lake of freſh water, on the other a great Riuer which enters in many places, and carries away all the filth of the Citie, and ſo runneth into that Lake, thence continuing his courſe to the Ocean: which cauſeth a good ayre, and commodious paſſage both by land, and by theſe channels. There may goe both Carts and Barkes to carrie neceſſaries: and the report is, that there are twelue thouſand Bridges great and ſmall, and thoſe on the chiefe channels are ſo high that a ſhip without her Maſt may paſſe vnder, and aboue, Chariots and Horſes.

The ſituation. 12000. bridges.

The Ditch.

On the other ſide the Citie is a Ditch, about fortie miles long, which encloſeth it on that ſide; large and full of water from the Riuer, made by the antient Kings of that Prouince, both to receiue the ouerflowings of the water, and to fortifie the Citie: the earth which was taken out being layd within as a banke or hill encompaſſing. There are ten chiefe Market-places (beſides infinite others along the ſtreets) which are ſquare, halfe a mile in each ſquare. And from the forepart of them is a principall ſtreet fortie paces wide, running right from one end of the Citie to the other, with many Bridges trauerſing it. And euery foure miles is found ſuch a Market-place, two miles, as is ſaid, in compaſſe. There is alſo one large channell, which runnes againſt the ſaid ſtreet, behind the Market-places, on the next banke whereof are erected great Store-houſes of ſtone, where the Merchants from India, and other parts lay vp their Merchandiſe, at hand, and commodious to the Market-places. In each of theſe Market-places is a concourſe three dayes in the weeke of perſons betwixt fortie and fiftie thouſand, which bring thither all things that can be deſired for mans life, of all beaſts of game, and fowles; that Lake yeelding ſuch commodiouſneſſe to bring them vp, that for a Venetian groat you may haue two Geeſe, and foure Duckes for as much. Then follow the Butcher-rowes of Veale, Beefe, Kid, and Lambe, which the great and rich men eat; for the poore eat vncleane meats without reſpect. There are all ſorts of herbs and fruits continually, and amongſt the reſt huge Peares, weighing ten pounds a piece, white within like paſte, and very fragrant: Peaches yellow and white very delicate: Grapes grow not there, but are brought from other places dried very good, and Wine alſo, but not ſo eſteemed in thoſe parts, that of Rice and Spices contenting them. Euery day from the Ocean is brought vp the Riner (which is the ſpace of fiue and twentie miles) great quantitie of fiſh, beſides that of the Lake, ſo much as a man would thinke would neuer be bought, and yet in a few houres is gone. All thoſe Market-places are encompaſſed with high houſes, and vnderneath are ſhops of Artificers, and all ſort of Merchandiſes, Spiceries, Iewels, Pearles, and in ſome onely Rice-wine. Many ſtreets anſwere one another in the ſaid Market-places. In ſome of them are many Baths of cold waters accommodated with attendants of both ſexes, a thing which from children they vſe themſelues vnto. There are chambers alſo in the ſaid Baths with hot waters for ſtrangers which are not accuſtomed to the cold waters. They waſh euery day; neither doe they eat before they haue waſhed.

Ten Market places.

The high ſtreet

The mayne Chanell.

The Markets.

Peares of ten pound.

Trades of diuers ſorts.

In other ſtreets are mercenarie Proſtitutes in ſuch number, that I dare not report it: and not onely neere the Market-places, where they haue their places appointed, but thorow all the Citie they ſtand very pompouſly with great odours, many ſeruants, and their houſes adorned. Theſe are very practike in making ſports, and daliances, and ſweeteſt pleaſures rauiſhing (fooles) forth of themſelues. In other ſtreets are the Phyſicians, the Aſtrologers, they which teach to reade and write, and infinite other Trades. At each end of euery Market-place is a Palace, where Lords and Gouernours are appointed by the King to determine difficulties which happen betwixt Merchants or others, as alſo to looke to the Guards on the Bridges, puniſhing the negligent. Alongſt the principall Street (whereof wee ſpake) on both ſides are great Palaces with Gardens; and neere them houſes of Artificers, and ſuch multitudes of people continually going to and fro, that a man would wonder whence ſuch multitudes ſhould bee prouided of victuals. And Maſter Marco learned of an officer of the Cuſtome-houſe in Quinſai, that by reckonings apeared the daily expence of Pepper in Quinſai, to be three and fortie Some, and euery Soma is two hundred twentie three pounds. Hence may be gheſſed the quantitie of Victuals, Fleſh, Wine, Spiceries, were there ſpent.

A ſaucy Citie.

The Inhabitants are Idolaters, ſpend Paper money, are white and faire complexion, apparelled for the moſt part in Silke, which growes in all that Territorie abundantly, beſides that which is brought from other places. There are twelue principall myſteries, each of which haue one thouſand ſhops; and in each ſhop or ſtanding, are ten men, fifteene, or twentie at worke, and in ſome fortie vnder one Maſter. The rich Maſters doe no worke with their hands, but ſtand ciuilly adorned, or rather pompouſly, eſpecially their wiues, with Iewels inualuable. And although the antient Kings ordayned, that the child ſhould bee of the fathers Trade; yet the rich

The Quinſaian Citizens and their conditions.

Digitized by Google

rich are permitted not to worke, but to keepe shop, and men working in the same Trade. Their Houses are well ordered, and wrought richly, adorned with Pictures and other stupendious costs. The Natiues are peaceable, know not to manage Armes, nor keepe them in their Houses: nor is there strife and debate amongst them. They make their workes with great sinceritie. They loue in such amitie, that one Street seemes as one House, without jealousies of their Wiues, which they hold in great respect, and it would be reputed great disgrace to speake a dishoneſt word to a married Woman. They entertayne Merchant-strangers kindly, both in their houses, and with best aduice for their affaires. But they are loth to see Souldiers and the Guards of the Grand Can, as by whom they are bereft of their naturall Lords and Kings. Great neighbourhood.

About the Lake are built faire Buildings and great Palaces of the chiefe men: and Temples of their Idols with Monasteries of many Monkes. In the midst of the Lake are two Ilands, vpon each of which is a Palace with incredible numbers of Roomes; whither they resort vpon occasions of Marriages or other Feasts; where Prouisions of Vessels, Naperie, and other things are maintayned in common for such purposes, one hundred sometime accommodated at once in seuerall Roomes. In the Lake also are Boates and Barges for pleasure, adorned with faire Seates and Tables, and other prouisions for Bankets, couered aboue and plaine, vpon which men stand with Poles to make the Boat goe, the Lake being but shallow. Within they are painted; without, are windowes to open and shut at pleasure. Nor can any thing in the World seeme more pleasant then in this Lake to haue such an obiect, the Citie so fully presenting it selfe to the eye, with so many Temples, Monasteries, Palaces, Gardens with high Trees on the Waters, Barges, People: for their custome is to worke one part of the day, and to dispense some part to this solace with their Friends, or with Women in the Lake; or else by Chariots riding thorow the Citie, which is also another of the Quinsay pleasures. For all the streets are paued with stone; as also are all the high Wayes in the Prouince of Mangi, onely for the Postes is left on the side, a space vnpaued. The principall street of Quinsay is paued ten paces on each hand, and in the midst it is full of Grauell with passages for the Water, which keepe it alway cleane. On this street are alway innumerable long close Chariots, accommodated with Clothes and Cushions of silke, for six persons; which solace themselues in the street, or goe to Gardens, and there passe the time in places made by the Gardeners for that purpose, and returne at night in the said Chariots. Pleasures. Stone wayes.

When one is borne, the Father sets downe the print of Time, and with that note goes to the Astrologer to consult of his future fortunes. Of these Astrologers are a great number in euery Market place. They will not celebrate a marriage without such consultation. When one dies that is of note, his Kindred clothe themselues in Canuasse, and so both Men and Women accompanie him to the burning place, playing on Instruments, and singing all the way prayers to their Idols: and being come to the place, cast into the fire many Papers of Cotton, whereon are painted Slaues, Horses, Camels, Clothes of gold and silke, Monies, which they thinke hee shall really possesse in another World; and make such minstrelsie, in conceit of the ioy wherewith the Idols there receiue his Soule, where hee beginneth (they say) to liue anew. In euery street are Towres of stone, whither in danger of fire they vse to carrie their goods, their timber houses being much subiect to such casualtie. Astrologers. Funerals.

The Can hath ordayned that on the most part of the Bridges, day and night, there stand vnder a couert ten Guardians, fiue by day and fiue by night: and in euery Guard is a Tabernacle of Wood with a great Bason, whereby they know the houres of the day and night, which at euery houres end the Warders strike to notifie what houre, one, two, &c. beginning at the Sunne rising, and then againe at the beginning of the night. They walke vp and downe, and if any haue a light or fire after the deputed time, they cause him to answer it before the Iustices or Gouernors aforesaid; or if any walke later. If any be not able to worke, they carrie him to Hospitals, of which are exceeding many founded by the Kings of old, with great reuenues, thorow the Citie. When they are well againe, they are compelled to worke. If a fire happen; these from diuers places come to quench it, and to carrie the goods into Boats, or the Ilands, or those Towres: for in the night the Citizens dare not come out, but those who are in danger. The Can alway keepeth here store of his best and faithfullest Souldierie, as being the best and richest place in the World. Within a mile of each other are builded Rampiers of wood, where a sound is made to be heard further off, for like purposes. Warders. Clocks. Hospitals. Larums.

When the Can had reduced all Mangi to his obedience, hee diuided it (being before but one Kingdome) into nine parts, and set a King ouer each, which there administers iustice. Euery yeere they giue account to the Cans Officers of the reuenues, and other accidents: and euery third yeere are charged, as all other Officers are. One of these Deputie-Kings is resident at Quinsay, who is Gouernour of aboue one hundred and fortie Cities, all rich and great. Nor may this be a wonder, seeing in Mangi there are twelue thousand Cities, all inhabited with rich and industrious people. In euery of which the Can maintayneth a Garrison, proportionable to the greatnesse and occasions, one thousand, ten or twentie thousand; not all Tartars, but Catayans; for the Tartars are Horse-men, and keepe where they may exercise their Horses. Into Cathay he sends Nine Vice-royes in Mangi. 12000 Cities, and their garrisons.

Digitized by Google

those of Mangi, and Cathayans hither such as are fit for Armes, of which he makes choise euery third yeere: and sends for foure or fiue yeeres together into places twentie dayes iourney from their Countrey, and then suffers them to returne home, others succeeding. And most part of the Cans Receits are this way expended: and if any Citie rebell, he suddenly from the next Garrisons rayseth an Armie to reduce or destroy them. This Citie of Quinsai hath in continuall Garrison thirtie thousand Souldiers; and that which hath least, hath one thousand in Horse and Foote.

Fanfurs Palace

To speake now of the Palace of King Fanfur; his Predecessors caused to enclose a place of ten miles circuit with high walls, and diuided it into three parts. That in the midst was entred by one Gate; on the one side and the other were great and large Galleries, the Roofe sustayned by Pillars painted, and wrought with gold and fine azure: these were smaller at the entrie, and the further the greater; the fairest at the end, the Roofe fairely adorned with gold, and on all the Walls were painted the stories of the former Kings artificially. There euery yeere on certaine Idoll holy-dayes, Fanfur kept his Court and feasted his principall Lords, the great Masters, and rich Artificers of Quinsai, ten thousand at a time vnder those Terraces. This dured ten or twelue dayes with incredible magnificence, euery guest indeauouring to present himselfe in greatest pompe. Behinde this middle-most building was a wall, and going out which diuided the Palace; in which was, as it were, a Cloyster with Pillars, sustayning the Porch or Terrace round about the Cloyster: wherein were Chambers for the King and Queene curiously wrought. From this Cloyster was entrance into a Gallerie six paces wide, in length extending to the Lake, all couered. On each side of this Gallerie were ten Courts, answering one another fashioned like Cloysters, each Court hauing fiftie Chambers with their Gardens, and in them one thousand Lasses abode, which the King kept for his seruice, who sometimes with the Queene, sometimes with them, went in his Barge on the Lake for solace, or to visit his Idoll Temples.

Feasts.

1000. Women in 1000. chambers.

The other two parts of the Serraile were diuided into Groues, Lakes, Gardens planted with Trees; in which were inclosed all sorts of beasts, Roes, Bucks, Stags, Hares, Conies: and there the King solaced himselfe with his Damsels in Charets or on Horse-backe, no man entring there. There did he cause These to hunt with his Dogs, wearie whereof they went into those Groues, which answered one another ouer the Lakes, and there leauing their garments came forth naked, and set themselues a swimming in the Kings presence. Sometimes hee would take his repast in those Groues being serued by those Damsels, without once thinking of Armes, which sweet meat cost him the foure sawce yee haue heard. All this was told mee by a rich old Merchant of Quinsai, whiles I was there, one which had beene an inward familiar of King Fanfur, and knew all his life, and had seene that Palace flourishing, into which he would needs bring me. The Viceroy now resides there; and the first Galleries remayne as they were wont, but the Damsells Chambers are ruined; the wall also which encompassed the Woods and Gardens is fallen to the ground, the Beasts and Trees being gone.

Great Parke.

Twentie fiue miles from Quinsai is the Ocean betwixt the East and North-east, neere to which is a Citie, called Gampu, a goodly Port, where arriue the Indian ships of merchandise. Whiles M. Marco was in Quinsai, account being giuen to the Grand Can of the Reuenues, and the number of the Inhabitants, he hath seene that there haue beene enrolled one hundred and sixtie Toman of fires, reckoning for a fire, the Familie dwelling in one house: euery Toman contayneth ten thousand, which makes sixteene hundred thousand Families: of all which there is but one Church of Christians, and those Nestorians. Euery house-holder is bound to haue written ouer his doore, the names of the whole house-hold, Males and Females; also the number of Horses; the names added or blotted out as the Familie increaseth or decreaseth. And this is obserued in Mangi and Catay.

The Sea Gampu.

1600000. households in Quinsai.

Those also that keepe Innes, write in a Booke the names of their Guests, and the day and houre of their departure, which Booke they send daily to the Lords or Magistrates, which reside at the Market-places. In Mangi the poore which are not able to bring vp their children, sell them to the rich.

The Reuenues which accrew to the Can from Quinsai, and the others pertayning thereto, being the ninth part of the Kingdome of Mangi, are first, of Salt euery yeere eightie Toman of gold (euery Toman is eightie thousand Sazzi of gold, and euery Sazzo is more then one Florin of gold) which will amount to six Millions and foure hundred thousand Duckats. The cause is, that that Prouince being nigh the Sea, there are many Lakes where the water in Summer is coagulated into Salt, wherewith fiue other Kingdomes of that Prouince are serued. There is store of Sugar growing, which payeth as all other Spices doe, three parts and a third in the hundred. The like of Rice-wine. Also those twelue mysteries (which we said had twelue thousand shops) and the Merchants which bring goods hither, or carrie any hence by Sea, pay the same price. They which come from farre Countries and Regions, as from the Indies, pay ten per cento. Likewise, all things there breeding, as Beasts, and growing out of the Earth, and Silke, pay tithe to the King. And the computation being made in the presence of M. Marco, besides Salt before mentioned, yeerely amounts to two hundred and ten Toman, which will bee sixteene millions of gold and eight hundred thousand.

Reuenues of Quinsai, & the appurtenances twentie three Millions of Duckats, and 200000.

Customes.

From

Digitized by Google

FRom Quinsai one dayes iourney to the South-east are all the way Houses, Villages, faire Gardens, plentifull of Victuals, at the end whereof is Tapinzu, a faire and great Citie, in the iurisdiction of Quinsai. Three dayes thence South-east is Vguiu, and two dayes further may you ride that way, all the way finding Castles, Cities, and cultiuated Places, in such Neighbour-hood, that they seeme to Trauellers all one Citie; all in the same iurisdiction of Quinsai. There are great Canes fifteene paces long and foure palmes thicke. Two dayes iourney further is the Citie Gengui, faire and great, and trauelling further South-east are inhabited places, full of People and Trades. And in this part of Mangi are no Muttons, but Beeues, Buffals, Goates, and Swine in great plentie. At the end of foure dayes iourney is found the Citie Zengian, built on a Hill in the midst of a Riuer, which with her parted Armes embraceth and encompasseth it, and then runne one to the South-east, the other to the North-west. They are in the iurisdiction of Quinsai, are Merchants, Idolaters, haue store of Game. Three dayes iourney thence, thorow a goodly Countrey exceedingly inhabited, stands Gieza, a great Citie, the last of Quinsai Kingdome, after which you enter into another Kingdome of Mangi, called Concha. (The principall Citie thereof is Fugiu) by the which you trauell, six dayes iourney South-east, thorow Hills and Dales, alway finding places inhabited and store of Game of Beasts and Fowle. They are Idolaters, Merchants, subiect to the Can. There are stout Lions; there growes Ginger and Galingale plentie, with other sorts of Spices, eightie pounds of Ginger for a Venetian groat. There is an herbe, whose fruit hath the effect and giues the colour and smell of Saffron, but is not Saffron, vsed in their meates. They voluntarily eate mans flesh, if they die not of sickenesse, as daintier then others. When they goe to Warres, they shaue to the eares and paint their faces with azure; they are all Foot saue the Captaine which rideth, and vse Swords and Launces: are very cruell, and when they kill an Enemie, presently drinke his bloud, and after eate his flesh.

Tapinzu. Vguiu. Gengui. Zengian. Gieza. Concha. Fugiu. Men eaters.

After those six dayes trauell is Quelinfu, a great Citie with three Bridges, each eight paces broad and aboue one hundred long; the Women faire, delicate; and they haue store of Silke and Cotton, are great Merchants, haue store of Ginger and Galingale. I was told, but saw them not, that they haue Hennes without feathers, hayrie like Cats, which yet lay Egges and are good to eate. Store of Lions make the way dangerous. After three dayes, in a populous Countrey which are Idolaters, and haue store of Silke, is the Citie Vnguem, where is great plentie of Sugar, sent thence to Cambalu, which they knew not to make good till they became subiect to the Can; in whose Court were Babylonians, which taught them to refine it with ashes of certayne Trees; they before onely boyling it into a blacke paste. Fifteene miles further is Cangiu, still in the Realme of Concha: and here the Can keepeth an Armie in readinesse for guard of the Countrey. Thorow this Citie passeth a Riuer a mile broad, fairely built on both sides, and stored with Ships of Sugar and other lading. This Riuer disembokes from hence fiue dayes iourney South-east, at Zaitum, a Sea Port, from whence the rich Ships of India come to this pleasant and fertile Citie, as is the way betwixt, in which are Trees or Shrubs of Camfire.

Quelinfu. Hayrie Hens. Vnguem. Sugar. Cangiu.

Zaitum is a famous Port, where many Ships arriue with merchandise, thence dispersed thorow all India. There is such store of Pepper, that the quantitie which comes to Alexandria to the West, is little to it, and as it were one of a hundreth: the concourse of Merchants is incredible, it being one of the most commodious Ports of the World, exceeding profitable to the Can, which Custometh ten of the hundreth of all merchandise. They pay so much for hire of ships also that there is not aboue one halfe of their merchandise remayning entire to themselues, and yet is that moitie very gainfull to them. The Citie is Idolatrous, giuen to pleasure; in it is much embroiderie and Arras worke. The Riuer is great, very wide and swift, and one arme of it goeth to Quinsai, at the parting of which is Tingui situate, where Porcelane dishes are made (as I was told) of a certaine Earth which they cast vp in great Hills, and so let lie to all weathers for thirtie or fortie yeeres without stirring: after which refining by time, they make Dishes, paint them and then put them in the Furnace. You may there haue eight Dishes for one Venetian Groat. In this Kingdome of Concha the Can hath as great Reuenue almost as of the Kingdome of Quinsai. In these two M. Marco was, and in none of the other nine Kingdomes of Mangi (in all which is one speech vsed, with varietie of Dialect, and one sort of writing) and therefore will speake no more of them; but in the next Booke discourse of India the Greater, the Middle, and the Lesse, in which hee was both in the seruice of the Can, and also in his returne with the Queene to Argon.

Zaitum. Tinguy, where Porcelane is made.

Digitized by Google

§. IX.

The Ships of India described, the Ile of Zipangu, the Sea Chin, and World of Ilands, the two Iauas, Zeilan and other Ilands, with the rarities therein.

Here begins the third book of M. Polo.

Ships of India.

WE will now enter into India and begin with their Ships, which are made of Firre, and the Zapino Tree, with one deck, on which are twentie Cabbins (or lesse, as the Ships are in quantitie) each for one Merchant. They haue a good Roother, and foure Masts with foure Sailes, and some two Masts, which they erect or take downe at pleasure. Some greater Ships haue thirteene Colti, or diuisions, on the inside made with boards inchased, that if by blow of a Whale or touch on a Rocke water gets in, it can goe no further then that diuision; which being found is soone mended. They are all double, that is, haue two course of boards one within the other, and are well calked with Ocam, and nayled with Iron, but not pitched (for they haue no Pitch) but anointed with the Oile of a certayne Tree mixed with Lime and Hemp beaten small, faster then Pitch or Lime. The greater ships haue three hundred Mariners, others two hundred, one hundred and fiftie, as they are in bignesse, and from fiue to six thousand bags of Pepper. And they were wont to be greater then now they are; the Sea hauing broken into Ports and Ilands, that the defect of water, in some places, causeth them to build lesse. They vse also Oares in these Ships, foure men to an Oare; and the greater Ships haue with them two or three ships lesse, able to carry a thousand bags of Pepper, hauing sixtie or more Mariners, which lesse ships serue sometimes to tow the greater. They haue also with them ten small Boats for fishing and other seruices, fastned to the sides of the greater ships, and let downe when they please to vse them. Also they sheath their ships after a yeeres vsage, so that then they haue three course of boards; yea proceed on in this manner sometimes till there bee six courses, after which they breake them vp. Hauing spoken of the ships, we will speake of India, and first of certayne Ilands.

Zipangu.

Zipangu is an Iland in the East, one thousand and fiue hundred miles distant from the shoares of Mangi, very great, the people white and faire, of gentle behauiour, in Religion Idolaters, and haue a King of their owne. They haue gold in great store, for few Merchants come thither, and the King permits no exportation of it. And they which haue had commerce there tell of the Kings house couered with Gold, as Churches here with Lead, gilded Windowes, Floores of gold: there are many Pearles. Once; the fame of these riches made Cublai Can to send to conquer it, two Barons, with a great fleet of ships, one named Abbaccatan, the other Vonsancin, which going from Zaitum and Quinsai arriued there; but falling out betwixt themselues, could take but one Citie, and there beheaded all they tooke saue eight persons, which by an inchanted precious stone inclosed in the right arme betwixt the skinne and flesh, could not bee wounded with Iron; whereupon, with woodden Clubs, at the command of the two Barons they were slaine. It hapned one day that a Northerne winde made great danger to the ships there riding, so that some were lost, some returned further into Sea, and others with the two Leaders and other Principals returned home. Out of many broken ships some escaped by boards, and swimming on an Iland not inhabited foure miles off Zipangu, and were about thirtie thousand, without prouisions of victuals or Armes, against whom the Zipanguanders, after the Tempest was calmed, set out a fleet of ships and an Armie. These comming on Land to seeke the wracked Tartars without order, gaue occasion to the Tartars to wheele about, the Iland (being high in the midst) and to get vnseene to their ships, which were left vnmanned with the Streamers displaid: and with them they went to the chiefe Citie of Zipangu, where they were admitted without suspicion, and found few others but Women. The King of Zipangu besieged them six moneths, and they hauing no reliefe yeelded themselues, their liues saued: this happened An. 1264. The Can for this disorder of his two Commanders, cut off the head of one, and sent the other to a saluage Iland, called Zorza, where hee causeth Offenders to die, by sewing them, their hands bound, in a new-flayed hide of a Buffall, which drying shrinketh so as it puts them in a little-ease to a miserable death. The Idols in this and the adioyning Ilands are made with heads of Kine, Swine, Dogs, and other fashions more monstrous, as with faces on their shoulders, with foure, ten, or an hundred hands (some, and to these they ascribe most power and doe most reuerence) and say, that so they learned of their Progenitors. They sometimes eate the Enemies which they take, with great ioy, and for great dainties.

De magnis maioris golden fables; and make difference betwixt his owne Relations and those which he had at the second hand: although it be true of much gilding in Edoo sup. l. 4. c. 1. & 3.

This punishment the Mogol vsed to Cursoroons Captaines: and in many things you shall see Sir T. Roe and our Mogol Relations agree with these of Polo: the Mogol being of Tartar originall.

Note for China. Cin in Italian is pronounced Chin.

The Sea in which this Iland standeth, is called the Sea of Cin or Chin, that is the Sea against Mangi: and in the language of that Iland, Mangi is called Chin: which Sea is so large, that the Mariners and expert Pilots which frequent it, say, that there are seuen thousand foure hundred and fortie Ilands therein, the most part inhabited, and that there growes no Tree which yeelds not a good smell, and that there growes many Spices of diuers kindes, especially Lignum Aloes, and Pepper blacke and white. The ships of Zaitum are a yeere in their voyage, for they goe in Winter and returne in Summer, hauing Windes of two sorts, which keepe their seasons. And

The Monsons.

this

this Countrey is farre from India. But I will leaue them (for I neuer was there, nor are they subiect to the Can) and returne to Zaitum. From hence sayling South-westward one thousand fiue hundred miles, passing a Gulfe, called Cheinan (which continues two moneths sayling to the Northward, still confining on the South-east of Mangi, and elsewhere with Anin, and Teloman, and other Prouinces before named) within it are infinite Ilands, all in manner inhabited. In them is found store of Gold, and they trade one with the other. This Gulfe seemes another World.

After one thousand and fiue hundred miles sayling ouerthwart this Gulfe, is the Countrey Ziamba, rich and great, hauing a King and Language proper, Idolaters, and paying tribute to the Grand Can, of twentie Elephants, and Lignum Aloes in great quantitie yeerely. Anno 1268. the Can hearing of the riches of this Iland sent thither Sagatu with an Armie, to inuade it. Accambale the King thereof was old, and made this composition of tribute. There are many Woods of blacke Ebonie. Ziamba.

Sayling thence betwixt the South and South-east one thousand & fiue hundred miles, is Iana, supposed by Mariners, the greatest Iland in the World, aboue three thousand miles in circuit, vnder a King which payeth tribute to none, the Can not offering to subiect it for the length and danger of the voyage. The Merchants of Zaitum and Mangi fetch thence store of Gold and Spices. South and South-westward sixe hundred miles from Iana are two Ilands, one Sondur, which is the greater; the other Condur, lesse, both desolate. Fifty miles South-east from them is a Prouince of firme land, very rich and great, named Lochac, the people Idolaters, hauing a Language and King peculiar. There growes Brasill-wood in great quantitie, store of Gold, Elephants, wilde beasts, and fowle, a fruit called Berci, as great as Limons, very good. The place is mountainous and sauage, and the King permits not many to come thither, lest they should know his secrets. There is store of Porcelane shells for money transported to other places. Iana maior, I suppose this is Borneo, and Iana minor that which still is called Iana.

Fiue hundred miles Southward from Lochac is the Ile Pentan, a sauage place, which produceth in all the Woods sweet Trees: sixtie miles of the way the Sea is in many places but foure fathoms: after which being sayled to the South-east, thirtie miles further is the Iland and Kingdome of Malaiur, which hath a peculiar King and Language to it selfe; and here is much Merchandise of Spices. From Pentan one hundred miles South-east is Iana the lesse, encompassing about two thousand miles, and hath in it eight Kingdomes, and as many Languages. They are Idolaters, haue store of Treasure, Spices, Ebony, Brasill, and are so farre to the South, that the North Starre cannot there be seene. Master Marco was in sixe of those Kingdomes, of which shall here be spoken, leauing the other two, which he saw not. Lochac, A South Continent, if true. Pentan. Malaiur. Iana minor, in which are eight Kingdomes. The Mahometans by commerce first, and after by conquests & religion haue here altered all things, both Names, Peoples, and Rites; that hardly they can now be designed, and reconciled to later names.

One of those eight Kingdomes is, Felech: here the Idolaters by frequent Trade of Saracens are conuerted to the Law of Mahomet, in the Cities; the Mountainers being beastly, eating mans flesh and all impure food; and worship all day what they first see in the morning. Next to that is Basma, which hath a Language by it selfe; they liue without Law, like beasts, and sometimes send Hawkes to the Can (who challengeth all the Iland) for Presents. They haue wilde Elephants, and Vnicornes much lesse then Elephants, like the Buffals in haire. Their feet are like Elephants feet. They haue one horne in the midst of the fore-head and hurt no bodie therewith; but with the tongue and knee. For on their tongue are certaine long prickles and sharpe, and when they hurt any, they trample on him, and presse him downe with their knee, and then wound him with their tongue. The head is like to a wilde Boares, which hee carries downwards to the ground; and they loue to stand in the mire, and are filthie beasts, and not such as they (Vnicornes) are said to be in our parts, which suffer themselues to be taken of Maidens, but quite contrarie. They haue many Apes, and of diuers fashions. They haue Gosshawkes all blacke as Rauens, great, and good for prey. There are certaine small Apes faced like men, which they put in Boxes, and preserue with Spices, and sell them to Merchants, who carrie them thorow the World for Pigmeys, or little men. Vnicornes, or rather some kind of Rhinoceros. Pigmeys how made.

Samara is the next Kingdome where Master Marco stayed fiue moneths against his will, forced by ill weather. There none of the Starres of Charles wane are seene. Hee descended once on land with two thousand people, and there fortified for that fiue moneths, for feare of those brutish man-eaters, and traded meane while with them for victuals. They haue excellent Fish, Wine of the Date-tree, very medicinall for Phtisicke, Dropsie, diseases of the Spleene; some white, some red; and Indian Nuts as big as a mans head, the middle whereof is full of a pleasant liquor, better then Wine: they eat all flesh without any difference. Samara. See of this Wine (Taddy) in Master Terry pag. 1469 &c Coco-nuts.

Dragoian is another of those Kingdomes, claymed by the Can, hauing a proper King and Language. I was told of an abominable custome, that when one is sicke, they send to enquire of the Sorcerers whether hee shall scape; if the Deuils answere, No; the kindred send for some whose office it is, to strangle the sicke partie, after which they cut him in pieces, and the kindred eat him with great iollity, euen to the marrow of the bones, For (say they) if any substance of him should remayne, wormes would breed thereof, which would want food, and so die, to the great torture of the soule of the deceased. The bones they after take and carrie into some Caue in the hils, that no beast may touch them. If they take any stranger they also eat him. Dragoian.

Lambri

Digitized by Google

Lambri. Lambri is a fifth Kingdome of Iaua in which is store of Brasil, of the seeds whereof Master Marco brought to Venice, and sowed them, but in vayne, the soyle being too cold. Some men (the most) in this Kingdome haue tayles more then a palme long, like Dogs, but not hairy; and these dwell in the Mountaines out of Cities. They haue Vnicornes in great plentie, and chase of beasts and fowles.

Fansur. Fansur, the sixth Kingdome hath the best Camfire, which is sold weight for weight with Gold. In that Prouince they take meale out of great and long trees, as great as two men can fathome, whence taking the thinne barke and wood about three fingers thicke, the pith within is meale, which they put in water, and stirre well, the lightest drosse swimming, and the purest setling to the bottome; and then the water being cast away, they make thereof paste, of which Master Marco brought to Venice, tasting like Barley bread. The wood of this tree throwne into the water sinkes like Iron, whereof they make Lances, but short, for the long would be too heauie to beare: these they sharpen, and burne at the tops, which so prepared will pierce an Armour sooner then if they were made of Iron.

Sagu, see in Sir F. Drake, and other Indian stories.

Heauie Wood.

About one hundred and fiftie miles from Lambri, saying Northwards, are two Ilands, one called Nocueran, in which they liue like beasts, goe all naked, men and women, and worship Idols, haue excellent Trees, Cloues, Sanders white and red, Indian Nuts, Brasil, and other Spices; the other, Angaman, sauage as the former, and I was told, they had Dogs heads and teeth.

Nocueran.

Angaman.

Zeilan. Saying hence one thousand miles to the West, and a little to the North-west, is Zeilan, two thousand and foure hundred miles in circuit, and of old encompassed three thousand and sixe hundred miles, as is seene in the Maps of the Mariners of those parts, but the North winds haue made a great part of it Sea. It is the best Iland of the World. The King is named Senderaz. The men and women are Idolaters, goe naked (saue that they couer their priuities with a cloth) haue no Corne, but Rice, and Oyle of Sesamino, Milke, Flesh, Wine of trees, abundance of Brasill, the best Rubies in the World, Saphires, Topazes, Amathists, and other Gems. The King is said to haue the best Rubie in the World, one palme long, and as big as a mans arme, without spot, shining like a fire, not to be bought for money. Cublai Can sent and offered the value of a Citie for it, but the King answered, he would not giue it for the treasure of the world, nor part with it, hauing beene his Ancestours. The men are vnfit for warres, and hire others when they haue occasion.

A glorious Rubie.

§. X.

Of the firme Land of the Greater India.

Malabar. FRom Zeilan saying sixtie miles to the West is the great Prouince of Malabar, which is not an Iland, but firme Continent, called India the greater, the richest Prouince in the World. There are in it foure Kings, the chiefe of which is Senderbandi, in whose Kingdome they fish for Pearles, to wit, betwixt Malabar and Zeilan, in a Bay where the Sea is not aboue ten or twelue fathome, in which diuers descend, and in bags or nets tyed to their bodies bring vp the Oysters in which they are. And because there are great fishes which kill the Fishermen, they hire certaine Bramines to charme them (being skilfull to charme all sorts of beasts also and birds) and these haue the twentieth, the King the tenth. These Oysters are found all Aprill, and till the midst of May, and not else: in September they finde them in a place aboue three hundred miles off, and till the midst of October. The King goeth as naked as the rest, saue that he weareth some honorable Ensignes, as a Coller of precious stones about his necke, and a threed of Silke to his breast with one hundred and foure faire Pearles (as Beads) to number his Prayers, of which he must daily say so many to his Idols: like Bracelets he weareth on three places of his armes, and likewise on his legs; and on his fingers also and toes. The prayers which he sayth are Pacauca, pacauca, pacauca, one hundred and foure times. This King hath one thousand women, and if any please his sense he takes her; as one he did from his brother, whence warres had followed, but the mother threatning to cut off her breasts which had nourished them, if they proceeded, stayed the broyle. He hath many Horsemen for his Guard which alway accompanie him, who when the King dies, throw themselues voluntarily into the fire wherein he is burned to doe him seruice in the next World. This and his brethren the Kings of Malabar buy their Horses from Ormus, and other parts. The Countrey breeds none, and if it happens sometimes, yet are they there bred ill-fauoured and naught. Condemned persons will offer themselues to die in honour of such an Idoll, which is performed with twelue Kniues, and twelue wounds in diuers parts of the bodie, at euery blow, saying, I kill my selfe in honour of that Idol, and the last he thrusts in his heart; and then is burned by his kindred. The wiues also cast themselues into the fire with their husbands; they being disreputed which refuse it.

See my Pilg. l. 5. c. 12.

Bread-deuotion.

Most of these following customes are still in vse, as in Linschoten, and in my Pilg. l. 5. is seene.

They worship Idols, and most of them Beeues, and would not eat of so holy flesh as Beefe, for for all the World. There are some called Gaui, which eate those Beeues which dye alone, may not kill them, and dawbe ouer their houses with Oxe dung. These Gaui are of the Posteritie of those which slue Saint Thomas, and cannot enter the place where his bodie is, if ten men should carrie them. They sit on Carpets on the ground in this Kingdome, they haue no Corne but Rice, are no Warriours, kill no beasts, but when they will eat any get the Saracens to doe it, or other people; wash twice a day, morning and euening both men and women, and will not otherwise eate; which they which obserue not, are accounted Heretikes. They touch not their meat with the left hand, but vse that hand only to wipe, and other vncleane offices. They drinke each in his owne pot, and will not touch another mans pot, nor suffer their owne to touch their mouth, but hold it ouer and powre it in. To strangers which haue no pot they powre drinke into his hands to drinke with them. Iustice is seuerely executed for Crimes, and Creditors may encompasse their Debtors with a Circle, which he dares not passe till hee hath paid or giuen securitie: if he doth, he is to be put to death: and M. Marco once saw the King himselfe on Horse-backe thus encircled by a Merchant whom he had long delayed and frustrated, neither would the King goe out of the Circle which the Merchant had drawne till he had satisfied him, the people applauding the Kings Iustice. Det-circle.

They are very scrupulous in drinking Wine of the Grape, and they which doe it are not admitted to be Witnesse; a thing denyed also to him which sayles by Sea, for they say such men are desperate. They thinke Leachery no sinne. It is very hote, and they haue no raine but in Iune, Iuly, and August, without which refreshing of the Ayre they could not liue. They haue many Physiognomers and Sooth-sayers, which obserue beasts and Birds, and haue an vnluckie houre euery day of the weeke, called Choiach, as on Munday betwixt two and three, on Tuesday, the third houre, on Wednesday the ninth, &c. thorow all the yeare set downe in their Bookes. They curiously obserue Natiuities: at thirteene yeares old they put the Boyes to get their owne liuings, which runne vp and down to buy and sell, hauing a little stocke giuen them to begin: and in Pearle-season they buy a few Pearles, and sell them againe to the Merchants, which cannot well endure the Sunne for little gaine. What they get they bring to their Mothers to dresse for them, but may not eate at their Fathers cost. Boyes put to timely shifts.

They haue Idols Males and Females, to which they offer their Daughters, which when the Monkes (or Priests) appoint, sing and dance to cheere the Idols; and diuers times set victuals before them saying, that they eat, leauing it the space of a meale, singing the while, and then they fall to eating in deed, after which they returne home. The cause of these solaces is the household quarrels betwixt the God and his Goddesse, which if they should not thus appease, they should lose their blessing. Their Idols & Votaries.

The great men haue Litters of large Canes, which they can fasten artificially to some vpper place, to preuent Tarantulas byting and Fleas, and other Vermine; and for fresh Aire. The place of Saint Thomas his Sepulchre, is a small Citie, small frequented by Merchants, infinitely by Christians and Saracens for deuotion. The Saracens hold him a great Prophet, and call him Ananias, that is a holy man. The Christians take of the Earth where he was slaine, which is red, and carry it with them with great reuerence, and giue it mixed with water to the sicke. Malabar is by this Author extended to Choromandel also.

Anno 1288. A great Prince hauing more Rice then roome to lay it in, made bold with Saint Thomas his Church in the roome where Pilgrimes were receiued, but by a Vision of Saint Thomas in the night was so terrified that he quickly freed the place. The Inhabitants are black, not so borne, but often anoynt themselues with Sessamine Oyle to obtayne that beautie: they paint the Deuill white, and their Idols blacke. The Beeue-worshippers carry with them to battell, some of the haire of a wild Oxe as a preseruatiue against dangers: and therefore such haires are dearely prized.

Murphili or Monsul is Northward from Malabar fiue hundred miles, they are Idolaters. They haue Diamonds in their hils, which they search for after great raines. West-wards from Saint Thomas is Lac, whence the Bramines haue originall, which are the truest Merchants in the World, and will not lye for any thing, and trustily keepe any thing committed to their custodie, or sell, or barter Merchandice for others. They are knowne by a Cotton threed which they weare ouer the sholder tyed vnder the arme crossing the brest. They haue but one Wife, are great Diuiners, of great abstinence and long life: obserue their owne shadow in the Sunne when they are to buy, and thence coniecture according to their Discipline. They vse to chew a certayne Herbe which makes their teeth good and helpes digestion. There are some Religious of them called Tingui, which goe altogether naked, liue austerely, worshippe the Beeue, whereof they haue a little brasse Image on their forehead, and of the Oxe bones ashes make an Ointment, wherewith they anoynt their bodies in diuers places with great reuerence. They nor kill nor eate any quicke creature, nor herbe greene, or Root before it is dryed, esteeming all things to haue a soule. They vse no Dishes but lay their Viands on dry leaues of Apples of Paradize. They doe their Excrements in the Sands, and then disperse it hither and thither, lest it should breed Wormes which must presently dye for want of food. Some of them liue to one hundred and fiftie yeares, and their bodies after death are burned. Murphili. Lac. Bramines. Betre, or Befele, after called Tembul and Arecca.

In

Digitized by Google

Adams ſepulchre. Sogomonbarchan the firſt cauſe of Idolatrie.

In Zeilan I had forgot to tell of a high Mountayne, which none can aſcend but by Iron chaines, as I was told, in the top whereof the Saracens ſay is Adams Sepulchre, the Idolater ſay it is the body of Sogomonbarchan the firſt Idol-founder, ſonne to a King of that Iland, which gaue himſelfe to a ſolitarie life on the top of this hill, whence no pleaſures nor perſwaſions could draw him. His Father made an Image after his death to repreſent him, all of Gold adorned with Gemmes, and commanded all the Ilanders to worſhip it; and hence began Idolatry. Hither they come from farre places in Pilgrimage; and there his haire, teeth, and a diſh of his are reſerued, and ſolemnly ſhewed. The Saracens ſay they are of Adam, which report cauſed the Can, Anno 1281. to ſend Ambaſſadors thither, who obtayned two teeth, and a diſh, and ſome of his haires by grant of the King of Zeilan; which he cauſed to be receiued by the whole people of Cambalu, without the Citie, and brought to his preſence with great honour.

Cans ſuperſtition.

Cael.

Cael is a great Citie gouerned by Aſtar, one of the foure Brethren, very rich and a good vſer of Merchants: he hath three hundred women. All the people haue a cuſtome to carrie in their mouthes chawing, a leafe called Tembul, with Spices and Lime. Coulam is fiue hundred miles North-weſt from Malabar, they are Idolaters: there are alſo Chriſtians and Iewes which haue a ſpeech by themſelues. They haue Pepper, Braſill, Indico, Lions all blacke, Parrets of diuers ſorts, all white as Snow, others Azure, others Red, and ſome very little: Peacockes and Peahens much differing from ours, and greater, as are their fruits. They are leacherous, and marrie their ſiſters and kindred. There are many Aſtrologers and Phyſicians. In Cumari are Apes ſo great that they ſeeme men: and here we had ſight of the North ſtarre. Dely hath a proper King and Language: the people Idolatrous and haue ſtore of Spices. The ſhippes of Mangi come thither.

Cumari or Cape Comoro. Dely.

Pirates, ſtill vſed.

Malabar is a Kingdome in the Weſt, in which and in Guzzerat are many Pirats, which come to Sea with aboue one hundred Sails, and rob Merchants. They bring with them their wiues and children, and there abide all Summer. In Guzzerat is ſtore of Cotton, the Trees ſix fathoms (or paces) high, and dure twentie yeeres; the Cotton of the old Trees is not good to ſpin, after they are paſt twelue yeeres old, but for Quilts. There are many * Vnicornes: they haue artificiall embroideries. In Canam is ſtore of Frankincenſe; it is a great Citie, where is great trade for Horſes. In Cambaia is much Indico, Buckram, and Cotton. Seruenath is a Kingdome of a peculiar language, Idolaters, Merchants, a good people. Cheſmacoran is a great Kingdome of Idolaters and Saracens, the laſt Prouince of the greater India towards the Northweſt (vnderſtand the Author according to his iourney, from China or Mangi by Sea) fiue hundred miles from which, are ſaid to be two Ilands, one of Men, the other of Women, thoſe comming to theſe, and there ſtaying March, Aprill, and May. The Women keepe their Sonnes till twelue yeeres, and then ſend them to their Fathers. It ſeemes the Ayre admits no other courſe. They are Chriſtians and haue their Biſhop, ſubiect to the Biſhop of Soccotera; they are good Fiſhers and haue ſtore of Ambar. Soccotera hath an Archbiſhop, not ſubiect to the Pope, but to one Zatolia which reſides in Baldach, who chooſeth him. The Soccoterans are Inchanters and great Witches, as any in the world (howſoeuer excommunicated therefore by their Prelate) and raiſe Windes to bring backe ſuch ſhips as haue wronged them, in deſpite of all contrarie working.

* Hereby appeares the Vnicorne hee mentions, is the Rhinoceros: for India hath no other.

These Relations which follow by relation of others, are of leſſe weight: yea, therefore I haue omitted the greateſt part. I had trouble enough to finde and tranſlate the truth: and for ſuch as loue ſuch heare-ſay-fables, as that of Ruch, &c. let them ſeeke elſewhere.

A thouſand miles thence Southward is Magaſtar, one of the greateſt and richeſt Iles of the World, three thouſand miles in circuit, inhabited by Saracens, gouerned by foure old men. The People liue of merchandiſe, and ſell great ſtore of Elephants teeth. The Currents in theſe parts are of exceeding force. They tell of Fowles, called Ruch, like an Eagle, but of incomparable greatneſſe, able to carrie an Elephant (but I am not able to carrie it.) Zenzibar alſo is ſaid to bee of great length, &c. there are Elephants, Giraffas, ſheepe vnlike to ours: the Men and Women are very deformed. I haue heard Mariners and great Pilots of thoſe parts report, and haue ſeene in their writings, which haue compaſſed the Sea of India, that there are in it twelue thouſand and ſeuen hundred Ilands, inhabited or deſart. In India maior, which is from Malabar to Cheſmacoran are thirteene Kingdomes. India minor is from Ziambi to Murſili, in which are eight Kingdomes, beſides Ilands many. The ſecond or middle India, is called Abaſcia. The chiefe King is a Chriſtian; there are ſix other Kings, three Chriſtians, and three Saracens, ſubiect to him: there are alſo Iewes. Saint Thomas hauing preached in Nubia, came to Abaſcia, and there did the like, and after to Malabar. They are great Warriors, alway in Armes againſt the Soldan of Adem, and the people of Nubia. I heard that An. 1288. the great Abiſſine would haue viſited Ieruſalem, but being diſſwaded by reaſon of Saracen Kingdomes in the way, he ſent a Biſhop of holy life to doe his deuotions, who in his returne was taken by the Soldan of Adem, and circumciſed by force: whereupon the Abiſſine rayſed a power, diſcomfited the Soldan with two other Mahumetan Kings, tooke and ſpoyled Adem. Abaſcia is rich in gold. Eſcier is ſubiect to Adem fortie miles diſtant South-eaſt: where is ſtore of white Frankincenſe very good, which drops from ſmall Trees by inciſion of the barke; a rich merchandiſe, &c. Some in that Countrey for want of Corne make Bisket of Fiſh, whereof they haue great plentie. They alſo feede their beaſts with fiſhes. They take them in March, April, and May, &c.

12700. Ilands. India maior, media and minor. Abaſcia, or India media. Soldan of Adem. Frankincenſe.

Hauing ſpoken of the Prouinces on the Coaſt, I will now returne to ſome Prouinces more to the the North, where many Tartars dwell, which haue a King called Caidu, of the Race of Cingis Can, but ſubiect to none. Theſe obſerue the cuſtomes of their old Progenitors, dwell not in Cities, Caſtles, or Fortreſſes, but abide with their King in the Fields, Playnes, Valleyes, and Foreſts, and are eſteemed true Tartars. They haue no ſort of Corne, but liue of Fleſh and Milke in great peace. They haue ſtore of Horſes, Kine, Sheepe, and other beaſts. There are found great white Beares, twentie palmes long, black Foxes very great, wilde Aſſes, and little beaſts called Rondes which beare the Sable Furres, and Vari arcolini, and thoſe which are called Pharaos rats, which the Tartars are cunning to take. The great Lakes which are frozen except in a few moneths of the yeere, cauſe that the Summer is ſcarſe to bee trauelled for myre. And therefore the Merchants to buy their Furres, for fourteene dayes iourney thorow the Deſart, haue ſet vp for each day a houſe of Wood, where they abide and barter: and in Winter they vſe Sleds without wheeles, and plaine in the bottome, riſing with a ſemi-circle at the top or end, drawne eaſily on the Ice by beaſts like great Dogs * ſix yoked by couples, the Sledman only with his Merchant and Furres ſitting therein.

Caidu and his Northerne Tartars.

Tragale.

* Perhaps theſe are a kind of Deere.

In the end of the Region of theſe Tartars, is a Countrey reaching to the furtheſt North, called Darkneſſe, becauſe the moſt part of the Winter moneths the Sunne appeares not, and the Ayre is thicke and darkiſh, as betimes in the morning with vs. The men there are pale and great, haue no Prince, and liue like beaſts. The Tartars oft rob them of their Cattell in thoſe darke moneths, and leſt they ſhould loſe their way, they ride on Mares which haue Colts ſucking, which they leaue with a Guard at the entrance of that Countrey, where the Light beginneth to faile, and when they haue taken their prey giue reynes to the Mares, which haſten to their Colts. In their long continued day of Summer they take many the fineſt Furres (one occaſion of the Tartars going to rob them) of which I haue heard ſome are brought into Ruſſia. Ruſſia is a great Countrey in that Northerne Darkneſſe: the people are Greeke Chriſtians, the Men and Women faire, and pay Tribute to the King of the Tartars of the Weſt, on whom they border on the Eaſt. There is ſtore of Furres, Waxe, and Minerals of ſiluer. It reacheth, as I was told, to the Ocean Sea; in which are ſtore of Gerfalcons and Falcons.

Region of Darkneſſe.

Ruſſia.

To the Reader.

IN this admirable Voyage of Polo, I confeſſe, Inopem me copia fecit; the Tranſlation which I had of Maſter Hakluyts from the corrupted Latine, being leſſe then nothing (nimirum damno auctus fui) did me no ſteed but loſſe, whiles I would compare it with the Latine, and thought to amend it by the Italian; and was forced at laſt to reiect both Latine and Engliſh, and after much vexation to preſent thee this, as it is, out of Ramuſio. I haue not giuen thee word for word as an exact Tranſlator, but the ſenſe in all things ſubſtantiall, with longer Relations then I haue admitted in others, becauſe many which haue read M. Paulus, neuer ſaw M. Polo, nor know the worth of the worthieſt Voyage, that perhaps any one man hath written; a man credible in that which hee ſaw himſelfe, in ſome things receiued by Relation, rather telling what he heard, then that which I dare beleeue, and ſpecially toward the end of his third Booke, which I haue therefore more abridged. Pitie it is that time hath ſo gnawne and eaten ſome-where, and ſome-where deuoured vtterly many his names and Tracts, which new Lords and new (Lawes, the Saracenicall Conqueſts, eſpecially euer ſince his time) in thoſe parts haue cauſed. And farre eaſier by the Cans greatneſſe then, and his employments vnder him, might hee know the World in thoſe times; then in the combuſtions long ſince begunne and ſtill continued, in diuerſified and quarrelling States is poſſible: the Saracens quarrelling with Ethnikes, Chriſtians, and other Saracens; the Tartars diuided and ſub-diuided into ſo many quarrelſome Serpentine heads, whereby that hugeneſſe is broken in pieces; the Chinois and others prohibiting ingreſſe of ſtrangers, egreſſe of their owne; that I mention not Ethnike and Mooriſh Diuiſions amongſt themſelues. In the ſame time with Polo, liued this following Armenian, of whom Ramuſio relateth, and this Diſcourſe intimateth that the Holy Land being quite loſt, Pope Clement the Fift minding to recouer it, was giuen to vnderſtand of helpes which might be gotten from the Tartars, and withall of this Haiton or Antonie a Kinſman of the King of Armenia, then liuing a Monke or Frier of the Order Premonſtratenſis in Epiſcopia in Cyprus; who in his young time had beene exerciſed in the Warres betwixt the Tartars and Egyptian Soldans, by whom he might receiue the beſt Intelligence of Tartarian Affaires. He therefore (as hee firſt remoued the Court from Rome to France, where it abode ſeuentie yeares) cauſed the ſaid Hayton to be brought from Cyprus to France with all his Memorials and Writings of that ſubiect, and being comne to Poitiers, cauſed one Nicolo di Falcon a Frenchman to write in French, which the other dictated in Armenian, which was done Anno 1307. A Copie of this Storie written aboue two hundred yeares ſince came to Ramuſioes hand (whereto I here, that I ſay not you, are beholden) whence hee tooke that which concerned the Tartars, omitting the reſt, or remitting rather his Reader to M. Polo. Betwixt which two ſome difference may ſeeme, but ſo little, that Wiſemen need no aduertiſement thereof.

See Tom. 1. l. 8. c. 4. §. 3.

One thing is remarkable, that the Author and the next, who in many Geographicall Notes agrees with him, diuide Aſia into two parts, one called profound or deepe, the other the greater, and diuided in the mids

Haiton and Mandeuils agree in many things.

midst by the Caspian Sea, and Caucasus, which our Armenian cals Cocas, which Alexander passed not, nor was euer well knowne to the Ancients, who called all beyond that Hill Scythia, as wee now call the most of it by a generall name Tartaria. Strabo * hath made like diuision of Asia into the inner and vtter, Taurus being the Vmpire, which Hill (with diuers Appellations) beginning at Pamphylia runnes Eastwards thorow the midst of Asia to the Indies, that part to the North beeing called Asia within (Taurus) and that to the South Asia without. Some ancient Geographers as Dionysius mentions, extended Europe to the Caspian Sea, which most of the Ancients thought to concurre with the Ocean, as the Mediterranean, Arabian, and Persian doe. Dionysius his Verses are worth obseruation,

The reason of our method in thus ordering our Pilgrimes.

* Strab. l. 11. ad eum Nat. Casaub.

* Dionys. Alex. περιηγησ. vid. & Eustach. com.

Μέσα * γαίης πάσης Ἀσίης ὄρος ἀμφιβέβηκεν,
Ἀρξάμενον γαίης Παμφυλίδος ἄχρι κατ' Ἰνδούς, &c.

They called it Taurus, as there followes of the Bull-forme, &c.

Οὕνεκα Ταυροφανὲς τέκμωρ ὀξυκάρηνον ὀρθοῦ,

Hereof we are the more curious, to giue to the more curious a reason of our method in this Worke, who in our former Tome haue first encompassed the shoares of Asia from the West to the East: and then in the In-land parts haue in the eight and ninth Bookes principally (as Voyages gaue leaue) viewed Asia without Taurus, and to the South of the Caspian: but this Profound or Inner, more vnknowne part, we surueay here, where we handle the Voyages and Discoueries of those parts of the World, which the Ancients knew very little or not at all. And indeed, how little was Mangi, Cataio, or Tartaria knowne, till the Tartars obtruded vpon the World, a terrible knowledge of themselues, in manner as Rubruquius and the former Friers, with these Gentlemen, Polo and Haiton describe? Yea, how were they by ignorance of following times buried againe, till Portugall, English, and other moderne Voyages haue reuiued them, as it were in a resurrection? and that often in new names, as if they had suffered that μετεμψύχωσις, so often here rehearsed, and so much credited in many Religions of those Easterne Asians, whence it comes that they are hardly knowne to be the same. The Reader must pardon me (or go to the Author himselfe) if I haue here omitted some peices of Haiton, which you haue had in Polo and others before, specially not so pertinent to our present Tartarian subiect. The figures note the Chapters, after the Latine, from which Ramusios Diuision is much diuided, and we therefore from both.

CHAP. V.

The Historie of AYTON, or ANTHONIE the Armenian, of Asia, and specially touching the Tartars.

§. I.

Of the Kingdome of Cathay, and diuers other Prouinces of Asia, and of the first habitation of the Tartars: and of CANGIVS, or CINGIS his beginnings.

The largenesse of the Kingdome of Cathay.

THe Kingdome of Cathay, is the greatest that is to be found in the World, and is replenished with people and infinite riches; beeing situated on the shoare of the Ocean Sea; In the which there are so many Ilands, that their number can no wayes be knowne. For neuer was there any man that could say he had seene all those Ilands; But those of them which haue beene frequented, are found to abound with innumerable wealth and treasures; and that which is there most esteemed, and deerest sould, is Oyle of Oliues, which the Kings and Commanders there cause to be kept with great diligence, as a Souereigne Medicinable thing; And moreouer, in the Kingdome of Cathay, are many maruellous and monstrous things, which I forbeare to mention. The Inhabitants of those parts are exceeding wise and subtill, replenished with all kind of skill and cunning, insomuch, that they disdaine the endeauours of all other Nations, in all kind of Arts, and Sciences: saying, that they only see with two Eyes, the Latines but with one eye, and that all other Nations are blind. And albeit they are exceeding sharpe-sighted in the exercise of all bodily workes and labours; yet is there not amongst them any knowledge of spirituall things; the men of that Countrey are not bold, or couragious, but more fearefull of death then befitteth such as beare Armes; yet are they very ingenious, and haue oftner had victorie of their enemies by Sea, then by Land: the money vsed in those parts, is of square peeces of Paper, signed with the Ilands.

Oile of oliues.

Their arrogant presumption.

Effeminate fearfulnesse.

the Kings ſigne, according to which ſigne or marke: the pieces are of greater or ſmaller value; and if they begin by age to be waſted, or worne out, hee that bringeth them to the Kings Court ſhall haue new for them; of Gold and other Metals, they make Veſſels, and other ornaments. Of this Kingdome of Cathay it is ſaid, that it is in the beginning of the World, becauſe the head thereof is in the Eaſt, and there is not knowne any other Nation to inhabit more Eaſterly thereabouts; on the Weſt it confineth on the Kingdome of Tarſa, on the North with the Deſert of Belgian. And on the South-ſide are the Ilands of the Ocean, afore mentioned. See Sir Iohn Mandeuils trauels.

2. In the Kingdom of Tarſa are three Prouinces, whoſe Rulers are alſo called Kings, the men of that Countrie are called Iogour, they haue alwayes worſhipped Idols, and yet doe except the ten Kindreds of thoſe Kings, who by the guiding of a Starre came to worſhip the Natiuitie in Bethleem Iuda. And there are yet found many great and noble among the Tartarians of that Race, which hold firmely the Faith of Chriſt. But the reſt which are Idolaters in thoſe parts, are of no eſtimation in matter of Armes, yet are they of a piercing wit for the learning of all Arts and Sciences. They haue peculiar Letters or Characters of their owne. And almoſt all the Inhabitants of thoſe parts abſtayne from eating of fleſh and drinking of Wine, neither would they by any meanes bee brought to kill ought that hath life. Their Cities are very pleaſant and they haue great Temples in which they worſhip their Idols. Corne groweth there abundantly, and all good kind of Graine. But they are without Wine, and hold it a ſinne to drinke it, as doe alſo the Agarens. This Kingdome of Tarſa on the Eaſt-ſide confineth with the Kingdome of Cathay, as aforeſaid; on the Weſt it bordereth on the Kingdome of Turqueſtan, on the North on a certayne Deſert, and on the South-ſide it adioyneth to a very rich Prouince called Sym, which is ſituate betweene the Kingdome of India and Cathaia, and in that Prouince are found Diamonds. Of the Kingdome of Tarſa. Wit and inclination. Manners and Rites. Sym.

3. The Kingdome of Turqueſtan on the Eaſt ſide is confined with the Kingdome of Tarſa, on the Weſt ſide with the Kingdome of the Perſians, on the North ſide with the Kingdome of the Coraſmians, and on the South it reacheth out to the Deſart of India. In this Kingdome are but few good Cities, but there are large Plaines and good feeding for their flockes, therefore the Inhabitants for the moſt part are Shepherds, dwelling in Tents, and houſes that may eaſily bee remoued from place to place. The greateſt Citie of that Kingdome is called Ocerra, there groweth but little Barley or Wheate: no Wine at all. Their Drinke is Curſia, and other made Drinks, and Milke, they eate Rice and Millet, and fleſh, and are called Turkes. And almoſt all of them are of the Sect of wicked Mahomet, yet there are ſome amongſt them of no Faith nor Religion. They haue no peculiar Characters of their owne, but doe vſe the Arabike Letters in their Cities or Campes. Of the Kingdome of Turqueſtan. The Inhabitants Shepherds. Ocerra. Curſia. Turkes.

4. The Kingdome of the Coraſmians, is well ſtored with good Cities and Townes, and there are many Inhabitants, becauſe the Land is fruitfull and pleaſant, and wheate, and other graine, is there in great quantitie; but they haue little Wine. This Kingdome is confined with a Wilderneſſe of one hundred dayes Iourney, in length on the Weſt-ſide, it reacheth out to the Caſpian Sea. On the North it bordereth on the Kingdome of Cumania, and on the South it hath the Kingdome of Turqueſtan. The chiefe Citie of that Kingdome is called Coraſme, and the people are called Coraſmians, being Pagans, which haue neither Learning, nor Religion. But thoſe wich are called Soldini, are very fierce in Armes, and haue their Language and Letters, and Ceremonies of the Greekes, and make the bodie of Chriſt after the Greeke manner, and are obedient to the Patriarkes of Antioch. Of the Kingdome of the Coraſmians. Coraſme. Soldini.

5. The Kingdome of Cumania is very great: yet by reaſon of the diſtemperature of the Ayre, it is ill inhabited: for in the Winter ſeaſon, the cold is ſo great in ſome places, that neither man nor beaſt can any way liue therein. And againe in ſome places, the heate of Summer is ſo great, that none can endure the ſame, nor the flyes which abound there. This Kingdome of Cumania, is in a manner all plaine, and there are no Trees, nor any Wood to bee found therein, vnleſſe it be about ſome Cities, which haue certayne Orchards. The people inhabit in Fields, and in Tents burning the dung of beaſts in ſteed of Wood: This Kingdome of Cumania on the Eaſt-ſide, hath the Kingdome of Coraſmia, and a certayne Deſert or Wilderneſſe; on the Weſt-ſide is the great Sea called Pontus Euxinus, and the Sea of Tanais: on the North-ſide it confineth on the Kingdome of Caſſia, and on the South-ſide, it reacheth out to a certayne great Riuer called Etil, which euery yeare is frozen, and ſometimes remayneth all the yeare ſo hardly frozen, that men and beaſts goe thereon as on Land, on the bankes of that Riuer, are found certayne ſmall Trees. But beyond and on the other ſide of that Riuer, are diuers and ſundry Nations inhabiting, which are not accounted of the Kingdome of Cumania, and yet are obedient to the King thereof: And ſome there are which inhabit about the Mountayne Cocas, which is exceeding great and high. The Aſtures and other rauenous Birds, breeding in that Mountayne, are all white, and that Mountayne is ſeated betweene two Seas; for on the Weſt is the great Euxine Sea, and the Caſpian Sea on the Eaſt, which Caſpian Sea hath no entrance into the Ocean, but is as a Lake which only for his greatneſſe hath the name of a Sea, for it is the greateſt Lake that is to bee found in the World, reaching from the ſaid Mountayne Caucaſus, euen to the head of the Kingdome of Perſia, and diuideth all Aſia into two Of the Kingdome of Cumania. This extremitie comes by the long preſence in Summer, and abſence of the Sunne by Winter. Cocas or Caucaſus. See after Chapter 47.

Digitized by Google

two parts, whereof that which is towards the East is called Asia profunda, and that which is on the West is called Asia maior, or the greater Asia; and many good fishes are in that Lake.

India.

6. The Kingdome of India is very long, and situated on the Ocean Sea, which in those parts is called the Indian Sea. This Kingdome beginneth from the Confines of Persia, and extendeth by East vnto a Prouince called Balaxia, in which are found the precious stones which wee call Balayes. On the North-side is that long and great Desart of India, where the Emperour Alexander is said to haue found so many Serpents, and such diuersitie of Beasts inhabiting. In that Kingdome it is that Saint Thomas preached the Faith of Christ, and conuerted many people and Prouinces. But because they are so farre distant and remote from other places and parts of Christendome, the Christian Religion is there much diminished, for there is but one Citie that is inhabited with Chrrstians, the rest hauing wholy forsaken the profession of Christianitie. On the South-side of this Kingdome is a very long reach of the Ocean, in the which are many Ilands, but their Inhabitans be all blacke, going altogether naked for heat, and worship Idols like fooles. In those Ilands are found precious stones, Pearles, and Gold, and sundry Spices, and medicinable drugs helpfull vnto men. There is also a certayne Iland called Celan or Zeilan, knowne in ancient time by the name of Taprobana, in which are found Rubies and Saphires, and the King of that Iland hath the greatest and best Rubie that is any where to be found, which when hee is to be crowned King, he holdeth in his hand riding round about the Citie, and is afterwards obeyed of all as King.

Note that of Alexander the great, the Saracens and Pagans haue many and strange Fables, neuer heard of in these parts; as here of Orlando, Arthur, Ogerus, and others. See in Polo. Persia and Media are omitted.

Armenia.

9. In the Land of Armenia there are foure Kingdomes: yet haue they alwayes beene subiect to one King only. The length of the Kingdome of Armenia beginneth at the Confines of Persia, and reacheth out West-ward euen to the Kingdome of Turkie. The breadth of Armenia begins at the Citie Miralis, called the Iron Gate, and extendeth euen to the Kingdome of Media. In Armenia there are many great and very rich Cities, of which Tauris is the chiefe: they haue both Characters of their owne, called the Armenian Letters, and others also which they call Haloen. In Armenia is the highest Hill or Mountayne that is in the World, which is commonly called Arath, or Ararat, and on the top of that Mountayne, the Arke of Noah rested first after the Deluge. And albeit for the abundance of Snow which is alwayes on that Mountayne, both Winter and Summer none is able to goe vp the same, yet is there alwayes seene in the top thereof a certaine blacke thing, which men affirme to be the Arke.

Miralis, or the Iron gate, now Derbent.

Georgia.

10. The Kingdome of Georgia on the East-side, beginneth from a certayne great Mountayne, called Alboris, or Albsor. There doe inhabit many Nations, and thereof that Prouince is called Alania, or Albania, from whence the Kingdome of Georgia reacheth West-ward on the North-side to some Lands of the Kingdome of Turkie; the whole length of this Kingdome of Georgia lying vpon the great Sea, and on the South-side it is confined with Armenia the Great. This Kingdome of Georgia is diuided into two Kingdomes, one of which is called by the name of Georgia, and the other knowne by the name of Albcas, or Albcase: and they haue beene alwaies gouerned by two seuerall Kings. The one of which is subiect to the Emperour of Asia; namely, the King of Georgia, But the Kingdome of Albcas being mightie in people, and strongly situated and fortified, could neuer yet either by the Emperours of Asia, or by the Tartarians bee subdued. In this Kingdome of Georgia is a maruellous strange Wonder or Miracle, which I durst not haue reported or beleeued, if I had not seene it with my eyes. But because I haue personally beene there, and beene made the eye witnesse thereof, I say, that in those parts there is a Prouince or Countrey called Hamsem, being in circuit about three dayes iourney, whose whole extent is all couered ouer with such thicke and palpable darknesse, that none can see any thing therein, neither doe any dare to goe into that Land, because they know not the way out againe. Those that inhabit neere about it, affirme, that they haue often heard the sound of mens voices crying, of Cockes crowing, and the neighing of Horses in the Wood, and by the course of a Riuer that runneth out from that place, there appeare certaine signes that there are people inhabiting therein.

Chaldea.

11. The Kingdome of the Chaldeans beginneth on the East-side from the Mountaynes of Media, and reacheth out vnto Ninive. The Inhabitants of Chaldea are called Nestorians, because they are followers of the Errour of Nestorius, and they haue their peculiar Chaldean Characters, others there are amongst them that vse the Arabian Letters, and are of the Sect of the seducer Mahomet.

Mesopotamia.

12. The Kingdome of Mesopotamia on the East-side, beginneth at the great Citie Mosel, (called of the Ancients Seleucia) which is seated neere the Riuer Tigris, and stretcheth out vnto the Riuer Euphrates, and the Citie of Robais (or Edessa.)

Euphrates.

Turkie.

13. When the Turkes had inuaded the Kingdome of Turkie, and possessed themselues thereof, they could not preuayle against the Citie of Trapezond, nor the Territorie thereof, because of their strong Castles and other Fortifications, by reason whereof it remayned still vnder the gouernment of the Emperour of Constantinople, who vsed yearely to send thither a Ruler or Gouernour as his Deputie there, vntill at length one of them rebelling against him, made himselfe King in such sort that he which now holdeth that Land, is called Emperour of Trapezond. The

Inha-

Digitized by Google

Inhabitants are Greekes. In the Kingdome of Turkie are foure Nations inhabiting; namely, the Greekes, Armenians, and Iacobines, (or Iacobites, which are Christians, liuing on merchandise and manuring the Earth:) and the Turkes, which are Saracens, that haue inuaded that Land, and gotten the Gouernment from the Greeks. Some of them liue on merchandise, and labouring of the ground inhabiting in Cities and Townes: others keeping in the Woods and Fields, both Winter and Summer being Shepherds, and very good Bow-men. Nations of Turkie.

14. Cilicia at this day is called Armenia, by reason that after the enemies of the Christian faith had gotten that Countrey, and held it a long time from the Greekes, the Armenians endeauoured themselues so well that they wonne it againe from the Pagans. In so much that the King of Armenia, by the grace of God ruleth ouer Cilicia at this day: In the Kingdome of Syria are diuers Nations inhabiting, namely, Greekes, Armenians, Iacobites, Nesterians, and Saracens. There are also other Christian Nations, namely, the Syrians and Maronines (or Maronites.) Syria. Cilicia, how it came to bee called Armenia. Cap. 15. Of the Saracen Empire is omitted.

16. The Countrey in which the Tartarians first inhabited, lieth beyond the great Mountaine Belgian, mentioned in the Histories of * Alexander. And there they liued like brutish People without learning or Religion, feeding herds of Beasts, and going from place to place to seeke pasture. And being not exercised in armes they were despised of other Nations, and payed tribute to al. Of these in ancient time there were many Nations which by a common name were called, * Mogls, who vpon their encrease were after diuided into seuen principall sorts esteemed more noble then the rest. The first of these Nations was called Tatar, from the name of that Prouince wherein they first inhabited: The second, was named Tangur: The third, Cunat: The fourth, Talair: The fifth, Senich: The sixth, Monghi: And the seuenth, Tebeth. And whiles these seuen Nations liued vnder the subiection of their Neighbours, as is aboue said, it happened that a poore old man, being a Smith, saw a Vision in his sleepe; namely, a man armed all in white Armour, and mounted on a white Horse, which calling him by his name, said vnto him, Changius, It is the will and pleasure of the immortall God, that thou be Lord and Ruler ouer these Nations of the Mogli, and that by thee they bee deliuered from the Dominion of their Neighbours, vnder which they haue long remayned: and they shall rule ouer their Neighbours, and receiue Tribute of them to whom they formerly paid Tribute. Changius hearing this Word of God, was repleniſhed with exceeding ioy, and made publikely knowne the Vision which he had seene. But the Rulers and Commanders would not giue credite to the Vision, but rather despised and mocked the old man. But the night following, they themselues saw the same Vision of the Horse-man armed in white, who commanded them from the Immortall God, that they should be obedient to Changius, and cause all to obey his command. Whereupon, all the said Chieftaines and Gouernours of the seuen Nations of the Tartarians, calling the people together made them to yeeld obedience and reuerence to Changius. Then afterwards placing a Chaire for him in the midst of them, and spreading a blacke Felt Carpet on the ground, they set him thereon, and then the seuen chiefe Rulers lifting him vp, did place him in the Throne, or Chaire of State, with great triumph and acclamation, calling him Can their first Emperour, and doing him solemne reuerence, with bowing their knees as to their Lord and Gouernour. Of the Countrey where the Tartarians formerly inhabited. *Such dreames as the Saracens and Asians haue of Alexander, whom they cal Bicornis &c. as before. * Moals. Changius or Cingis.

Now, at this solemnitie of the Tartarians, and at the simplicitie of their blacke Cloth, vsed in the creating of their first Emperour, none ought much to wonder, either because haply they were not then furnished with any fairer Cloth of State, or else were so rude and ignorant at that time, that they knew no better or fairer fashion of State. But at this men might rather maruell, that the Tartarians hauing since that, conquered many Kingdomes, and gotten infinite riches, (and namely, commanding ouer the Dominions and wealth of Asia, euen to the confines of Hungaria) they will not yet leaue their ancient and accustomed manner; but at the confirmation of euery Emperour obserue the like order in euery point, whereof I can well be a witnesse, hauing beene personally present at the ceremonie vsed at the Confirmation of one of their Emperours. But to returne to our purpose, Changius Can being thus made Emperour by common consent of all the Tartarians, determined ere he attempted any thing, to make triall, whether they would all performe faithfull obedience to him, to which end he made certaine Ordinances to be obserued of all. See sup. c. 2. Haiton, an eye-witnesse of the Tart. Coronation. Changius ordaineth Lawes.

The first was, That all the Tartarians should beleeue and obey the Immortall God, by whose will hee was promoted to the Imperiall Dignitie: which Commandement they obserued and from thenceforth vntill this day haue euer continued to call on the Immortall God in all their occasions. Secondly, Hee willed that all the men that were able to beare Armes should be numbred, and that ouer euery ten should be one appointed, and ouer euery ten thousand a great Commander, and that also ouer euery thousand should bee a Colonell, or Conducter of a Regiment, and he called an Armie of ten thousand Souldiers, a Regiment. He commanded also the seuen Rulers ouer the Nations of the Tartarians, that they should forthwith dismisse themselues of their former dignities: which they relinquished immediatly. But another of his Ordinances was very strange and admirable, in which he commanded those seuen chiefe Rulers to bring euery of them his eldest sonne, and each with his owne hand to cut off his head. Which Commandement appearing to bee most cruell and vniust, yet was there none that would any way gainsay it, it, because they knew him to be set ouer them by Gods prouidence, and therefore they presently fulfilled it. When Changius Can had seene that they were readie to obey him, euen vnto death, he appointed them all a certaine day in which they should be readie to fight. And then they rode against them which bordered next vnto them, and subdued them. Whereby, they which had beene Lords ouer them, were brought into subiection vnder them. After, hee inuaded diuers other Nations, which hee conquered with great celeritie: For hee did all his exploits with a small troupe of men, and was successefull in his enterprises.

Digitized by Google

Preuayleth in fight against his borderers.

Yet, one day it fell out, that being accompanied with a small number he was encountred with a great troupe of his Enemies, in such sort, that the fight being begun betweene them, whiles he valiantly defended himselfe, his Horse was slaine vnder him. And the Tartarians seeing their Lord ouerthrowne, betooke themselues to flight; so that the Enemies being all busied in pursuing of those that fled, and hauing no knowledge of the Emperour, whom they had vnhorsed and ouerthrowne; he runne and hid himselfe among certaine shrubs for safety of his life. Whither when the Enemies were returned, with purpose to spoile the dead Carkasses, and to seeke out such as were hidden, it happened that an Owle * came and sate vpon those little trees or shrubs which he had chosen for his couert, which when they perceiued, they sought no further in that place, supposing that the said Bird would not haue sate there, if any man had beene hidden vnderneath. By which meanes in the dead time of the night he found meanes to escape thence, and came by diuers vnfrequented wayes vnto his owne people, and discoursed vnto them what had befallen him. For which the Tartarians rendred thankes vnto the Immortall God. And that Bird which vnder God was held to be the meanes of his escape, hath euer since beene held in such reuerence amongst them, that happie is he that can get but a Feather of an Owle, which they weare in their heads with great reuerence. Which I thought fit to set downe in this Booke, that the cause might be knowne for which the Tartarians vse commonly to weare Feathers on their heads.

He escapeth by meanes of an Owle. Iosephus in his 13. Booke chap. 8. reciteth a like matter of Agrippa the great. Ramusio hath vn certo vccello chiamato Allocchio. The Allocho honoured.

But their Emperour Changius Can hauing giuen great thankes to God: for his deliuerance out of so great a danger gathered his Armie together, and fiercely assaulted his former Enemies againe and brought them all vnder subiection, and so became Emperor of all the Countries lying on that side of the Mountaine Belgian, and possessed them quietly without disturbance, vntill it happened him to haue another Vision as shall after be declared. Neither is it any maruell that in these Histories I haue not set downe the certaine time, because albeit I haue sought of many to know the certaintie thereof, yet could I neuer finde any to instruct me fully therein: the reason thereof I take to be, because the Tartarians at the first were ignorant of all Learning, and knew no letters, and so passed ouer the times and memorable accidents without any Record or Register thereof kept, whereby they came afterwards to be forgotten.

A new Victory.

The Author excuseth himselfe.

§. II.

Of CHANGIVS Can his second Vision and Conquests. Of HOCCOTA and his three Sonnes expeditions; of GINO Can; of MANGV Can, who was visited by the King of Armenia, and baptised; of the expedition of his Brother HALOON.

17. AFter that Changius Can had subdued all the Kingdomes and Countries on that side of the Mountaine Belgian, he saw another Vision in the night. For the selfe-same Horsman armed in white Armour appeared vnto him againe, saying, Changius Can, it is the pleasure of the Immortall God, that thou passe ouer the Mountaine Belgian, and direct thy course Westwards, where thou shalt possesse Kingdomes and Countries, and subdue many Nations. And that thou mayest be assured that the words which I speake vnto thee are from the Immortall God: Arise and goe with thy people to the Mountaine Belgian, to that part thereof which ioyneth to the Sea, there thou shalt alight from thy Horse, and kneeling downe nine times towards the East; thou shalt worship nine times the Immortall God, and he which is Almightie will shew thee the way by which thou mayest easily passe ouer the Mountaine. At this Vision Changius reioyced exceedingly, and arose without farther doubt or delay: because the trueth which he had found in the first Vision gaue him assurance of the other: in such sort that he forthwith speedily assembled his people, and commanded them to follow him with their wiues and children, and all that they had. And so they went forwards vntill they came to the place where the great and deepe Sea did beate against the Mountaine, so that there appeared no way nor passage for them.

The second Vision. Iosephus mentions a vision of Alexander, one like the Iewish high Priest imposing on him his Expedition. The Sea also gaue him way, Ant. l. 11. & l. 2.

The fatall expedition.

There presently Changius Can as had beene commanded him by God, alighted from his Horse, and all his followers in like manner, worshipping nine times on their bended knees towards the East, they beseeched the Almightie and euerliuing God, that of his infinite mercy and grace he would vouchsafe to shew them the way and passage thence where they continued in prayer all that night. And in the morning arising, they saw that the Sea was departed from the Mountaine, taine, and had left them a way of nine feet in bredth to paſſe. Whereat they being all aſtoniſhed exceedingly, and rendring thankes to the Immortall God moſt deuoutly, they paſſed on the way which they ſaw before them, and directed their ſteps towards the Weſt. But as the Hiſtories of the Tartarians doe mention, after they had paſſed ouer thoſe Mountaines, they indured ſome hunger and thirſt for certaine dayes, becauſe the land was Deſart, and the waters were bitter and ſalt, which they could not by any meanes drinke, vntill at length they came where they had all neceſſaries aboundantly. In which place they abode many dayes. And there it happened by the will of God, that Changius Can grew dangerouſly ſicke, in ſuch ſort that the Phyſicians deſpaired of his recouerie.

Digitized by Google

The miraculous way.

The ſickneſſe of Changius Can.

By reaſon whereof he called before him his twelue ſonnes, and perſwaded them to vnitie and concord by an Example. For, he commanded each of them to bring with him an Arrow, which when he had receiued, and bound them altogether he willed the eldeſt to breake them if he could, which when he had tried, but could not performe, he deliuered them to the ſecond, and then to the third, and then to all the reſt, but none of them could breake them as they were. Then he commanded his youngeſt ſonne to take the Arrowes ſeuerally and breake them, which hee eaſily accompliſhed. Then ſaid Changius Can to his ſonnes: In like manner will it be with you; for, as long as you remayne in concord and vnitie, your Empire ſhall continue; but as ſoone as there commeth diuiſion amongſt you, your power is eaſily ouerthrowne. Many other good examples were giuen by him, and gathered by the Tartarians, which in their Language they call, Iaſach, or Inſtructions of Changius Can. And afterwards hee cauſed the wiſeſt and beſt of his ſonnes, called Hoccota Can, to be receiued as his Succeſſour in his Empire, before he died: and then reſted in peace. And his ſonne, called Hoccota Can, was placed in his Seat.

His allegorical exhorting of his ſonnes to vnitie.

The like Hiſtorie hath Stobæus ſerm. 82. of Scilurus ſee Iornands alſo of the ſonnes of Attila diſagreeing.

His death.

But before wee end this Hiſtorie we muſt ſhew how the number of Nine came to be of reuerence and ſacred eſtimation among the Tartarians: for of a memoriall of the nine kneelings which they made in the Mountaine Belgian, when they worſhipped the immortall God, according to the direction of him that appeared in white Armour, and their way of the bredth of nine feet, through which they paſſed, they hold that number Nine in very high eſtimation. Inſomuch, that if any will offer a Preſent to the Tartarian Emperour, it muſt bee preſented in forme of nine ſeuerall things, if hee will haue it graciouſly accepted; and ſo that the number of Nine be offered the gift is reputed happie, which Cuſtome is yet obſerued at this day among the Tartarians.

The number of Nine, eſteemed among the Tartariant. So they vſe ſtill to the Mogull. ſup. pap. 556

18. Hoccota Can, who ſucceeded in the Empire, was a man of much valour and wiſedome, which made him very well beloued of the Tartarians, who were alwaies faithfull and obedient vnto him. Hee therefore bethought himſelfe in what manner he might beſt ſubdue all Aſia, and thought good to make triall firſt of the mightieſt Prince therein before he attemped it himſelfe in perſon. On that enterpriſe therefore he ſent forth ten thouſand Horſe-men vnder the conduct of a wiſe and valiant Leader, called Gebeſabada, and commanded him to ſeeke out diuers Kingdomes and States, and when hee met with an Aduerſarie too mightie for him, to returne. Hee marched on, and tooke diuers Caſtles and Townes, and cruelly vſed thoſe which hee vanquiſhed in battell, for terrour to others, putting out their eyes, and taking away their Horſes and Victuals; dealing kindly with the weaker. Thus hee proceeded to the Iron Gate which Alexander built at the foot of Cochas, and razed it, leſt it might hinder his returne. Tuannus the Prince of Georgia came out againſt him, and in a Plaine, called Mogran, they fought, but the Tartars ouercame; and proceeded to Arſcor a Citie of the Soldan of Turkie, who was ſo well prouided to entertayne him, that Gebeſabada ſeeing his forces decayed, returned to Hoccota Can, then in Cambalu. Hee deſiring to ſubdue all Aſia, called three of his ſonnes, giuing to each a great Armie, Iochi the eldeſt he ſent Weſtward to Tigris; Baydo, to the North; Chagoday, to the South: and ſo diuided Aſia among his three ſonnes. Hoccota Can made choiſe of another skilfull and valiant Captaine, called Baydo, to whom he gaue thirtie thouſand Tartarian Souldiers, termed Tamachi, or Conquerours, and commanded them to ſet forward the very ſame way that the other ten thouſand went before, and not to make ſtay in any place till they came to the Kingdome of Turkie, and to trie whether they could withſtand the Soldan of Turkie, which was held the mightieſt of all the Princes in Aſia. And if haply they found him ſo ſtrong that they were not able to encounter him, they ſhould then forbeare to fight with him, and make choiſe of ſome place where they might reſt themſelues till they had receiued ſupplie of further aide from ſome of his ſonnes which ſhould bee neereſt vnto them, and that afterwards they might with more ſafety ſet vpon him. Baydo accordingly with his thirtie thouſand Tartarians came to the Kingdome of Turkie; and there hee vnderſtood that the Soldan which had diſcomfited the firſt Tartarians was dead, and that his ſonne Guiatadin ſucceeded him. And this man hearing of the Tartarians comming, was very much afraid, and got all the Mercenaries that he could to his ſuccour both Barbarians and Latines, and amongſt others hee had to his aide two thouſand Latines vnder his two Captaines, the one called, Iohn de Liminado, who came from the Ile of Cyprus, and the other Bonifacius de Molin, who was borne at Genua. The Soldan alſo ſent to his Neighbours, promiſing many fauours and benefits to ſuch as would aſſiſt him, by which meanes hauing Gebeſabada.

Digitized by Google

assembled a great number of men, hee went towards the place where the Tartarians made their abode, whom they found nothing astonished at his approach; for they manfully gaue him battaile at a place called Couſedrack, where they ouerthrew the Armie of the Turkes, and ſo the Tartarians wonne the Kingdome of Turkie, in the yeere 1244.

The Turkes ouercome by the Tartarians.

19. And after a little time Hoccota Can dyed, and a ſonne of his ſucceeded in the Empire, called Gino Can, whoſe life was but ſhort, and after him ſucceeded a Kinſman of his, called Mango Can, who was of very great power and ſubdued many Prouinces, and at length with a great ſpirit he went into the Cathayan Sea to take a certaine Iland, which whiles he held beſieged, the Inhabitants of thoſe parts being very ſubtile and ingenious, ſent certaine Diuers ſecretly vnder water, who continued ſo long vnder the Ship, in which hee was, vntill they had made many holes therein, ſo that the water came into it (no man obſeruing nor ſtopping the leake) vntill the Ship ſunke, and Mango Can was drowned therein. Whereupon the reſidue of the Tartarians returned home and choſe his brother, called Cobila Can, for their Emperour, who raigned ouer them two and fortie yeeres, became a Chriſtian, and founded a certaine Citie, called Ions, in the Kingdome of Cathay, which is reported to be greater then Rome; and in that Citie he dwelled vntill his dying day. But leauing him, let vs ſpeake of the three ſonnes of Hoccota Can, and of Haoloon, and of his Heires.

Of Gino Can the third Emperour.

The former Friars mention theſe two, I. de Plano Carpini was with the former, and Rubruq. with Mangu.

Mango Can drowned.

Cobila, or Cublai Can.

Ions the great Citie.

20. Iochi, the eldeſt ſonne of Hoccota Can, rode toward the Weſt with all that people which his Father had giuen him, and there finding fruitfull and pleaſant Countries, abounding in all kinde of riches, he fixed his Tents, and ruled ouer the Kingdome of Turqueſtan, and the leſſer Perſia, euen to the Riuer Phiſon, where his people inhabiting euer ſince, are exceedingly multiplied in perſons and riches, and the Heires of Iochi haue ſucceeded one the other in thoſe Dominions to this preſent, and thoſe Countries are at this day ruled by two Brothers, the one called Chapar, the other Doax, who haue diuided thoſe Countries betweene them, and doe poſſeſſe them peaceably.

Iochi raigneth ouer Turqueſtan.

See 47. Chapt.

21. Baydo, the ſecond ſonne of Hoccota Can, with the Tartarians which his Father gaue him, rode towards the North, vntill he came to the Kingdome of Cumania, where the Cumanians hauing many armed men, oppoſed themſelues, and defended their Land againſt them. But being at length ouer-come, they fled to the Kingdome of Hungaria, where are yet many Cumanians inhabiting. Baydo hauing beaten the Cumanians out of their Countrie, went to the Kingdome of Ruſſia and conquered it, and poſſeſſed the Land of Gazaria (which is in the Northerne part of Taurica) and the Kingdome of Bulgaria; and by the way which the Cumanians had fled, he came to the Kingdome of Hungaria. Afterwards the Tartarians went towards the parts of Germanie, till they came to a certaine Riuer that runneth through the Dukedome of Auſtria: where they thought to haue paſſed ouer a Bridge which they found there. But Frederick the Duke of Auſtria, and others, that bordered neere it, had fortified the Bridge ſo that the Tartarians were denyed paſſage. Baydo thereupon, incenſed with furie, commanded that all ſhould paſſe through the water, and himſelfe was the firſt that entred, expoſing thereby himſelfe and all his followers to apparant danger of death: for ſuch was the breadth of the Riuer and the violence of the ſtreame, that their Horſes were wearied before they could come to the farther banke of the Riuer. Which the reſidue ſeeing which were not yet entred into the water, they were confounded with griefe, and returned to Ruſſia, and Cumania which they formerly had conquered, as hath beene declared; and neuer ſince that haue the Tartarians attempted againſt Germanie. But the poſteritie of Baydo hath euer ſince ſucceſſiuely held thoſe Lands which he ſubdued. And he which now raigneth there, is called [a] Tochai, and ruleth peaceably and quietly.

The ſucceſſe of Baydo Northward.

His victorie ouer the Cumanians, ſo called as may ſeeme of the Caſtle Cumania, mentioned by Plin. l. 6. c. 11. now Derbent.

Now Muſcouia.

His drowning in Auſtria.

His poſteritie.

a Of him after 47. Chapt.

22. Cangaday (or Chagoday) with thoſe Tartars which his Father gaue him, rode towards the South, euen to the parts of India the leſſer. There he found many Deſarts, Mountaines, and drie Lands not inhabited, ſo that hee could not paſſe that way: but hauing loſt many of his People, Horſes, and other Beaſts, he turned him towards the Weſt, and after much labour came to his brother Iochi, to whom he related what had befalne him: who taking compaſſion on his brother, gaue him and his people a good part of thoſe Countries which hee had: and euer after, thoſe two brethren dwelled together and their Progenie, vntill this day inhabite in thoſe parts, yet in ſuch ſort, that thoſe which deſcended of the younger brother, doe beare a kinde of reuerence to the poſteritie of the Elder, and ſo being content with their Portions, they liue peaceably and quietly together: and that Succeſſor of [b] Iochi that now liueth is called Barach.

Cangadays enterprize.

b Or rather of Bagoday for the Succeſſors of Iochi, were named in the 20. Chapter.

23. In the yeere of our Lord 1253. Haython, the King of Armenia, ſeeing that the Tartarians had in a manner ſubdued all the Kingdomes, Countries, and Lands, euen to the Kingdome of Turkie, taking Counſell of the wiſe, he reſolued to goe in perſon to the Emperour of the Tartarians, the better to inſinuate himſelfe into his fauour, and to make league with him. But firſt he ſent his brother, Lord Sinibald, Conſtable of the Kingdome of Armenia, to obtayne ſafe conduct for him: who carrying with him many Preſents, and going attended with a goodly companie, diſpatched in good order the buſineſſe for which he was ſent, yet ſtayed hee by the ſpace of foure dayes before he came backe to Armenia: but at his returne, he related to the King what he had ſeene and done: who without delay departed in ſecret manner diſguiſed, becauſe it might be dangerous for him to be knowne in the Kingdome of Turkie, through which hee must needes make his iourney: and as God would, at his comming thither, he found that the Soldan of Turkie was ouerthrowne by a Tartarian Captaine; whom hee met with there and made himselfe knowne vnto him, who when he vnderstood him to be the King of Armenia, and that hee was going toward the Emperour, entertayned him very honorably, and caused him to bee conducted to the Kingdome of Cumania, and beyond the Iron gate. Haiton King of Armenia his iourney.

Of Mango Can the fourth Emperour.

be

And afterwards, other Tartarian Captaines caused him to bee conducted ouer all other Countries and Places, vntill he came to [c] Almalech (or Cambalu) where Mango Can their Emperour resided; who reioyced much at the comming of the King of Armenia, and the rather for that from the comming of Changius Can ouer the Mountaine Belgian, no other great Prince had come to meet him, and therefore hee receiued and entertayned him with much honour and loue, and gaue vnto him some of the greatest persons about him to attend, and associate him at his pleasure, and did him many other fauours; But the King of Armenia hauing rested certaine dayes, intreated the Emperour to vouchsafe him Audience in those affaires, for which hee was come, and to giue him licence to returne. The Emperour very graciously answered him, that he would most willingly accomplish all his desires, and that it was very acceptable vnto him that he came of his owne accord.

c It seemes Caracarum which then was Almalech, the King Citie, or Cambalu, as Ramusio hath it.

The King with good deliberation made seuen Petitions. First, He desired that the Emperour and all his people would be baptized in the Christian Faith, leauing all other Sects. Secondly, That there might be a perpetuall peace and friendship established betweene the Christians and the Tartarians. Thirdly, That in all Countries which the Tartarians either had conquered or should conquer, the Churches and Churchmen, whether secular or religious, might be free and exempted from all seruitude and payments. Fourthly, That he would deliuer and free the holy Land, and the holy Sepulcher of our Lord, out of the hands of the Saracens, and restore them to the Christians. Fiftly, That he would endeuour the destruction of the Caliph of Baldach, who was the head and chiefe Doctor of the Sect of Mahometisme. Sixtly, Hee required that a speciall Charter might be granted him, that of whatsoeuer Tartarians especially such as should be neareste to the Kingdome of Armenia hee should bee occasioned to demand aide, they should forthwith be readie to assist him. Seuenthly, He craued that all the Lands of the iurisdiction of the Kingdome of Armenia, which the Saracens had inuaded, and were or should happen to be recouered by the Tartarians, might be restored to the King of Armenia, and that such as he should get from the Saracens, hee might peaceably and quietly enioy. Mango Can hauing considered the Petitions of the King of Armenia, calling before him all his chiefe Captaines and Counsellers in their presence, made him answere after this manner. Because that the King of Armenia of his owne accord, and not of compulsion, is come vnto vs from remote parts; it beseemeth the Imperiall Maiestie to yeeld him all his demands that are lawfull and honest: Therefore to you, O King of Armenia, Wee returne this answere, That wee will accept of all your Requests made, and will cause them all (God-willing) to bee duely accomplished: first, I my selfe being Emperour and Lord of the Tartarians, will bee baptised in that Faith which the Christians hold at this day; wishing and aduising all my Subiects to doe the like: yet not entending to force any thereunto. To your second, We will and agree that there be a perpetuall peace betweene the Tartarians and Christians, yet with this caution, that your selfe bee a chiefe Pledge and Suretie that the Christians obserue on their behalfe the like peace and amitie towards vs, as wee for our part intend inuiolably to keepe towards them. Wee grant also, That all the Churches of Christians and their Clergie-men whatsoeuer, either Secular or Religious, shall enioy their Priuiledge and Immunitie of Libertie and Exemption throughout the Dominions of our Empire, and that none shall molest them any kinde of wayes. Touching the matter of the holy Land, we say, That if we could conueniently we would willingly goe thither in person, for the reuerence we beare to our Lord Iesus Christ. But because we haue many occasions of importance to stay vs in these parts, wee will take order with our Brother Haloon for the due accomplishment of that seruice in all points as it behoooueth, for the freeing of the Citie of Hierusalem and all the holy Land, out of the hands of the Pagans, and restoring it to the Christians.

The King of Armenia his Demands.
1.
2.
3.
4.
5.
6.
7.

The answere of the Tartarians.
1.
2.
3.
4.

Concerning the Caliph of Baldach, We will giue order to Baydo, our Captaine of the Tartarians, which are in the Kingdome of Turkie, and the rest thereabouts, that they bee all obedient to our Brother, whom wee will haue to destroy the Caliph as our capitall and deadly Enemie. The Charter which the King of Armenia desireth for assistance from the Tartarians, Wee wish it to bee drawne according to his desire, and wee are readie in all things to confirme it. Lastly, whereas the King Armenia requireth, That the Lands of his Kingdome, which the Saracens had taken from, and haue since beene recouered by the Tartarians, may be restored vnto him, we freely and frankly accord it, willing our Brother Haloon to see such restitution made without delay.

5. See the 18. and 24. Chapters.
6.
7. Polo calls this Haloon, Vlau.

24. After that Mango Can had thus liberally accorded the Requests of the King of Armenia, and confirmed them by Charters, he would forthwith receiue the Sacrament of Baptisme, and was accordingly baptised by the hands of a certaine Bishop, who was Chancellor of the King of Armenia, Mango Can with his people is baptised.

Digitized by Google

Armenia, and all that were of his houſhold with many other great Perſonages of both Sexes. And then he made choice of ſuch as were to accompany his Brother Haloon, about the enterprize of the Holy Land. After Haloon and the King of Armenia departed, and rode both together vntill they paſſed ouer the great Riuer Phiſon; then Haloon with his mightie Armie inuaded the Countreyes and Lands euery where, and in leſſe then ſix moneths hee ſubdued eaſily the whole Kingdome of Perſia, becauſe it was without a Ruler, or Gouernour, and tooke in all the Countreyes without reſiſtance, euen till he came to the Land of certayne Infidels, which are called Aſſaſſini, hauing neither Law nor Religion, but liuing as their Prince and Lord, commonly called * Sexmontio, inſtructeth them at whoſe pleaſure and commandement they willingly and readily expoſe themſelues to death. Theſe had a certayne impregnable Caſtle, called Tigado, which was ſo well furniſhed with all kind of neceſſary prouiſion, and ſo ſtrongly built and ſeated, that they feared no aſſault. Haloon therefore commanded one of his Captaynes to take with him tenne thouſand of thoſe Tartarians, which hee had left in Perſia, and in no wiſe to depart from the ſiege of that Caſtle vntill hee had taken it, ſo that they remayned at the ſiege thereof, by the ſpace of ſeuen yeares both Winner and Summer, which at laſt was yeelded vp by the Aſſaſſini, only for want of clothes, but not for any penury of victuals, or ſcarſitie of any other thing, whiles Haloon employed himſelfe in ordering of the Kingdome of Perſia, and beſieging the Caſtle of the Aſſaſſini, the King of Armenia tooke leaue of him to returne, becauſe hee had beene long out of his Kingdome: Haloon therefore licenced him to depart, and giuing him many great gifts, directed his Precept to Baydo, reſiding in the Kingdome of Turkie, which he had ſubdued, that he ſhould conduct him ſafely to the entrance of his owne Kingdome, which in all things he fulfilled, ſo that after three yeares and a halfe of abſence, the King of Armenia, through the mercie of Ieſus Chriſt, came ioyfully home into his owne Countrey.

The Voyage of Haloon with King Haython.

Perſia poſſeſſed by the Tartars.

* Senex de monte, ſee Polo § 2.

Tigado beſieged.

In the Latine it is 27. Ramuſ. 7 Polo hath but 3.

25. Haloon hauing ordered the Kingdome of Perſia in conuenient manner, went into a certayne Prouince neere to Armenia, called Sorloch, where he repoſed and recreated himſelfe all the Sommer, and at the beginning of Winter he beſieged Baldach, in which the Caliph reſided, who was the chiefe Maſter and Doctor of the Irreligious Sect of Mahometiſme, for which Enterprize Haoloon re-enforced his Army with thirtie thouſand Tartarians, that were in the Kingdome of Turkie, and aſſaulting the Citie by the ſhoare, hee tooke the ſame without any great difficultie, or delay. The Caliph was brought aliue into the preſence of Haloon, and there was found in Baldach, ſo much Treaſure and Riches as would ſcarcely bee beleeued to bee in all the World beſides; This Citie of Baldach was taken in the yeere 1258.

Ha'oon ſoiourneth in Sorloch.

The ſiege of Ba'dach.

The Citie and Caliph taken.

26. When Haoloon had diſpoſed of the Citie of Baldach, he cauſed the Caliph to be brought vnto him, and all his Treaſure to be laid before him, Then he demanded of him whether he had beene Lord of all that Treaſure, who affirming, it was asked againe why hee had not made vſe thereof in procuring the ayde of his Neighbours, and leuyed mercenarie Souldiers to defend him and his Countrey from the power of the Tartarians, whoſe anſwere was that hee thought his owne people had been ſufficient. Then ſaid Haloon to the Caliph, thou art ſaid to be the chiefe Doctor & Teacher of all that beleeue the deceiuing Doctrine of Mahomet, & receiueſt rewards and Gifts of them all; therefore ſuch and ſo precious a Maſter muſt be fed with no other meate but with theſe precious things, which thou haſt loued and kept ſo carefully, all which wee giue thee for thy ſuſtenance: and ſo commanded that the Caliph ſhould bee ſhut into a Chamber, and that his Pearle and Gold ſhould bee ſet before him, that hee might eate as much as hee would thereof, but that no other meate nor drinke ſhould be giuen him; by which meanes the miſerable wretch ended his life after a miſerable manner. And there was no other Caliph in Baldach after him.

The Parſimonie of the Caliph.

His death amongſt his Treaſure.

27. After that Haoloon had ſubdued Baldach and all the Countrey round about, hee diſtributed the Prouinces amongſt his Captaines and Rulers as he thought good, giuing charge that the Chriſtians ſhould euerie where be louingly vſed, and be preferred to the gouernment of Caſtles and Cities, and the Saracens held vnder ſtreight ſubiection. Haloon had alſo a Wife called Doucoſcaro diſcended of thoſe Kings that came from the Eaſt being guided by the Starre of the Natiuitie of our Lord, which Ladie being a moſt deuout Chriſtian, was a great meanes of deſtroying the Temples of the Saracens, and prohibiting the Solemnities and Ceremonies of Mahomet, and finally raſed their Temples to the ground, and brought the Saracens in ſuch ſubiection that they durſt not ſhew their heads.

The fauour of Haoloon towards Chriſtians.

His Wife.

28. After that Haoloon had reſted a yeare, he ſent to the King of Armenia, to meete him at the Citie Robays, in the Kingdome of Meſopotamia, becauſe he entended to goe towards the Holy Land, that hee might reſtore it to the Chriſtians, whereupon, the King Haython of famous memorie tooke his Iourney, accompanied with a great Armie both of Horſemen and Footmen, for at that time the Kingdome of Armenia, was in ſo good eſtate, that it could raiſe a power of twelue thouſand Horſe, and threeſcore thouſand Footmen, whereof beeing an Eye witneſſe my ſelfe, I can will giue teſtimonie thereof, when the King of Armenia was come according to this appointment of Haplan, and had conference with him touching the Enterprize of the Holy Land, he aduiſed him that becauſe the Soldan of Halappi, ruled ouer all the Kingdome of Syria, King Haython bringeth ayde to Haoloon.

Halappi, or Aleppa.

Digitized by Google

ria, in which the Citie of Ierusalem was seated, the way to get the Holy Land, was first to besiege the Citie of Halappi, being the chiefe Citie of Syria, which when he had wonne, it would not be difficult for him to subdue all the rest of that Countrey: which aduise Haloon liked well, and besieged the Citie of Halappi (or Aleppo) which he found to be of great strength being well walled and inhabited: therefore with Mines vnder ground, with Slings and other Engines, hee begirt it so straightly, and assaulted it so manfully on euery side that albeit it seemed impregnable, yet in the space of nine dayes he obtayned it. In this Citie they found such incredible store of wealth as would hardly be beleeued, yet there was a Castle in the midst of the Citie, that held out eleuen dayes after the Citie was taken, which at length was wonne by vndermining. So the Citie Halappi, and afterwards the Kingdome of Syria, was taken by Haolon in the yeare of our Lord * 1240.

Baleftri.

Halapo taken.

* 1260. yet both Latine & Italian haue 1240.

29. But when the Soldan of Halappi named Melechnaser being then in the Citie of Damascus, vnderstood that the Citie of Halappi, with his Wife and Children in it, was taken, being vtterly destitute of Counsell hee came and cast himselfe at the feet of Haloon, hoping thereby that his Wife and Children with some part of his Dominions would bee restored him. But the Soldan found himselfe therein deceiued, for Haloon sent him with his Wife and Children into Persia, that thereby he might enioy the Kingdome of Syria, the more securely. These things thus disposed, Haloon gaue to the King of Armenia a great part of the spoile of Halappi, and of the Lands which he had inuaded, whereby the King of Armenia was strengthened with many Castles bordering on his Kingdome, which he fortified as he thought good; and after that Haoloon had setled the affaires of those Cities and Countries which he had wonne, intending to goe to Ierusalem to free the Holy Land from Pagans, and to restore it to the Christians. There came to him a Messenger the third day, who brought newes that the Tartarian Empire was vacant by the death of his Brother Mango Can, and that his comming was earnestly expected to bee his Successor therein, which report made him very sorrowfull: In regard whereof hee could now proceed no further in person, but left ten thousand Tartars to keepe the Kingdome of Syria, vnder the command of a Captayne called Guiboga, to whom he gaue order that hee should conquer the Holy Land, and restore it to the Christians. And so leauing his Sonne at Tauris, hee hastened Eastward himselfe by great Iourneyes.

§. III.

Of COBILA CAN the fift Emperour, of the Tartarians: Of the Warre with BARCHA, and Tartarian quarrell with the Christians, HAOLAONS death. Acts of the Soldan of Egypt. Of ABAYA and other Sonnes and Successors of HALOON.

BVt before he could come to the Kingdom of Persia, he heard that the Nobles & Princes had placed his Brother Cobila Can in the Imperial Seat of the Tartars, which he heard whilst he was at Tauris: where he vnderstood that Barcat (or Barcha) was marching thither with a great Armie, purposing to make himselfe Emperour. Haoloon therefore assembled his people and met with his Enemies, on a certayne Riuer which was frozen, where beganne a very great Battaile. But the Ice being broken by the great multitude of Horses and Men, there was drowned on the one side and on the other thirtie thousand Tartars; Insomuch, that the Armies on each side returned. But Guiboga whom Haoloon had left in the Kingdome of Syria, and the Prouince of Palestina held those Countreyes peaceably, and loued the Christians well, for he was of the Progenie of the three Kings which went to worship the Natiuitie of our Lord. But when he had laboured earnestly to reduce the Holy Land againe vnder the power of the Christians, the Deuill sowed the seed of scandall, and discord betwixt him and the Christians of those parts, which hapned on this manner. In the Land of Belforte, which is of the Territory of the Citie of Sidon, there were sundry Townes and Villages inhabited by Saracens, which paid certayne Tribute to the Tartars, on whom some of Sidon and Belforte made diuers rodes and spoyles killing sundry of the Saracens, and carrying others away Captiue with a great droue of Cattle. A Nephew of Guiboga remayning neere thereabouts, followed speedily after those Christians that had committed those out-rages to tell them on the behalfe of his Vncle, that they should dismisse their bootie. But some of them vnwilling to large their prey they had taken, ranne vpon him, and slue him, with diuers other Tartarians that accompanyed him. Guiboga hearing that the Christians had slaine his Nephew, rode presently and tooke the Citie of Sidon, dismanteled the walls thereof, and slue some few Christians, the rest sauing themselues in an Iland. And neuer after would the Tartars trust the Christians of Syria; neither durst they put confidence in the Tartars, who were afterwards driuen out of the Kingdome of Syria by the Saracens, as shall be declared.

The Ciuill warre betweene Haolon and Barcat or Barcha.

See Polo, §. 1. Guiboga of the Kindred of the three Kings that came to worship the Natiuitie of Christ.

Belforte.

He destroyeth the Citie of Sidon.

31. Whiles

Digitized by Google

The Soldans enterprize against Guiboga.

31. Whiles Haoloon was busie in the warre with Barcat, as hath beene said, the Soldan of Egypt assembling his Armie came to the Prouince of Palestina, and in a place called Hamalech, he ioyned battaile with Guiboga and his Tartars, where Guiboga was slaine, and his Armie defeated. The Tartars which escaped went into Armenia, and by this meanes the Kingdome of Syria was wholly subdued by the Saracens, sauing certayne Cities of the Christians, which were seated neere the Sea. When Haloon vnderstood how the Soldan of Egypt had inuaded Syria, and driuen thence his people, he gathered his Armie and sent to the King of Armenia, and to the King of Georgia, and the other Christians of the East to prepare themselues against the Soldan of Egypt and the Saracens, and when his Armie was in readinesse a sickenesse seized him, of which he languished the space of a fortnight, and then dyed, by whose death the enterprize of the Holy Land had an end. Abaga his Sonne held the Dominion of his Father, who intreated the Emperour Cobila Can being his Vncle, to confirme him therein, to which he willingly accorded. So he was called Abaga Can, and began to reigne in the yeare of our Lord 1264.

Haolons preparing to renew the wars, dieth.

Abaga his Son and Successor.

32. Abaga was wise and gouerned prosperously in all things, two only excepted, one that he would not be a Christian, as his Father had beene, but worshipped Idols, beleeuing the Idolatrous Priests. The other, that he was alwayes in warres with his Neighbours, by reason whereof the Soldan was long in quiet, and the power of the Saracens much increased. Those Tartars (or rather Turks) which could escape from out the Dominion of the Tartars, fled vnto the Soldan, seeking to auoid the heauie burthens which the Tartars imposed on them. And the Soldan dealt politikely, for he sent Messengers by Sea to the Tartars, in the Kingdomes of Cumania, and Russia, and made composition and agreement with them, that whensoeuer Abaga should moue warre against the Land of Egypt, then they should inuade his Countrey, for which he promised them great gifts, by meanes whereof Abaga could not well inuade the Land of Egypt, but the Soldan could easily without resistance inuade the Christians in the parts of Syria, insomuch, that the Christians lost the Citie of Antioch, and diuers other places of strength, which they held in that Kingdome.

Bendocar Soldan of Egypt inuadeth Armenia, Ramusio cals him Bunbocdare.

33. Moreouer, Bendocar the Soldan of Egypt was so fortunate that he much abased the Kingdome of Armenia. For it hapned that the King of Armenia with many of his men was gone to the Tartars, which the Soldan hearing, sent a Captayne of his to inuade the Kingdome of Armenia. The Sonnes of the King of Armenia, gathering together all that could beare Armes, encountred the Egyptians in the Confines of their Kingdome, and resisted them couragiously; but the Armie of the Armenians being ouerthrowne, one of the Kings Sonnes was taken, and the other was slaine in battaile. So that the Saracens thereby wasted and spoyled all the Kingdome of Armenia, and carryed infinite riches thence to the great damage of the Christians, whereby the Enemies power was much encreased, and the Kingdome of Armenia wondrously weakned. The King whose endeauour was wholly bent about the destruction of the Infidels, hauing heard this most vnhappie newes of his owne Countrey, busied his thoughts night and day how to afflict the Saracens, and oft-times very earnestly dealt with Abaga, and his Tartars to attempt the ouerthrow of faithlesse Mahomet, and the relieue of the Christians. But Abaga excused himselfe by reason of the warres, in which he was daily entangled with his Neighbours. The King of Armenia seeing that hee could not haue any present ayde of the Tartarians, sent and made truce by his Messengers with the Soldan of Egypt, that he might redeeme his Sonne which was Prisoner. The Soldan also promised him that if he restored him a friend of his called Angoldscar whom the Tartars held captiue, and yeelded vp the Castle Tempsach, and some holds of the Citie of Halappi, which he had gotten in the time of Haoloon, hee would set his Sonne at libertie. Whereupon the Soldan, hauing receiued his friend, and the Castle of Tempsacke beeing yeelded, and two other Castles throwne downe at his appointment, deliuered his Sonne out of Prison, and restored him accordingly. Then afterwards King Haython of famous memorie, hauing reigned fortie fiue yeares, and done much good to the Christians, yeelded vp his Kingdome and Dominion to his Sonne Liuon, whom he had deliuered out of captiuitie, and renouncing this Kingdom of the World became professed in Religion, and was called Macharius, changing his name (according to the custome * of the Armenians) when they enter into Religion, and in short time after dyed in peace in the yeare of our Lord 1270.

He concludeth a truce with the Soldan.

* That the Greeke Monkes changed their names, appeareth by the example of Alexander Comneus in Nicet. p.48.6. and of Andronicus the Emperour in Gregoras, lib.9 p.47 and of Cantacuzenus the Emperour in Calcondilas lib.1.

34. This King of Armenia Liuone was wise, and gouerned his Kingdom prouidently, and being much beloued by his owne People, and by the Tartars, he laboured earnestly to destroy the Saracens, so that in his time Abaga made peace with al his neighbors, who of long time had been his enemies. Then the Soldan of Egypt entred the Kingdome of Turkie, and slue many of the Tartars, and draue them out of many Townes. For a Saracen, called Paruana, being Captaine ouer the Tartars that were in Turkie, rebelled against Abaga, and sought the destruction of the Tartarians. Abaga hearing thereof, posted thither so speedily, that in fifteene dayes hee rode fortie dayes iourney. The Soldan hearing of his comming departed suddenly, not daring to make any longer abode. Yet could not so speedily withdraw himselfe, but that the Tartars following swiftly, ouertooke the rereward of his Armie in the entrie of the Kingdome of Egypt, in a place called Pasblanke. There the Tartarians rushing on them, tooke two thousand Horsemen of the Abaga entred the Kingdome of Egypt, and destroyed Turkie.

Paruana.

Digitized by Google

the Saracens, beside much riches, and fiue thousand of the Cordines which liued in that Countrie. Abaga being come to the Confines of Egypt, was perswaded to goe no farther for heat: for that Land is very hote, and his Tartars, and their beasts hauing come speedily from farre, could hardly haue indured it, by reason whereof hee returned into Turkie, and spoiled and wasted all the Countries that had rebelled, and yeelded to the Soldan. But he caused the Traytor Paruana with his partakers to be cut asunder in the midst, after the Tartarian manner, and part of his flesh to be serued in all his meats, whereof he and his Captaines did eat. Such was the reuenge of King Abaga on the Traitor Paruana.

Paruana cut asunder and eaten.

35. Abaga hauing effected his desires in Turkie, and enriched his Tartars with the spoyles of the rebellious Saracens, he called to him the King of Armenia, and offered him the kingdome of Turkie, in regard that his father and hee had beene euer faithfull to the Tartarians. But the King of Armenia being discreet and wise, rendred great thankes to Abaga for so great a Present, but excused himselfe from the accepting thereof, as vnable to gouerne two Kingdomes. For the Soldan of Egypt was in his full strength, and earnestly bent against the Kingdome of Armenia: so that hee had enough to doe to prouide for the defence thereof. Yet aduised him to settle and dispose the Kingdome of Turkie in such sort ere his departure, that there might bee no feare of Rebellion afterwards: and in any case to permit no Saracen to command there. Which aduice Abaga accepted of, and neuer after suffered any Saracen to beare rule in that Countrey. The king of Armenia then desired him to thinke of deliuering the Holy Land out of the hands of the Pagans: wherein he promised all his best endeauour: and wished the King to send messengers to the Pope, and to other Princes of Christendome for their assistance. So Abaga hauing ordered the affaires of Turkie, returned to the Kingdome of Corazen, where hee had left his familie. Bendecar the Soldan of Egypt, after he had receiued such damage by the Tartars, was poisoned, died in Damascus: whereof the Christians of those parts were very glad. And the Saracens very sorrowfull: for they had not his like after, as they themselues commonly reported. For his sonne, called Melechahic, succeeded him, who was soone driuen out of his Dominion by one called Elsi, who violently vsurping, made himselfe Soldan.

King Liuone refuseth the offer of the Kingdome of Turkie.

Hee vrgeth the deliuering of Ierusalem from Pagans.

Corazen.

The death of the Soldan.

Melechahic his sonne and successor.

Elsi the Soldan.

36. The time appointed being come, when Abaga was to begin his warre against the Soldan of Egypt, hee appointed his brother Mangodanior to goe to the Kingdome of Syria with thirtie thousand men, being Tartars, and couragiously to ouercome the Soldan, if he came in battell against him: or otherwise to take in the Castles and Holds of the Countrey, and deliuer them to the Christians, if the Soldan should shun the fight. When Mangodanior with his Armie setting forward, was come neere the Confines of Armenia, hee sent for the King of Armenia, who came presently vnto him with a goodly companie of Horse: so that they entred the Kingdome of Syria, and went spoyling and forraging, till they came to the Citie Aman, now called Camella, which is seated in the midst of Syria. Before this Citie lieth a faire great Playne, where the Soldan of Egypt had assembled his Power, intending to fight with the Tartarians. And there the Saracen on the one side, with the Christians and Tartars on the other side, fought a great battell. The King of Armenia with the Christians ruled and commanded the right wing of the Armie which inuaded the Soldans left wing manfully, and put them to flight, and pursued them three dayes iourney, euen to the Citie Aman. Another part of the Soldans Armie was also routed by Amalech a Tartarian Captaine, who pursued them also three dayes iourney, to a Citie called Turara. When they thought the Soldans Power vtterly ouerthrowne, Mangodanior who neuer had seene the conflicts of warre before, being afraid without any reasonable cause of certaine Saracens, called Beduini, withdrew himselfe out of the field, hauing the better, forsaking the King of Armenia, and his Captaine which had preuayled against his enemies. When the Soldan, which thought he had lost all, saw the field cleere, and all abandoned, he got vpon a little hill, with foure armed men, and stood there. The King of Armenia returning from the pursuit, and missing Mangodanior in the field, was much astonied, and imagining which way hee should be gone, followed after him.

Mangodanior deputed Generall by his Brother.

He commeth to battell against the Soldan.

Turara.

Almach.

But Amalech returning from the enemies whom he had pursued, abode two dayes expecting his Lord, supposing that he had followed after him, as he ought, for the further subduing of his enemies, and the Countrey which they had ouercome: till at last, hauing heard of his retrait, leauing his victorie, hee made speed after him; whom hee found on the banke of the Riuer Euphrates staying for him. And then the Tartars returned to their owne Prouince. But the King of Armenia sustained much losse, and hard aduenture in his returne: for the Horses of the Christians of the Kingdome of Armenia, were so wearied and spent with the length of the way, and want of Fodder, that they were not able to trauell, so that the Christians going scatteringly by vnusuall wayes, were often found out, and slayne without mercy by the Saracens inhabiting those parts: Insomuch that the greatest part of the Armie was lost, and in a manner all the Nobility. And this misaduenture of Mangodanior happened in the yeere of our Lord 1282.

The King of Armenia, his great losse at his returne.

1282.

When Abaga vnderstood the successe hereof, he assembled all his people, and when hee was readie to set forward with all his power against the Saracens, a certaine Saracen, the sonne of the Deuill, came to the Kingdome of Persia, and preuayled by giuing great gifts to some that serued

Abaga prepareth a reuenge

He is poisoned with his Brother.

serued neere about Abaga, in such sort, that both he and his brother Mangodanior were poysoned both in one day: and died both within eight dayes after. The trueth whereof was afterwards disclosed by the mischieuous Malefactors themselues. And so died Abaga Can in the yeere of our Lord 1282.

Tangodor the brother and Successor of Abaga.

37. After the death of Abaga Can the Tartars assembled themselues, and ordayned ouer them a brother of his, called Tangodor, who had ouergone the rest of his brethren. In his youth he had receiued the Sacrament of Baptisme, and was baptised by the name of Nicholai. But being come to riper yeeres, and keeping companie with Saracens, whom hee loued, hee became a wicked Saracen, and renouncing Christian Religion, would be called Mahomet Can, and laboured by all meanes to turne all the Tartarians to that irreligious Sect of Mahomet the sonne of Iniquitie; in such sort, that those that hee could not compell by violence, hee allured by preferments and rewards: insomuch that in his time many of the Tartarians became professed Saracens, as at this day appeareth. This Child of perdition commanded the Churches of the Christians to be destroyed, and forbade them to vse any of their religious Rites or Ceremonies. Hee caused the doctrine of Mahomet to bee publikely preached, the Christians to bee banished, and their Churches in the Citie of Tauris vtterly to bee destroyed. Hee sent Messengers also to the Soldan of Egypt, and concluded a Peace and a League with him, promising that all the Christians within his Dominion should become Saracens, or else lose their heads, which gaue the Saracens cause of much reioycing, and made the Christians very sad.

Of a Christian turneth Saracen.

Hee seeketh to betray the Kings of Armenia and Georgia.

Hee sent moreouer to the King of Armenia in Georgia, and to the other Christian Princes of those parts to come vnto him without delay. But they resolued rather to die in battell then to obey his commandement, for other remedie they could finde none. And the Christians being now in such anguish and bitternesse of heart, that they rather desired to die then to liue, euen God (which neuer refuseth them that put their trust in him) sent consolation to them all. For a Brother of this Mahomet, with a Nephew of his also, called Argon, opposing themselues, and rebelling against him for his euill deeds did signifie to Cobila Can the great Emperour of the Tartarians, how he had forsaken the steps of his Ancestors, and was become a wicked Saracen: labouring with all his might to bring the rest of Tartars to be Saracens also. Which when Cobila Can vnderstood he was much displeased thereat: insomuch that he sent and required Mahomet to reforme his euill wayes, for otherwise he would proceed against him. Which message repleniished him with wrath and indignation, insomuch that he being perswaded there was none that durst gainsay his proceedings but his Brother and his Nephew Argon, he caused his Brother to be slayne: and intending the like to his Nephew, he went against him with a mightie Armie. Argon being not of strength to withstand his forces, betooke himselfe to a strong Hold among the Mountaines; which that Sonne of Iniquitie besieged with his deuillish Armie.

Hee is accused to Cobila Can.

He slayeth his Brother.

Argon finally yeelded himselfe, with condition that he might still enioy his Dignitie and Dominion. But Mahomet deliuered him to the Constable and others of the Nobilitie, to bee kept in Prison. And departing towards the Citie of Tauris, where he left his wiues and children, he gaue direction that his Armie should come softly after him: but appointed the Constable, and such as he trusted most, to put his Nephew to death secretly, and to bring him his head. These things thus hastily ordered and directed, there was amongst those that had receiued the command of that bloudy execution, a man of some Place and Authoritie, brought vp vnder Abaga the Father of Argon, who hauing compassion of his distresse, tooke Armes, and in the night time slue the Constable of Mahomet and all his followers, and deliuering Argon, made him Lord and Ruler of all: some for feare, and others for loue being obedient to his will and commandement. Argon being thus established, accompanied with his faithfull followers, pursued presently after Mahomet, whom he ouertooke and seized on before he came to Tauris, and caused him after their manner, to be cut asunder in the midst. And such was the end of that cursed Caitiffe Mahomet, before he had sate two yeeres in his seat.

Argon of a Prisoner is made King.

His reuenge on Tangodor.

§. IIII.

Of ARGON the Sonne of ABAGA, and REGAITO his Brother; of BAIDO, and of the exploits of CASAN against the Soldan of Egypt, and others.

IN the yeere of our Lord 1285. after the death of Mahumet, Argon the sonne of Abaga Can, would not take on him the title of Can, vntill he had receiued commandement from the great Can Soueraigne Lord and Emperour, to whom he dispatched Messengers which were honourably receiued, and entertayned by the great Can, who reioyced much of his successe against Mahomet and sent some of his great Officers, to confirme Argon in his Dominion, who was thenceforth called Can, and much respected of all. For he was of a goodly aspect and presence, couragious and wise in his proceedings, much regarding and honou-Argon is confirmed by Cobila Can.

Digitized by Google

honouring the Christians. The Churches ouer-throwne by Mahomet he repayred. The Kings of Armenia and Georgia, with the other Christian Princes of the East, came vnto him, desiring his best counsaile, and helpe that the holy Land might be freed from the Pagans. Argon very graciously answered, That he would gladly doe any thing that might tend to the honour of God, and the aduancement of Christian Religion, and that he intended to make peace with his Neighbours, that hee might the more freely and securely follow that enterprise. But Argon, before the execution of these good designments, dyed in the fourth yeere of his raigne. And a Brother of his, called Regaito, succeeded him, who was a man of small valour, as shall be after declared. He dyeth.

39. In the yeere of our Lord 1289. after the death of Argon Can, his brother Regaito was his Successor, being a man of no Religion: in Armes he was of no valour, but was altogether giuen ouer to beastly luxurie, and satiating his insatiable appetite with superfluous meates and drinkes: and did nothing else by the space of six yeeres which he raigned, insomuch that being hated of his subiects and contemned of strangers, he was finally strangled by his Peeres. After whose death Baydo, a Kinsman of his succeeded him, who was vpright and constant in Religion, and did many fauours to the Christians, but he soone ended his dayes, as shall be declared. Baydo succeedeth him.

40. In the yeere of our Lord 1295. after the death of Regaito, his Kinsman Baydo ruled ouer the Tartars. He being a good Christian builded the Christian Churches, and commanded that none should Preach or publish the Doctrine of Mahomet amongst the Tartarians. But because those of the Sect of Mahomet were many, they could hardly be induced to bee obedient to that commandement of Baydo, and therefore sent Messengers secretly to Casan the sonne of Argono, promising to giue him the Dominion which Baydo held, and to make him their Lord and Ruler, if he would renounce the Christian Religion. Casan caring little for Religion, but greatly affecting Dominion, promised to doe whatsoeuer they would, and so began an open rebellion, whereupon Baydo assembled his people, thinking to haue taken Casan, not knowing of the Treason which his people had wrought against him. But when they came to the Field, all the Mahometists leauing Baydo, fled vnto Casan, so that Baydo being forsaken, thought to haue escaped by flight, yet was pursued and slaine by his Enemies. The death of Baydo.

41. After the death of Baydo; Casan being made Ruler ouer the Tartars, at the beginning of his raigne, durst not gainsay what hee had promised the Mahometists that had promoted him thereto, and therefore shewed himselfe for a while very austere to the Christians. But when hee found himselfe well and firmely settled in his Dominion, hee began to honour and cherish the Christians, doing them many fauours as shall be declared. First, therefore hee destroyed many great Ones, who had beene perswaders with him to become a Saracen, and to persecute the Christians. Then hee commanded all the Tartars within his Dominion, to bee readie with their Armour and all necessarie furniture, to attend him for a Conquest of the Kingdome of Egypt, and ouer-throw of the Soldan, and sent to the King of Armenia, and the King of Georgia, and other Christian Princes of the East in that behalfe. At the beginning of the Spring Casan gathered his forces, and first set forward towards Baldach: and at length turned towards the Land of Egypt. The Soldan, called Melechnaser, who had long before some intelligence of the comming of the Tartars, assembled all his power, and came before the Citie of Aman, which is seated in the middest of the Kingdome of Syria. Casan vnderstanding that the Soldan meant to giue him battaile, forbore to besiege any Citie or Castle, but hasted speedily to the place where the Soldan was, and pitched his Tents but one dayes iourney from him in certaine Meadowes, where was plentie of forrage and feeding, where he rested his Followers and their Horses which were wearied with their trauell. Amongst whom was a Saracen, called Calphack (or Capchuck) who had serued the Soldan, and was fled from him to Casan, for feare of imprisonment and punishments for his misse-demerits. This Calphack had receiued sundrie fauours and rewards of Casan, who reposed great confidence in him: yet, like a wicked Traytor, he disclosed the counsaile and purpose of Casan to the Soldan and Saracens, acquainting them by Letters how Casan meant to abide in those Meadowes, vntill they had sufficiently rested their Horses which were wondrously wearied, and therefore counsailed the Soldan to set vpon him before his Horses were refreshed, whereby he might easily ouer-come the Tartarians. Melechnaser the Soldan. Calphacks double dealing.

The Soldan who thought to haue expected the Tartars at the Citie of Aman, did hereupon change his resolution, and with a chosen companie hasted with all speede to assaile Casan at vnawares. But his Espials and Scouts giuing him notice of their approach. Casan commanded his men presently to be set in order and manfully to resist them. He himselfe more bold then a Lion with such companie as hee had about him, rode to meete the Saracens, who had approached so neere that they could not auoid the battaile. Casan seeing that the residue of his companie were spred so farre abroad in the Countrie for the feeding of their Horses, that they could not suddenly come to him, he commanded those that were with him to dismount from their Horses, and placing them in a Circle, made as it were a Wall of them, and with their Bowes and Arrowes caused his men to expect their Enemies, and not to shoote vntill they were sure to reach them, by which meanes the Tartars shooting altogether, wherein they are very skilfull and readie, wounded the foremost Horses of their Enemies in such sort that they fell before the rest, where- The Soldans sudden on-set. He dealeth politikely.

Digitized by Google

by the rest following on with great furie, and finding the former ouerthrowne, fell themselues head-long ouer them: insomuch, that of all the Saracens there escaped few, which were not either ouerthrowne or else wounded to death, with the Arrowes of the Tartars.

The Soldan himselfe being in the Armie, fled as fast as hee could, which Casan perceiuing, made his men get vp on their Horses, and manfully to set on their Enemies, being himselfe the foremost amongst them that entred the Armie of the Soldan, who with some small companie remayning so long, sustayned the brunt, vntill the Tartars came in Troupes well ordered to fight, and then came the whole Armie on both sides to battaile, which endured from the Sunne rising till the Ninth houre. But in the end, the Soldan with his Saracens fled, being not able to withstand the courage of Casan, who did wonders with his owne hand, and pursued them with his people, killing on euery side vntill it was darke night, and made so great slaughter of the Saracens, that the Earth was couered euery where with their dead carkasses. That night Casan rested at a place, called Caneto, reioycing exceedingly at that great victorie which God had giuen him against the Saracens. This fell out in the yeere of our Lord 1301. on the Wednesday before the Feast of the Natiuitie.

He ouer-commeth.

Caneto.

42. Then Casan sent the King of Armenia, and a Leader of the Tartars, called Molay, with fortie thousand Horse, to pursue the Soldan as farre as the Desart of Egypt, being twelue dayes iourney distant from the place where the battaile was fought, and willed them to expect him or some Messenger from him at the Citie Gazara. And they departed speedily before the Sunne rising, to follow after the Soldan. But some three dayes after, Casan sent for the King of Armenia to returne, because he purposed to besiege the Citie of Damascus, and willed Molay with the fortie thousand Tartars to pursue with speede after the Saracens, and to put what hee could take to the sword. Yet the Soldan himselfe flying very swiftly, and riding on Dromedaries both night and day, in the conduct and companie of certaine Beduini, escaped into the Citie of Babylon very strangely. But others of the Saracens fled seuerall wayes, as they thought they could best saue themselues, and a great number of them going by the way of Tripolis, were slaine by the Christians, which inhabited the Mountayne of Libanus. The King of Armenia returning to Casan, found that the Citie of Aman had yeelded vnto him, so that the whole treasure of the Soldan, and his Armie was brought into his presence: which was so great that euery one maruailed, why the Soldan carried so much treasure with him when he went to fight. Casan, when he had gathered together all the riches and spoiles which they had gotten, bestowed them bountifully amongst the Tartars, and the Christians his followers, whereby they were all made rich.

Gazara.

Beduines are wilde Arabs.

Aman yeelded.

And I Friar Haython, the Compiler of this Historie, who was present in all Expeditions and Battailes, which the Tartars had with the Soldan, from the time of Haloon to this day, yet did I neuer see nor heare that any of the Tartarian Lords accomplished more in two dayes then did Casan. For the first day, with a small companie of his owne, he ouer-came a great Armie of his Enemies, and did such exploits in his Person, that he wanne fame and commendations aboue all the rest. On the second day, such was his largesse, and so great this liberalitie of his heart, that of all the infinite wealth and treasure which hee got, hee kept nothing for himselfe, but a Sword and a Purse, in which was contayned certaine writings concerning the Land of Egypt, and the number of the Soldans Armie. And this was most maruailous aboue all the rest, how in so little a body, and of so bad presence (for he seemed like a Monster) there could be so much vertue and rigour contayned: for among neere two hundred thousand Souldiers, there could hardly one of lesse stature, or of worse aspect be found. Therefore, because this Casan liued in our time, it is fitting wee made the more ample narration of his Acts. And in regard that the Soldan who was ouerthrowne by Casan, is yet liuing at the writing of this Historie, they which intend to destroy, or any wayes to endamage the Saracens, may receiue many aduertisements out of these Collections.

Ayton present at these and the other Expeditions, from Haloon till this time.

Casans dwarfish stature and ill-fauoured feature.

1307.

After some few dayes rest, Casan directed his course towards the Citie of Damascus: where the Citizens hearing of his approch, and fearing lest if hee tooke them by force, they should die without mercy, by the aduice of the wisest amongst them, sent with one consent their Messengers vnto him with offer of their Citie, which hee willingly accepted, and after a while rode towards the Riuer of Damascus, on whose Bankes hee pitched his Tents, forbidding any damage to bee done to the Citie. Then the Citizens sent him diuers gifts, and plentie of victuals for his Armie. There Casan made his abode fiue and fortie dayes with all his Followers, except those fortie thousand Tartars which were sent with Molay, who stayed his comming at the Citie of Gaccara.

43 While Casan reposed himselfe neere Damasco, there came newes vnto him, how a Kinsman of his called Baydo, had entred into the Kingdome of Persia, and committed great spoile there in his absence: and thereupon hee resolued to returne to his owne. Leauing therefore his chiefe Captaine Cotoluſa, with part of his Armie for the custodie of the Kingdome of Syria (whom hee willed Molay and the rest of the Tartars to be obedient vnto as to his Lieutenant) he set Rulers and Gouernours ouer all the Cities, and committed the gouernment of Damascus to the Traytor Calfach, being not yet acquainted with his trayterous disposition. Then calling to him the King of Armenia, and acquainting him with his purpose, hee told him that hee would willingly haue deliuered the Lands which hee had conquered into the Christians hands, if they had come to him, and that if they came hee would giue order to Cotolusa to restore them the Lands which they had formerly holden: and to yeeld them conuenient supply for the repayring of their Castles and Fortresses. These things thus ordered, Casan tooke his iourney towards Mesopotamia, but when hee came to the Riuer Euphrates, hee sent word to Cotolusa, that leauing twentie thousand Tartars vnder the command of Molay, hee should come speedily to him with the rest of the Armie. Cotolusa did as was commanded him; so that Molay remayned Lieutenant in Syria for Casan, who eft-soones by perswasion of the Traytor Calfach, remooued towards the parts about Ierusalem, to a place called Gaur, to finde good feeding and prouision for his Horses. Calfachs treason. Gaur.

Cotoluſa.

to

Digitized by Google

But in the Sommer time, Calfach (who had formerly hatched Treason in his heart against Casan) sent word secretly to the Soldan, that hee would restore him Damascus with the other Townes which Casan had taken. The Soldan liked hereof, and couenanted to giue him Damasco in perpetuall keeping, and part of his treasure with his sister to wife. Insomuch, that shortly after, Calfach became Rebell, and caused all the strong places to rebell against the Tartars; bearing themselues bold on the heate of Sommer, in which they knew the Tartars could not ride nor yeeld any aide vnto their friends. When Molay perceiued that they rebelled euery where, hee durst not stay any longer with so small a companie, but tooke the shortest way towards the Kingdome of Mesopotamia, and signified thence to Casan all that had hapned in the Kingdome of Syria. Who seeing hee could not any way redresse it at that season, by reason of heate, yet when the Winter approached, hee made very great preparation on the bankes of the Riuer Euphrates, and sent ouer Cotolusa before with thirtie thousand Tartarian Horse-men, directing him that when hee came to the parts of Antiochia, hee should call vnto him the King of Armenia, and the other Christians of the East, and of Cyprus, and with that strength should enter into the Kingdome of Syria, whiles hee prepared to come after with the strength of his Armie. Cotolusa did as hee was commanded, and with his thirtie thousand Tartars went forwards till hee came to Antioch, and then sent to the King of Armenia, who came vnto him with his Armie. The Christians also in the Kingdome of Cyprus hauing heard of the comming of Cotolusa, came speedily with their Gallies and other Vessels to the Ile called Anterada, among whom was the Lord Tyron brother to the King of Cyprus, Master of the Hospitall of the Temple, with their Brethren of their Societie. And these being all readie to vnder-goe the seruice of Christ, there came a rumour that Casan was dangerously sicke, that men dispayred of his recouerie. Whereupon Cotolusa with his Tartars returning towards Casan; the King of Armenia returned also into his Countrey; and the Christians at the Ile of Anterada to the Kingdome of Cyprus, by which meanes the businesse of the Holy Land was vtterly abandoned, which happened in the yeere of our Lord 1301. Tyron.

Againe, in the yeare of our Lord 1303. Casan assembling a mightie Armie, came with great preparation to the Riuer Euphrates, intending to enter into the Kingdome of Syria, and there to destroy the whole Sect of Mahomet, and to restore the Holy Land to the Christians. But the Saracens fearing the comming of Casan, and doubting that they should not be able to withstand him when they had reaped and gathered their Corne and other fruits of the Earth, and had housed their cattell in strong holds, they set fire on the rest, that the Tartars when they came might not find victuals for themselues, nor for forrage for their beasts. When Casan vnderstood what the Agarens had done, and how they had wasted all the Land, considering that his horses could not there be fed nor sustayned, he resolued to remayne that Winter vpon the bankes of the Riuer Euphrates, and to beginne his Iourney at the beginning of the Spring, when the grasse began to sproute. For the Tartars are euer more carefull of their Horses then of themselues, being contented with the smallest pittance of any kind of nourishment for themselues. Casan reneweth the warre of Syria. The Saracens burne and waste their owne Countrey.

Then Casan sent for the King of Armenia, who came to him without delay, and lodged himselfe on the Riuer. Casan extended three dayes Iourney in length euen from a certayne Castle called Cacabe, to another Castle called Bir, which Castles appertayned to the Saracens, yet yeelded without any assault vnto Casan. But while Casan abode there, expecting the conuenient season for effecting his desire on the Saracens, and to deliuer the Holy Land out of their hands, the Deuil cast a new Obstacle in his way, for he had newes againe that Baydo had entred, and made more spoyles on his Land then before; so that it was necessary for him to returne to his owne, whereat being much grieued, in respect that he was constrayned so long to delay the businesse of the Holy Land, he commanded his Captayne Cotolusa with fortie thousand Tartars to enter into the Kingdome of Syria, and to take Damasco, and kill all the Saracens; and that the King of Armenia should ioyne his people with Cotolusa. Casan then returned into Persia, Cotolusa and the King besieged the Citie Aman: and hauing certayne Intelligence that the Soldan was at the Citie Gazara, and would not stirre from thence, they tooke it by assault putting all the Saracens one with another to the sword. There they found great store of wealth and munition. Caccabe. Bir. Baydo rebelleth againe. Cotolusa the third time Lieutenant of Syria. Aman taken.

Digitized by Google

Damaſcus beſieged.

Thence they went to the Citie of Damaſcus to beſiege it, but the Citizens ſent their Meſſengers, deſiring a Truce for three dayes which was granted them. The Scouts of the Tartars being almoſt a dayes Iourney beyond Damaſcus, tooke certayne Saracens whom they ſent to Cotuloſſa that he might examine them. Cotuloſſa being aduertized by theſe that there were about twelue thouſand Saracens Horſemen, with in two dayes Iourney from thence, which expected daily the comming of the Soldan. He rode preſently with all ſpeed, hoping to take them at vnawares: But it was almoſt night before Cotuloſſa and the King of Armenia could reach thither, and they had Intelligence that the Soldan was come newly before them. Therefore being deceiued of their expectation to aſſaile thoſe twelue thouſand alone, ſome aduiſed them for the beſt to repoſe themſelues that night being now ſomewhat late, and to ſet vpon the Enemie in the morning. But Cotuloſſa deſpiſing the Soldan, and his people would not hearken to any aduice, but commanded his Armie to bee forthwith put in order: which the Saracens perceiuing, kept their ſtanding, being on the one ſide fenced with a Lake, and with a Mountayne on another ſide, and knowing that the Tartars could not come to aſſault them without danger, they would not goe forth to fight, but remayned in the place where they were, and when the Tartars thought without any impediment to haue aſſailed their Enemies; they found a ſmall Riuer betweene them, which in ſome places had no paſſage ouer: by meanes whereof much time was ſpent before they could paſſe ouer the Riuer; but after they had paſſed the greateſt part ouer the Riuer, they ſet manfully on their Enemies. Yet the Soldan ſtood ſtill and would not remoue from the place he was in, betwixt the Lake and the Mountayne; which Cotuloſſa perceiuing, becauſe the darke night approched, he withdrew his company for that night and lodged them neere the Mountayne; only about a thouſand Tartars, which could not paſſe the Riuer, were not with him that night. The day comming, the Tartars againe couragiouſly ſet vpon the Soldan; but as before, he would by no meanes come forth to fight, but defended himſelfe in that place of aduantage. So the Tartars continuing their aſſault from the morning vntill the ninth houre, beeing thirſtie and ouer-wearie for lacke of water they retyred themſelues in good order, leauing the Soldan and came to the Plaine of Damaſcus, where they had plentie of paſture and water at will, where they determined to abide vntill they had ſufficiently repoſed themſelues and their Horſes.

The obſtinacie of Cotuloſſa.

The Soldan a wary Warrior.

Cotuloſſa his fruitleſſe attempt.

But the Inhabitants knowing, that the Armie of the Tartars was ſpread abroad in that Plaine, opened the Sluces of the Riuer in the night time, whereby the waters roſe ſo high in eight houres ouer all the Plaine, that the Tartars were conſtrayned on the ſudden to ariſe and depart, ſo that the night being darke, and the Ditches all filled with water, and no wayes nor pathes to be ſeene, they were all amazed in ſuch ſort that many Horſes periſhed, and much Armour was loſt, inſomuch, that the King of Armenia endured much loſſe, yet the day comming through the goodneſſe of God, they eſcaped the waters, but the Bowes and Arrowes of the Tartars being their chiefe weapons which they vſe, and the reſt of their Armour being all wet and vtterly vnſeruiceable, they were ſo aſtonied therewith, that if their Enemies had then purſued them, they might haue beene taken or ſlaine. Afterwards, the Tartars by reaſon that many had loſt their Horſes, returned ſoftly by ſmall Iournies to the bankes of the Riuer Euphrates, yet none of their Enemies durſt follow or purſue them, but the Riuer beeing riſen and ſwolne through the abundance of raine that fell, many of the Armenians, as alſo of Georgians, periſhed therein, more then of the Tartars, whoſe Horſes knew better to ſwimme: ſo returned they into Perſia ruined and diſgraced, not by the power of the Enemie, but by accident partly, partly by euill aduice. A great cauſe whereof was the obſtinacie of Cotoluſa, who would not regard any aduice that was giuen, for if he would haue harkened to the counſell of the wiſe, he might eaſily haue preuented thoſe dangers.

The Tartars indangered by the waters.

He aydeth him with men and money.

And I Frier Haython the Compiler of this Hiſtorie, was preſent at all theſe proceedings: and if happily I treate more largely thereof then ſhall be thought conuenient. I craue pardon in regard that I doe it to this end, that on like occaſions happening theſe courſes may bee called to minde. For theſe actions that are ordered by counſell, haue commonly good and commendable euents, but the raſh and improuident Enterprizes, doe vſually faile of their wiſhed ſucceſſe. After that the King of Armenia had paſſed the Riuer Euphrates with ſome loſſe, he reſolued to goe to Caſan before he returned to his Kigdome of Armenia, and therefore hee went ſtreight to the Citie of Niniue in which Caſan then reſided. He entertayned the King with much honour, kindneſſe, and magnificence, and being compaſſionate of his loſſes to make him ſome recompence of eſpeciall fauour vnto him, he granted him a thouſand Tartarians, continually in pay at his charge for the defence of his Kingdome, and alſo granted him out of the Kingdome of Turkie, a yeerely penſion, for the maintenance of another thouſand Armenian Horſemen yeerely at his pleaſure, the King thus recompenced, hauing taken his leaue, returned to the Kingdome of Armenia, which Caſan had enioyned him to watch warily ouer, vntill God pleaſed to enable him perſonally to goe to the reliefe of the Holy Land.

Digitized by Google

§. V.

CASAN dyeth, CARBANDA ſucceedeth; his Apoſtaſie. The Authors entrance into a Religious Habit. Of TAMOR CAN the ſixth Emperour, and of CHAPAR, HOCHTAI, and CARBANDA, three other Tartarian Kings.

THe King of Armenia returned ſafely to his Kingdome, but after hee came thither hee found little reſt there, for after it ſo pleaſed God, that Caſan was ſurprized with a grieuous infirmitie, and hauing gouerned wiſely in his life, hee was no leſſe willing that his wiſdome ſhould bee commended in his death. Therefore hee made his laſt Will and Teſtament, appointing his Brother Carbanda (or Carbaganda) his Heire and Succeſſor and hauing ordered all things concerning the Affaires of his Kingdome and his Houſe in prudent manner, he made many good Ordinances and Lawes which for a memoriall he left behind him, being at this day inuiolably obſerued by the Tartarians. Then dyed Caſan, and his Brother Carbanda ſucceeded in his Kingdome. Carbanda his Succeſſor.

This Carbanda was the Sonne of a Ladie of famous memorie, called Erockaton, who was very deuout and religious in Chriſtianitie, while ſhe liued, and had euery day Diuine Seruice celebrated before her, keeping a Prieſt and Chappell of her owne, ſo that this Carbanda was baptized and named Nicholas in his Baptiſme, and continued a profeſſed Chriſtian as long as his Mother liued. But after his Mothers death, delighting in the ſocietie of Saracens, he forſooke the Chriſtian Religion to become a Mahometiſt. The King of Armenia vnderſtanding of the death of Caſan, was much troubled therewith, and his Enemies began to lift vp their Creſts very high. For the Soldan of Babylon thereupon fought by all meanes to endamage him and his people, ſending all the yeare almoſt euery moneth great troupes of armed Souldiers, which foraged and waſted the Kingdome of Armenia, and did more damage and ſpoyle on the plaine Countrey then they had euer ſuſtayned before in any mans memorie. But the Almightie and moſt merciſull God who neuer forſaketh altogether thoſe that put their truſt in him, had compaſſion on the poore afflicted Chriſtians: for it fell out that in the moneth of Iuly, ſeuen thouſand Saracens of the beſt Families vnder the Soldan, made a roade into the Kingdome of Armenia, waſting and ſpoyling all as farre as the Citie of Tharſus, in which the bleſſed Apoſtle Saint Paul was borne, and when they had committed many ſpoyles in that Prouince, and were vpon their returne, the King of Armenia, hauing gathered his people together, encountred and ſet vpon them neere the Citie of Giazza, where more by Gods goodneſſe then our worth, they were vtterly ouerthrowne in ſuch ſort, that of ſeuen thouſand Saracens there eſcaped not three hundred, but were either taken or ſlaine, albeit they thought in their Pride, they could haue ouer-runne the whole Kingdome of Armenia, and deuoure all the Chriſtians there at a morſell. This was performed on the Lords Day, being the eighteenth of Iuly, after which conflict, the Saracens durſt no more enter into the Kingdome of Armenia. But the Soldan ſent to the King of Armenia to make truce with him, which was agreed betweene them. The Soldan maketh roades into Armenia. The King of Armenia ouerthroweth his Enemies. The Victorie brings peace.

46. I Frier Haython, hauing beene preſent at all the ſaid proceedings, had purpoſed long before to haue taken a Regular Habit vpon me, and to haue entred into Religion. But by reaſon of many impediments and difficulties in the Affaires of the Kingdome of Armenia, I could not with my honour forſake my friends and kindred in ſuch extremities. But ſeeing that Gods goodneſſe had beene ſo gracious vnto me, as to leaue the Kingdome of Armenia, and the Chriſtian people there after my manifold labours and trauels in quiet, and peaceable eſtate, I then tooke the time to performe that Vow which before I had vowed. Therefore hauing taken my leaue of my Lord the King, and of the reſt of my kindred and friends, euen in that field where God gaue the Chriſtians Victorie ouer their Enemies, I beganne my Iourney, and comming to Cyprus in the Monaſterie of Epiſcopia, tooke a Regular Habit of the Order Premonſtratenſis, to the end that hauing ſerued the World as a Souldier in my youth, I might ſpend the reſt of my life in the Seruice of God, forſaking the pompe of this World, which was in the yeere of our Lord 1305. Therefore I render thankes vnto God, that the Kingdome of Armenia, is at this day in a good and peaceable eſtate, and well reformed by the Moderne King Liuono, Sonne to King Haython, who is a Looking-glaſſe or patterne to all other Kings in all kinde of eminent vertue. The Author of himſelfe. He taketh the Habit of a Premonſtratenſis. An. Dom. 1305.

Moreouer, the Compiler of this Worke affirmeth, that he hath come three manner of wayes to the knowledge of thoſe things which hee declareth and writeth in this Booke. For from the beginning of Changius Can, who was the firſt Emperour of the Tartars vntill Mango Can, who was their fourth Emperour, I faithfully deliuer what I gathered out of the Hiſtories of the Tartarians. But from Mango Can to the deh of Haloon, I write, that which I receiued of an The credit of this Hiſtorie.

Vncle of mine, who writ the same by the commandement of Haiton King of Armenia, and was present then at all the foresaid occurrences, and with great diligence did often discourse & make rehearsall of them to his Sonnes and Nephewes, that they might remayne the better to Posteritie, and from the beginning of Abaga Can to the end of this third part of this Booke, the Author relateth those things which hee knew of himselfe, as hauing beene present at them all, whereby he is enabled to giue testimonie of the truth. Now albeit we haue hitherto treated of the Histories and Deeds of the Tartarians, there remayneth yet somewhat to be said concerning their Power and Dominion, especially of those that are now liuing, that it may the better bee knowne.

Tamar Can.

47. The great Emperor of the Tartars which now holdeth the Empire, is called Tamor Can, being their sixt Emperour, who keepeth his Residence in the Kingdome of Cathay; in a very great City called Iong, which his Father caused to be built, as is aboue declared, his power is very great. For this Emperour alone is able to doe more then all the Tartarian Princes together, and the Nations vnder his gouernment are reputed more noble and rich, and better stored of all necessaries, because that in the Kingdome of Cathay, in which they now liue, there is great abundance of riches.

Iong, or Ions, see sup. 19. §. 1.

Three inferior Kings of the Tartars.

Besides this great Emperour, there are three other great Kings or Princes of the Tartars, which rule each of them ouer many Nations, yet are they all subiect to the Emperour, and acknowledge him their naturall and Leige Lord. And the differences which happen betweene them are decided in the Emperours Court, and determined by his Iudgement. The first of these Kings is called Chapar, another Hochtay, and the third Carbanda. This Chapar hath his Dominion in the Kingdome of Turquestan, being the neerest to the Emperour. It is thought that he is able to bring into the field foure hundred thousand Horsemen, and these are bold and good Warriours, but not so well furnished of Horse and Armour as were expedient. The Emperours subiects doe many times make warre vpon them, and they on the other side doe often inuade the people of Carbanda. The Dominion of this Chapar was in ancient time subiect for the greatest part to a Lord called Doay.

Chapar.
Hoctai.
Carbanda.
Chapar.

Hochtay keepeth his Seat of Residence in the Kingdome of Cumania, in a Citie called Asaro, (or Sara) and it is said, that he is able to bring six hundred thousand Horsemen to the fight, yet are they not so much commended in Feats of Armes, as the men of Chapar, albeit they haue better Horses. These make warre sometimes on the Subiects of Carbanda, sometimes against the * Hungarians, and sometimes amongst themselues. But Hochtay who ruleth at this present holdeth his Dominion peaceably and quietly.

Hoctay, of who came the Zagatay Tartars, and Tamerlane.
* That is the Huns of whom the Hungarians had originall.

Carbanda hath his Dominion in the Kingdome of Asia the Great; and maketh his chiefe abode in the Citie of Tauris, beeing able to bring three hundred thousand Horsemen to the field. But these are gathered out of diuers parts being rich and well furnished with necessaries. Chapar and Hochtay doe sometimes make warre vpon Carbanda, but hee neuer medleth first with them: neither moueth warres against any but that he sometimes inuadeth the Soldan of Egypt: against whom his Predecessors haue fought many Battailes. Chapar and Hochtay would willingly take from Carbanda his Dominion, if they were able to effect it.

Carbanda.

The reason whereof is this, Asia is diuided into two parts, the one part whereof being called the Lower or Deepe Asia, is inhabited by the Emperour, and those two Kings called Chapar and Hoshtay. The other part being the higher, is called Asia the Greater, in which Carbanda inhabiteth and hath Dominion. Now there are only three wayes by which men may passe out of the Deeper or Lower Asia, vnto the high Countrey called Asia Maior. The one is out of the Kingdome of Turquestan, to the Kingdome of the Persians; another way there is called Derbent, which lyeth neere the Sea where Alexander built the Citie called the Iron Gate, as in the Histories of Cumania appeares; the other way is to goe ouer the Sea, called Mare maius, which way lyeth through the Kingdome of Barca. By the first way the subiects of Chapar cannot passe to the Territories of Carbanda, without great danger and difficultie, because they should find no feeding for their Horses in many dayes trauailes, the Land being so dry and barren, that before they could come to any fruitfull inhabited Countrey, their Horses would be starued, or at least so faint and wearied that they might be easily ouercome, and therefore that way they will not take. By the way of Derbent the people of Hochtay may passe into the Countrey of Carbanda, only sixe moneths in the yeare, which is in the Winter time. But that way Abaga hath caused great Trenches and Fortifications to bee made in a place called Ciba: and is alwayes kept and especially in the Winter with a Garrison of armed men to defend the passage. The people of Hochtay haue assayed many times to passe that way by stealth and secretly: but they neuer could, neither can by any meanes doe: for in a Plaine called Monga, there are alwayes in the Winter time certaine Birds about the bignesse of Phesants hauing very faire feathers to behold, and these Birds (which are called Seyserach) when any people come into that Plaine, straight flye away ouer those Watchmen and their Trenches, whereby the Souldiers there are eft-soones assured of the comming of their Enemies, and preuent the surprize: and by the way of the Sea called Mare maius, they neuer attempted, because that way goeth through the Kingdome of

The diuision of Asia.

The Derbent.
The Citie called the Iron Gate.

The Birds called Seyserach.

Barca

Digitized by Google

Barca, which is so mightie in people and so strongly situated; that they are without hope to preuayle there, and by meanes hereof hath Carbanda and his Predecessors beene secured from the power of so potent Neighbours. Now we will briefly say somewhat of the manners and fashions of the Tartars. Barca in the Latine Copie is called Abcas.

48. The Cataians do so much differ from other Nations in their fashions and manner of liuing, that it were tedious to treat of the manifold diuersitie and strange varietie found amongst them. They acknowledge and confesse one Immortall God, and they call vpon his Name: yet they neither fast nor pray, nor any wayes afflict nor humble themselues, for feare or reuerence of him, nor doe any good workes. The killing of men they hold to bee no sinne: but if they happen to leaue their Bridle in their horse-mouth when hee should feed, they thinke therein they offend God mortally. Fornication and Lecherie is held by them as no sinne. They marrie many wiues, and the custome is, that the Sonne must marrie his Step-mother after the death of his Father: and the Brother is married to his Brothers Wife after his decease. In matter of Armes they are very good, and more obedient to their Superiour then other Nations are: and doe easily know by certaine signes in Battaile the will of their Commander: whereby the Armie of Tartarians is easily ruled and commanded. Their Lord bestoweth not any stipend on them, but they liue on hunting and such prey as they can get: and their Lord may take from them when hee list whatsoeuer they haue. The Religion of the Cataians, or Tartarians of those parts. Impunitie of Manslaughter. Polygamie. Warfare.

When the Tartars ride vpon any enterprize, they take with them great store of Horse, drinking their Milke, and feeding on their flesh which they reckon very good food. The Tartars are very readie and excellent Archers on horse-backe, but on foot they are but slow; they are dexterous and ingenious in taking of Cities and Castles, and are for the most part victorious ouer their Enemies; yet will they not forbeare to turne their backes in the skirmish if it be for their aduantage. And this aduantage they haue in the field that they will fight with the Enemies when they list themselues, and yet they cannot be compelled to fight but at their pleasure. Their manner of fight is very dangerous, so that in one conflict or skirmish of the Tartars there are more slaine and wounded then in any great Battaile of other Nations, which happeth by reason of their Arrowes, which they shoot strongly, and surely out of their Bowes; beeing indeed so skilfull in the arte of shooting, that they commonly pierce all kind of Armour, and if they happen to be routed, yet they flye in troupes and bands so well ordered, that it is very dangerous to follow or pursue them, because they shoot their Arrowes backwards in their flight, wounding and killing oft-times both men and horses that pursue them. Eating of Horse-flesh.

The Armie of the Tartars maketh no great shew, because they goe trooping close together, so that an Armie of one thousand Tartars will scarse seeme fiue hundred. The Tartarians doe courteously entertayne strangers, giuing them part of their Viands, and expect the like offers to bee made them, for otherwise they will take it by violence. They are much more skilfull in conquering of Countries then in keeping of them. When they are weake they are humble and gentle; stout and proud when they are growne the stronger. They cannot endure lying in other men, yet themselues are much giuen to lying, vnlesse it be in two especiall things. The one being in matter of Armes, in which none dareth affirme, that he did any exploit which was not done by him, or denie any faire Act which hee hath committed: The other is, That whosoeuer hath done any offence, though it deserueth death, he confesseth it presently to his Lord if he be examined thereon. This may suffice at this time, concerning the manners of the Tartars, because it were long to rehearse all the different customes and kinds of behauiour. Their Hospitalitie. Delight in lying.

The other Chapters which follow, pertayning rather to aduice fitting those Times, and the holy Land affaires, then the Tartarian Historie, I haue omitted. And in the next place will present some Extracts of our Countriman, that famous Traueller Sir Iohn Mandevile, whose Geographie Ortelius commendeth, howsoeuer he acknowledgeth his Worke stuffed with Fables. For my part, I cannot but deplore the losse of such a Treasure, but know not how to recouer or repayre it (as Ramusio hath done for Polo) and here haue beene forced to deale with him, as Historians doe with our famous Arthur, daring to say little, because others haue dared so much and such incredibilities. For his merit, and for his Nation I haue giuen a touch of him, these few Latine Extracts; referring him that hath a minde to reade him, to Master Hakluits first Edition of his Voyages, where his storie in Latine is to be seene at large. I suspect that some later Fabler out of the Tales of Ogerus the Dane hath stuffed this storie; some of which, for a taste, I haue here left remayning; not that I take pleasure in lyes, but that thou mayst see, from what Fountayne I suppose this corruption flowed: and in that mistie Age (when humaner learning was inhumanely imprisoned, and Diuine Scripture was vulgarly buried, and Printing not at all borne) what Huskes poore Christian Prodigals (prodigall to beleeue such lyes) were fed with in stead of Bread; not onely in the Church by Legends, but in their priuate studies, by Arthurs, Orlandos, Beuises, Guyes, Robin Hoods, Palmerins, and I know not what monstrous changeling-births of Historie. Such was this Ogerus: and in great part such was Odericus a Friar and Traueller, in whom perhaps some Friar hath trauelled, with him at least in this Author (whose age was before him, and therefore could not cite ought out of him.) Neither is it for nothing (though for worse then nothing, a lye is both) that Friars are in this storie so often mentioned and praysed: I smell a Friars (Lyars) hand in this businesse. Our Man-Ogerus a Dane, of whom they write that hee conquered India, &c. Odericus in M. Hak. published.

Digitized by Google

Mandevile trauelled from Ieruſalem beyond Ierico, from Chriſtendome to remoteſt Ethnikes, and hath fallen among Theeues: The Friarly Prieſt and Leuite not onely neglected him, but I am afraid played the Theeues thus to rob and wound him; maymed the two former parts, and iuggling in the third, which I haue therefore chopped off; not daring in the former but with the Nilus Dogge to taſte and away, for feare of a falſe Crocodile. Here you may finde lyes by retaile efficta, afficta, affixa, to this Mandevile; who there, is made a maunde vile full of ſuch pedlerie, vnworthy thy ſight.

CHAP. VI.

Briefe Collections of the Trauels and Obſeruations of Sir IOHN MANDEVILE; written by Maſter BALE, Cent. 6.

IOhn Mandevile, Knight, borne in the Towne of Saint Albons, was ſo well giuen to the ſtudie of Learning from his childhood, that he ſeemed to plant a good part of his felicitie in the ſame: for he ſuppoſed that the honour of his birth would nothing auaile him, except hee could render the ſame more honorable by his knowledge in good Letters. Hauing therefore well grounded himſelfe in Religion by reading the Scriptures, he applyed his ſtudies to the Art of Phyſick, a Profeſſion worthy a noble wit: but amongſt other things, hee was rauiſhed with a mightie deſire to ſee the greater parts of the World, as Aſia and Africa. Hauing therefore prouided all things neceſſarie for his iourney, hee departed from his Countrey in the yeere of Chriſt 1332. and as another Vlyſſes returned home, after the ſpace of foure and thirtie yeeres, and was then knowne to a very few. In the time of his trauaile he was in Scythia, the greater and leſſe Armenia, Egypt, both Lybias, Arabia, Syria, Media, Meſopotamia, Perſia, Chaldea, Greece, Illyrium, Tartaria, and diuers other Kingdomes of the World: and hauing gotten by this meanes the knowledge of the Languages, left ſo many and great varieties, and things miraculous, whereof himſelfe had beene an eye witneſſe, ſhould periſh in obliuion, hee committed his whole Trauell of three and thirtie yeeres to writing in three diuers Tongues, Engliſh, French, and Latine. Being arriued againe in England, and hauing ſeene the wickedneſſe of that Age, hee gaue out this ſpeech: In our time (ſaid hee) it may bee ſpoken more truly then of old, that Vertue is gone, the Church is vnder foot, the Clergie is in error, the Deuill raigneth, and Simonie beareth the ſway, &c. Hee dyed at Leege, in the yeere 1372. the 17. day of Nouember, being there buried in the Abbey of the Order of the Guilielmites.

The Tombe and Epitaph of Sir Iohn Mandevile, in the Citie of Leege, ſpoken of by Ortelius, in his Booke called Itinerarium Belgiæ, in this ſort.

MAgnâ & populoſa Leodij ſuburbia, ad collium radices, in quorum iugis multa ſunt, & pulcherrima Monaſteria, inter quæ magnificum illud, ac nobile D. Laurentio dicatum, ab Raginardo Epiſcopo. Eſt in hac quoq; Regione, vel ſuburbijs Leodij, Guilielmitarum Cœnobium, in quo Epitaphium hoc Ioannis à Mandeville, excepimus.

Epitaphium. Hic jacet vir nobilis, D. Ioannes de Mandeville, aliter dictus ad Barbam, Miles, Dominus de Campdi, natus de Anglia, Medicinæ Profeſſor, deuotiſſimus, orator, & bonorum largiſſimus pauperibus erogator, qui toto quaſi orbe luſtrato, Leodij diem vitæ ſuæ clauſit extremum. Anno Dom. 1371. Menſis Nouembris, die 17.

Hec in lapide: in quo celata viri armati imago, Leonem calcantis, barba bifurcata, ad caput manus benedicens, & vernacula hæc verba: Vos qui paſeis ſor mi, pour l'amour deix proïes por mi. Clipeus erat vacuus, in quo olim fuiſſe dicebant laminam æream, & eius in ea itidem celata inſignia, Leonem videlicet argenteum, cui ad pectus lunula rubea in campo cæruleo, quem Limbus ambiret denticulatus ex auro. Eius nobis oſtendebant, & cultros, ephipiaq;, & calcaria quibus vſum fuiſſe aſſerebant, in peragrando toto ferè terrarum orbe, vt clariùs teſtatur eius Itinerarium, quod typis etiam excuſum paſſim habetur.

Epiſtola. PRincipi Excellentiſſimo, præ cunctis mortalibus præcipue venerando, Domino Edwardo ejus nominis Tertio, diuina prouidentia, Francorum & Anglorum Regi Sereniſſimo, Hiberniæ Domino, Aquitaniæ Duci, mari ac eius Inſulis Occidentalibus dominanti, Chriſtianorum encomio & ornatui, vniuerſorumq; arma gerentium Tutori, ac Probitatis & ſtrenuitatis exemplo Principi quoq; inuicto, mirabilis Alexandri Sequaci, ac vniuerſo Orbi tremendo, cum reuerentia non qua decet, cum ad talem, & tantam reuerentiam minus ſufficientes extiterint, ſed qua paruitas, & poſſibilitas mittentis ac offerentis ſe extendunt, contenta tradantur.

Cum

Digitized by Google

Pars prima, continens capita 23.

Cap. 1. Commendatio breuis terræ Hierosolymitanæ.

CVm terra Hierosolymitana, terra promissionis filiorum Dei, dignior cunctis mundi terris sit habenda multis ex causis, & præcipuè illa, quod Deus conditor cœli & mundi, ipsam tanti dignatus fuit æstimare, vt in eo proprium filium Saluatorem mundi Christum exhibuerit generi humano per incarnationem ex intemerata Virgine, & per eius conuersationem humillimam in eadem, ac per dolorosam mortis sua consummationem ibidem, atq; indè per eius admirandam Resurrectionem, ac Ascensionem in cœlum, & postremò quia creditur illic in fine sæculi reuersurus, & omnia iudicaturus: certum est, quòd ab omnibus qui Christiano nomine à Christo dicuntur, sit tanquam à suis proprijs hæredibus diligenda, & pro cuiusq; potestate ac modulo honoranda. Verum quia tam nostris temporibus verius quàm olim dici potest, Virtus, Ecclesia, Clerus, Dæmon, Simonia, Cessat, calcatur, errat, regnat, dominatur, ecce iusto Dei iudicio, credita est terra tam inclyta, & Sacrosancta impiorum manibus Saracenorum, quod non est absq; dolore pijs mentibus audiendum, & recolendum. Ego Ioannes Mandeuil militaris ordinis saltem gerens nomen, natus & educatus in terra Angliæ, in Villa Sancti Albani, ducebar in Adolescentia mea tali inspiratione, vt quamuis non per potentiam, nec per vires proprias possem præfatam terram suis hæredibus recuperare, item tamen per aliquod temporis spacium peregrinari ibidem, & salutarem aliquantulum de propinquo. Vnde in Anno ab Incarnatione Domini 1322. imposui me nauigationi Marsilienſis maris & vsq; in hoc temporis, Anni 1355. scilicet, per 33. annos in transmarinis partibus mansi, peregrinatus sum, ambulaui, & circuiui multas, ac diuersas Patrias, Regiones, Prouincias, & Insulas, Turciam, Armeniam maiorem & minorem, Ægyptum, Lybiam bassam & altam, Syriam, Arabiam, Persiam, Chaldæam, Æthiopiæ partem magnam, Tartariam, Amazoniam, Indiam minorem, & mediam, ac partem magnam de maiori, & in istis, & circum istas Regiones, multas Insulas, Ciuitates, Vrbes, Castra, Villas, & loca, vbi habitant varia gentes, aspectuum, morum, legum ac rituum diuersorum: Attamen quia summo desiderio in terra promissionis eram, ipsam diligentius, per loca vestigiorum filij Dei perlustrare curaui, & diutius in illa steti. Quapropter & in hac prima parte huius operis iter tam peregrinandi, quam nauigandi, à partibus Angliæ ad ipsam describo, & loca notabiliter sancta, quæ intra eandem sunt breuiter commemoro & diligenter, quatenus peregrinis tam in itinere quamin prorentione valeat hæc descriptio in aliquo deseruire.

Ioannis Mandeuilli peregrinatio, per tres & triginta annos continuata.

Cap. 2. Iter ab Anglia tam per terras quam per aquas vsque in Constantinopolim. Regis Hungariæ olim potentia.

Qui de Hibernia, Anglia, Scotia, Norwegia, aut Gallia iter arripit ad partes Hierosolymitanas potest saltem vsq; ad Imperialem Græciæ Ciuitatem Constantinopolim eligere sibi modum proficiscendi, siue per Terras, siue per Aquas. Et si peregrinando eligit transigere viam, tendat per Coloniam Agrippinam, & sic per Almaniam in Hungariam ad Montlusant Ciuitatem, sedem Regni Hungariæ. Et est Rex Hungariæ multum potens istis temporibus. Nam tenet & Sclauoniam, & magnam partem Regni Comannorum, & Hungariam, & partem Regni Russiæ. Oportet vt peregrinus in finibus Hungariæ transeat magnum Danubij flumen, & vadat in Belgradum; Hoc flumen oritur inter Montana Almaniæ, & currens versus Orientem, recipit in se 40. flumina antequam finiatur in mare. De Belgrade intratur terra Bulgariæ, & transitur per Pontem petrinum fluuij Marroy, & per terram Pyncenars, & tunc intratur Græcia, in Ciuitates Sternes, Asmopape, & Andrinopolis, & sic in Constantinopolim, vbi communiter est sedes Imperatoris Græciæ. Qui autem viam eligit per aquas versus Constantinopolim nauigare, accipiat sibi portum, prout voluerit, propinquum siue remotum, Marsiliæ, Pisi, Ianuæ, Venetijs, Romæ, Neapoli, vel alibi: sicq; transeat Tusciam, Campaniam, Italiam, Corsicam, Sardiniam, vsque in Siciliam, quæ diuiditur ab Italia per brachium maris non magnum. In Sicilia est Mons Ætna iugiter ardens, qui ibidem appellatur Mons Gibelle, & præter illum habentur ibi loca Golthan vbi sunt septem leucæ quasi semper ignem spirantes: secundum diuersitatem colorum harum flammarum æstimant Incolæ annum fertilem fore, vel sterilem, siccum vel humidum, calidum, vel frigidum: hæc loca vocant caminos Infernales, & à finibus Italiæ vsq; ad ista loca sunt 25. miliaria. Sunt autem in Sicilia aliqua Pomeria in quibus inueniuntur frondes, flores, & fructus per totum annum, etiam in profunda hyeme. Regnum Siciliæ est bona, & grandis Insula habens in circuitu ferè leucas 300. Et ne quis erret, vel de facili reprehendat quoties scribo leucam, intelligendum est de leuca Lombardica, quæ aliquanto maior est Geometrica; & quoties pono numerum, sub intelligatur fere, vel circiter, siue citra, & dictam intendo ponere, de 10. Lombardicis leucis: Geometrica autem leuca describitur, vt notum est, per hos versus.

Mons Ætna.

Æolides Insulæ.

Temperies Siciliæ Insulæ.

Leuca Lombardica. Quid sit dicta.

Quinque pedes passum faciunt, passus quoque centum
Viginti quinque stadium, si millia des que
Octo facis stadia, duplicatum dat tibi leuca.

Cap. 3. De vrbe Constantinopoli, & reliquijs ibidem contentis

Constantinopolis pulchra est Ciuitas, & nobilis, triangularis in forma, firmiterq; murata, cuius duæ partes includuntur mari Hellesponto, quòd plurimi modo appellant brachium Sancti Georgij, & aliqui Buke, Troia vetus. Versus locum vbi hoc brachium exit de mari est lata terra planities, in quâ antiquitus stetit Troia Ciuitas de qua apud Poetas mira leguntur, sed nunc valdè modica apparent vestigia Ciuitatis. In Constantinopoli habentur multa mirabilia, ac insuper multa Sanctorum venerandæ reliquiæ, ac super omnia, preciosissima Crux Christi, seu maior pars illius, & tunica inconsutilis, cum spongia & arundine, & vno clauorum, & dimidia parte Coronæ spineæ, cuius altera medietas seruatur in Capella Regis Franciæ, Parisijs. Nam & ego indignus diligenter pluribus vicibus respexi partem vtramq;: dabatur quoq; mihi de illa Parisijs vnica spina, quam vsq; nunc preciosè conseruo, & est ipsa spina non lignea sed velut de iuncis marinis rigida, & pungitiua. Ecclesia Constantinopolitana in honorem Sanctæ Sophiæ, id est, ineffabilis Dei sapientia dedicata dicitur, & nobilissima vniuersorum mundi Ecclesia Sanctæ Sophiæ.

Digitized by Google

munds Ecclesiarum, tam in schemate artificiosi operis, quàm in seruatis ibi Sacrosanctis Relliquijs: nam & continet corpus Sanctæ Annæ Matris nostræ Domine translatum illuc per Reginam Helenam ab Hierosolymis: & corpus Sanctæ Lucæ Euangelistæ translatum de Bethania Iudeæ; Et corpus Beati Ioannis Chrysostomi ipsius Ciuitatis Episcopi, cum multis alijs Reliquijs preciosis; quoniam est ibi vas grande cum huiusmodi reliquijs velut marmoreum de Petra Enhydros; quod ingiter de seipso desudans aquam, semel in anno inuenitur suo sudore repletum. Ante hanc Ecclesiam, super columnam marmoream habetur de are aurato opere fusorio, magna Imago Iustiniani quondam Imperatoris super Equum sedentis. De predicta terra Thraciæ fuit Philosophus Aristoteles oriundus in Ciuitate Stageres, & est ibi in loco tumba eius velut altare, vbi & singulis annis certo die celebratur à populo festum illius, ac si fuisset Sanctus. Temporibus ergo magnorum consiliorum conueniunt illuc sapientes terræ, reputantes sibi per inspirationem immitti consilium optimum de agendis. Item ad diuisionem Thraciæ & Macedoniæ sunt duo mirabiliter alti Montes, vnus Olympus, alter Athos, cuius vltimi vmbra Oriente sole apparet ad 76. miliaria, vsq; in Insulam Lemnon. In horum cacumine montium ventus non currit, nec aër mouetur, &c.

Regina Helena Britanna.

Imago Iustiniani.

Aristotelis tumba & festum.

Cap. 10. De conductu Soldani, & via vsque in Sinai.

Priùs dictum est de reuerentia Soldani, quando ad ipsum intratur exhibenda. Sciendum ergo, cum ab eo petitur securus conductus, nemini denegare consueuit, sed datur petentibus communiter sigillum eius, in appenditione absque literis: hoc sigillum, pro vexillo in virga aut hasta dum peregrini ferunt, omnes Saraceni videntes illud flexis genibus in terram se reuerenter inclinant, & portantibus omnem exhibent humanitatem. Verumtamen satis maior fit reuerentia literis Soldani sigillatis, quod & Admirabiles, & quicunq; alij Domini, quando eis monstrantur, antequam recipiant, se multum inclinant: Deinde ambabus manibus eas capientes ponunt super propria capita, postea osculantur, & tandem legunt inclinati cum magna veneratione, quibus semel aut bis perlectis, offerunt se promptos ad explendum quicquid ibi iubetur, ac insuper exhibent deferenti, quicquid possint commodi, vel honoris: sed talem conductum per literas Soldani vix quisquam peregrinorum accipit, qui non in Curia illius stetit, vel notitiam apud illum habuerit. Ego autem habui in recessu meo, in quibus etiam continebatur ad omnes sibi subiectos speciale mandatum, vt me permitterent intrare, & respicere singula loca, pro meæ placito voluntatis, & mihi exponerent quorumcunq; locorum mysteria distincte & absque vllo velamine veritatis, ac me cum omni sodalitate mea benigne reciperent, & in cunctis rationalibus audirent, requisiti autem si necesse foret de ciuitate conducerent in ciuitatem. Habito itaq; peregrinis conductu, ad Montem Sinay, &c.

Literæ Soldani in gratiam Mandevilli concessæ.

Cap. 11. De Monasterio Sinay, & reliquijs beatæ Catherinæ. Omittuntur seq. v. d. supr. l. 8. c. 13.

Mons Sinay appellatur ibi desertum Syn: quasi in radice Montis istius habetur Cœnobium Monachorum pergrande, cuius clausura in circuitu est firmata muris altis, & portis ferreis, pro metu bestiarum deserti. Hi Monachi sunt Arabes, & Græci, & in magno conuentu, multum Deo deuoti. Ostendere soleni & caput ipsius Catherinæ cum inuolumento sanguinolento, & multas per terea sanctas, & venerabiles reliquias, quæ omnia intuitus sum diligenter & sæpè, oculis indignis, &c.

Cap. 14. De Ecclesia glorioſi Sepulchri Domini in vrbe Ierusalem.

Templum Sepulchri.

Ierusalem cum tota terra Promissionis, est quasi vna de quinq; Prouincijs vel pluribus, quibus Regnum Syriæ distinguitur. Iungitur autem Iudæa ad Orientem Regno Arabiæ, ad meridiem Ægypto, ad Occidentem mari magno, & ad Aquilonem Regno Syriæ. Iudeæ terra per diuersa tempora à diuersis possessa fuit Nationibus, Cananæorum, Iudæorum, Assyriorum, Persarum, Medorum, Macedonum, Græcorum, Romanorum, Christianorum, Saracenorum, Barbarorum, Turcorum, & Tartarorum. Cuius rei causa merito potest æstimari, quod non sustinuit Deus magnos peccatores longo tempore permanere in terra sibi tam placita, & tam sancta.

Itaque peregrinus veniens in Ierusalem primo expleat suam peregrinationem, ad reuerendum & Sacrosanctum Domini nostri Iesu Christi Sepulchrum: cuius Ecclesia est in vltima ciuitatis extremitate, ad partem Aquilonarem, cum proprio sui ambitus muro ipsi ciuitati adiuncto. Ipsa vero Ecclesia est pulchra & rotundæ formæ cooperta desuper cum tegulis plumbeis, habens in Occidente turrim altam & firmam, in pauimenti Ecclesiæ medio ad figuram dimidij compassi habetur nobili opere Latonico ædificatum paruum Tabernaculum quasi 15. pedum tam longitudinis quàm latitudinis, & altitudinis miro artificio intus extraq; compositum, ac multum diligenter diuersis coloribus ornatum. Hoc itaq; in Tabernaculo seu Capella, ad latus dextrum, continetur incomparabilis thesaurus glorioſissimi Sepulchri, habentis octo pedes longitudinis, & quinque latitudinis. Et quoniam in toto habitaculo nulla est apertura præter paruum ostium, illustratur accedentibus peregrinis pluribus lampadibus, (quarum ad minus vna coram sepulchro iugiter ardere solet) ingressus.

Sciendum, quod ante breue tempus solebat sepulchrum esse ingressis peregrinis accessibile, ad tangendum & osculandum: sed quia multi vel effringebant, vel conabantur sibi effringere aliquid de petra sepulchri, iste Soldanus Melech Mandybron fecit illud confabricari, vt nec osculari valeat, nec adiri, sed tantummodo intueri. Et ob illam causam in sinistro pariete in altitudine quinque pedum immurari effracturam petræ sepulchri ad quantitatem capitis humani, quod tanquam pro sepulchro ibi ab omnibus veneratur, tangitur, & osculatur.

Melech Mandybron Soldanus.

Ducitur ibi quoq; communiter præfatam lampadem coram sepulchro singulis annis in die Sanctæ Paraſcheues, hora nona extingui, & in media nocte Paschæ sine humano studio reaccendi. Quod (si ita est) euidens diuini beneficij miraculum est. Et quamuis id plurimi Christiani simpliciter in magno pietatis merito credant, pleriſq; tamen est in suspicione. Fortè talia Saraceni custodes sepulchri fingentes diuulgauerunt, pro augendo emolumenta tributi, quod inde resultaret, seu oblationum quæ dantur.

Mandevillus de hoc dubitat. vid. sup. l. 3. c. 2.

Singulis

Digitized by Google

Singulis autem annis in die Cœnæ Domini in Paraſceue, & in vigilia Paſchæ, tribus his diebus manet Tabernaculum hoc apertum continuè, & patet omnibus Chriſtianis genibus acceſſus, alias verò non per annum ſine redditione tributi. Intra Eccleſiam, propè parietem dextrum, eſt Caluaria locus, vbi crucifixus pependit Chriſtus Dominus. Per gradus aſcenditur in hunc locum, & eſt rupis velut albi coloris, cum aliqua rubedine per loca commixta, habens ſciſſuram, quam dicunt Golgotha, in qua maior pars precioſi ſanguinis Chriſti dicitur influxiſſe: vbi & habetur Altare conſtructum, ante quod conſiſtunt tumbæ Godefridi de Bullion, &c. Tumba Godefridi de Bullion.

Vltrà duo ſtadia ab Eccleſia ad Meridiem ſancti Sepulchri habetur magnum hoſpitale ſancti Ioannis Hieroſolymitani, qui caput & fundamentum eſſe dignoſcitur ordinis Hoſpitaliorum modò tenentium Rhodum Inſulam: in quo recipi poſſunt omnes Chriſtiani peregrini cuiuſcunque ſint conditionis, ſeu ſtatus, vel dignitatis. Nam Saraceni pro leui cura anxij rumoris, prohibent ne apud quenquam ſuorum Chriſtianus pernoctet. Ad ſuſtentationem edificij huius hoſpitalis, habentur in eo 124. columnæ marmoreæ, & in parietibus diſtincti 54. pilarij. Satis propè hunc locum in Orientem, eſt Eccleſia quæ dicitur de Domina noſtra magna: & indè non remotè alia, quæ dicitur noſtræ Dominæ Latinorum, edificata ſuper locum, vbi Maria Magdalene, & Maria Cleophæ cum alijs pluribus, dum Chriſtus cruci affigebatur, flebant & dolores lamentabiles exercebant. Cap. 15. De tribus alijs Eccleſijs, & ſpecialiter de Templo Dominj.

Item ab Eccleſia ſancti Sepulchri in Orientem ad ſtadium cum dimidio habetur edificium mirabile ac pulchrum valdè, quod Templum Domini nominatur, quod conſtructum eſt in forma rotunda, cuius circumferentia Diameter habet 64. cubitos, & altitudo eius 126. & intrinſecus pro ſuſtentatione edificij, multis pilarij. In medio autem Templi eſt locus altior 14. gradibus, qui & ipſe columnis vndiq; eſt ſtipatus: & ſecundum quatuor mundi plagas habet Templum quatuor introitus per portas Cypreſſinas artificiosè compoſitas, nobiliterq; ſculptas, & exciſas. Et ante portam Aquilonarem intra Templum fons eſt aquæ mundæ, qui quamuis olim exundabat, tamen nunc minimè fluit. In toto circuitu edificij extrinſecus eſt valdè pro atrio latum ſpacium loci, ſtratum per totum pauimentum marmoribus. Hoc Templum non ducitur ſtare in eodem loco vbi Templum Dei ſtetit in tempore Chriſti, quo poſt Reſurrectionem à Romanis deſtructo, iſtud longo poſt tempore Adrianus Imperator extruxit, ſed non ad formam Templi prioris: prædictum tamen excelſum in medio Templi locum vocant Iudæi Sanctum Sanctorum.

Sciatis itaq; quòd Saraceni magnam exhibent huic Templo reuerentiam, & honorem, ſapiùs illùc diſcalceati intrantes, & poſitis genibus deuotè Deum Omnipotentem exorantes, nulla enim ibidem habetur imago, ſed multæ lampades relucentes. Neminem Chriſtianorum ſeu Iudæorum ingredi ſinunt hoc Templum, reputantes eos indignos ad hoc, & nimium immundos, vndè niſi virtute literarum quas habui à Soldano, nec ego fuiſſem ingreſſus. Ingrediens autem cum meis ſodalibus depoſuimus calciamenta, recogitantes cum multa cordis deuotione, nos magis id facere debere, quàm incredulos Saracenos. Literæ Soldani traditæ Mandeuillo.

Porrò in eo loco vbi ſtatuerat idem Rex ante Templum Altare holocauſti, videlicet extra portam Templi Occidentalem, habetur & nunc Altare, ſed non ad inſtar, nec ad vſum primi: Nam Saraceni, quaſi nihil curantes, traxerunt in eo lineas tanquam in Aſtrolabio figentes in linearum centro batellum, ad cuius vmbram per lineas diſcernuntur diei horæ.

Vlturo ad dextram ſatis de propinquo habetur & alia Eccleſia quæ nunc appellatur ſchola Salomonis: rurſuſq; ad Meridiem eſt & aliud Templum ſiue Eccleſia, quæ vocatur Templum Salomonis, quòd olim fuit caput, & fundamentum totius ordinis Templariorum, &c. Cap. 16. De pluribus locis ſacris iuxta vrbem.

Dominus Soldanus quodam die in Caſtro, expulſis omnibus de camera ſua, me ſolùm retinuit ſecum tanquam pro ſecreto habendo colloquio. Conſuetum enim eſt ys eijcere omnes tempore ſecretorum: qui diligenter à me interrogauit qualis eſſet gubernatio vitæ in terra noſtra, breuiter reſpondebam, bona, per Dei gratiam, qui recepto hoc verbo dixit ita non eſſe. Sacerdotes (inquit) veſtri, qui ſeipſos exhibere deberent alijs in exemplum, in malis iacent actibus, parum curant de Templi ſeruitio: habitu & ſtudijs ſe conformant mundo: ſe inebriant vino, continentiam infringentes, cum fraude negotiantes, ac praua principibus conſilia ingerentes. Communis quoque populus, dum feſtis diebus intendere deberent deuotioni in Templo, currit in hortis, in ſpectaculis, in Tabernis vſque ad crapulam, & ebrietatem, & pinguia manducans & bibens, ac in beſtiarum morem; luxuriam prauam exercens. In vſura, dolo, rapina, furto, detractione, mendatio & periurio viuunt plures eorum euidenter, ac ſi qui talia non agant, vt fatui reputantur, & pro nimia cordis ſuperbia neſciunt ad libitum excogitare, qualiter ſe velint habere, mutando ſibi indumenta, nunc longa, nunc curta nimis, quandoque ampla, quandoque ſtricta vltra modum, vt in his ſingulis appareant deriſi potius quam veſtiti: pyleos quoque, calceos, calligas, corrigias ſibi fabricant exquiſitas, cùm etiam è contra deberent ſecundùm Chriſti ſui doctrinam ſimplices, Deo deuoti, humiles, veraces, inuicem diligentes, inuicem concordantes, & iniuriam de facili remittentes. Scimus etiam eos propter peccata ſua perdidiſſe hanc terram optimam quam tenemus, nec timemus eam amittere, quamdiu ſe taliter gubernant. Attamen non dubitamus, quin in futurum per meliorem vitæ conuerſationem merebuntur de noſtris eam manibus recuperare. Colloquium Soldani cum Mandeuillo. Reprehenſio Sacerdotum. Reprehenſio vulgi turpiſſima Veſtimentorum varietas reprehenſa.

Ad hoc ego vltra confuſus & ſtupefactus, nequiui inuenire reſponſum; verebar enim obloqui veritati, quamuis ab Infidelis ore prolatæ, & vultu præ rubore demiſſo percunctatus ſum, Domine, ſalua reuerentia, qualiter poteſtis ita plenè hoc noſcere? De hominibus (ait) meis interdum mitto ad modum Mercatorum per terras & Regiones Chriſtianorum, cum Balſamo, Gemmis, Sericis, ac Aromatibus, ac

Digitized by Google

ac per illos singula exploro, tam de statu Imperatoris, ac Pontificum Principum, ac Sacerdotum, quam Prælatorum, nec non Æquora, Prouincias, ac distinctiones earum.

Igitur peracta collocutione vestra satis producta, egressos Principes in cameram reuocauit ex quibus quatuor de maioribus iuxta nos aduocans, fecit eos expresse ac debite, per singulas diuisiones in lingua Gallicana destinguere per partes, & singularum nomina partium, omnem Regionem terræ Anglie, ac alias Christianorum terras multas, ac si inter nostros fuissent nati, vel multo tempore conuersati. Nam & ipsum Soldanum audiui cum ijs bene & directè loquentem idioma Francorum. Itaque in omnibus his mente consternatus obmutui, cogitans, & dolens de peccatis singulis, rem talster se habere, &c.

Secunda pars. Cap. 26. De Æthiopia, & Diamantibus, & de infima India.

AEthiopia consistit à terra Chaldæorum in Austrum, qua distinguitur in Orientalem Æthiopiam, & Meridionalem, quarum prima in illis partibus vocatur Cush, propter hominum nigredinem, altera Mauritania.

De Æthiopia intratur in Indiam mediam, nam triplex est, videlicet Infima, que in quibusdam suis partibus est nimis frigida ad inhabitandum: Media qua satis temperata est, & Superior, qua nimis calida, &c.

India triplex.

Cap. 28. De Ecclesia & corpore sanctæ Thomæ Apostoli.

Hinin Meridiem pluribus exactis Insulis per viam decem dietarum venitur in Regnum Mabron. Illic in ciuitate Calamiæ, seruatur in magno Templo corpus beatissimi Thomæ Apostoli Domini nostri Iesu Christi in capsa honorificata. In quo loco & martirizatus fuit, licet dicunt quidam, quod in Edissa ciuitate. Iste populus non est multum tempus transactum, quin fuit totus in fidei religione, sed nunc est ad pessimos Gentilium ritus peruersus.

Regio Mabron vel Malaber. Calamia, vel Calumè.

Per certas historias habetur Ducem Danorum Ogerum conquisiuisse has terras, & in exaltatione sanctarum Apostoli reliquiarum fecisse fieri prefatam spectatilem Ecclesiam, &c.

Idolum in Templo sancti Apostoli erectum.

In hac ipsa beati Thomæ Ecclesia statuerunt multa mira magnitudinis simulachra, ex quibus vnum quòd maius est multò alijs, apparet sedens homo in alto solio adoperto aureis sericis, & lapidibus pretiosis, habensq; ad collum suspensa pro ornatu multa cinctoria pretiosè gemmis, & auro contexta. Ad hoc autem Idolum adorandum confluunt peregrini à remotis partibus, & propinquis, in satis maiori copia, & valdè feruentiori deuotione quàm Christiani, ad sanctuum Iacobum in Galizia, quia multi eorum per totum peregrinationis iter, non audent erigere palpebras oculorum, ne fortè propter hoc deuotio intermittatur.

Alij de propè venientes superaddunt labori itinerandi, vt ad tertium vel ad quartum passum semper cadant in genibus. Nonnulli quoque Demoniaca inspiratione semetipsos per viam peregrinationis lanceolis, & cultellis nunc minoribus, nunc maioribus sauciant vulneribus per singula corporis loca, & dum ante Idolum perueniunt, excisum frustum de carne propria proijcunt ad Idolum pro offerenda, ac plagis durioribus se castigant, & quandoque spontaneè penitus se occidunt: in solemnitatibus verò, sicut in dedicatione, & sicut in thronizatione simulachrorum, fit conuentus populi, quasi totius Regni. Et ducitur cum processione maius Idolum per circuitum ciuitatis, in curru preciosissimo, modis omnibus perornato, & precedunt in numero magno puelle cantantes bina, & bine, ordinatissimè; succeditq; pluralitas Musicorum cum instrumentis varijs simphonizantes, quos continuè subsequitur currus cuius lateribus coniungit se peregrinorum exercitus, qui & venerunt de remotis.

Ibique cernitur miserabilis actus vltrà modum. Nam aliqui victi vltrà modum diabolica deuotione proijciunt se sub rotis currus precedentis, vt frangantur sibi crura, brachia, latera, dorsa, nec non & colla in reuerentiam Dei sui (vt dicunt) à quo remunerationem sperant, venire ad Paradisum terrestrem.

Occidunt se in honorem Idoli

Et post processionem postquàm statuerunt Idolum in Templo suo loco, multiplicatur coram simulachris numerus sapè plangentium, & Occidentium vltrà quam credi sit facile. Ita quod quandoq; in illa vnica solemnitate inueniuntur ducenta corpora, vel plura occisorum. Et assistentes propinqui amici talium Diabolo martyrum, cum magna musicorum melodia decantantes in sua lingua offerunt Idolis corpora, ac demum accenso rogo omnia corpora comburunt in honorem Idolorum, assumentes sibi singuli aliquid de ossibus aut cineribus pro reliquijs, quas putant sibi valituras contra qualibet infortunia, & tempestates. Et habetur ante Templum, aqua lacus, velut seruatorium piscium, in quo proijcit populus largissimè suas oblationes, Argentum, Aurum, Gemmas, Cyphos, & similia, quibus ministri certis temporibus exhibentes prouident Ecclesia, ac simulachro, ac sibi ipsis abundanter.

Cap. 29. De Iaua, & quibusdam alijs meridionalibus Insulis.

Inde vlterius procedendo in Austrum per multas & mirabiles terras quinquaginta duarum dietarum spacio, habetur magna Insula Lamori. Illic omnes nudi incedunt, & ferè omnia sunt singulis communia; nec vtuntur priuatis clauibus siue seris, imo & omnes mulieres sunt communes omnibus & singulis viris, dummodo violentia non inferatur: sed & peior est ijs consuetudo, quod libenter comedunt teneras carnes humanas; vnde & negotiatores adferunt eis crassos infantes venales: quod si non satis pingues afferuntur eos saginant sicut nos Vitulum, siue Porcum.

Mandeuillus vsus astrolabio.

Hic apparet in bona altitudine Polus Antarcticus & incipit modò apperere in alta Lybia, ita quod in alta Æthiopa, eleuatur octodecem gradibus, prout ipse probaui Astrolabio.

Iaua Insula, grandis.

Et est valde grandis Regio Iaua, habens in circuitu ambitum leucarum duarum millium. Huius Rex est valde potens, & imperans septem Insularum vicinarum Regibus. Terra ista est populosa, valdè, & crescunt in ea Species, & abundantia Gingiberis, Canella, Gariofoli, Nuces Muscata, & Mastix, cum Multa Aromata in Iaua.

Aro-

Digitized by Google

Aromatibus multis. Sed & quod ibi nascatur vinum, non habent: Aurum & Argentum est ibi in copia immensa, quòd patet in Regis Iauæ palatio, cuius palatij nobilitas non est facilè scribenda.

Cuncti gradus ascendentes ad palatij aulas, & aularum cameras, & ad thalamos camerarum sunt solidi de argento vel auro, sed & omnis statura pauimentorum in alijs habetur ad similitudinem scacarij, vnam quadratam argenti, alteram auri, laminis valdè crassis, & in ipsis pauimentis, sunt exsculpta gesta, & historiæ diuersæ. In principali verò aula, est plenariè expressa Dani Ducis Ogeri historia, à natiuitate ipsius, quousque in Franciam fantasticè dicatur reuersus, cum tempore Caroli Magni Regis Franciæ, ipse Ogerus armata manu conquisiuit Christianitati ferè omnes partes transmarinas à Ierosolymis vsque ad arbores Solis & Lunæ, ac propè Paradisum terrestrem.

Pro hac Regione Iaua, (quæ tangit fines Imperij Tartariæ*) sibi subiuganda, Imperator* Grand Can multoties pugnauit, sed nunquam valuit expugnare. Hinc per mare venitur ad regnum * Thalamasse, *quòd & * Pachon dicitur, in quo habetur magnus numerus bonarum ciuitatum. Intra hanc Insulam, quatuor sunt genera arborum, de quarum vna accipitur farina ad panem, de secunda mel, de tertia vinum, & de quarta pessimum venenum. Extrahitur autem farina de suis arboribus isto modo.*

* Vel Thoiomassi.
* Vel Paten.
Farina ex arbore.

*Certo tempore anni percutitur stipes arboris vndique prope terram cum securi, & cortex in locis pluribus vulneratur, de quibus recipitur liquor spissus, qui desiccatus ad solis æstum & contritus reddit farinam albam, ac si de frumento esset confectus, attamen hic panis non est tritacei saporis, sed alterius valde boni. Simili modo de suis arboribus mel elicitur, & vinum * liquitur: excepto quod illa non sicut gramina prima desiccantur. Fertur quoque ibidem extractionem huius farinæ, mellis, & vini, per Angelum primitus fuisse ostensum prædicto* Danorum Duci, illic fame cum suo exercitu laboranti. Contra venenum quod de quarto arboris genere stillat, solum est intoxicato remedium, vt de proprio fimo per puram aquam distemperato bibat.

* Tadtic.

In littore maris Calanoch miraculosè veniunt semel in anno, per tres continuos dies, quasi de omni genere piscium marinorum, in maxima abundantia: & præbent se omnibus liberè capiendos ad manum. Nam & ego ipse cepi quamplures. Vnde notandum, quod eodem tempore anni quo super dicta extrahitur farina, mel, & vinum, conueniunt in hoc isti pisces: quæ ambo mirabiliter fecit vno tempore Deus olim pro Duce suo Ogero, quæ & in memoria illius, vsque nunc, singulis annis innouantur.

Calanoch.

Et sunt in hoc territorio testudines terribilis quantitatis, fitq; de maioribus Regi ac Nobilibus delicatus ac preciosis cibus: mentior, si non quasdam ibidem viderim testudinum conchas, in quarum vna se tres homines occultarent, suntq; omnes multum albi coloris. Si hic vir vxoratus moritur, sepelitur & vxor vna cum eo, quatenus, sicut ibi credunt, habeant eam statim sociam in seculo altero.

Testitudines grandissimæ.

In istis autem meridionalibus partibus apparebat mihi eleuatio poli Antarctici 33. graduum, cum 16. minutis. Et sciendum quod in Bohemia, similiter & in Anglia eleuatur polus Arcticus 52. gradibus vel citra: Et in partibus magis septentrionalibus, vbi sunt Scoti 62. gradibus cum 4. minutis. Ex quo patet respiciendo ad latitudinem cœli, quæ est de polo ad polum, itinerario meæ fuit per quartum Horizontis sphæræ terræ, & vltra per 5. gradus, cum 20. minutis. Cum ergo secundum Astrologos, totus terræ circuitus sit 31500. milliarium, octo stadijs pro milliario computatis, & septinginta stadia respondeant ad vnum gradum, quod patet ad latitudinem terræ, perambulani 66733. stadia cum vno tertio, quæ faciunt 4170. leucas Geometricas cum dimidia vel propè.

Australis latitudo 33. grad. 16. minut.

Hæc erat Eratosthenis computatio.

Cum igitur tot & talia in istis Insulis vidimus monstra (quæ si explicarem scribendo vix à legentibus omnia crederentur) non curauimus vlterius procedere sub polo Australi, ne in maiora pericula incideremus: sed propter auditam & inuisam nobis famositatem potentiæ, nobilitatis, & gloriæ Imperatoris Tartarorum, vertebam faciem cum socijs nauigare magis versus Orientem. Cumq; per multas dietas sustinuissemus multa pericula maris, peruenimus in Regnum Manchus, quod est in confinibus superioris Indiæ, & iungitur ab vna parte Tartariæ. Hæc Regio Manchus pro sua quantitate reputatur melior, delectabilior, & omnium bonorum abundantior de cunctis ibi propè Regionibus. Nam & homines, bestiæ, & volucres maiores & corpulentiores sunt alijs, & præ vbertate vix inuenirentur in vna ciuitate decem mendici. Formosi sunt viri, sed fœminæ formosiores. Sed viri loco barbæ, habent perpaucos pilos, rigidos, & longos ab vtraque oris parte, quemadmodum nostros videmus cattos habere.

Cap. 32. De bona Regione Manchus (forte Mangi.)

Prima quam ingrediamur ciuitas est Lachori, distans vna dieta à mari, & mirabamur, & gauisi sumus nos inuenisse integram ciuitatem Christianæ fidei. Nam & maior pars Regni credit in Christum. Ibi habetur in leui precio copia rerum omnium, & præcipuè victualium: vnum genus est ibi serpentum in abundantia quod manducant ad omne conuiuium, & nisi pro finali ferculo ministrarctur de illis serpentibus, conuiuium quàm modicum diceretur.

Christiani.

Suntq; per hoc regnum pleraque ciuitates & Ecclesiæ, & religiones quas instituit Dux Ogerus, quia hoc est vnum de quindecim regnis quæ quæsiuit, sicut infra dicetur. Illic sunt elegantes albæ gallinæ, quæ non vestiuntur plumis vt nostræ, sed optima lana. Canes aquatici, quos nos Latras nominamus, sunt ibi multi edomiti, quod quoties mittuntur in flumen, exportant domino piscem.

Sunt huiusmodi etiam canes in India occidentali, teste Petro Martyre, in Decadibus.

Ab hoc loco per aliquas dietas, venitur ad huius regionis maximam vrbem Cansay, hoc est dicere, Ciuitatem Cœli, imo de vniuerso orbe terrarum putatur hæc maxima ciuitatum; nam eius circuitus 50. leucis est mensus, nec est facile dicere, quàm compresse à quamplurimis populis inhabitatur. Hæc sedet in lacu maris, quemadmodum, & Venetiæ: & habentur in ea plures quàm mille ducenti pontes, & in quolibet turres miræ magnitudinis, ac fortitudinis, munitæ peruigili custodia, & pro vrbe tuendâ contra Imperatorem Grand Can. Multi sunt ibi Christiani, & multæ Religiones Christianorum,

Cansay, vel Quinsay, & eius descriptio ſed & de ordinibus Minorum, & Prædicatorum, qui tamen ibi non mendicant; eſt magna pluralitas ex diuerſis Nationibus Mercatorum. Per Regionem naſcitur vinum valdè bonum, quod appellatur Bigon. Et ad leucam extra Ciuitatem, Abbatia magna eſt, non de Religione Chriſtiana ſed Pagana: & in ea forreſtum, ſiue hortus magnus vndiq; circumcluſus, conſitus arboribus, & arbuſtis in cuius etiam medio mons altus ſimul & latus, habens hortum vbi ſolum inhabitant beſtiolæ mirabiles, ſicut Simiæ, marmotæ, Lanbon, papiones, foreti & huiuſmodi ad varia & multa genera, & ad numerum infinitum.

Eidem narrat Odericus.

Omni autem die poſt refectionem conuentus Abbatiæ, qui eſt valdè Monachoſus, deferuntur reliquiæ ciborum cum magno additamento, in vaſis auro lucentibus ad hunc hortum: & ad ſonitum Campanæ argenteæ, quam Eleemoſynarius manu geſtat deſcendentes, & occurrentes de beſtiolis duo millia aut plures ſeſe componunt reſidere ad circulum more pauperum mendicorum, & traditur ſingulis per ſeruos, aliquid de his cibarijs, ac denuò audita campana ſegregando recurrunt: Cumque nos tanquam redarguentes, diceremus, cur hæc non darentur egenis, reſponderunt, illic pauperes non habentur, quod ſi inuenirentur, potius tamen dari deberent beſtiolis. Habet enim eorum perfidia, & Paganiſmus, animas nobilium hominum poſt mortem ingredi corpora nobilium beſtiarum, & animas ignobilium corpora beſtiarum ignobilium & vilium, ad luenda videlicet crimina, donec peracta pœnitentia tranſeant in Paradiſum: ideoque nutriunt, prout dicunt, has nobiliores beſtias, ſiue beſtiolas, quòd à quibuſdam nobilibus fundabatur in principio hæc Abbatia. Multa ſunt alia mira in hac Ciuitate, de quibus ſciatis, quod non omnia vobis recitabo.

Cap. 33.

Inſula Pygmæorum non eſt protenſa, ſed fortè 12. Ciuitatum. Quarum vna eſt grandis, & bene munita, & quam Grand Can facit cum fortibus armaturis curioſè ſeruari, contra Regem Mangi.

Hinc procedtur per Imperium Grand Can, ad multas Ciuitates, & Villas morum mirabiliter diuerſorum, vſq; in Regnum Iamcham, quod eſt vnum de 12. Prouincijs maximis, quibus diſtinguitur totum Imperium Tartarorum. Nobilior Ciuitas huius Regni ſeu Prouincia dicitur Iamchan, abundans mercimonijs, & diuitijs infinitis, & multa præſtans proprio Regi tributa, quoniam ſicut illis de Ciuitate fatentur, valet annuè Regi quinquaginta milia * Cuman Florenorum auri. Nota. In Iamchan Ciuitate eſt Conuentus fratrum Minorum: in hac ſunt tres Eccleſiæ Monaſteriorum: reditus ſimul aſcendit ad 12. Cuman. Odericus. Vnus Cuman eſt decem millium. Summa tributi annui, quinquaginta millia millium Florenorum. In illis namq; partibus magnas numerorum ſummas eſtimant per Cuman, numerum 10 millium qui & in Flamingo dicitur laſte. Ad quinque leucas ab hac Ciuitate eſt alia dicta Meke, in qua fiunt de quodam albiſſimi generis ligni Naues maximæ cum Aulis & Thalamis, ac multis ædificijs, tanquam Palatium tellure fundatum.

Iamchan.

* Cuman.

Ciuitas Meke.

Maximæ naues, quales hodie oſtentat China.

Inde per idem Regnum ad viam octo diætarum per aquam dulcem, multas per Ciuitates, & bonas Villas, venimus a Laucherim, (Odericus appellat Leuyim) vrbem formoſam opumq; magnarum, ſitam ſuper flumen magnum b Cacameran. Hoc flumen tranſit per medium Cathay, cui aqua infert damnum, quando nimis inundat, ſicut Padus in Ferraria, Mogus in Herbipoli: & illud ſequentes intrauimus principalem Prouinciam Imperij Tartariæ, dictam Cathay Calay: & iſta Prouincia eſt multum diſtenta, ac plena Ciuitatibus, & Oppidis bonis, & magnis omnibuſq; referta mercimonijs, maximè Sericoſis operibus, & Aromaticis ſpeciebus.

a Siue Lanterin.

b Vel Caremoron.

Cathay Calay.

Nauigando per dictum flumen verſus Orientem, & itinerando per hanc Cathay Prouinciam ad multas dietas per plurimas Vrbes & Villas, venitur in Ciuitatem c Sugarmago, abundantiorem omnibus in mercemonijs antedictis: quando ſericum eſt hic viliſſimum quadraginta libra habentur ibi pro decem Florenis. Ab hac Ciuitate, multis Ciuitatibus peragratis verſus Orientem, veni ad Ciuitatem Cambalu, quæ eſt antiqua in Prouincia Cathay: Hanc poſtquam Tartari ceperunt, ad dimidium miliare fecerunt vnam Ciuitatem nomine Caydo, & habet duodecim portas, & à porta in portam duo ſunt groſſa miliaria Lombardica, ſpacium inter medium iſtarum Ciuitatum habitatoribus plenum eſt & circuitus cuiuſlibet iſtarum ambit 60. miliaria Lombardica, quæ faciunt octo Teutonica. In hac Ciuitate Cambalu reſidet Imperator Magnus Can, Rex Regum terreſtrium, & Dominus Dominorum terreſtrium. Atq; indè vlterius in Orientem intratur vetus vrbs Caydo, vbi communiter tenet ſuam ſedem Imperialem Grand Can in ſuo Palatio. Ambitus autem vrbis Caydo, eſt viginti ferè leucarum, duodecim habens portas à ſe diſtantes amplius quàm ſtadia 24.

c Engarmago.

Vilitas ſerici.

Vel Cambaleck.

Caydo Ciuitas.

Cap. 34. De Palatio Imperatoris Grand Can.

Palatium Imperatoris Grand Can, quod eſt in Caydo Ciuitate, continet in circuitu proprij muralis vltrà duas leucas & ſunt in eo aulæ quàm plures, in forma nobiles, & in materia nobiliores. Aula autem ſedis, quæ eſt maxima cæterarum, habet intrinſecus pro ſui ſuſtentatione 24. æreas columnas factas opere fuſorio, de auro puro, & omnes parietes ab intus opertas pellibus quorundam animalium, quæ vocantur Pantheres: hæ ſanguinei ſunt coloris, & ita remicantes, vt Sole deſuper relucente, vix oculus valeat humanus ſuſtinere ſplendorem, tantæq; fragrantiæ vt illi approximare non poſſet aer infectus, vnde & iſta opertura parietum appreciatur ſuper tegmen aureorum laminarum, &c.

Iſtius autem oſtia aulæ, dum in ea reſidet, aut deambulat Imperator, multi Barones ingreſſum ſeruant intentè & ne limen tangatur, quod hoc haberent pro augurio: & benè verberaretur, quia Imperatore præſente, nemo niſi adductus in quacunque camera, vel habitatione intromittitur, donec interrogatus inſſerit Imperator. Latitudinem huius Baſilicæ æſtimo ad ſpacium de meis pedibus centum & longitudinem vltrà quatuor centum.

Mandeuillus ſuis pedibus menſurauit aulam Imperatoris.

Præterea, iuxta Palatij ambitum, habetur grandis parci ſpaciamentum, diuerſi generis arboribus repletum, fructus ferentibus varios, & nobis inuiſos, & in parte media, aula ſuper excelſum collem de tam

Digitized by Google

tam mira & pulchra ſtructura, vt eius nobilitas de facili ad præſens non poſsit deſcribi. Et vndiq;, per collis gyrum aquæ foſſatum profundum, & latum, vltrà quod pons vnicus ducit ad collem. Atq; ex duobus montis lateribus, ſtagnum cum diuerſorum copia Piſcium, & volucrum indomitarum, vt anicarum, annatum, cignorum, ciconiarum, ardearum, & collectorum in magna pluralitate: nec non & per parcum, multæ ſyluęſtres beſtiæ, & beſtiolæ quatenùs per aulæ feneſtras poſsit Dominus pro ſolatio reſpicere volucrum aucupationes, beſtiarum venationes, & piſcium captiones.

Præter palatium hoc in Caydo, habet Imperator ſimiliter tria: vnum in ciuitate Sadus, verſus Septentrionem, vbi competens eſt frigus, ibi moratur in æſtate. Cambalu, vbi competens calor, ibi moratur hyeme. Tertium in ciuitate Iongh, in quo & in iſto Caydo, vt ſæpiùs ſeruat ſedem, eò quòd in iſtis eſt aer magis temperatus, quamuis ſemper calidus videtur Noſtratibus.

Haitonus meminit Iong.

Sciatis quòd ego, meiq; ſodales, pro fama magnificentiæ huius Imperatoris, tradidimus nos ſtipendiarios eſſe in guerris, contra Regem Mangi prænominatum. Et fuimus apud ipſum 15. menſibus, & certè inuenimus multò maiorem partem hominum, in mediam partem nobis non fuiſſe relatam: hominum (exceptis cuſtodibus beſtiarum & volucrum) qui intra palatium certa gerunt miniſteria eſt numerus decem cuman.

Cap. 35. De quatuor ſolennitatibus, quas Magnus Can celebrat in anno.

Nota. Traxi moram in Cambalu tribus annis: fratres noſtri locum habent in Curia ſua ſpecialiter, & feſtis diebus ſtatutis dant benedictionem. Odericus. Et quoniam Imperator habet ſatis plures quàm decem mille Elephantes edomitos, & velut vltrà numerum alias beſtias (quarum quædam tenentur in caueis, ſtabulis mirabilibus, vel catenis) nec non & aues rapaces, & Accipitres, Falcones, Oſtrones, Gryfandos gentiles, Laueroys, & Satyros, ſed & Aniculas loquentes, & Papingos, & ſimiles, aliaſq; cantantes: reputatur numerus hominum de iſtis curam & laborem gerentium, vltrà ſex cumas, & præterea iugiter ad Curiam equites cum plenarijs armaturis, quinq; cuman, & de peditibus cum præliandi armaturis, cuman decem. Sed & omnes de natione quacunq; mundi venientes, qui petunt deſcribi pro Curia, recipiuntur. Sic enim iuſſit Imperator. Habet & medicos Paganos viginti, & totidem Phyſicos, atque ſine his Medicos Chriſtianos ducentos, & totidem Phyſicos, quoniam iſte Grand Can maiorem gerit confidentiam in Medicis Chriſtianis, quàm in ſuæ propriæ nationis medicis.

Vixit in Cambalu tribus annis.

Sex cuman famulorum.

Quinque Cuman equitum.

Decem Cuman peditum.

Medici Chriſtiani, 200. in aula Grand Can.

Hoc ergò firmiter ſcias, quod de Curia Regis accipiunt neceſſaria ſua ingiter vltrà triginta cuman hominum, præter expenſas animalium & volucrum, cùm tamen in feſtis maioribus ſint homines propè in duplo tanti. Nec valet hic Dominus defectum vllum pati pecuniæ, eò quòd in terra ſua non currit moneta de argento, vel auro, aliòue metallo, ſed tantùm de corio vel papyro: horum enim forma denariorum ſigno Imperatoris impreſſorum preciatur minoris aut maioris valoris, ſecundùm diuerſitatem impreſſionis, qui per viſitationem, detriti vel rupti, cùm ad Regis theſaurarios deferuntur, protinùs dantur pro illis noui.

Vnus Cuman continet decem milia, vt in cap. 33.

Moneta de corio vel papyro.

Quater in anno celebrat Imperator feſtiuitates ſolennes. Primam de die propria Natiuitatis. Secundam, de die ſuæ primæ præſentationis in eorum Templo, quod appellant Moſcath, vbi & ſit ijs, neſcio quod genus circumciſionis. Tertiam, in thronizatione ſui Idoli in Templo. Quartam, de die quo Idolum cœpit dare reſponſum, ſeu facere diabolica mira. Plures enim in anno non tenet ſolennitates, niſi ſi quando nuptias filij aut filiæ celebrat. Itaq; in iſtis ſolemnitatibus eſt populi multitudo abſq; numero, &c.

Quatuor feſta.

Circumciſio quædam.

Cap. 36. De ludis & præſtigijs in ſuo feſto, & de ſuo comitatu.

Celebrato poſt hoc prandio ſatis morosè, quia nunquam eſt vltrà ſemel edendum in die, de quo & eius adminiſtratione nunc longum eſt ſcribere, adſunt geſticulatores, mira viſu, ſuauiaq; auditu pedibus, manibus, brachijs, humeris, capitibus, & toto corpore, ac ad ſingulos geſtus, correſpondentes debito vocis ſono. Et ſemper finem horum mirabilium cantilena ſubſequitur muſicorum. Ex hoc ioculatores præſtò ſunt, & Magi, qui ſuis incantationibus præſtant præſtigia multa.

Semel in die comedunt.

Magi inſignes.

Certum eſt illic homines eſſe ſubtiles ad quaſdam humanas artes, & ingenioſos ad fraudes ſuper omnes, quos noui mundi partes, vnde & inter ſe dicunt prouerbium, ſe ſolos videre duobus oculis, & Chriſtianos vno, cæteros autem homines cæcos: ſed mentitur iniquitas ſibi, quoniam ipſi vident ſolo oculo terrena & tranſitoria, & nos Chriſtiani duobus, quia cum terrenis videmus ſpiritualia, & manſura: percuſſit enim Naas, id eſt, humani generis hoſtis cum illis fœdus, vt erueret omnibus oculos dextros, ſcilicet ſpirituales.

Inſignis ſententia. 1. Sam. 11. 2.

Cap. 37. Qua de cauſa dicitur Grand Can.

Poſt annos Chriſti 1100. prima Tartaria fuit nimis oppreſſa ſeruitute ſub Regibus circumiacentium ſibi nationum. Quando autem Deo placuit, maiores illius Tartariæ eleuauerunt de ſeipſis ſibi Regem dictum Guis Can, cui & promiſerunt ſubiectiſſimam obedientiam. Idem cùm eſſet prudens & ſtrenuus 12. viriles habens filios, debellauit cum ijs & populo ſuo, & vicit, ac ſubiecit cunctos in circuitu Reges, quibus terra indebitè diù ſubiacuerat. Quin etiam apparente ſibi in viſione Angelo Dei velut milite in albo equo, & candidis armis, & hortante ſe, vt tranſiret Alpes, per montem * Beliam, & per brachium maris, ad terram Cathay, & ad alias illic plurimas regiones tranſiuit, & cœpit cum filijs ſuis aliquas ex illis debellare, & ſubijcere, Deo in omnibus adiuuante potenter. Et quoniam in equo albo ei Angelus apparuit, qui etiam antè paſſum prædicti maris nouem orationes Deo facere iuſſit, idcò ſucceſſores vſque hodiè diligunt equos albos, & nouenarium numerum habent præ cæteris in gratia. Dunq; Guis Can morti præ ſenio appropinquaret, conuocatos ante ſe filios hortabatur, & monebat exemplo 12. telorum in ſimul colligatorum, quæ à nullo filiorum pariter frangi potuerant, ſed diſſoluta vnumquodq; per ſe facilè frangebatur: ſic filij (inquit) dilectiſſimi, ſi per concordiam vos inuicem dilexeritis, & vnxeritis ſeniori fratri obedientes, confido in Deo iuxta promiſſionem mihi ab Angelo factam, quòd omnem latiſſimam

Vera ratio huius nominis Can.

Guis Can.

Vel Belgiam.

Cur albi equi, & nouenarius numerus Tartaris ſint in pretio.

Digitized by Google

istam terram, & optimam illius imperio subijcietis, quod & post patris discessum strenuissimè, ac fidelissimè (Deo sibi prosperante) perfecerunt. Et quia cum proprijs nominibus habebant cognomen Can, primogenitus pro differentia obtinuit nomen Grand Can, id est, Magnus Can, videlicet supra cæteros fratres, qui sibi in omnibus obediebant.

Grand Can.

Ochoto Can. Gui Can. Mango Can.

Itaq; iste secundus Imperator vocabatur Ochoto Can. Post quem filius eius regnauit dictus Gui Can. Quartus autem, qui Mango Can baptizabatur, permansitq; fidelis Christianus, qui etiam misso magno exercitu cum fratre suo Hallaon in partes Arabiæ & Ægypti mandauit destrui in toto Mahometi superstitionem, & terram poni in manibus Christianorum. Et fratre tum procedente, accepit rumores de fratris sui Imperatoris morte inopinata, quapropter & rediit negotio imperfecto. Quintus Cobila Can, qui etiam fuit Christianus, & regnauit 42. annis, & ædificauit magnam ciuitatem Iong, maiorem satis vrbe Roma, in qua & continetur valdè nobile palatium Imperiale. Hinc vsq; hodie omnes successores Paganismo fœdantur.

Cobila Can.

Echiant Can, Imperator Tartarorum tempore Mandeuilli.

Tempore autem meo erat nomen Imperatoris Echiant Can, & primogenitus eius Cosue Can, præter quem & alios filios habuit 12. de quorum nominibus conscribendis non est curæ præsentis.

Prima vxorum suorum vocabatur Serochan, quæ & est filia Presbyteri Ioannis, scilicet Imperatoris Indiæ. Secunda Verouchan. Tertia Caranth Can.

Serochan vxor Grand Can.

Istis duobus Imperatoribus non creditur inueniri maior Dominus sub firmamento Cœli. In literis quæ huius Imperatoris Tartariæ scribuntur nomine ponitur semper iste Titulus. Can filius Dei excelsi, omnium viriuersam terram colentium summus Imperator, & Dominus dominantium omnium. Circumferentia magni sui sigilli, continet hoc scriptum. Deus in Cœlo, Can super terram, eius fortitudo. Omnium hominum Imperatoris sigillum. Sciendum quoq; quod quamuis populi ibi discuntur, & sunt Pagani, tamen & Rex & omnes credunt in Deum immortalem; & Omnipotentem, & inuant per ipsum appellantes, Yroga, id est, Deum Naturæ. Sed nihilominus colunt & adorant Idola, & simulachra aurea, & argentea, lapidea, lignea, filtria, lanea, & linea.

Yroga, Deus Naturæ.

Cap. 38. De Territorio Cathay & moribus Tartarorum.

Totum Imperium Imperatoris Grand Can distinctum est in 12. magnas Prouincias, iuxta numerum duodecim filiorum primi Genitoris Can. Harum Prouinciarum maior, & nobilior dicitur Cathay, quæ consistit in Asia profunda. Tres enim sunt Asiæ, scilicet quæ profunda dicitur, & Asia dicta maior quæ nobis est satis propinquior & tertia minor intra quam est Ephesus beati Ioannis Euangelistæ sepultura, de qua habes in præcedentibus.

12. Prouinciæ Chinæ. Cathay. Asia triplex.

Vestitus Tartarorum,

Omnes tam viri quam feminæ similibus in forma vestibus inducuntur, videlicet valdè latis & brenibus vsq; ad genua cum apertura in lateribus quam firmant (dum volunt) ansis quibusdam, nam vterq; sexus est brachijs seu femoralibus plenè tectus. Nunquam vtuntur toga aut collobio, sed nec caputio, vnde nec per aspectum indumentorum potest haberi differentia inter virum & mulierem innuptam. Sed nupta gestat per aliquod tegumentum in capite formam pedis viri. Nubit illic vir quotquot placet mulieribus, vt nonnulli habeant decem vel duodecim vxores aut plures. Nam quisq; maritus iungitur licenter cuilibet mulieri, exceptis matre, & amita, sorore, & filia. Sicut viri equitant, tendunt, & currunt per patriam pro negotijs sic & mulieres, quoniam & ipsæ operantur omnia ferè artificia mechanica sicut pannos & quicquid efficitur de panno, corio, sericoq;, minantq; carrucas, & vehicula, sed viri fabricant de ferro & de omni metallo lapidibus atq; ligno, nec vir nec mulier nobilis aut degener comedit vltra semel in die communiter. Multa nutriunt pecora sed nullos porcos, parum comeditur ibi de pane exceptis magnatibus & diuitibus, sed carnes edunt pecorum, bestiarum, & bestiolarum vtpote Boum, Ouium, Caprarum, Equorum, Asinorum, Canum, Cattorum, Murium, & Rattorum, ius carnium sorbentes, & omnis generis lac bibentes.

Porcus & panis rariss.

Formæ domorum.

Nobiles autem bibunt lac Equarum, seu iumentorum, pro nobilissimo potu & pauperes aquam bullitam cum modico mellis, quia nec vinum ibi habetur, nec ceruisia conficitur: & multi ac plurimi fontes consulunt in sua siti, per villas, & rura. Domus, & habitacula rotundæ sunt formæ, compositæ & contextæ paruis lignis, & flexilibus virgulis, ad modum cauearum quas nos facimus pro auiculis, habentes rotundam in culmine aperturam præstantem duo beneficia habitationi, quoniam & ignis quem in medio domus constituunt fumum emittit, & pro aspiciendo lumen immittit. Intrinsecus sunt parietes vndiq; de filtro, sed & tectum filtrum est: has domus, dum locum habitandi mutare volunt, vel dum in diutina expeditione procedunt, ducunt secum in plaustris quasi tentoria.

Tartari Hamaxouij, i. in plaustris viuentes.

Nouilunium in precio.

Ceremoniæ Tartarorum, & peccata.

Multas superuacuas obseruant ceremonias, quia respiciunt in vanitates & insanias falsas: solem & lunam præcipuè adorant, eisq; frequenter genua curuant, & ad nouilunium, quicquid est magni estimant inchoandum. Nullus omnino vtitur calcaribus in equitando, sed cogunt equum flagello scorpione, reputantes peccatum non leue, si quis ad hoc flagellum appodiat, aut iumentum percuteret suo frano: pleraque similia, quæ parum aut nihil nocent, ponderant vt grauia, sicut imponere cultellum in igne, os osse confringere, lac seu aliud potabile in terram effundere, nec non & huiusmodi multa. Sed super hæc, tenent pro grauiori admisso mingere intra domum quæ inhabitatur, & qui de tanto crimine proclamaretur assuetus, mitteretur ad mortem. Et de singulis necesse est vt confiteatur peccator Flamini suæ legis, & soluat summam pecuniarum delicti. Et si peccatum deturpationis habitaculi venerit in publicum, oportebit reconciliari domum per Sacerdotem, prinsquam vllus audebit intrare. Insuper & peccatorem necesse erit pertransire ignem, semel, bis, aut ter iuxta iudicium Flaminis, quatenus per ignis acrimoniam turgetur à tanti inquinatione peccati.

Neminem hominum prohibent inter se habitare, sed indifferenter receptant, Iudæos, Christianos, Saracenos,

Digitized by Google

Saracenos, & homines cuiuſcunq; nationis, vel legis, dicentes ſe ſatis putare ſuum ritum non ita ſecurum ad ſalutem, niſi quandoq; traherentur ad ritum magis ſalutarem, quem tamen determinate nunc ignorant, imò multi de nobilibus ſunt iam in Chriſtianitate baptizati.

Porrò Tartari in pracincto expeditionis habent ſinguli duos arcus, cum magna pluralitate telorum: Nam omnes ſunt ſagittarij ad manum & cum rigida & longa lancea. Nobiles autem in equis preciosè phaleratis ferunt, gladios, vel ſpatas breues & latas, ſcindentes pro vno latere, & in capitibus galeas de corio cocto, non altas, ſed ad capitis formam depreſſas. Quicunq; de ſuis fugerit de prælio, ipſo facto conſcriptus eſt, vt ſiquando inuentus fuerit occidatur. Si caſtrum vel ciuitas obſeſſa ſe illis reddere voluerit, nullam acceptant conditionem niſi cum morte omnium inimicorum, vel ſi quis homo ſingularis ſe dederit victum nihilominus abſq; vlla miſeratione occidunt, detruncantes illi protinus aures, quas poſtea coquentes, & in aceto (dum habuerint) ponentes mittunt inuicem ad conuiuia pro extremo ferculo: dumque ipſi in bellis arte fugam ſimulant, periculoſum eſt eos inſequi, quoniam iaciunt ſagittas à tergo, quibus equos & homines occidere norunt. Et quando in prima acie comparant ad bellandum, mirabiliter ſeſe conſtringunt, vt media pars numeri eorum vix credatur.

Arma Tartarorum.

Tartari retro ſagittantes.

Generaliter noueritis, omnes Tartaros habere parvos oculos, & modicam vel raram barbam: In propriis locis rarò inter ſe litigant, contendunt, aut pugnant, timentes legum pergraues emendas. Et inuenitur ibi rarius viſpilio, latro, fur, homicida, iniurians, adulter, aut fornicarius, quia tales criminatores inueſtigatione ſollicita requiruntur, & ſine redemptione aliqua perimuntur. Dum quis decumbit infirmus figitur lancea iuxta illum in terra, & cum appropinquauerit morti, nullus remanet iuxta ipſum, cum verò mortuus eſſe ſcitur, confeſtim in campis, & cum lancea ſepelitur.

Tartari habent parvos oculos & raram barbam.

Mos ſepulturæ.

Imperator Grand Can poſtquam eius cognita fuerit defunctio, defertur mox à paucis viris in parco palatij, ad præiſſum locum vbi debeat ſepeliri. Et nudato prius toto illo loco à graminibus cum ceſpite figitur ibi tentorium, in quo velut in ſolio regali de ligno corpus defuncti reſidens collocatur, paraturq; menſa plena coram eo cibarijs precioſis, & potu de lacte iumentorum. Inſtabulatur ibi & equa cum ſuo pullo, ſed & ipſe albus, nobiliter phaleratus, & onuſtatus certo pondere auri & argenti. Et eſt totum Tentorij pauimentum de mundo ſtramine ſtratum.

Cap. 39. De ſepultura Imperatoris Grand Can, & creatione ſucceſſoris.

Tuncq; effodiunt in circuitu foſſam latam valde, & profundam vt totum tentorium cum omnibus contentis deſcendat in illam. Eoq; facto ita equaliter terram planificantes adoperiunt graminibus, vt in omni tempore locus ſepultura non valeat apparere. Et quoniam ignorantiæ nubilo turpiter excæcati putant in alio ſæculo homines delectationibus frui, dicunt quod tentorium erit ei pro hoſpitio, cibi ad edendum, lac ad potandum, equus ad equitandum, aurum & argentum ad reſpiciendum, ſed & equa lac ſemper præbebit, & pullos equinos ſucceſſiue generabit.

Poſt has itaq; Imperatoris defuncti miſeras exequias, nullus omnino audebit de ipſo loqui coram vxoribus & filijs, & propinquis, ſed nec nominare, quia per hoc putarent derogari paci, & quieti illius, qua non dubitant eum dominari, in maiori ſatis gloria Paradiſi quam hic ſtetit.

Breuiter & nunc intendo curſum deſcribere aliquarum magnarum Regionum & Inſularum Imperij Tartariæ. Et primo illas quæ deſcendunt à prouincia Cathay per ſeptentrionalem plagam, vſq; ad fines Chriſtianitatis Pruſſiæ, & Ruſſiæ.

Cap. 40. De multis regionibus Imperio Tartariæ ſubiectis.

Ergo prouincia Cathay deſcendens in ſui Oriente à regno Tharſis iungitur ab Occidente regno Turqueſcen, in quo & ſunt plurimæ ciuitates, quarum formoſior dicitur Octopar. Ipſum autem Turqueſcen regnum iungitur ad Occidentem ſui regno ſeu Imperio Perſiæ, & ad Septentrionem regno Coraſinæ, quod ſpacioſum eſt valde, habens verſus Orientem ſui vltra centum diætas deſerti: hoc regnum eſt multis bonis abundans, & appellatur eius melior ciuitas etiam Coraſine.

Turqueſtan. Octopar. Coraſine. Regnum Commanorum. Bocura, vel Bohare. Samarkand. Seu Neſſabon & Spahan Sarmaſane.

Iſti quoq; regno iungitur in Occidente verſus partes noſtras regnum Commanorum, quod & ſimiliter longum eſt, & latum, ſed in paucis ſui locis inhabitatum: Nam in quibuſdam eſt frigus niminm, in alijs nimius calor, & in nonnullis nimia muſcarum multitudo.

Sunt autem in Perſia duæ regiones: vna alta Perſiæ, quæ à regno Turqueſcen deſcendens, iungitur ad Occidentem ſui fluuio Pyſon. In iſta habentur renominata ciuitates, quarum meliores duæ dicuntur Bocura & Seonargant, quam aliqui appellant Samarkand: Et altera Regio Baſſæ Perſiæ, deſcendens à flumine Pyſon, qui ad ſui Occidentem iungitur regno Mediæ, & terræ minoris Armeniæ, & ad Aquilonem mari Caſpio, & ad Auſtrum terræ minoris Indiæ. In hac baſſa Perſia tres principaliores ciuitates ſunt Æſſabor, Saphaon, Sarmalaule, &c.

Tertia Pars.

Cap. 41. De magnificentia Imperatoris Indiæ & precioſitate Palatij. Seu Pentoxoria. Ciuitas Nyſe.

A finibus regni Bachariæ ſupradicti vbi contiguatur Imperio Indiæ, eundo per multas diætas intratur in regnum Pentoxyriæ quod eſt magnæ latitudinis, & abundantiæ in multis bonis: huius nominatior ciuitas, dicitur Nyſe, & in ea habet Imperator palatium Imperiale, in quo reſidet dum ſibi placet. Imperator iſte ſemper vocitatus eſt Presbyter Ioannes, cuius nominis cauſam audieram quandoq; non veram: ſed in illis partibus accepi rationem indubitatam, quam breuiter hic enarro. Circa annum ab Incarnatione Domini Octingenteſſimum, Dux Ogerus de Danemarchia, cum quindecim cognationis ſuæ Baronibus, & armatis viginti milibus tranſiuit mare Greciæ, & fauente ſibi Deo conquiſiuit Chriſtianitati per multa prælia pene omnes Terras, Regiones, & Inſulas, quas eſſe de poteſtate Grand Can prædixi, nec non & omnes, quæ ſunt de poteſtate Imperij huius Imperatoris Indiæ. Eratq; inter Barones vnus denominatus Ioannes filius Goudebucf, Regis Friſonum: qui dictus Ioannes Deo deuotus fuit, & dum licuit Eccleſiarum limina iniuit, vnde & Barones ei dabant quaſi per iocum Presbyter Ioannes vocabulum. Dum ergo Ogerus dictas regiones expugnatas diuideret in hys quindecim ſuis cognatis, &

Fabula de rebus geſtis Ogeri Ducis Daniæ, quales de Orlando, Guidone, Beuis. &c. Vnde Presbyter Ioannes, ſit dictus.

Digitized by Google

4000. Insule.

& quemlibet eorum in suo loco constitueret Regem, quatenus Christiana religio in illa Orbis superficie semper stabilis permaneret, tradidit isti Presbytero Ioanni superiorem Indiam, cum 4000. Insulis, Regionibus, & ipsum præfecit Imperatorem super reliquos cognatos, vt ei certa tributa impenderent, & in omnibus obedirent, atq; ex nunc omnes successores Indiæ sunt vocati Presbyter Ioannes, & vsq; in hodiernum tempus boni manserunt Christiani, & Religionis æmulatores, &c.

CHAP. VII.

The Voyage of NICOLO di CONTI a Venetian, to the Indies, Mangi, Cambalu and Quinsai, with some Obseruations of those places.

This is taken out of Ramusios discourse of this voyage.

NIcolo di Conti a Venetian, hauing trauelled quite thorow India, after fiue and twentie yeeres returned home; and because to saue his life he had made deny all of his Faith, hee went to the Pope (then Eugenius the Fourth, An. 1444.) being at Florence to obtayne absolution; who enioyned him in way of penance, truly to make Narration of his Voyage, and whole Peregrination to his Secretarie Poggius, who writ it in the Latine tongue. Ramusio sought for it in Venice and other Cities of Italie in vaine, and at last heard that it was translated into Portugall by the care of King Emanuel, An. 1500. a Copy whereof he procured from Lisbon, but so corrupt, that he doubted to publish it, which yet for want of better he did; and we out of him these Obseruations.

Nicolo di Conti a Venetian being a young man, then at Damasco, and hauing learned the Arabike Language, went with his merchandise in a Carauan of six hundred Merchants, with whom he trauelled into Arabia Petræa, and thence into Chaldæa, till he came to Eufrates. In the Desart-deuills. Deserts of Arabia, once about midnight they heard a great noyse, which they thought were the wilde Arabs comming to rob them, but saw a great multitude passe by neere their Tents without hurting them, which some of the Merchants said were Deuils which hanted these Deserts.

Baldac. From Baldac is eight dayes iourney to Balsera, and thence foure dayes to the Persian Gulfe, where the Sea ebbeth and floweth. After fiue dayes sayling therein, he came to Calcum, and after to Ormuz; thence to Calatia a Port of Persia of great traffick, where he remayned to learne the Persian tongue. Afterwards clothed in the habit of the Countrey (which hee vsed to doe in all his iourney) he went with certaine Moores and Persians, hauing sworne to be faithfull to each other, and sayled to Cambaia, and after to Pacamuria and Dely, where store of Ginger growes.

Ormua. Calatia.

Bisnagar. Thence they went farre into Sea, and came to Bisinagar sixtie miles about, at the foot of a high Mountayne; in which are one hundred thousand men fit for armes; they marry as many wiues as they will, which are burned with them when they die. The King is the mightiest King in India, and hath twelue thousand Women, foure thousand of which attend him on foot whither soeuer he goeth, and are busied in the seruice of his Kitchin; foure thousand others ride on Horses, or are carried in Litters; two thousand are to burne with him, which is holden a great honor. Pelagonga is subiect to him, eight dayes iourney thence and ten miles in circuit: from whence in twentie dayes by Land hee came to Pudisetania (leauing in the way Odeschiria, and Cenderghisia, where red Sanders grow) and thence went to Malepur where Saint Thomas is buried in a great and faire Church. The Inhabitants are Nestorians, which are Christians dispersed thorow all India, as Iewes amongst vs. And all this Prouince is called Malabar.

Pelagonga.

Nestorians dispersed thorow India.

Malabar.

Cinamon. At the end of that Country is Zeilam a famous Iland, two thousand miles about, where are Rubies, Saphires, Cats-eye stones; and store of good Cinamon; the Tree like a Willow but thicker, the boughs growing more in breadth then height, the leaues like those of the Bay Tree, but greater: the Barke of the boughs is best, that of the Trunke is not good: the fruit like Bayberries of which they make good Oile to anoint them. There is a Lake in which is a Citie of three miles circuit, gouerned by Bramines, which spend their liues in the studies of Philosophie, and are much giuen to Astrologie.

After that is a great Iland called Sumatra, which the Ancients called Taprobana, where hee stayed a yeere. There growes the best Pepper, the Tree like to Iuy. In a part of the Iland, called Batech, they eate mans flesh. Thence he sayled to Ternassari: and thence to the mouth of Ganges, and vp the streame (which is very great) to Cernouem, and to Maarazia; whence crossing ouer Land he came to Racha, and thence in seuenteene dayes to Aua fifteene miles about, where they are much giuen to spend the Time in drinking and fellowship both Men and Women. There are certaine old women which get their liuing by selling Bels of gold, siluer, brasse, of the bignesse of Nuts, which they put in mens yards betwixt the skin and flesh, when they are of age to vse Women, and in short time cure the place; and the men much please themselues to heare the sound of them as they goe. Here the Copy is defective.

Aua.

This Bell or Ball fashion is there still in vse.

Mangi

Digitized by Google

Mangi is full of Elephants of which the King nourisheth ten thousand: they serue him in the warre, and carrie Castles in which stand eight, ten, or twelue men with Lances, Bowes and Slings. They take them with a tame female Elephant, vsed to feed in a place encompassed with a wall with two gates to goe in and out; into which in the coupling season the male enters at one gate, and shee flees out at the other, many men attending with deuices to take him, both gates being shut; and with fasting, and accustoming other tame Elephants to him, tame him in few dayes.

Either this story is not true, or this Mangi is not China but Polos Mien, or some other place.

The men of this Countrey haue but one wife, and all both men and women paint or embroider their skinnes with Iron pennes, putting indelible tinctures thereunto. They worship Idols, yet when they rise in the morning, they turne to the East, and with hands ioyned, say, God in Trinitie keepe vs in his Law. This Countrey produceth Serpents as grosse as a man, sixe cubits long, without feet, which they eate for great dainties; as they doe also certaine red Ants. There is a beast headed like a Swine, tayled like an Oxe, with a horne in the forehead like an Vnicorne a cubit long, of the colour and stature of an Elephant; with whom hee continually fighteth. The horne is much esteemed against poyson. In the furtheft parts of this Countrey towards Cataio, are white and blacke Kine, some haired and tayled like Horses, some with haires like feathers of which they make Fannes.

Beyond Mangi is the greateft Prouince in the World, called Cataio, the Lord whereof is called the great Can which signifieth Emperour: and the chiefe Citie is called Cambalu, which is foure square and hath eight and twenty miles in circuit. In the midst thereof is a Fortresse, and in it a Palace for the King; and at euery of those foure corners is a Castle, each foure miles about, in which are Armouries of diuers sorts, and Engines for battery. From the Palace is a way on the wall to all those Castles, that if the people rebell he might betake himselfe thither. Beyond this Citie fifteene dayes iourney is Quinsai another great Citie, which within this little while hath beene new made by this King. It hath thirty miles compasse, and is more peopled then the former. In these two Cities it was told him that the Houses and Palaces are after the manner of Italie, and the men richer and wiser then in other places.

Cataio.

Note.

After he was gone from Ana, alongst the Riuer to the Sea in seuenteene dayes he arriued at Zaiton, a great Port, where he tooke Sea, and in ten dayes came to a great and populous Citie, called Pauconia, which is of twelue miles compasse where he stayed foure moneths. There are a few Vines, which runne vpon Trees, and they make no Wine of them. There grow Abrecockes, white Sanders, and Camphire, &c.

Zaiton.

Pauconia, perhaps Paquin.

I am loth to returne into India with this Author, whose defects and corruptions haue made him so little seruiceable, together with the changed names of places since his time. It is remarkable that hee sayth that the Indian Mariners sayled by the Starres Antartike, and not by the compasse; vsing certaine measures and rules in that Starre-obseruation. Hee also relateth the huge greatnesse and treble sheathing of their Ships. But of India, whereof all his Relations are, wee haue already giuen you better, that is more punctuall, methodicall, and credible Authors. Yet before we leaue him, let vs obserue what Æneas Syluius, or Pope Pius Secundus hath, cited out of him. Hee sayth, that hee sayled the Indian Sea a moneth beyond Ganges, and then came to the Riuer Ratha, which being sayled in sixe dayes, hee found a Citie called by the same name. And thence after seuenteene dayes passing desart Hills he came into champaine Countries; which hauing passed in a fortnight with great labour, hee found a Riuer greater then Ganges, called Dua: and hauing sayled therein a moneth, came to a famous Citie fifteene miles in circuit, named Dua, where the women are exceedingly libidinous, the men contented with one wife, The Prouince is called Macin, full of Elephants, ten thousand of which the King keepes for his warres, and is himselfe carried on a white Elephant, wearing a golden Chayne distinguished with gemmes, and hanging to his feet. The men and women raise themselues, &c. (as before) but of the Kine, he sayth, that the same Kine haue tayles long and hairy to the feet, the haires subtile like Feathers, of much esteeme, and vsed on the tops of Lances as Ensignes. These things hath this Nicholas (sayth Siluius*) of* Macin, noting without doubt, the Region Serica. For our age placeth the Easterne Scythians in Cathay. *That * of* Dua greater then Ganges, and that of ten thousand Elephants nourished by a King not knowne by fame, are hard to be beleeued: but longinquitie cannot easily be confuted.

No compasse; which yet in the next age was there in vse.

Æn. Syl. de 2. Asiæ parte c. 10.

Macinum: hereby appeares his Macin is about Siam or Pegu, &c.

* And yet how many things more incredible are now found true?

TO THE READER.

READER, I here present thee a piece of a Historie, so much as abuts on Tartaria, and China. Alhacen, a learned Mahumetan was the Authour; whether an exact Historian, euery where literally to be vnderstood; or whether in some part he be parabolicall, and presents a Tamerlane like Xenophons Cyrus, (in some things rather what he should haue beene, and what the Authour could say, then what he was) I vndertake not to determine. The Abbat of Mortimer takes it for a iust Storie, and so doth Master Knolls in his Turkish Historie. If it be an Historie partly parabolicall, yet doth the decorum exact of the Authour a verisimilitude euery where of actions and places (sufficient to procure our pardon, if not thankes) the veritie of a great part being euident in other Stories. It is true that some things seeme

Digitized by Google

ſeeme falſe for want of truth in our intelligence, rather then in themſelues. And ſo hath it fared with all (the ſubiect of this Booke) Tartarian and Chineſian affaires: of which we had as little knowledge as of Tamerlan, farther then terrors of Tartarian Armes, and ſome mens ſpeciall occaſions and trauels haue giuen vs light. Euen the Sunne riſeth in thoſe parts whiles it is not day-breake with vs, and hath attayned almoſt his Noon-point before we ſee him: and worthy wee are ſtill to abide in a blacke night of ignorance, if we welcome not what light we can get (if we cannot get what wee would) from ſo remote an East. Once; Tartarian affaires (as it happens in Conqueſts) were changeable, and their New Moone was quickly at the full; diuers chances and changes ſucceeding after Poles dayes to theſe; ſuch wealth whetting the Tartars to get and hold, and no leſſe the Chinois to recouer, the China State being vnquiet ſo long as the Tartar greatneſſe continued, and freed (for the moſt part) with their diminiſhing, and diuiſion into diuers Eſtates. As for theſe times of Tamerlan (if this Story be exact) it is like the Can held the North parts of China from Quinſay forward, with Cataio; and the King of China the reſt; then Nanquin being the Seat Royall, as ſince the expulſion of the Tartars Paquin. Or perhaps the Quinſay heere mentioned, is that which Conti hath in the former Page told vs, was lately built by the Can: and not that which Polo ſpeakes of; in Catay and not in China: which cleareth this doubt of the Cans reſidence and rule in China. To reconcile all doubts is for mee too hard a taske, becauſe Cataio and China are euen ſtill themſelues, and leaue their Surueyers perplexed, bounding the ſearch of the moſt curious in ſearching their iuſt bounds, how farre they are the ſame or differing; wherein our Ieſuites will more amuſe and amaze vs (where wee will cleare our ſelues as well as we can) when wee come to them. I haue premiſed Conti, though Tamerlane be a little Elder for his Religions ſake, and to recreate with a little Relation, before this longer Storie.

CHAP. VIII.

Extracts of ALHACEN his Arabike Hiſtorie of TAMERLAN, touching his Martiall Trauels, done into French by IEAN DV BEC, Abbat of Mortimer.

§. I.

TAMERLANS Birth and Perſon, his Expedition againſt the Muſcouite; his Marriage with the Cans daughter; his ouerthrowing of CALIX.

The Hiſtory of Tamerlan famous amongſt the Turkes and Arabians.

SVndry Hiſtories doe attribute, as a great want vnto the happie fortune of Tamerlan, not to haue a Writer in his dayes, which might haue left in writing his Hiſtorie vnto poſteritie. But without any cauſe did they moane him, inſomuch as his Hiſtorie is very famous amongſt the Turkes, and Arabians; his Conqueſts very largely diſcourſed, and many of his worthy and notable ſayings collected, with an infinite number of Noble deeds left vnto the memoriall of poſteritie. Very true it is, that he had not an Homer, but a great and worthie perſon, learned as well in naturall Philoſophie, as in Aſtrologie, who was in the time of this Prince, a companion and familiar of his Conqueſts, named Alhacen, an Arabian by birth, and of Mahomets Religion. This Authour then being fallen into my hands, in my Voyage into the Eaſt Countrey, I cauſed the ſame to be interpreted vnto mee by an Arabian, who did ſpeake Frank (as they terme it) that is to ſay, Italian, and ſome time I ſpent, in aſſociating my ſelfe ſo with this man, who commended greatly vnto me the eloquence and grauitie of this Authour, wondering at his digreſſions, and entring againe into his matter ſo well to the purpoſe. It grieued mee much that I had not the perfection of this Language, to be a helpe vnto the richer of this Hiſtorie, for to deliuer it vnto my Nation with ſome grace: but I tooke thereof as much as I could in his Language, which was corrupted, as is the Franke Tongue (ſo they terme it) which is a kinde of Italian, mingled with Slauon, Greeke, and Spaniſh Tongues very common at Conſtantinople, with the Arabian and Turkiſh Tongues: ſo as I could not gather but onely the trueth thereof, and not the drifts and grauitie of the Declaration, wherein the Authour had collected it for poſteritie (and as he ſaid) by the commandement of the Prince, who was a louer of learning, and excellent in the knowledge of Aſtrologie and Diuinitie, as the cuſtome of thoſe Nations is to ioyne them ordinarily together, ſtudying vpon the vertue of names, and of the turning of letters, euen in their placing, writing them vnderneath Starres, whereof they make ſentences, by meanes whereof they wrought miraculouſly in the things of Nature. This is that Zoroaſtrien and Bactrien Science, that of Balaam, and ſome others in my opinion, which hath ſucceeded vnto ſo many Alhacen.

The Franke Tongue amongſt the Turkes.

Yee often haue reade that Franke in the Eaſt, euer ſince the Frankes taking Ieruſalem ſignifies all the Weſt of Europe.

Tamerlan his learning.

The Tartarians ſtrange kinde of Aſtrologie.

Arabian,

Digitized by Google

Arabian Astrologians. Now then, this Prince was endued with such knowledge, as made him admired of the people where he commanded, who are for the most part great wonderers, insomuch as this caused him to be accounted a Prince accompanied with the Diuine vertue, considering the iustice he vsed in all his actions. This hath proceeded euen so farre that some Italians haue written foolish things thereof, as of certaine kinds of Tents which he caused to be pitched, when he besieged any Citie; one white, signifying peace, it yeelding vnto his mercy; another red, signifying cruelty to follow; and the third blacke, signifying mourning to ensue. But I finde not this in our Author, and I beleeue them to be fables.

I will now declare vnto you with my Arabian, who this great Prince Tamerlan was. Hee was then of the bloud of the Tartarian Emperours, and his father Og had for his portion the Countrey of Sachetay, whereof hee was Lord. This Countrey lying betweene the North and the East, is the antient Countrey of Parthia, vpon the Coast of the Zogdians, and the chiefest Citie of his estate was Samercand situated vpon the Riuer of Iffarle. Some of our Historiographers would needs haue him to be the sonne of a shepheard; but this haue they said, not knowing at all the custome of their Countrey, where the principall reuenue of the Kings and Nobles consisteth in Cattell, despising Gold and Siluer, but making great reckoning of such riches, wherein they abound in all sorts: this is the occasion wherefore some call them Shepheards, and say also that this Prince descended from them. So his Father Og was Prince of * Achetay, abounding in such kinde of wealth. And being come vnto the age of fifteene yeeres, his father being already old, deliuered vp vnto him the gouernment of his Kingdome, with the commandement ouer all his Men of warre. His father Og being giuen vnto peace, withdrew himselfe vnto a solitary life, for to serue God, and end the rest of his dayes in quiet. Hee gaue vnto his sonne Tamerlan (which signifieth Heauenly grace in their Tongue) two sufficient personages for to guide and assist him in the gouernment of his Estate: the one was called Odmar, and the other Aly, persons in great dignitie and credit with his father. Now this Prince was well instructed in the Arabian learning, and exercised himselfe much therein, and at such time as they thought him to be either in the Bathes, wherein they are very curious in that Countrey being their chiefest delicacies, he was in the contemplation and studie of heauenly things. This Prince had within his eyes such Diuine beautie, being full of such maiestie, that one could hardly indure the sight of them without closing of their eyes, and they which talked with him, and did often behold him, became dumbe, insomuch as he abstayned with a certaine modestie and comlinesse, to looke vpon him that discoursed vnto him. All the rest of his visage was curteous and well proportioned: he had but little haire on his chinne: hee did weare his haire long and curled, contrary to the custome of his Countrey, who are shaued on their heads, hauing the same alwaies couered, but he contrariwise was alwaies in a manner bare-headed, and said, his mother came of the race of Samson, for a marke whereof shee aduised me to honour long haire. This was the cause that made him respected of his men of Armes, and the most part of them did beleeue there was some vertue in those haires, or rather some fatall destinie, the which many did beleeue to be so; and verily they were of a dusky colour drawing toward a violet, the most beautifull that any eye could behold. His stature was of the middle sort, somewhat narrow in his shoulders, he had a faire leg and strong, the strength of his body was such as no body did surpasse, and often on the festiuall dayes he made triall of his strength with the most strong: and this he did with such grace and humanitie, that he whom he ouercame held himselfe therein most happie, although it bee a disgrace amongst the Tartarians to bee throwne to the ground in wrastling. Now, as he was Martiall, and desirous of glorie: the first warre that hee attempted was against the Moscouite, who came and spoyled a Citie which had put it selfe into his protection, and had entred also into his Countrey, and being retired, proclaymed open warre against him, gaue him battell neere to the Riuer Masch, although the Muscouite had a great Armie, which hee had gathered together long before. On the other side, the Prince determining to resist him, assembled all his forces, and those of his allyes. Now the Muscouite had very great forces, and men well trayned vp in the warres, hauing had alwaies warres with his neighbours, the King of Polonia, with whom hee had then friendship, and the ayde of ten thousand very good Horse. There were also with him many Hungarian Gentlemen, led by Vdecelaus a Hungarian Gentleman, who had brought with him more then eight thousand Horse; the opinion was, that hee had in his Armie fourscore thousand Horse, and a hundred thousand foot-men. Our Prince Tamerlan had in his Armie about six-score thousand Horse, and a hundred and fifty thousand men on foot, but not so skilfull in points of warre as those of the Moscouite: for our Estate had long enioyed peace, and our Souldiers were indeed trayned vp in discipline of warres, but not in the practice thereof. The order of Tamerlan was this; that is, he caused all his Armie to bee diuided into squadrons, each consisting of sixe thousand Horse, except his owne, which was of ten thousand, so as he made eighteene squadrons, his owne being reckoned which made nineteene. The Auant-guard was conducted by Odmar, who led nine squadrons, flanked with fortie thousand men on foot, diuided both on the right and left sides, who should shoot an infinite number of Arrowes. The Battell was conducted by Tamerlan, who led ten squadrons, his owne being therein

The off-spring and stocke of Tamerlan.

The flockes of the Tartarian Kings are their stockes, and the Tartars beasts are their best wealth.

* This name seems deriued from Sochtai, mentioned before in Haiton of whom these Tartars are still called Zagetai.

Tamerlans name: some make it to signifie Lame-leg by reason of that accident, falling from his Horse, Michou.

Tamerlan his studies and learning.

Maiestie in his eyes. The like is reported of Augustus.

The custome of the Tartarians.

Tamerlan wore long haire, and why.

The description of Tamerlan.

Our Authors tell vs he was lame, and that he was therefore so called.

Tamerlan his first warre against the Moscouite.

The Armie of the Moscouite.

The Armie of Tamerlan.

The order of Tamerlans Battell.

Digitized by Google

therein cloſed, and fiftie thouſand Foot-men, the beſt and choiceſt Souldiers of his whole Armie. Prince Thanais, a kinſman vnto the Prince, led the Arere-ward, with fortie thouſand Foot-men, and ſixe ſquadrons: hee had ſome three thouſand Horſe aduenturers, whom they call Oliagues, in their Tongue, the ſame which wee tearme, The forlorne hope.

The Moſcouite did not obſerue that order, but did fight by double Rankes with Lances, and there was a ſpace to helpe themſelues therein, and to breake them, notwithſtanding thoſe Nations doe not breake them at all, and they ſeemed to bee a greater number then wee, making a great noyſe. At the length multitude and skill ouercame the force and valour of the Moſcouites, the victory bending to the Parthians ſide, the which they did purſue hotly. Tamerlan was hurt on the fore-head vpon the ſide of the left eye, and had two Horſes ſlaine vnder him in the fight. Tamerlan employed himſelfe in giuing God thankes for this victory, after hee had purſued the enemy three leagues; the next day he reuiewed his Armie, and found that he had loſt of his ſide for his part betweene ſeuen and eight thouſand Horſe-men, and betweene three and foure thouſand Footmen. The Moſcouite loſt ſome ſeuen and twenty thouſand Foot-men, and betweene fifteene and ſixteene thouſand Horſe-men. This ſame day was Odmar the ſafegard of his Prince; but he loſt Hally, who was ſlaine by the blow of an Arrow. The Prince did ſlacke no time after ſo great a victory: He ſet forward, and came into the borders of the Moſcouite, whom he enforced to capitulations, that they ſhould become Tributaries of a hundred thouſand Duckets, and ſhould pay all the charges of the War, amounting vnto the ſumme of three hundred thouſand Duckets, he then would ſend backe againe all the Priſoners, and withdraw his Armie; that for ſecuritie hereof they ſhould giue him pledges, which ſhould be changed euery yeare; vnto all which they agreed. So was this Warre ended to his contentment, returning with glorie vnto the Prince his Father.

Now Tamerlan was receiued into all his Countries with much honour and triumph. The great Cham of Tartaria, Brother vnto his Father, ſent Preſents to gratifie him, making offer vnto him of his Daughter in Marriage, and that in marrying of her, hee would cauſe him to bee acknowledged as Emperour throughout all his Kingdomes, as his next heire, himſelfe being now old, and out of all hope to haue any more Children. Hereupon hee preſently tooke his Iourney towards him, being in the City of Quanicay, where he was receiued with all kind of Triumph and Magnificence; there did he ſhew himſelfe braue in all manner of gallant Showes and Combats, as well in jeſt as in earneſt. And as theſe Nations are full of vanitie, and deſirous to make ſhew of their ſtrength and agilitie, Tamerlan carryed away the Prize therein, whether it were in ſhooting neere with his Bow, or in changing Horſes in the middeſt of the courſes, or in breaking an Iron in running at the Quintaine; he made euery one wonder at his dexteritie, and was crowned the ſixt day after his comming thither with the joyfull conſent of all the Subiects of the Emperour his Vncle, and of all the Court. After that, he married the Emperours Daughter, deſiring firſt to bee crowned before the Marriage, to the intent that none ſhould thinke that the Crowne came vnto him by meanes of her, but by ſucceſſion, the Daughters not at all ſucceeding into Empires. It was alſo to aſſure his eſtate, and hauing remayned in that place by the ſpace of two moneths, hee returned from thence with his Wife to Samercand, in which Citie hee delighted greatly to remayne, becauſe the ſituation thereof was very faire; and for that the Citie is accompanied with a faire Riuer, which cauſeth great Traffique, and maketh it richer then any Citie within that Countrey. Odmar alone was called by him, at ſuch time as the great Cham his Vncle did impart vnto him his Affaires: and amongſt other matters, he propounded vnto him the Enterprize of China, promiſing him aſſiſtance and ayde, and giuing him to vnderſtand how neceſſarie it was to vndertake this Warre for the better aſſuring of his eſtate, ſeeing the King of China had much gone beyond his ancient bounds.

He had in his Court a Chriſtian whom he loued much, and euery one greatly reſpected, named Axalla, a Genuois by birth, brought vp from his youth about his perſon. This man principally did ſtirre him vp vnto great Enterprizes, and notwithſtanding his Religion, hee truſted him. Now he had all Religion in reuerence, ſo as it did worſhip one onely God, Creator of all things. He often ſaid, that the greatneſſe of Diuinitie conſiſted in the ſundry kindes of people which are vnder the Cope of Heauen, who ſerued the ſame diuerſly, nouriſhing it ſelfe with diuerſitie, as the nature was diuers where it had printed his Image, God remayning, notwithſtanding, one in his Eſſence, not receiuing therein any diuerſitie. This was the reaſon that mooued him to permit and grant the vſe of all Religions within the Countreyes of his obedience, alwayes prouided (as I ſaid before) that they worſhipped one onely God. He determined to make Warre with the King of China (who is called the Lord of the World, and Childe of the Sunne) which was no ſmall Enterprize. But before hee would begin the ſame, hee ſent vnto the ſaid King of China, for to demand right for ſome Countreyes (which they call Hordus) abiding places, which this Prince of China had vſurped long before, and euen the paſſages of a Riuer called Tachij, which is beyond his limits, which are Walls which are betweene the Kingdomes of the great Cham, and of our Tamerlan, builded of purpoſe by this King of China, to defend him from the Roades of the Tartarians, and forces of our Prince, ſo as this was begun with the aduice of the great Quanicay, if not Quinſay.

The Tartarian Exerciſes.

Tamerlan his Marriage with the great Chãs Daughter.

The ſeituation of the Citie of Samercand.

This may bee prooued in a Pagan and Infidell, but not in a Chriſtian Prince.

Quiubique eſt nuſquam eſt. He which is of all Religions, is of none.

Hordas, are the moueable populations of the Tartars.

A wall builded by the King of China.

Digitized by Google

great Cham, and for his benefit as well as for the Princes. Therefore to accompliſh his Enterprize, in the meane-time that he attended for the returne of his Embaſſadors, he cauſed his forces to come forwards from all parts, appointing vnto them for the place of meeting his owne at the Horda of Baſchir, where all his Armie aſſembled: and other ayding troupes of the great Cham in the Deſerts of Ergimul, at a certayne day, in which place he ſhould joyne with all his Army. The Army of the great Cham conſiſted of two hundred thouſand fighting men, wherein were all the braue men of his Court, who were accuſtomed vnto the Wars, the Emperour which then raigned, and was old, hauing greatly increaſed his limits, and conquered a great Countrey, ſo as theſe men were well trayned vp in the Wars, and accuſtomed vnto trauell and paines. Now then the Embaſſadors which were ſent, returne and informe the Prince of the will of (this proud King of the World) this King of China (who was named ſo) who puffed vp with vaine glorie, was aſtoniſhed how any durſt denounce Warre againſt him, making this proud Anſwere, That Tamerlan ſhould content himſelfe that hee had left him that which hee might haue taken from him, and that his Armes and Forces were of another ſort, then thoſe of whom he publiſhed the victorie, to bring thereby terrour vpon his Neighbours.

This was as the Chinois report built before, and perhaps now by age ruined, (which may be a cauſe Polo mentions them not) and by this King repayred 100. yeares after Polos time. In which ſpace alſo the Chinois, if this ſtory be true, had recouered part of their Empire conquered before by Cublai.

This Anſwere being heard, our Prince marched directly vnto the Army, and gaue order for the conueyance of victuals from all parts, ſent to haſten forward his Confederates, emparted the Anſwere vnto the Emperour by Embaſſadours diſpatched from him, cauſed the boldneſſe of the King of China to be publiſhed, to make manifeſt vnto all the World the juſtneſſe of his cauſe. Before his departure he went to take leaue of his Father, who endued with a ſingular and Fatherly affection, ſaid he ſhould neuer ſee him againe, and that he haſtened vnto his laſt reſt, and hauing made ſolemne Prayers ouer the Prince his Sonne for his proſperitie, kiſſing him a thouſand times, drew off his Imperiall Ring, and gaue it vnto him, not asking whether his Iourney tended: and calling Odmar, he bade him farewell, recommending his faithfulneſſe vnto his Son. Then he departed and drew towards Samarcand, where the Empreſſe his Wife remayned; whom he carryed with him as is the cuſtome of that Nation, and after he had (being Religious) viſited the Tombe of his Seruant Hally, hee cauſed his ſoule three dayes to bee prayed for, according to the Rites of his Law: whereupon he preſently departed, hauing taken order for the well gouerning of his Kingdome in his abſence, committing the charge thereof vnto Samay, a man well practiſed in Affaires, and he who had the charge of our Prince in his youth. So then he marched forward in the middeſt of his Army, which conſiſted but of fiftie thouſand Horſe, and one hundred thouſand men on foot, relying principally on the Forces of the great Cham his Vncle; who aboue all deſired this War: he did not forget to giue in charge, that the reſt of his Forces ſhould be readie vpon the firſt Commandement, as ſoone as he ſhould be ioyned with the forces of the great Cham, and marching forwards he had ſtayed by the way by reaſon of ſome diſtemperature which had ſurprized him through changing of the Ayre, as the Phyſicians affirmed. But yet, notwithſtanding, the forces which Catiles, Captayne of the Army of the great Cham conducted, went daily forwards. Now the newes was ſpred into an infinite number of places of his diſtemperature, yet did he not neglect to ſend vnto the great Cham, and often aduertize him of the eſtate of his health, to the end the ſame ſhould not cauſe any alteration, the which hee did fore-ſee by reaſon of his preferment vnto this Empire, by the great Cham his Vncle: and hee was in doubt of a certayne Lord named Calix, who was diſcontented therewith, and had not as yet neither gratified nor acknowledged him as all the other ſubiects had done.

Samay made Gouernour of Sachetay in Tamerlans abſence. Tamerlan his Armie marching againſt the King of China.

Now concerning his delay, it was by ſundry diuerſly interpreted; ſome ſaid that hee had bin aduertized of ſome vproare to be attempted, when he ſhould be farre ſeuered from thence, and had paſſed ouer the Mountaynes of Paſanſu, and that Calix ſtayed vpon nothing elſe, inſomuch as the Companies of the great Cham were gone forwards, euen beyond the Mountaynes, hauing paſſed the Riuer of Meau, and were encamped at Bouprou, the which Calix vnderſtanding, thought he ſhould haue the meanes to worke his enterprize. Thereupon hauing aſſembled great ſtore of his moſt faithfull followers, he tooke counſell with them, that this was the meanes to ouerthrow the purpoſes of Zachetay, who would reigne ouer, and bring them vnder his Empire: & that ſeeing their Prince had bin ſo badly minded as to do the ſame of his own mind without calling of them which had intereſt in that election, that now was the time to aſſure their libertie, which was in doubt to be loſt, & cauſed alſo a rumor to be ſpred of the ſicknes of this Prince, that the great Cham was old, the greateſt part of his forces, far ſeparated from him, forthwith diſpatching a Meſſenger vnto the great Cham their Prince, to aſſure him that they bent not their forces againſt him, but were his faithful and obedient ſubiects: but they armed themſelus, becauſe they would not be gouerned by the Parthians, their ancient enemies. Thus Calix thought greatly to trouble him, when he roſe in Armes againſt him, and did thinke that he had already aſſaulted the Wall which the King of China had made againſt the Tartarians. As ſoone then as the Prince was aduertized of the pretences of Calix thus diſcouered, hee marched one dayes Iourney forward, to the end he might approach vnto Calibes, and impart the ſame vnto him, what face ſoeuer Calibes ſet on the matter, he harkened what would become of Calix, that hee might likewiſe make ſome commotion: there was left with him to command ouer the Parthians, the

The conſpiracie of Calix againſt Tamerlan in his abſence.

Prince

Digitized by Google

Prince of Thanais, without whom he could not doe any thing, for that hee led the Auantgard. Thus was the Army deuided in two parts; the King of China remayning long before he was aduertized of all this, and thought he had all the forces both of the Tartarians and Parthians vpon his Armes, so as this was of no small importance to fauour our Affaires: for Tamerlan had especially giuen commandement, that the passages which are easily gotten, might as diligently bee kept, to the end that the King of China should not be aduertized of the tumult. Then Tamerlan set forward his Auantgard vnder the leading of Odmar: hee promised vnto himselfe shortly a happie successe in his Affaires, and aduertized the Emperour of all: but it came vnto him when he was sicke. And surely it was high time for Tamerlan to march forward, or else all had beene reuolted, so leauing his Footmen, he made great Iournies. Now during the time that he had bin aduertized, and made his abode to consult, which was the space of two moneths: Calix hauing presented himselfe with a hundred thousand fighting men before Cambalu, a very great Citie, and chiefe of the Prouince of Catayo, the Inhabitants thereof came out to meete him, and did also receiue him with all the joy that might be.

Good directions from Tamerlan.

Now whilst our Army marched towards Caindu, and from thence vnto Calatia, whether our Army went easily, looking for the Forces of his Natiue Countrey of Zachetay, to come and joyne with him: he did not yet forget to send forward daily of our Souldiers towards Cambalu, so as they supposed all our Forces to be on the necke of them already, which gaue great terrour vnto the people. Calix perceiuing that the people did repent, hee thought best to withdraw himselfe out of Cambalu, determining to oppose himselfe against Tamerlan, and sent for his power from all places, putting all vpon the euent and hazard of a battell. He drew out of Cambalu full fiftie thousand men, as well Burgesses, as Souldiers which were there in Garrison, hauing wonne all the Captaynes which the old Emperour had placed there in Garrison, amounting to the number of thirty thousand men, and him that commanded ouer them, who had consented vnto the reuolt of this great Citie. To make it short, hauing assembled all his Forces, he had fourescore thousand Horse, and a hundred thousand Footmen, the which hee had gathered together from all parts. Our Army then marched with all diligence, in such sort as certayne Scouts which were two thousand Horse, had newes of the Armie of Calix, the which came forwards directly towards vs, whereof they caused the Emperour to be certified speedily, who sent thither two thousand Horses more, to the end they should keepe the passage of a Riuer called Brore, by the which our victuals were conueyed vnto the Armie, and also for to winne alwayes time, the Prince knowing right well that the motions of Ciuill Warres bee furious at the beginning, and that it is the best to resist them slowly, drawing them alwayes out at length if it be possible. For the people in the end acknowledging their faults, their meanes and money fayling them, and oftentimes victuals also. On the contrary side in a Royall Army none of all this doth happen, where all things are fauourable, and the Souldiers well disciplined, obedience and order beeing wisely obserued. Then had the Emperour the guiding of his owne purposes, for he had receiued commandement from the Emperour his Vncle, to hazard therein all for all, deliuering vp into his hands the safegard of his life and estate, that he might thereby end his dayes in peace, willing him likewise to punish this arrogant fellow and his partakers. By this meanes came forces from all parts vnto Tamerlan; but on the contrary part, the Enemies Army was then in his chiefest force, and began to feele the want of victuals.

Brore.

Calix was of the age of fortie, he was a Captayne renowmed with the great Cham, hee was one of the chiefest in dignitie and place, and they had alwayes respected him within Tartarie as a person most worthy of the Empire, if the glory of Tamerlan, and his reputation had not so far excelled. The Armies began to be viewed the one of the other about eight of the clock in the morning, where there were very many skirmishes before they came vnto the mayne Battayle (according to the fights of these Nations) it was a great Plaine wherein they met at that time, with like aduantage on eyther part; Odmar led the Auantgard, wherein there was fortie thousand Horse, and threescore thousand Foot-men; he made three Squadrons, whereof hee set forward one before him that began the Battayle. Tamerlan marched in the same order, but his Squadrons were much stronger, the Foot-men both of the Auantgard and of the Battayle were on the right and left wings. Tamerlan had drawne out sixe thousand Parthian Horse, and two thousand Tartarian for the Arier-ward, and had committed the charge thereof vnto a faithfull Seruant of his called Axalla (a Genuois borne) a man of great judgement, his vnderstanding being good and quicke, and a Captayne in great estimation amongst the Souldiers, although hee worshipped God in another manner then wee did, and was a Christian. And hee had many of them with him, whom he caused to come from the Georgians, and from Pont Euxin, who fought with great agilitie; this day did hee shew his great fidelitie and courage vnto his Prince. Calix on the other-side, who was a well spoken man, was encouraging his Souldiers to fauour his fortune, and the libertie of his Nation: he had diuided his troupes into three mayne Battayles onely, his Foot-men vpon the right hand, his owne person was in the middest of the mayne Battayle, with many Foot-men which compassed him round about (according as wee vse to fight.)

Axalla.

Many Christians.

In

In the end, valiantly fighting, he fell into Axallas hands, which with one voyce he proclaymed through all his Campe, which ouerthrew the courage of all his Souldiers. Hee was kept vntill the next day, and was iudged by all the Counsell worthy of punishment: whereupon Tamerlan caused his head to bee smitten off, the which hee sent to bee presented vnto the Inhabitants of Cambalu: he caused the like to be done vnto all the chiefe Leaders, not for crueltie, but for necessitie, knowing very well, that the meanes to cut off the Foot of ciuill warres, is to punish the Heads of the same, for they be Hydras which grow vp too fast.

Calix taken prisoner by Axalla.

Calix beheaded.

§. II.

Cataio, Cambalu; TAMERLANS expedition into China, entring the Wall, conquering the King, and disposing of the Countrey, and returne to Cataio.

AFter this the Armie marched into the Kingdome of Cataio, a Countrey rich in grasse, and in all kinds of pastures, abounding with great quantitie of Beasts, and People, which knew not what warre meant. The Prince gaue commandement that these people should not be accounted as Enemies, but his good Subjects, that hee would vse all the Cities well, as Cangi, Sochgi, Gonza, Tagni, Togara, Congu, which had reuolted, and were come to sue for pardon at his hands, in humbling themselues before him; the which he granted vnto them, enjoyning them onely to prouide sufficient victuals for his Armie: which was of no small importance for the appeasing of others, who had put all their hope in extremitie, which is in losing their owne liues to make others doe the like: and especially the Inhabitants of Cambalu had taken this resolution: but being informed of the Emperours clemency, changed their opinions. In the meane while our Armie daily approched, and at such time as we came neerest, the more did the feare of all the Citie increase, insomuch as the Prince was aduertised daily from those which fauoured his side, of all things within the Citie, and he was assured that euery one determined to obey the Conqueror, and to doe what soeuer he commanded. The which being knowne vnto the Prince, he left all his Armie at Gonsa, and himselfe went directly vnto the Citie of Cambalu, where all things were made quiet, by the meanes of thirtie thousand Souldiers, being the ordinarie Garrison, whom hee caused to enter thereinto before him, and two houres after entred into the same himselfe, being receiued with great magnificence, not yeelding as yet to pronounce the word of pardon, referring all vnto the Emperour, and to the ordinarie course of Iustice. He stayed for the returne of one of his Fauourites, whom he had sent vnto the Emperour, to carry him newes of the victorie, and of the death of Calix, and that the chiefe of this Faction remayned prisoners with him; also to know what Iustice the Emperour would appoint to bee inflicted on those Citizens, which were the first beginners of the reuolt of this Citie: for the Prince being desirous to be esteemed mercifull, and to win loue within this great Citie, would not execute iustice of himselfe, nor in his owne name, but by the Emperour his Vncle, whom hee did gratifie herein, leauing the authoritie wholly vnto himselfe; and by this meanes hee was not esteemed cruell. Thus the Prince after hee had remayned here eight dayes, departed. He was not many dayes iourney from the Citie before he receiued tydings, how the great Cham his Vncle, willed that iustice should bee executed on them which were the first Mouers of this reuolt; the which was executed accordingly in the name of the Emperour, and by his speciall ministers; in such sort, that as the people accused the crueltie of the Emperour, they commended the mercy of Tamerlan. Thus was this warre brought vnto an end, to the great honour and reputation of Tamerlan.

The ordinarie Garrison at Cambalu of 30000. Souldiers.

As soone as our Prince was returned vnto his Army where hee found Odmar, who there attended his comming, hee was receiued of his Souldiers, and with a loud voyce called by all his Captaines and Souldiers; Most great Emperour and most victorious, as they are accustomed to doe amongst the Tartarians. The Prince after he had long discoursed with his Captaines both of the beautie and greatnesse of the Citie of Cambalu, hee arriued at his Tent, where after hee had declared vnto Odmar in what sort all things had passed at Cambalu: he asked his aduice, whether hee should goe and visit the Emperour his Vncle. Odmar well perceiued that the Prince desired it, and called vnto his remembrance the honour which hee had receiued when hee was at Quinzai, and that hee would haue beene very willing to spend the Winter with the Empresse, staying for the Spring for to returne vnto the enterprise of China, with a long speech dissuaded him. The Emperour answered him, that he had euer knowne his fidelitie and loue, and that the cause of his sadnesse was, for that hee did not find in himselfe abilitie to recompence the same: and that when he thought to giue himselfe some ease, then was the time hee must in stead of the delicacies and pleasures of Quinzay, make the Desarts of Cipribit the resting place from the trauailes of his new victorie: that it was ended, and his purposes determined: I haue also heard the Prince say, that Odmar did not speake vnto him like an earthly but diuine man, and that he verily beleeued that God by his meanes did call him back from some misse-hap which would haue light vpon him, to make his glorie increase the more. Now, the rumour was alreadie Tamerlan welcommed vnto his Armie, with new and strange acclamation.

Digitized by Google

spread ouer all, that the Princes determination was to goe and visit the Emperour his Vncle, the which tickled euery man with desire to returne into his Countrey, hoping to inioy the sweetnesse of his natiue soyle. When as commandement was giuen for a generall reuiew of the whole Armie: where the Emperour spake vnto his Souldiers in this manner: Wee haue begunne (my faithfull Souldiers) an enterprise to goe and assault the King of China, who hath of late repulsed euen beyond the Mountaynes the Tartarian name; but wee were hindered to our great griefe by the foolish-rashnesse of Calix, and were driuen to turne the bridle for to punish him, wherein you haue all assisted mee. It grieueth mee that I cannot as well bragge of the fresh spoyles of a stranger, as I may vaunt (by the meanes of your weapons) of those our vnfaithfull Citizens; and in times past with your owne selues making tryall of my first Armes against the boldnesse of the fierce Moscouite, although for this last ciuill victorie I am further indebted vnto you, for your greater endeuour, and the hazarding of your persons being much greater, so were they our owne people, who would not acknowledge vs, whereof I cannot speake without shedding of teares, desiring rather to burie such a victorie, what glorie and honour soeuer wee haue gotten thereby. Neither doe I recount these things vnto you, but for to manifest that I forget not your faithfulnesse, and the great trauaile you haue endured with mee. Wee must not therefore bee wearie, but must turne our weapons against those which thinke that wee are greatly troubled, whereas wee are victorious. Wee haue left our Companions, who haue temporized to heare the euent and successe of our affaires, all our munitions bee there; wee must in that place (my Souldiers and friendly Followers) passe ouer the rest of Winter; our Companions looke for vs. The Enemie is secure and looketh not for vs at this season of the yeere: for hee perceiueth that our Armie which is there is not sufficient for offence, but onely for defence. You shall receiue double pay, the better to furnish you against the iniurie of cold: and as wee shall bee clothed with double garments, I hope wee shall bee also apparelled with double glorie. Let vs march on merrily, I my selfe will goe with you, and bee companion of your glorie. After hee had thus spoken vnto his Souldiers, they all cryed One God in Heauen, and one Emperour on the Earth: and bowing downe all their heads in token of humilitie, they shewed how agreeable they were to obey that which he commanded.

Tamerlan his Oration vnto his Souldiers vpon his going forward against the King of China.

The crie of the Souldiers vpon the Emperours Oration.

Thus euery one returned into his Tent, where they abode yet eight dayes more. The Prince sent back againe Zamai vnto Sachetay with some fiue and twentie thousand Horse, and fiftie thousand Foot-men, for the safetie of his estate in those parts. Thus after prayers were said, all the Armie being assembled together in the presence of the Prince (according to the custome of our Emperours) our Armie began to march forward. Hee forgat not likewise to dispatch one vnto the Emperour his Vncle, to giue him vnderstanding of all this resolution, the which hee very well liked of. The Prince by the same Messenger did beseech him, to send vnto him in the Spring of the yeere some fiftie thousand men to repayre his Armie, and certayne money also for the payment of his men of Warre, which hee granted him. Moreouer, the conducting of good store of warlike munition, and plentie of victuals for to renew ours: for this warre was principally enterprised for the profit and greatnesse of the Tartarians, and for the importance which the losse of the Lordships of Paquin and Quinsa was vnto them, whereby the King of China had greatly strengthened and assured his estate, in so much as hee might at his pleasure enter vpon the Tartarians, and the Tartarians could not enterprise against him without great forces, for that hee had caused a wall to bee made betweene the spaces of the Mountaynes, which was fortie leagues long, so as they were defended hereby from the ordinarie incursions, the which continually did greatly enrich them, because they brought much Cattell through the same, wherein the Countrey of China doth greatly abound, by reason it is situated in a temperate ayre, being neither too hot nor cold. This was the cause that made the Emperour his Vncle to desire this warre; whom our Prince, according to his dutie, would to the vttermost of his power gratifie, as also his new Subiects.

A wall builded by the King of China, fortie leagues long. Perhaps this was not the ancient wall, of which the Chinois write, but some other betwixt Cathay and those parts of Mangi which the Tartars hauing gotten in Polos dayes, might soone after lose, and the Chinois recouer; the Tartarians stil holding Quinsay & some other parts of Mangi or China, as this storie (if wholly true) seemes to import.

So wee began to march, and in thirtie eight dayes wee arriued at Cipribie, the Armie hauing found great discommodities: there had wee newes of Calibes, who was very glad to vnderstand how the affaires had passed: hee came to visit the Prince, who shewed vnto him a very good countenance, and gaue him particular vnderstanding of his determination, and vnderstood at large of Calibes, all that had passed within the Kingdome of China. The next day the Prince mounted on horse-back, and came vnto Pazanfou, where the forces commanded by Calibes were at that present, the which had often fought with and tryed the forces of the Chinois: but found them much inferiour vnto their owne. The Emperour caused a generall reuiew to bee made of all the forces which were vnder Calibes, and after he beheld the countenances of these Souldiers throughout all their rankes, he caused them to muster, and to receiue money, euery one crying, God saue the victorious and inuincible Emperour, according to their custome.

The Prince of Thanais gayneth a Lord of the Mountains to doe the Emperor seruice. Vaucheſu.

The Prince of Thanais (who commanded the Armie in Calibes absence, going to meet Tamerlan) with great diligence had marked the Wall, and the places by the which hee might enter by force, and sent many Spyes into the Countrey of China, by certayne little wayes that were within the Mountaynes, who aduertised him of all. Hee had also gayned through his courtesie a Lord of the same Mountaynes (called the Lord of Vaucheſu) who ruled a great Countrey, with whom whom he had ſo well profited, that he made him deſirous of a new Maſter, and to ſubmit himſelfe vnto the Emperour, receiuing daily great diſcommoditie by the warres which the Tartarians and Chinois made: ſo as he comming to viſit the Prince of Thanais, hee aſſured him of his deſire to doe the Prince ſeruice, and to helpe him in the warre againſt the Chinois, the which the Prince of Thanais had wiſely concealed from Calibes. But as ſoone as the Prince was arriued, he imparted the ſame vnto him; the which made Tamerlan deſirous to haue ſome ſpeech with him, ſo that as ſoone as the Prince had receiued commandement from the Emperour, hee ſent vnto Vaucheſu to aduertiſe him of the Princes arriuall, and of the commandement which hee had receiued: whereof the other was very glad, and hauing appointed a day, the Prince tooke his iourney (without ſtirring of the Armie) into the campe of the Prince of Thanais, which was neere vnto the Riuer of Languenne, whither hee had cauſed this foreſaid Lord to come, who met him there.

Then the Prince after he had heaped vpon him gifts of faire Horſes, rich Furres, and other rare things, he willed him to vtter that which he had to ſay vnto him. This Lord ſpake then in this manner: Know my Lord, that it is but loſſe of time to thinke; that with your Armes you ſhould bee able to force the Wall, which the Chinois haue built againſt the incurſions of your ſubiects, the Defendants haue too much aduantage therein. I doubt not of your Souldiers ſtoutneſſe and of their courage, I know you haue conquered many Nations with them, and that whatſoeuer you command them, they will die or doe the ſame. I know you haue great and wiſe Captaines with you, that your Perſon is onely of all the World worthy to command them: but all this will bee but in vaine againſt the Wall of the Chinois, where I aſſure you there are fiftie thouſand men to keepe it, and you cannot ſtay there ſo ſhort a time, but there will come thither fiftie thouſand more, led by the Xianxi who hath ſuch a commandement. The King of China will himſelfe march forward alſo, who will giue you battell with two hundred thouſand Horſe and as many Footmen. After you haue fought, I beleeue that the fortune and valour of your men may obtayne the victorie, the which will coſt you deare: but for to ſhew vnto you how much the reputation and mildneſſe of your men hath bound mee vnto them, I will ſhew you a meanes by the which you may cauſe fiftie thouſand men to enter into the Kingdome of China, whom I my ſelfe will conduct; and they ſhall bee on them which keepe the Wall, in a manner as ſoone as they ſhall perceiue it. In the meane time you ſhall cauſe your men to goe vnto a place that I will tell you, which will bee very diſcommodious vnto the Chinois, by reaſon of a Mountayne ouer againſt them, which you muſt cauſe them to winne: for I aſſure my ſelfe, that when they ſhall perceiue your Souldiers to bee paſſed, they will loſe their courage, and you may eaſily winne the paſſage for to fauour thoſe men of yours which ſhall bee paſſed ouer with mee. And for to ſhew vnto you the affection and fidelitie of that I ſpeake, I will deliuer into your hands an onely Sonne I haue, and two little Daughters with my Wife: I haue alſo one Brother, who I am aſſured will follow mee to doe you ſeruice. The Prince hauing heard this Lord ſpeake, receiued great ioy thereof, hoping that his affaires ſhould happily ſucceede, and this hee kept very ſecret, for euen the Prince of Thanais knew not the meanes that this Lord had, ſeeing there was onely preſent the Prince and an Interpreter, and the Prince after hee had thus ſpoken vnto him, gratifying him with all hee could poſſibly, this Lord retyred himſelfe, accompanyed with the Prince of Thanais, who conducted him backe againe with all the honour that might bee. So the Emperour returned from thence into his quarter, and the next day after hee had imparted the whole vnto Odmar, and heard Calibes concerning that which hee had learned of the departing of the King of China, and of his preparation, which was great. This enterpriſe ſeeming hard vnto him, after due reuerence yeelded vnto the Prince, hee ſpake vnto him in this manner: Know my Lord, that I am your Slaue for to obey you: but ſeeing you require mee to giue you an account of all that I know of the eſtate of the Kingdome of China; for that I haue remayned theſe ſix moneths vpon the borders by your commandement, to hinder them from paſſing the ſame, whereby they might hurt your enterpriſes, I can affirme vnto you, that the King of China, who raigneth at this preſent, is of great reputation, and hath increaſed the limits of his Kingdome more then any of his Predeceſſors. His ſtrength conſiſteth in this Wall oppoſed againſt vs, the which hee hath cauſed to bee made by reaſon of the ordinarie roades of our Nation. I am of opinion, that there bee betweene fiftie and threeſcore thouſand men at the guard of that Wall, men for the moſt part trayned vp in the Garriſons of the King of China, and his beſt Souldiers, and I know no good meanes to force this Wall without great hazard and much loſſe of your men. I haue vnderſtood, that towards the Lake Hogeen you may finde more eaſie entrance into the Kingdome: after euery one had declared his opinion, hee ſaid; that hee hoped the great God (the Vnitie, of whom hee would maintayne againſt ſuch Idolaters) and his iuſt right ſhould anſwere the reaſons which doe contradict his purpoſe, and the valiant arme of his Souldiers ſhall quite ouerthrow whatſoeuer oppoſeth it ſelfe againſt the ſame; and concealed from his Souldiers that which hee held as aſſured to execute it, to the end, the honour of a happy conducting might be aſcribed vnto him onely.

The ſpeech of the Mountaine Lord vnto Tamerlan.

Calibes Oration vnto Prince Tamerlan.

The Lake Hogeen.

Now, our Prince hauing ſatisfied euery one of the Kings and Lords that did accompany him, hee appointed the meeting place for his Armie to bee at a certayne place, where hee meant to choose fiftie thousand fighting men, and deliuer them vnto the commandement of the Prince of Thanais, vnto whom he ioyned the Lord Axalla a Gennois (for that hee knew him to bee discreete) for to accompanie him, commanding him to giue credite vnto him, for his experience and fidelitie. The day appointed being come, the Lord with his brother came to the Emperor, hauing viewed the place againe, and found it to bee forceable and fit to passe, assuring the Prince once againe of the happy successe of their enterprise, and the Prince beeing assembled with them to conferre together, resolued in the end, that his person with all the army should approach vnto the walles directly ouer against Quaguifou, in which meane space the fiftie thousand men should march forwards vnto the place appointed, and where they were assured to passe, conducted by the Chinois Lord, vnder the charge of the Prince of Thanais and Axalla. The Emperour hauing not failed to deliuer vnto them the best souldiers of his armie, and hauing set downe the order by them to bee obserued, hee willed that the Lord Axalla should leade twentie thousand of them, and should march the first, the rest led by the Prince of Thanais, and that euery one should haue one of those Lords to guide them, that by their meanes the enterprise might bee more safely directed. So hauing marched ten leagues, they arriued at the passage, the which was won, not finding any man there to resist them: and hauing taken a light repast, they beganne to march forward other ten leagues which yet remained, where the Chinois were, who suspected no such thing, hauing onely an eye vnto them which marched for to force their walles, assuring themselues to haue the mastry, considering their aduantage.

Digitized by Google

Quaguifou.

Fiftie thousand men sent into China by a secret passage, vnder the leading of the Prince of Thanais and Axalla.

A secret way found into China, by the conduct of the mountaine Lord.

But it fell out much otherwise, for euen at the very same time the Chinois did perceiue the Princes armie to approach vnto their wall, as soone did they discry Axalla with twenty thousand men, who aduanced forward being followed by the Prince of Thanais with thirtie thousand souldiers chosen out of the whole army, who without any communication set vpon the Chinois, which came presently vnto them, hauing left a certaine number of their Campe for the guard of the wall: but they were presently won by the footmen led this day by Odmar, who passed ouer so as the Chinois were cut off betweene our Armies. When Axalla began the battaile, he ouerthrew them in a manner all, the Prince of Thanais not hazarding himself therein: there was great riches gotten this day, the King of China his Cousin (whom he called King) was taken prisoner: There was a great quantity of gold amongst them, as well on their armes as on their horse and furniture: they shewed no great stoutnesse.

Axalla ouerthrew the Chinois that kept the wall of partition.

The newes heereof being come vnto the King of China, who at that present time was at Quantou, brought vnto him great astonishment, for that hee iudged it a thing that could not possibly come to passe, you might haue seene euery one filled with fright, teares and cries, bewailing the losse of their friends. The King gathering together souldiers from all parts (as the custome is of these people) caused all the Priestes and such as had the charge of holy things to come vnto him, and after exhortations vsed, he (as their head) commanded them to offer sacrifice vnto their Gods, of whom the Sunne is the principall commanding in heauen (whom they hold opinion to bee the chiefest cause of their being, accounting it immortall and impassible, mouing it selfe onely for the benefit of liuing creatures) this did hee command to bee obserued through out all his Cities, and the second thing was, that euery one able to beare armes should mount on horsebacke, and come vnto the King at Paquinfou, whither hee doubted that we would go, because it was one of the neerest townes vpon the borders.

Quantiou.

The custome of the Chinois in religion.

I haue forgotten to declare that this Lord who had the charge to conduct fiftie thousand men vnto the frontiers, at such time as they which were there had need thereof, was soone in a readinesse, and came to oppose himselfe against the Princes Armie which entred, and being skilfull in the wayes of the country, troubled much the Armie: for a great number of his men were on horsebacke. The Prince determined to beate downe all the wals, the better to assure his returne, as also all the fortresses which were there vpon all the passages, all of them hauing yeelded themselues after his victorie, shewing himselfe very courteous vnto the people of these mountaines, he gaue vnto this Lord a small portion of land, wherein there be seuen or eight good townes, Archij, Ymulij, Faliquien, Fulij, Cohensen, Qualij, Pulij Quiaulu, who came and deliuered vp their keyes vnto him, being neighbours vnto this Lord, and gaue him the gouernment of the frontier prouince of Xianxij, shewing himselfe to be a Prince of his word, and acknowledging the notable seruices the which this Lord had done him. He referred the honouring of his brother vntill he had meanes to doe the same: the Prince had receiued newes, how that the King of China assembled his forces & marched forwards, and that he was there in his owne person, & that he strengthened also his Cities which are sufficiently fortified; and vpon these doubts hee thought good to haue the aduice of his Captaines, and after sundry opinions, his resolution was, to leaue nothing behind him, and to assault some famous Citie, and take it, by meanes whereof he may nourish his Armie, and secondarily call the enemie vnto battell. The which the conqueror should alwaies seeke, & the defender the latest he can hazard the same. For that it is a very doubtfull thing to commit themselues vnto a battell, his dutie being rather to delay, vndermining the conqueror by lengt hand by wearinesse, and light skirmishes, then to fight in open field.

The Emperour wonne the wals of China.

The mountain Lord rewarded with great gouernment.

A good aduertisement for Generals.

Digitized by Google

It was concluded, and the aduice of euery one was, to conquer the Countrey by little and little, ſo as their enterpriſe was to draw directly vnto Paguinfou, which as it was a great Citie, and one of the chiefeſt, ſo is it alſo ſtrongly fortified, and well repleniſhed with people.

Then he diſpatched Odmar with fourteene thouſand Horſe, to aduance forward and ſummon the ſame, as for to hinder victuals from being conuayed thereinto out of the champaine Countrey: to the end that the Cattell remayning in the fields, ſhould be a meanes to maintayne and nouriſh his Armie. I had forgotten to tell you, that for the acknowledging of the Lord Axalla his ſeruices, the Prince had made him Captaine generall of all his Foot-men, which was one of the principall honours of the Armie. Hee cauſed the ſaid Lord Axalla to march after Odmar, with all the Foot-men, which was very neere a hundred and fifty thouſand men, well trayned vp in the warres, and good expert fighters. He marched himſelfe immediatly after with all his Horſemen, Artilleries, Engines, and other munitions belonging vnto warre, directly vnto Paguinfou. Odmar did ride twentie French leagues this day, ſo as he arriued there contrary to their expectation, looking rather for the King then for the Enemie, and hauing taken much Cattell, wherewith the Countrey greatly aboundeth, he pitched his Tents, leauing the Citie betweene him and vs, and ſtayed for his footmen, who marched forwards in the meane ſpace, ſending continually vnto the warre, for to wearie the Enemie. This endured three or foure dayes, vntill our footmen led by this braue Chriſtian Gennois, ſhewed themſelues in the Playne of Paguinfou. Then the Citie was ſummoned to yeeld obedience vnto the Emperour, or elſe they ſhould receiue the Law of the Conquerour. They made anſwere, that they were determined to liue and die in the ſeruice of their Prince.

Axalla made Captaine generall of all the foot-men.

Paguinfou beſieged.

Now you muſt vnderſtand that it was fortie yeeres, or thereabouts, ſince the Father of the King which raigneth at this preſent ouer the Chinois, had conquered it from the Empire of the Tartarians, and hauing driuen out all the Inhabitants, they had planted therein new Colonies, ſo thorowly, that there were but few of the firſt remembrance, but only they of the flat Countrey, and ſmall walled Townes, who came from all parts and brought their Keyes, moſt willingly ſubmitting themſelues vnto the obedience of the Prince: ſo as there was great abundance of victuals within our Armie: and if wee had beene within our owne Countrey, there could not haue come greater ſtore; a thing which made our Prince hope for a happie ſucceſſe, there being no other difficulty which for the moſt part can ouerthrow a great Armie as ours was, and withdraw them from their enterpriſe. And thus the Citie of Paguinfou is beſieged, and our footmen camped round about within an Arrowes ſhot of the walls. They within the Citie did vſe great endeuour for their defence, and our Prince omitted nothing for their offence.

Note theſe changes of ſtate betwixt the Tartars and Chinois.

Axalla hauing viewed a great and ſtrong Suburbe, which was in length almoſt halfe a league, ſuppoſed that thoſe of the Citie kept no watch there: that this muſt needs bee, for that they would not make him obſtinate; he had a determination to winne it in the night, and hauing imparted it vnto the Prince, vpon the firſt watch all his men were ready, all of them hauing made prouiſion of Ladders, and of ſuch things as are neceſſary for winning thereof with hand-blowes, and hauing aſſaulted it on ſundry parts, after the fight had continued two houres, Axalla remayned the Conquerour, and cut in pieces eight thouſand men at the leaſt which were within the ſame: the ſpoyle was great, there were many of Axalla his men ſlayne of one ſide, which was that by the which they doubted to be aſſaulted. But on the other ſide, by the which it was taken, there was ſcarce any one ſlayne. The taking of this Suburbe did greatly aſtoniſh thoſe of the Citie, who had marked the luſtineſſe of our men, and beganne to enter into doubt of their ſafety, which vnto this day they accounted as moſt aſſured. Now you muſt vnderſtand that the ſituation of the Citie was of hard acceſſe, being ſeated vpon a Playne, the which was enuironed round about with Mountaines, one of them onely approaching the Citie, which ouerlooked it on front vpon the North ſide, where was a Valley by the which they paſſed, and there did runne a Riuer: on this ſide was the Suburbe ſituated which had been taken, ſo as the meanes to ſuccour the Citie was ſtopped, our Souldiers keeping the paſſages of theſe Mountaines, the which were in the old time the borders of the Kingdome: for Paguinfou was once gouerned by the Tartarians, which kept it for a defence againſt the Chinois, but had loſt the ſame, and theſe Mountaines were the limits of China againſt the aforeſaid Tartarians, who gouerned Paguinfou at that time, ſo as theſe Mountaines were of hard acceſſe, and there remayned no other way but on the ſide of the Suburbe, the which a Riuer compaſſeth about, running all along the ſide of a bordering Mountaine, vpon the which wee cauſed many bridges to be built, for to haue thereby a way for to ſuccour our Souldiers, which kept the paſſages of the Mountaines on the enemies ſide.

A great Suburbe wonne by Axalla in the night.

The ſituation of the Citie of Paguinfou.

In this meane time the King of Chinaes Armie approached which was very great, as they brought vs word daily, the Prince determining to goe in perſon and meet with the Enemie, accompanied with his principall Horſ-men, and to leaue the greateſt part of his Foot-men at the ſiege, whereunto he had a great deſire, omitting nothing that might wearie the beſieged, who defended themſelues couragiouſly. So the Prince beganne to batter, cauſing his Engines to approach; as Rammes, and other munitions: inſomuch as the Citie was aſſaulted on two ſides very couragiously. In the end through the valour of Axalla, who gaue an assault with twenty thousand of his best Souldiers, he wonne the wall, and lodged there, the Prince hauing so commanded him to doe, to stop the heat of the Souldiers from going any further. Now the Princes purpose was to compound for the Citie, and not to force it, for two reasons. The first was, for that he feared, the Citie being great and rich, that when the Souldiers should sacke it, the Enemie who was but thirty leagues from thence, should come vpon them, and by this meanes his Armie should be found in disorder, also rich Souldiers neuer serue well: The other was, for that hee would draw out of that Citie which was rich and wealthy, those commodities which were necessary for the sure accomplishing of his enterprise, seeing it was necessary to haue such a Citie for to make a Store-house of necessary things for the Armie. Thus although the wall was won, the Enemies wanted not courage yet to defend themselues valiantly, looking for ayde according to the newes they had receiued, that the Kings Armie marched forward. Whilest these things were in doing, one of our Engines shooting a bullet, slue the Gouernour, whereupon they did resolue for to yeeld themselues vnto the Princes mercy, sauing their liues, and the Souldiers enioying their horse and weapons. The conditions were agreed vpon, and there came out of the Citie eighteene thousand Souldiers, the Inhabitants remayning in a manner all: there were therein thirtie thousand Souldiers at the beginning: the siege continued two moneths. The honour of taking the Citie and the happy successe therein was attributed vnto Axalla, to whom was giuen the gouernment of the Citie with the Countrey already conquered. But hee beseeched the Prince that it would please him to bestow it vpon some other, and for himselfe hee reserued the hope of his Master, wherein hee should haue part. This answere did greatly content the Prince, for hee greatly desired the seruice of Axalla. Vpon his refusall this charge was bestowed vpon the Prince of Thanais, with the Title of Vice-roy. Now, as I haue already told you, our Prince after hee had giuen such order as was necessary, and aduertised his friends in all parts, and aboue all the Emperour, he marched forward, hauing contented his Souldiers, and made a generall muster of his Armie, as well of the horse as footmen, the which hee found to be diminished of ten thousand men onely. Now, our Prince after he had solemnely called vpon the Immortall, Inuincible, and Incomprehensible God, and spent one whole day in prayer, wee enterprised to goe on forward, and to goe directly vnto the Enemie, who was at Sintchu, with all his owne forces, and of all his Allies. As soone as he receiued newes that our Armie was passed ouer the Riuer of Chulifu, the King of China marched directly vnto vs with great magnificence: there was nothing to bee seene but gold and precious stones in his Armie: hee himselfe was commonly in a Chariot, wherein there was such a quantitie of gold and rich stones, that euery part was full of Diamonds, Rubies, and Pearles.

The ſiege of Paguinfou.

Digitized by Google

The King of China was of the age of three and thirtie yeeres, who for the most part had beene brought vp in pleasures, and not in militarie exercises, nor vnder the bloudie ensigne of Mars; loden with Iron, boysterous and furious, not with gold, precious stones, and with such kinde of riches: so as he was very insolent in threatnings, brauadoes, and in defying vnto the battaile. He often said that we had surprised him, and had not warned him to prepare himselfe, and that we had stricken him without speaking any word: for this is the custome of the people in those parts, to doe in this manner. Hee had two or three Kings also with him, his Neighbours and Allies, who marched with the same preparation. The rumour of these riches gaue great courage to the Souldiers, for they were couetous of iust gayne, as is that gotten by a battaile. So both our Armies went forward each to approch the other, and there was a Citie yeelded vnto the Prince called Tunicheuoy, the which helped our Armie greatly. The next day, to the end wee might giue occasion vnto the Enemie for to approch neerer, we sent to summon, and at the same time to take possession of the Citie of Pannihu, the which in aduancing forward wee left a little behinde vs. The King of China had put many men thereinto, and it was a Citie sufficiently well fortified: from Tiaucheuoy to Paguinuhu there were ten leagues. He aduanced his Armie within a league of the Citie Tiaucheuoy, about noone the next day they had more certaine aduertisement of the Enemies comming. The Prince commanded his Armie to take the place for the battaile, which he had chosen in his iudgement with most aduantage, and hauing set downe vnto Odmar the order he would haue to be obserued, he desired to see the comming of this Armie: so sending before him fiue or six thousand Horse as Scouts, hee aduanced forward, and Calibes with him. After he had seene this great confused Armie which continually came forward, hee commanded Calibes to retyre himselfe as soone as they drew neere vnto him, and bring vnto him this great cloud, the which hee hoped soone to disperse. So the Prince returned backe vnto his men for to assure them of the battaile: hee caused all his footmen to bee placed all along by a great Mountayne, so as they had but one head for to doubt. And hee planted great store of Artillerie for the guard of his footmen. I am of opinion, that the Prince had about six-score thousand footmen, whereof many were armed after the Christian manner, and all they were commanded by sundrie Captaines; but all obeyed Axalla, who commanded them as Generall.

Our Horse-men were in battaile array in a great leuell Playne, hauing the Footmen on the left

The Citie of Paguinfou yeelded vnto Tamerlan vpon the death of their Gouernour.

Axallas choise.

Tamerlan his kind of godlinesse.

The King of China his magnificence.

The custome of the Chinois.

Tunicheuoy.

Pannihu.

Tiaucheuoy.

The order of the Princes battaile against the King of China.

Digitized by Google

left hand, and on the right was the comming of the Enemie, so as vpon the least disfauour that might happen, hee would retyre to bee assisted by his footmen. Wee had foure score thousand horse: Calibes with the Scythians were in the Auantguard, and had the commandement of thirtie thousand horse, who should receiue him at such time as he did draw on the Enemie, as he was commanded. It was diuided into three troupes, each one consisting of ten thousand. Odmar had also thirtie thousand horse who should assist him. The Prince remayned in the Arier-ward at the one of the wings of his footmen, which held one of his principall forces: his purpose was to suffer the threescore and six thousand horse to maintayne the fight against the Barbarians; being led by two good Captaines, and if any of them remayned, the Emperor hoped after of them to haue a good market, by causing his footmen to march forward, and himselfe with whom there abode twentie thousand of the best horse, which were sufficient without hazarding his Person for to giue a new battaile, if so be that any disfauour should happen vnto them: for hee had vnderstood that this was the custome of the Kings of China, to enclose themselues within the middest of their Chariots with their footmen, and not to hazard themselues but vpon the extremitie. So the Enemie fayled nothing at all to march directly vnto Calibes, and all the Armie marched after following of him and setting vpon him, and hee euen as the Scythians are alwayes accustomed to doe, with his six thousand horse in retyring gaue many charges, killing some of them, and they likewise killing some of his men. It was a beautifull sight to see this great Armie march, for it seemed to bee twise as great as ours, therein being an infinite number of armed Chariots, wherein he put his principall trust against the furie of our Souldiers; so many gildings of gold and siluer as well in the trappings of their Horses, as on their Armour, that it glittered, and was of vs all much admired. The Prince who with a troupe of horse did see the Armie march after Calibes, commended greatly the manner of casting their men out of the rankes, for to compell this troupe vnto fight, and did see this Armie come in good order, and he tryed with his eye to note the place where the Kings Person was, hauing neere him the Chinois Lord to instruct him, who knew well their manner of fighting. Now, they had neither Auantguard nor battaile, but onely an Arier-ward commanded by the King, and inclosed (as I haue said) with his Chariots: the which being shewed vnto him by this Lord, the Prince turned himselfe vnto vs, and in our language said: Yet must wee this day disperse this cloud here so gilded, and the King of China and my selfe must make a partition thereof.

The beautie and richnesse of the King of Chinas Armie.

Tamerlan his speech of the King of China.

Now, hauing seene the Enemie sufficiently aduanced, and iudging that he had had seene them march a good league, he thought it not conuenient to suffer them for to take breath; nor for to put themselues againe into their order; he sent vnto Calibes for to will him to set forward the fight, and that if those whom he had led with him should be weary, they should come vnto him; but it was not in Calibes power to haue this commandement ouer them. For as soone as they heard this word of fighting vttered, they required the first charge, with a young Lord, who commanded ouer them, called Zioctabanes, who made appeare vnto the Chinois to what end their flight was, charging very stiffely vpon the foremost of the Enemies, the which was an occasion to begin the first fight. And I assure you, there could not be seene a more furious thing, nor any for to fight with more desire to manifest the valour of his Nation, and for to procure honour vnto his Prince. Now, this endured a long houre before the Chinois had ouerthrowne Calibes. The Prince did see all patiently, saying alwayes, that the great multitude how confused soeuer it were, would carry it away from the order and valour of his Souldiers: you could not yet perceiue any alteration in the Princes countenance, Aduersitie and Prosperitie were so indifferent vnto him. His thirty thousand Horse were all Scythians, who obserue not the same order the Parthians doe. Now, before the Prince retyred with his men, hee did see the first charge giuen. Calibes being wounded, retyred himselfe neere vnto the Prince, hauing with him two thousand horse ioyned together againe, and many more ioyning themselues together neere vnto the Prince, who commanded that they should cure Calibes, viewing the place of his wound, hee caused him to bee conducted behind his footmen, and the other which were hurt with him also. Now, Calibes was not able to pierce through this Armie, being beaten back; but Odmar with almost all the Parthian horse-men, did handle them more roughly, for hee ranne cleane thorow them, and returned by one of the right wings of the Armie, where hee fought most valiantly, and hauing beaten them back euen within the Kings Chariots, he thought that he should not doe wisely to goe about to breake such forces.

The battaile betweene the King of China and Tamerlan.

The King of China comming forward, and the horse-men which had beene broken by Odmar, ioyning themselues together for his ayde, Odmar onely remayning in the battaile sent vnto the Prince for the footmen, and for to set forward the Artillerie, and that hee should assure himselfe of the victorie. The Prince, who had already set forward, kept aloofe off, and sent vnto him fiftie thousand footmen, with a part of the Artillery, giuing charge thereof vnto Axalla, who forthwith set forward, hauing commandement to set vpon the Chariots, and to make an entrance: he set forward the Artillery before him, the which did greatly astonish the enemies: for the Gouernours of the horses, belonging to the Kings Chariots, could not hold them; it made also a great spoyle. As soone as he perceiued this disorder, hee set forward, and came came to hand-blowes, there were a hundred and fiftie thousand men, as yet about the Kings person. Axalla full of courage fought so valiantly, that they neuer beheld any doe more brauely. Odmar during this fight charged againe the Horsemen, who were retyred vnto the Kings ayde, whom he put to flight. Then the Prince aduanced forward with the rest of his Foot-men, gaue ayde vnto Axalla, and came euen vnto the person of the King of China, who was as yet enclosed within a second ranke of Chariots with thirty or forty thousand men: and after hee had fought two or three houres, the Horse-men assisting the Foot-men, and they principally whom the Prince had reserued, the King remayned wounded within the power of the Prince, the battaile being wonne, and all the Enemies Campe forced; the fight endured eight houres, and it was euen night, which saued the liues of many of the Enemies. There were slaine two Kings the Allyes of the King of China, and one taken Prisoner: there was inestimable riches gotten, as well in golden Vessell as precious stones, and the most rich and faire Chariots that could be seene.

Digitized by Google

The King of China wounded and taken Prisoner.

Tamerlans victory ouer the King of China.

The Prince would not see the captiued King vntill the next day, beeing mounted on Horse-backe, and passing through the Campe of the Battayle for to stay the slaughter, and to ioyne together againe his men, to the end the accustomed watch might bee kept, whereof hee gaue the charge vnto Axalla; to whom he gaue likewise commandement to keepe the King of China within the middest of his Souldiers, hauing bin already dressed of a wound he had receiued in his right arme. It was a strange thing to behold the Enemies Weapons, and the diuersitie of streamers wherewith they were decked, the which seemed vnto vs afar off as beautifull, as the diuersity of colours plentifull. But to say the truth, the multitude was great which this King had, notwithstanding there was much difference betweene their valour and ours: and it is reported, that hee had ranged in Battayle this very day three hundred and fifty thousand men, whereof there were an hundred and fiftie thousand Horse-men, the rest on foot: the greatest part of them were rude and barbarous people, which suffered themselues to bee slaine one vpon another, not marking their aduantage, nor hauing any Warlike knowledge, as our men haue: there were slaine of the Enemies some threescore thousand. Now the next day after the buriall of the dead, the Prince hauing giuen thankes vnto God for his victorie, caused the wounded to bee cured, and amongst the others Calibes, who by reason of the vntemperateness of the Ayre, rather then by the blow of the wound he had receiued, found himselfe very ill, yet would he not omit his dutie, to command alwayes his Auant-gard, the which was a great pleasure vnto the Prince, for he alone had Commandement ouer the Emperours Forces, beeing a Scythian, and greatly beloued of his Nation.

Pannihu.

The Prince dispatched away thirty thousand Horse in the pursuit of one of the King of Chinas Brothers, who was fled away, hauing ioyned together againe some twelue or fifteene thousand Horse. The Prince sent to summon Pannihu, the which did yeeld it selfe vnto him: whereupon our Army approached neere vnto it, for to aduance our selues the further into the Countrey. Now I forget to declare how the Prince hauing the next day caused his Tents to bee pitched most stately, and his Guards ordered according to his greatnesse, the principall of his Army being also neere his person: for all the night hee had remayned continually on Horse-backe, vntill about two of the clocke, when as they brought him a Tart and his water, for hee neuer dranke Wine; and lay downe on a Carpet where hee passed the rest of the night. I was neere vnto him and neuer left him: but I neuer heard any vaunting or boasting to proceed out of his mouth. Then hee sent a commandement vnto Axalla to bring vnto him the imprisoned King: who beeing come, the Emperour issued out of his Tents, and went to receiue him. This King of China came with a very proud and haughtie countenance, and like a couragious man, approaching neere vnto the Emperour, hee demanded of Axalla by an Interpreter, which was the Emperour, and being shewed him, hee spake fiercely vnto him after this manner: The Gods whom I worship, being prouoked against my Nation and people, and conspired against my good fortune, haue made mee at this day thy Prisoner: but forasmuch, as it is reported ouer all the World, that Tamerlan maketh warre for the honour of his Nation: thou shouldest be contented that thou hast wonne it this glory, that the Lord of the World, the Child of the Sunne, is in thy power, to receiue such Law as it shall please thee to prescribe him. This hee said in a braue manner, and without any other humbling of himselfe. The Emperour on the other-side hauing saluted him very courteously, led him into his Tent.

Tam. dranke no Wine.

The comming of the King of China prisoner vnto the Emperour Tamerlan.

He is surely a great Prince, and which hath had two hundred famous Cities within his Kingdome. There be many Mynes of Gold and Siluer, much Muske, and also of an Herbe which the Christians call Rhubarbe. There bee in like manner within the Kingdome of China fifteene very large Prouinces, the which haue Gouernours. It is reported that hee hath threescore and tenne Kings wearing Crownes, Tributaries vnto him. We call this Region China, the which they in their Language name Tame, and the people Tangis, the which we call Chinois. This Kingdome doth abound in fish, and in great numbers of wild-fowle, by reason of the great abundance of running waters which doe ouerflow the Countrey, the which is reasonable temperate: they abound greatly in Silkes, and the meanest are apparelled therewith, hauing small quantitie of 200. Cities. A description of China. Rhubarbe.

Tame, or Tamin and Tangius.

Wooll

Wooll, and not vſing the ſame: they haue much Cotton and Linnen in ſtead thereof. The men doe weare their haire long, the women combe them: they haue as many Wiues as they are able to maintayne. Next vnto the King, there is a Gouernour Generall whom they call Tutan, the which was the Brother vnto the impriſoned King. The Prince hauing aſſembled his counſell, to to the end he might be aduiſed how he ſhould vſe his Priſoners and the reſt of the Victory: hee receiued newes by Odmar, how that the Kings Brother was arriued at Quanton, the which hee had fortified, and that great ſtore of forces did ioyne themſelues vnto him. This was the cauſe that the Prince hauing ſomewhat reſted his forces, commanded two thouſand Parthian Horſe to conuey the Priſoners vnto Paguinfou, and from thence after they had made abode there, to paſſe ouer the Mountaynes, and to remayne at Burda (a Citie of olde time faithfull vnto the Emperours of Schytia) and there to keepe them faithfully. The purpoſe and reſolution of the Prince was, that it behooued to aſſault Quanton, and to ſhut vp, if it were poſſible, the Kings Brother within the ſame, being one of the principall ſeates belonging vnto the King of China, and a Citie greatly peopled and ſtrong: it was forty leagues from the place where the battayle was fought. But Odmar being aduanced thither, would not retyre before he had expreſſe Commandement from the Prince, who hauing ſent thither, pitched his Tents round about the ſaid Citie: hauing ſummoned many ſmall Cities, the which yeelded themſelues wholly vnto the Princes mercy, making great lamentation for their King taken. Notwithſtanding, the gentleneſſe vſed by the Conquerour made them to take all their loſſes with patience: and becauſe it was alſo reported, that he had vſed the King moſt friendly, and all the Priſoners: the Kings Brother had ſent Embaſſadours to obtayne leaue for to know of the Kings health, and for to ſee him, the which the Prince did willingly ſuffer, to the end this other ſhould not declare himſelfe King, who would haue brought him more trouble then the other. He attended for the euent of Quanton, and had his eye vpon the ſucceſſe of this ſiege. Now the Kings Brother hauing receiued newes of the Affaires of the beſieged, he determined eyther to ſuccour it, or to fight a Battle, and came ſtraight vnto Porchio, and made a bridge of Boats, whereof there be great ſtore in theſe ſame Countreyes.

Quanton.

Burda.

Porchio.

Now being enformed when the halfe part were paſſed, which was fiftie thouſand men good, Odmar finding them in very ill order, and nothing at all aduertiſed of the Enemies nearneſſe, gaue the charge, and vtterly ouerthrew them: there remayned dead vpon the ground ſome fiftie thouſand men, but it was not without great fight, ſtrengthened with the fauour of water, and a great Mariſh wherein they were encamped. Notwithſtanding, our Foot-men hauing wonne the banke of the Riuer, beganne alſo to winne the Boats, and to ſeuer them by the meanes of a great Boat, the which we with diligence cauſed to runne downe beeing full of artificiall fire, ſo as at the ſame very time that they which were within the Boate did draw neere, they retyred out of the ſame, hauing firſt kindled the fire within the Boate, the which with a great force ruſhed againſt the Bridge of Boats and ouerthrew it, and where it was reſiſted did burne. This did greatly aſtoniſh them that were paſſed, to ſee their returne cut off. The Kings Brother was not yet paſſed vnto the other-ſide of the water, and he which firſt had gone ouer was the King of Cauchina, who was ſlayne at the firſt charge, fighting very valiantly, in the fore-front. The Kings Brother did ſee his men ſlayne and drowned, and could not remedie the ſame. This ſecond ouerthrow was of no ſmall importance, although it was but the third part of the Kings Brothers Army, and that there remayned vnto him as yet a hundred thouſand fighting men: but there was no great hope that he durſt preſent himſelfe before our Army. The newes hereof being reported at Quantiouſou, they deſired to make tryall of the Emperours clemency. Axalla diſpatched one of his faithfull friends of his Countrey vnto the Prince, to carry vnto him theſe good newes: which was more welcome vnto the Prince, then the ouerthrow he had giuen vnto the Enemy, and agreed vnto all that Axalla demanded, referring all vnto his ſufficiencie and fidelitie. The Kings Brother hauing ſent to demand ſafety for to treate, the Prince granted ſo much vnto them, for ſuch as would come vnto him.

Odmar ſet vpon the Kings Brother at the paſſing of a Riuer, and ſlue fifty thouſand of his men. A ſtratagem.

In this meane-time Quantouſou yeelded it ſelfe into the hands of Axalla, who cauſed the Garriſon to come out of the ſame, receiued the Inhabitants into the Princes protection, and they which would might remayne therein vnarmed: and he entred thereinto with the joy of all the Inhabitants, who did determine to receiue the Emperour into the ſame with all the magnificence that might be. He cauſed thirty thouſand men of War to enter thereinto; vnto whom was money deliuered for to maintayne them there, vntill ſuch time as all the Foot-men ſhould receiue pay for three monethes due vnto them, whereof the Inhabitants of Quantouſou did furniſh the Prince, to the ſumme of eight hundred thouſand Tentins, the which do amount vnto foure hundred and fifty thouſand crownes or therabout. The Prince at this preſent ſent me vnto Axalla, whom I found feaſting of his Captaines and ſouldiers, ſtaying for the commandement that I brought vnto him, the which was to remaine within Quantouſou, and to cauſe all his footmen to ſet forward directly vnto him, the which was done by the Prince, to the end it ſhould ſtrike a greater terror into the minds of the enemies, who ſeeing all his footmen arriued, he ſuppoſed they wold nothing doubt (Quantouſou being taken) but that he would march forward, inſomuch

as

Digitized by Google

as he hoped this would greatly aduance his Affaires, considering the estate they were in. I returned from Quantoufou vnto the Emperour, hauing seene a beautifull and great Citie well fortified, and wonderfully peopled, and round about it there was a fruitfull Countrey.

Thus the Embassadors being arriued, who were of the Kings chiefest Vassals, Tamerlan receiued them with all humanitie, causing his greatnesse to appeare vnto them; and therewithall the agilitie of his Horsemen, to make them see with their eyes, that it would be the destruction of the Chinois name, if he proceeded any further. So hauing saluted the Emperour with all reuerence, they vttered their Embassage vnto him, which was that the Kings Brother had sent them vnto him to treat for two causes: the one, was for the liberty of their King, the other, for preseruation of their Countrey. The Prince hauing heard them, answered them, that they had reason to trust vnto his mildnesse, and seeing at this present, they desired it, he would yeeld thereunto. Thereupon the Prince rose vp, and caused to be said vnto them, that they should deliuer their offers in writing, and that present answere should bee made thereunto. Thus went they out of the Princes presence with great joy, and as it were assured of Peace, and to recouer their former prosperities. The conditions which they offered, were to leaue Paguinfou, and all the Countrey beyond it, with all the Fortresses of the Mountaynes; that they would pay all the charges of his Army, since the day of answere made vnto his Embassadors; that they would giue two Millions of Gold, for their King. This being presented vnto the Lord, hee made answere thereunto, which was; that he would keepe that which hee had conquered within the Countrey, which was his owne justly, seeing his armes had giuen it vnto him; that hee would haue the Riuer where he was now encamped to be his Frontier, stretched vnto Hochioy, Tahancezng, Cauchio, Lulun, euen vnto Peschio bordering vpon the Sea; that the King of China should pay vnto him yearely three hundred thousand Crownes, the which should bee deliuered at Paguinfou, for acknowledgement of submission vnto the Empire, as well for his Successors as himselfe; that they should pay fiue hundred thousand Crownes in ready money for the charge of the Army; that the King of China should be deliuered, and all the Chinois Prisoners should pay ransom vnto particular men that took them, except those which carryed the name of Kings, who should pay one hundred thousand Crownes for peace with his Armes: that no Chinois should bee kept as slaue, nor sold for such hereafter, beeing vnder the Princes obedience, that Traffique and Entercourse of Merchants should be free betweene both the Nations; that the King of China should deliuer his Brother as Prisoner, and two Kings named, with twelue principall men of the Countrey for assurance of the peace. They accepted of such conditions of peace as pleased the Conquerour, hoping that time would bring againe vnto them their ancient liberty, and that for a time it behooued them to beare with patience the yoke of their bondage. Now the Prince had sent two thousand Horse, to fetch the King of China, to the end that being at liberty, he might sweare to the peace solemnly, the which he hauing performed at Quantoufou, whither the Prince caused him for to come, he brought with him vnto Paguin, all the pledges, and amongst the rest, the Kings eldest Sonne, and his Brother. The King beeing departed for to performe his promise, according to the Treaty by him confirmed, he was receiued, and as it were worshipped within his Countrey, with all the joy that might be.

An Embassage from the King of Chinas Brother vnto Tamerlan, to treat for peace, and the Kings deliuerance.

Conditions agreed vpon betweene Tamerlan and the Chinois.

In the meane-time the Emperour, after hee had prouided for the assurance of his new conquest, he left Odmar there to gouerne them, and gaue vnto him an estate of thirty thousand Horse and fifty thousand Foot-men, to furnish all the Fortresses and strong places, the Prince hauing led with him many of the new conquered people, desiring to haue them for to dwell within his Countrey, and to send other Colonies in their places, to assure himselfe the better of the lightnesse of this people, hauing noted them to bee inclined vnto Nouelties. Hee gaue in charge vnto Odmar to make his principall abode at Quantoufou, and to fortifie well the passage: and also commanded a Fortresse to be made at Dermio, the better to strengthen his Borders: and after he had left him all things necessary, he recommended vnto him the seruices of that Lord, who had manifested vnto him his great affection. The Emperour hauing well tryed his faithfulnesse in his Affaires as they fell out, he carryed with him a Brother of his, vnto whom he gaue great gifts within Sachetay.

Odmar left Gouernour of China for Tamerlan.

Then we turned our faces straight vnto Cambalu, hauing aduertized the Great Cham of the happy successe of our Affaires. The Prince remayned in deed King of China, holding in his possession, two of the faireſt and greateſt Cities of all the whole Countrey, hauing an hundred good leagues thereof vnto himselfe, and many lesser Cities, hauing extended his Borders vnto a Riuer, by which he might goe vnto the Enemy, but they could not come vnto him without passing ouer the same: hauing good meanes to keepe it and with aduantage. Now the Prince desired aboue all that the Idols which were within his Conquest, should be beaten downe, and commanded the worship of one God, establishing the same after the forme of his owne Countrey, for he made account that in short time all would bee reduced vnto our customes. Our Army wherein was much sickneſſe, began to march, and on the third day hauing newes of forces which came towards vs, the Prince sent them a Commandement not to come any further forward, and that they should march straight vnto Cambalu, where the Prince did suppose to finde the Emperour his his Vncle, who had set forward towards that place to haue the good hap for to see him, being determined to receiue him at Cambalu with magnificence and triumphs, as hee well deserued.

Now I will declare by the way, how Odmar being seuered from vs, all the Princes fauour was turned vnto Axalla, vnto whom hee committed the whole charge of his Armie, insomuch as Axalla although he was alwaies in great reputation, notwithstanding the same was much encreased by the Prince at Quantousou, where the Prince did trust him with the Armie, in so weighty an enterprise as that was, and the which he so gloriously atchieued: likewise the manner of entring into the Kingdome of China, the intelligences hee had: so as the report of his valour did flie throughout all the Empire. Calibes led the Auant-guard, and Axalla was in the battell neere vnto the Emperour, who gaue him the chiefest place, bestowing vpon him two hundred thousand crownes yeerely, for to maintayne his ordinary expences. After certaine dayes iourney, wee receiued newes of the Emperours arriuall at Cambalu, the Prince hauing left his Armie in a faire Countrey for to winter, where he dismissing many of our Souldiers, wee arriued within foure leagues of Cambalu, whither all the Princes of the Emperours Court, came for to receiue him, together with all the principall Inhabitants, for to gratifie our Prince for his happie Voyage. The Prince hauing receiued euery one, according to his wonted curtesie, retayning notwithstanding conuenient Maiestie, hee was beheld to the great contentment of all his Subiects. Hee had with him the Empresse his wife, who had not left him in his Voyage. The next day the Emperour did him so much honour, as to come and meet him, with all the magnificence that might bee. Hee gaue a present vnto the Emperour his Vncle, of all the richest Chariots, and faireſt Horses hee had wonne. The Emperour was very desirous to see his daughter: he caused her Chariot to bee vncouered, and caused her to enter into his: but the Prince remayned on Horse-backe, whom the eyes of all the people could not be satisfied with admiring. The Prince presented Calibes vnto the Emperour, and making a recitall of his faithfulnesse, and the endeauour of euery one, hee caused the Emperour to giue vnto him an hundred thousand crownes of encrease vnto his pension. Axalla was also presented vnto the Emperour, who being informed of his valour, hee was receiued with all the best fauours that might be, and he gaue vnto him of the reuenues belonging vnto the Empire, an hundred thousand Tartarins of gold in a Principalitie, that he might the better declare vnto him how much he esteemed of his fidelitie.

Tamerlan turned his fauour vnto Axalla.

200000. crownes of yeerley rent giuen vnto Axalla by Tamerlan.

The meeting betweene the great Cam and Tamerlan at the Citie of Cambalu in Cataio.

Axalla rewarded by the great Cam for his good seruice and faithfulnesse.

§. III.

The differences betwixt TAMERLAN and BAIAZET the Turke; his returne to Samercand, and expedition against BAIAZET; the battell, and victorie, his caging of BAIAZET, and making him his Foot-stoole.

THis ioy and pleasure continued with vs all the Winter, where the Prince hauing receiued aduertisement how Baiazet Emperour of the Turkes, had enterprised to ioyne the Empire of Greece vnto his owne, and fully determined to besiege Constantinople: the which he vnderstanding, and succour being required of him by the Greeke Emperour, he dispatched one towards Baiazet, for to declare vnto him his pleasure herein, and warned him on his behalfe, not to trouble the Emperour Paleologue who was his confederate. Now this motion came from Prince Axalla, who had wrought this league, being of kinne vnto Paleologue, and also thrust forward with desire to maintayne his Religion in Greece, where he was borne of the Genuois race. Whereunto being answered very proudly, by Baiazet vnto our Emperour, asking what he had to doe therewith, and that he should content himselfe, with enioying lawes vnto his Subiects, and not vnto others, seeing he was not borne his Subiect. This answer being made, Axalla procured to be very ill accepted of the Emperour, and in such sort, that he determined to hinder this enterprise of the Ottomans.

A message sent by Tamerlan vnto Baiazet.

The proud answer of Baiazet.

Now the Prince had obtayned of the Emperour his Vncle an hundred thousand Foot-men, and foureſcore thousand Horse, hoping to haue as many from Sachetay, besides the Lords who would accompanie him for to winne glorie, from whom he made account also of fifty thousand men more that they would bring vnto him, besides the other forces. Hee supposed that he had abilitie to deliuer the Empire of Greece from the bondage of the Ottomans. Thus the Prince departed, leauing the Empresse with the Emperour her father, for to serue him as a comfort of his age: it was not without a hard farewell of the Emperours part towards his Nephew; but more grieuous on the Princes part towards his wife, who had neuer left him since the time they were married: but nothing with-held our Prince, where there was either glorie, or meanes to encrease his reputation, and profit the Common-wealth: saying often, that he was borne to this end, and that he must take in these exercises his principall delights: for euery other thing wherein he did exercise himselfe was but borrowed, being appointed and called of God to punish the pride Heauy parting.

A notable saying of Tamerlan.

Digitized by Google

Tamerlan his dreame.

pride of Tyrants. Neither will I here omit a dreame, which our Prince had the night before hee departed from Cambalu, which was, that he did ſee as hee thought, a great multitude of reuerent men, who put forth their hands vnto him, requiring his ſuccour againſt the violence of certaine Tyrants, who did afflict them with ſundry kinds of torments: he ſaid, that he did neuer ſee more reuerent countenances, & that ſome of them were apparelled in white, and others in cloth of gold, ſome hauing as it were Crowns of gold vpon their heads, and it ſeemed vnto the Prince, that he gaue them his hand, and lift them very high. This dreame he recited vs the next morning, but no body was able to giue him the interpretation thereof, & himſelfe thought no more of it.

Tamerlan iourney againſt the Turke.

The Prince was accompanied alſo with Calibes, & he commanded the Prince of Tanais, to take vpon him the ſtate of Colonell of the footmen, which Axalla had left: vnto whom he gaue the charge of Lieutenant generall within his Armie, with commandement to leade his Auant-guard, and Calibes the Arere-ward, being accompanied with farre greater forces then euer he had in any of his Armies: for they came vnto him from all parts. The Chinois Lord was licenced by Odmar to goe with 20000. men of the ſubiects newly conquered, being deſirous to ſhew himſelfe vnto the Emperour, as alſo for to learne our manners and faſhions. The Prince tooke his Voyage directly vnto Samercand, the place of his birth, three yeeres being paſt ſince hee had beene there. Zamay came to meet him, and I verily beleeue, a million of men, bleſſing and prayſing him in all manner of ſongs. All the Princes of the Countrey alſo ranne to viſite him; he abode there a moneth. Axalla in this meane time was already at the meeting place at Ocera, who prepared all things, looking for the Princes commandement for to goe vnto him, aduertiſing him often of the doings of Baiazet.

Tamerlan returneth from the conqueſt of China vnto Samercand.

Conſultation about the way the Armie ſhould take to the Turkes Empire.

We departed from Samercand, for to goe vnto Ozara, where was the meeting place for all the Princes troupes: and hauing in that place taken aduice for his iourney, that is to ſay, for to know whether ſhould be moſt expedient and fauorable, either to goe by the coaſts of Moſcouie directly vnto Capha, or rather on the other ſide of the Sea Bachu to paſſe by the skirts of Perſia. It was reſolued in the end, after ſundry opinions, although the way were the longer, to paſſe vnto Capha for to come vnto Trebiſonda, and to the Georgians, and from thence to enter into the limits of the Ottomans. Then our Armie after the accuſtomed ceremonies & prayers made vnto God, wherein our Emperor hoped to finde his principall ſuccours, we drew ſtraight vnto Maranis, where the Armie abode three dayes, looking for the forces which Odmar did ſend, whereof they receiued newes. There did the Emperour cauſe all his Armie to be payd, and a generall muſter was made. He had newes alſo there of the forces that the Moſconite did ſend vnto him: he likewiſe cauſed an infinite quantitie of victuals, and the moſt part of his furniture to be conuayed by the Sea of Bachu, there being ſome twentie leagues where was want of water and victuals, through the which our Armie muſt needs paſſe, cauſing all things neceſſary to be carried by water, the which was a great commoditie vnto vs: and there was a commandement giuen at all the ſhoares of the Sea, that they ſhould bring all the veſſels for to carrie the munition of the Armie: ſo as this foreſight did greatly eaſe our Armie. The Prince went continually coaſting the Sea-ſhoare, paſſing away his time in hunting, and his Armie came not neere him by ten leagues, except ſuch as came to ſeeke neceſſaries for the Armie, the which did extend it ſelfe ſome twenty leagues, it was ſo great. The Prince abode at Saraſich during the time his Army paſſed the Riuer of Edel at Mechet, and at two or three other Bridges, the which they had cauſed to bee made; there had hee ceataine newes how Baiazet marched vnto the ſiege of Conſtantinople, hauing reduced vnto his obedience all Bythinia, and Burſia a very noble Citie, the which hee cauſed to bee fortified, and diuers other Cities, vſing all the cruelties that might be, inſomuch as all the adioyning Prouinces yeelded themſelues his tributaries: amongſt the reſt the noble Citie of Capha: the Citie was by the Prince giuen vnto Axalla for to diſpoſe of the ſame: which hee did, going thither to ſee his kinſ-folke, and to take ſuch order there, as he thought was for the preſeruation of the Citie, as one not vngratefull vnto his Countrey: he rather placed his hope in this little ſhoare of Mar Maiore, then in the limits of Scythia and China, and for to ſucceed after his Maſter vnto all his great conqueſts, for that he had all the Souldiers at his commandement, and great credit amongſt all the people ouer whom his Prince commanded. Baiazet hauing a very great and mightie Armie, neither beleeued, nor once thought that wee would come vpon him, ſo exceeding barbarous was he, that he would not indure any man ſo much as to ſpeake onely vnto him of our Armie, as deſpiſing it, he was ſo proud: and there he cauſed all the bordering people publikely to bee forbidden, to make any vowes and prayers for our proſperitie. Iuſtice raigned ſo amongſt vs, inſomuch as if a Souldier had taken but an Apple, he was put to death, and this was ſeuerely obſerued ouer all, a thing vſuall, and eſpecially in this Iourney, the which was the onely cauſe of ouerthrowing the tyrannie of the Ottomans, and of this proud Baiazet. So we arriued at Bachichiche, where the Armie refreſhed it ſelfe for the ſpace of eight dayes. Vnto this place came the Embaſſadours of Guines, vnto the Emperour, whom the Prince did greatly reuerence for his holineſſe. The Emperor after he had cauſed generall prayers to be publiſhed, Tamerlans Armie departed from Bachichiche, and they reckoned that there was in our Armie, three hundred thouſand Horſe-men, and fiue hundred thouſand Foot-men, of all kinds of Nations. Our Bachu.

Tamerlan his chiefeſt truſt.

Tamerlan hunted by the way towards the Turke.

Baiazet marched vnto the ſiege of Conſtantinople.

The gouernment Axalla did chuſe.

Notable iuſtice amongſt the Tartarians.

Armie

Armie came vnto Garga, where it passed the Riuer Euphrates, the Auant-guard at Chinserig; and the generall meeting of the Armie was appointed to bee at Gianich, the which did yeeld it selfe: and there had we newes that Baiazet his Armie was neere vnto vs, within some thirty leagues, which caused vs to march more close. All the Cities yeelded, the Emperour receiuing them graciously, and those which refused obedience, were cruelly punished, especially such Inhabitants as were Turkes, but the Christians set in full libertie, vnder the name of the Greeke Emperour Emanuel, whom the Emperour would wholly gratifie, Axalla hauing receiued this commandement from the Prince: so hee caused them to sweare fidelitie vnto Emanuel. The great Armie of Baiazet thought to haue surprised our men within Semnas (which they had taken) but as soone as they drew neere, our men set it on fire, and the greatest part retyring, there remayned some hundred Horse to performe the same, who retyred themselues in very great disorder. Now, the Prince of Ciarcan had diuided his men into two troupes, and giuen commandement vnto the first troupe, that as soone as they perceiued the Enemies to pursue the hundred Horse, they should receiue them, and retyre ioyntly together. Now, hee had the rest of his power in a valley neere vnto a Wood, and hauing suffered some two thousand of the Enemies Horse. Turkes Auant-currers to passe by him, he charged them behind, and fought with them, they not fighting but flesing as soone as they did see themselues pressed: many were slayne, and many were taken prisoners. This was the first time wee fought, and carried away the victorie: all the prisoners were sent vnto the Prince, amongst the rest the Bassa of Natolia, who led this troupe. The next day Baiazet his Armie drew neere vnto the sight of ours, the which marched two leagues: and wee encamped within a league the one of the other. All the night long you might haue heard such noyse of Horses, as it seemed the heauens were full of voyces, the aire did so resound, and euery one was desirous to haue the night passed, for to come each one vnto the triall of his valour. Vnto the Scythian Nation, the which is desirous of goods, they propounded the great riches they should get by the victorie ouer the Ottomans. Vnto the Parthian Nation ambitious of rule, the honour and glorie of the Nation, being Conquerours of them, who onely were able to take from them the Empire of Asia. The Christians who made the fourth part thereof, assured themselues to conquer their greatest Enemie. Behold, now euery one spake during the night time, according to his humour. The Prince this night went through his Campe hearing all this, and was very glad to see the hope that euery one of his Souldiers did conceiue already of the victorie; and I being neere him, he did me the honour to tell me, that at the time he fought the battell against the Mosconite, he did heare all the night long all kindes of songs, the which resounded in his Campe, seeing in a manner no bodie sleepe: I hoped then (said hee) to haue some good hap, and I trust to receiue the like now. Now after the second watch the Prince returned vnto his lodging, and casting himselfe vpon a Carpet, hee meant to sleepe: but the desire of day would not suffer him; he then commanded me to giue him a booke, wherein he did reade: therein was contayned the liues of his Father and Grandfather, and of other valiant Knights, the which he did ordinarily reade: he called me, hauing light vpon (in reading) the discourse of a battell that his Grandfather had lost against the Persians, the which he had thought to haue gotten (very vndiscreetly) hauing assaulted his Enemie, many aduantages being propounded vnto him, whereof he might haue made good vse, all which he neglected, trusting vnto his owne valour and that of his Souldiers. And hauing ended his speech, he commanded mee to reade the same before him, and said vnto me, I alwaies reade this before I beginne a battell, to the end I should not so much trust vnto the Lions skin, wherein I wrap my arme, that I should not serue my selfe with the Foxes, to wrap therewith my head: for thus (said he) my Grandfather was in a place of aduantage, and he went out of it to seeke his Enemie, who was lodged strongly, and whatsoeuer his men said to him, hee went on headlong, shutting his eares against all the counsell and aduise of his seruants.

The causes of Tamerlans warre against the Turkes.

A stratagem.

How Tamerlans Armie passed the night before the battell fought against the Turke.

Tamerlan his custome before a battell.

Seeing the Turkish Foot-men march, whom they doe call Ianizaries, the which were placed in the middest, and vpon the two fronts, two great squadrons of Horse-men, the which seemed to be thirty thousand Horse, and another which aduanced and couered the battalion of the Ianizaries: Hee thought this order to be very good, and hard to breake, and turning himselfe vnto Axalla, who was neere vnto him, he said, I had thought to haue fought on foot, but it behoueth me this day to fight on horsebacke, for to giue courage vnto my Souldiers to open the great battalion: and my will is, that they come forward vnto mee as soone as they may: for I will aduance forward an hundred thousand Foot-men, fifty thousand vpon each of my two wings, and in the middest of them forty thousand of my best Horse. My pleasure is, that after they haue tryed the force of those men, that they come vnto my Auant-guard, of whom I will dispose (and fifty thousand Horse more) in three bodies, whom thou shalt command, the which I will assist with fourescore thousand Horse, wherein shall be mine owne person, hauing an hundred thousand Foot-men behind me, who shall march in two troupes; and for my Arere-ward forty thousand Horse, and fifty thousand Foot-men, who shall not march but vnto my ayde. I will make choise of ten thousand of the best Horse, whom I will send into euery part where I shall thinke needfull within my Armie, for to impart my commandements. Ouer the first forty

The manner of the march of the Turkish Foot-men.

The order of Tamerlan his battell.

Digitized by Google

thousand the Prince Ciarcian commanded: ouer the foremost footmen was the Lord Synopes, a Genuois, kinsman vnto Axalla, and he which was his Lieutenant ouer the footmen, a Captaine of great estimation. That ouer which the Prince Axalla commanded, consisted of fiue squadrons of horsemen. Baiazet his Armie seemed faire and great, which was aduanced continually forward towards vs, who stirred not one whit from the place of the battaile. There were many light horsemen, as well Scythians, Parthians, as Moscouites, who left their rankes, and shot Arrowes, and brake Lances betweene the two Armies. There was a Spie who brought word that Baiazet was on foot in the middest of his Ianizaries, where he meant to fight, that hee did not forget to mount on horse-back, giuing order ouer all for the wants of his Armie: but purposed to fight in the middest of those Ianizaries, who are a number of trusty men, brought vp in exercises from their youth to all manner of warfare, and chosen out of al Nations, the faireſt and strongest men, so as they are inuincible. By this bringing vp the which they haue had together, they doe fight with a great force and courage for their Prince and Lord, who being in the middest of them, they are as in a halfe circle within the Armie. Now, they were thirty thousand men in this order, wherein Baiazet put his principall hope: he had many other footmen, but gathered together of all sorts. His battaile of horse was very faire, amounting vnto the number of an hundred and fortie thousand horse, well exercised in all manner of fights. The Soldan of Egypt hauing ayded him with thirty thousand Mammolues, very good horse-men, and with thirty thousand footmen. Their Armie in that order seemed almost as great as ours: for they were not so knit together as we were, our forces being directly one after the other, and theirs all in a front.

What the Turks Ianizaries be.

Mamalukes.

So the Enemies Armie aduanced forward continually with an infinite number of cryes, and ours was in great silence. After that common prayer was ended, the Emperour himselfe aduanced continually forward, beholding the first charge giuen, and caused Axalla to set forward after he returned into his order, continually exhorting his men before hee left them. There could not be seene a more furious charge giuen, then was performed by the Ottomans vpon the Prince of Ciarcian, who had commandement not to fight before they came vnto him: there could not haue beene chosen a fairer Playne, and where the skilfull choise of the place was of lesse aduantage for the one then for the other, but that wee had the Riuer on our left hand, the which was some aduantage for the Emperour, hauing giuen commandement, that in any case they should not lose the same, and that the Enemies, whatsoeuer came thereof, should not win it: this hee did for to haue the aduantage of the hand in fight. The Emperour, who aboue all Maximes of warre, did vse to deale in such manner, that the Enemie might bee the first Assaulter; hee had straightly commanded them which were appointed for the first charge, to suffer the Enemie for to giue the on-set. Now (as I haue already declared) this young Prince of Ciarcian with his forty thousand horse was almost wholly ouerthrowne, hauing fought as much as hee could, but hee entred euen into the middest of the Ianizaries, where the person of Baiazet was, putting them in disorder, where he was slaine. About this time Axalla set vpon them with the Auantguard, where as he was not in any such danger; for hauing surprised one of the enemies wings, hee cut it all in pieces, and his footmen comming to ioyne with him, as they had beene commanded, hee faced the Battalion of the Ianizaries.

Tamerlan his principall maxime of warre.

The battaile betweene Tamerlan and Baiazet.

The Prince seeing the charge Axalla had vpon his arme, sent ten thousand horse from his battaile for to succour him, and knit together the mayne battaile of Axalla, and to giue once againe a charge vpon another Battalion of footmen, the which did shew it selfe, and came to ioyne with and strengthen that of the Ianizaries, who behaued themselues valiantly for the safetie of their Prince. This fight continued one houre, and yet you could not haue seene any scattered, fighting resolutely the one against the other. You might haue seene the Mountaynes of horses ruin one against another, the men die, crie, lament, and threaten at one very time. The Prince had patience to see this fight ended, and when hee did perceiue that his men did giue place, hee sent ten thousand of his Horse to ioyne againe with the ten thousand appointed for the Arierward, and commanded them to assist him, at such time as hee should haue need thereof. At this very time the Emperour chargeth, and made them giue him roome, causing the footmen to assault, ouer whom the Prince of Thanais commanded; who gaue a furious on-set vpon the Battalion of the Ianizaries, wherein was yet the person of Baiazet, who had sustayned a great burthen. But the multitude, and not valour, did preuaile; for as much as might bee done in fight, was by the Ianizaries performed, for to preserue the person of their Prince. But in the end the Horse-men, wherein was the Emperours person, gaue a new charge, and his Auantguard was wholly knit againe vnto him, hee renewed another forcing, and was fully victorious. Baiazet hauing retyred on horse-back out of the troupe of Ianizaries wounded, fell aliue into the hands of Axalla, vnto whom hee yeelded himselfe, supposing it had beene Tamerlan: then Axalla seeing him so followed (being for a time not knowne but for some great Lord of the Ottomans) twentie thousand horse did not fight at all, but onely in pursuing the victorie, and they made a great slaughter. The Prince had his horse slaine vnder him with the blow of a Lance, but he was soone remounted againe on horse-back. This day the wisdome of the Emperor gaue the victorie vnto his Souldiers: for the iudgment which he had in tyring of the strong Tamerlan his notable victorie obtayned against Baiazet wherein hee was taken prisoner.

Tamerlan his wisedome the cause of the victorie, and wherein performed.

forces

forces of the Ottomans, was the safeguard of his. For if all had gone vnto the battaile in one front, surely, the multitude had put it selfe into a confusion: but this manner of aiding his men made euerie one profitable. The Emperour iudging (like a great Captaine) of the need that euery one of his souldiers had, so that this manner of proceeding was the getting of the victory. They accounted threescore thousand men slaine of the Ottomans, and twentie thousand of ours. The Prince of Tirzis was slaine, as I haue said: the head of the Georgians slaine, Calibes was verie sorrie hee had so easie a reckoning in his Arier-ward, being very couragious, and a gentle Knight: the Despote of Seruia was taken prisoner, who did accompanie Baiazet, and was a Christian: they gaue him this day of battaile much reputation. The Emperour gaue vnto him very good entertainment, reproouing him, for that hee did accompany Baiazet against him, who did come in fauour of his Emperour. Hee answered him, that it was not according to his dutie, but the prosperitie of Baiazet, vnto whom it seemed, that all the world did bend for to subiect it selfe vnto him, and that his safetie had caused him to set forward. The Emperour presently thereupon gaue him leaue to depart at his pleasure. Hee tooke care to get into his hands Baiazet his children: hee gaue commandement that Baiazet should bee cured, and after brought before him: who at such time as hee was there neuer made any shew of humilitie. The Emperour saying vnto him, that it lay in him to cause him to lose his life, he answered: Do it, that losse shall be my happinesse. And demanding of him what made him so rash, for to enterprise to bring into subiection so noble a Prince as was the Emperour of the Greekes. Hee answered him, the desire of glorie and rule. Wherefore doest thou (said the Emperour vnto him) vse so great crueltie towards men, so farre foorth that neither thou nor thine doe pardon either sex or age? This doe I (answered hee) to giue the greater terrour to my enemies. Then said the Emperour, so shalt thou receiue the like reward: and causing him to bee conueyed againe out of his presence, hee turned vnto his followers, and said, behold a proud and fierce countenance, hee deserueth to be punished with crueltie, and it is necessarie that hee bee made an exemplarie punishment to all the cruell of the world, of the iust wrath of God against them. I acknowledge that God hath this day deliuered into my hands a great enemy, wee must giue thankes vnto God for the same: the which was performed, being yet day: for the battaile was wonne at foure of the clocke, and there was as yet fiue houres of day-light. The children of Baiazet were brought before him: hee caused them to bee vsed curteously, and as the children of an Emperour. The next day hee commanded the dead to bee buried: they found the Prince of Tirzis dead in the middest of the Ianizaries, where he remained enclosed. The Emperour did greatly lament this young Prince, who was his kinsman, and would haue beene one day worthie for to doe him great seruice. In that battaile there died manie Captaines, & almost the chiefe Ottomans. This was a great Battaile, the which was fought from seuen vnto foure of the clocke, in such sort that they knew not vnto whom the victorie did incline. Our Armie stayed vntill the next day, euery one causing his friends to bee buried. The Prince of Tirzis was emblamed, and conueyed with two thousand horse vnto Samarcand vntill the Emperour returned. All the other dead bodies were buried at Sanas with all the honour that might be. Axalla was much grieued for his kinsman, because hee was verie well beloued of the Prince: his charge was giuen vnto one of his brethren who was verie famous; in fighting this same day, we might iudge the euents of the matters of the world. Behold this Emperour Baiazet, who was, as hee thought, superiour to fortune, which in an instant found himselfe and his estate by one battaile onely ouerthrowne euen vnto the lowest place, and at such time as hee thought least thereof. Hee vsed to say, that hee was iustly punished, for despising the multitude we had, for the assurance that hee had in the valour of his horsmen, and especially of his Ianizaries. Hee was three dayes (as they report) before he could bee pacified, as a desperate man, seeking after death, and calling for it. The Emperour did not vse him at all curteously, but caused small account to bee made of him: and for to manifest that he knew how to punish the proud; vpon festiuall dayes, when as hee mounted on horseback, they brought this proud man vnto him, and he serued him in stead of a foot-stoole: this did he for to manifest the folly and arrogancie of men, and how iustly God had humbled him. The next day the Prince marched directly towardes Bursia, whither all the remainder of Baiazet his Armie was retired, with the Bassa Mustapha. All the countrie yeelded vnto vs, and the Prince caused all the holdes and fortresses to bee ouerthrowne and destroyed, and punished all those which were so euill aduised as to stay vntill they were besieged. I had forgotten to declare, how hee caused the Prince of Tirzis bodie to bee accompanied with diuers prisoners chained and tied together, whom hee did send vnto Samarcand, the which the Prince had determined to make great, for a perpetuall memorie of his greatnesse. Euen so had hee greatly peopled with people of China, which had beene taken in the Battailes, and of those likewise which were taken out of the two great Cities, Paguinfou, and Quantonfou. Now this battaile did bring great astonishment vnto all the countries possessed by Baiazet, and no bodie resisted vs, euen vnto Bursia, whither this Armie was fled, and therein were also two sonnes of Baiazet verie young. Axalla being alwaies aduanced forward before Baiazet brought before Tamarlan, with his pride.

Tamerlan his saying of Baiazet.

The despaire of Baiazet after he was taken prisoner.

Baiazet Tamarlans foot-stoole to mount on horseback.

Tamarlan his pollicie for to encrease his Citie Samarcand.

Digitized by Google

our Armie, with fortie thouſand Horſe, and an hundred thouſand Foot-men without any carriages, who hindred the Enemies from joyning themſelues againe together: and hee made a cruell Warre vpon the Ottomans, deliuering the Grecians from the tyrannie of Baiazet. Hee approached neere vnto Burſia, where the Ottomans did not ſtay the comming of Axallas Armie, but only they which could not runne remayned behind. Baiazet his two Sonnes were ſent vnto the Greekiſh Emperour for to bring them vp, and to haue mercie vpon them; the reſt went vnto Gallipoli, for to goe vnto Andrinopoli, the which they held, hauing conquered it from the Grecians. Now the Prince (for to returne vnto my purpoſe) diſpatched towards the Emperour his Vncle, and vnto the Empreſſe his Wife, one of his Familiars, called Lieban, Captayne of his Chamber, for to carrie him newes of this Victorie, and to ioyne it alſo vnto all the reſt. He ſent vnto him Baiazet his Sword and Bow, and the Capariſons of his Horſe, the which was eſteemed to be worth aboue two hundred thouſand Duckets. You may eaſily thinke that Prince Lieban was well entertayned of the old Emperour, and of the young Princeſſe, bringing word vnto them, that all the World did bend it ſelfe to make our Prince victorious, who ſurely receiued theſe Victories from God without inſolencie, and at ſuch time as hee ſent him moſt glory, then did his men note him to be leaſt puffed vp. He was neuer bold, but in the day of battaile, and on the Eeue for to command ſeuerely, and with greater Majeſty. To tell you what he was in aduerſitie, I did neuer ſee him in that eſtate: but it is to be thought, that they which bee not inſolent in proſperitie, are not faint-hearted in aduerſitie. So our victorious Prince marched directy vnto Burſia, loaden with Spoyles and Trophees which hee daily got, departing from the Cities which did come and yeeld themſelues vnto him; therein obſeruing the ſame manner of proceeding, the which we did in the Conqueſt of China; they which did yeeld vnto him without fighting, were well vſed, and the obſtinate well puniſhed, the Prince knowing that reward and puniſhment are the Moderators of Common-wealthes, the one to bee vſed towards the good, and the other towards the euill. In the end we receiued newes by Axalla, that he had receiued Burſia in the Emperours name, and how the Inhabitants thereof had puniſhed the Garriſons of Baiazet, hauing driuen them away, and ſlaine many.

Axalla cruell againſt the Ottomans for the deliuery of Greece.

Preſents ſent by Tamerlan vnto the great Cham his Vncle.

But I dare not follow our Author any further from Tartaria, for whoſe ſake I haue entertayned him. Leauing therefore his agreement with the Greeke Emperour, and ſecret viſiting Conſtantinople; his comming to Ieruſalem, and Expedition againſt the Soldan, With his Exploits in Egypt, Syria, Perſia, we will returne with him to Samarcand.

§. IIII.

Encreaſe of Samarcand; Affaires of China: Funerals of the Can; comming to Quinza, and deſcription thereof. His diſpoſition of his eſtate and death.

PErſia, as long as he liued was much affected vnto him: which greatly ſerued him for the keeping as well of Syria, as of the Soldans Empire, leauing continually men there, and drawing out Colonies, the better to ſettle his Affaires in thoſe places. So the Emperour leauing the Prince of Thanais, with his Army to attend his pleaſure, he marched with the reſt of his forces into his owne Countrey with all the Ioyes and Triumphes that might be poſſible, the chiefeſt Priſoners marching before the Emperour, amongſt the which was Baiazet Emperour of the Turkes all chayned, and was a Spectacle vnto all the World of Fortunes inconſtancy: hee continued notwithſtanding in the ſame fiercenеſſe was woont to be in him. So whereſoeuer the Emperour paſſed, the people aſſembled themſelues by thouſands, prayſing and ſinging his Victories. We arriued at the laſt at Samarcand with all our ſpoyles, in very great magnificence: where after we had beene the ſpace of one moneth or two in Feaſtings and Manificences, the Emperour with his accuſtomed Deuotion, hauing in great ſolemnitie vowed a Church and Hoſpitall vnto his God, the moſt magnificent that might bee deuiſed. Whereupon to performe the ſame, he began to ſearch out all ſorts of Handicrafts men for to honour this Citie, the which hee had a deſire to make one of the ſtatelieſt Cities in the World. And in one of the corners thereof he began, and did build there his Temple and Hoſpitall, making an account to increaſe yet this Citie, as large againe as it was, and to people the ſame, with ſo many ſeuerall kinds of people and Nations as hee had brought with him, giuing libertie vnto them all to frame and build their Houſes, cauſing money to be diſtributed to do the ſame, and giuing all kinds of Priuiledges and Freedomes vnto the Priſoners, for to giue them a greater deſire to build and ſettle themſelues there: and hauing cauſed the ſtreets and places to be plotted, and hauing appointed a place for euery one to build vpon, hee tooke no other pleaſure, neither had he any other care then the preſeruing the good will of his moſt famous Souldiers, whoſe name hee hauing cauſed to bee written in a generall Muſter-booke, the which hee com-

Tamerlan his vow vnto God.

Digitized by Google

commanded to be made, from day to day, they (not thinking thereof) receiued honours, and good turnes of the Prince, in recompence of their so great seruices. Now he declared the death of the Emperour his Vncle vnto his Councell (of which he before had receiued Intelligence, but kept it close) and forgot no Ceremony due vnto the honour of the said Emperour outwardly, shewing the griefe he conceiued for his death; where after hee had rested some eight dayes, hee determined to goe vnto Quinzai for to see the Empresse, and hauing left Baiazet in the custodie of the Gouernour of Zacheray, the Emperour set forward with his ordinary Court which was of forty thousand Horse, and threescore thousand Foot-men.

The Emperour being come vnto Cambalu, receiued newes of the Battell Odmar, had wonne against the King of Chinas, Captayne Generall, and how he pursued his Victory, hauing taken three or foure great and rich Cities, the which did yeeld themselues vnto him, and that againe the Chinois did desire peace. The Emperour sent the Articles he required, which were that before all other things the King of China should pay the Arrerages of the Tribute, the which hee had agreed with the Emperour. First, he should come in person to doe homage vnto his Majesty, and acknowledge himselfe as Vassall vnto his Empire. That the Army should withdraw it selfe during hrs Voyage, and he should deliuer vp vnto him all his Cities, saiuing three such as the Emperour should nominate; and that the things should be restored vnto the same estate they were in before the Warre, when the Emperour made the first peace; that hee should pay the Army for sixe moneths, and should also satisfie all the expences of the War, seeing he had begunne it, and was Author of the breach of peace. Then the Emperour gratified Odmar, sending vnto him for Wife one of his Sisters with all magnificence that might be, for to make him the more affectioned vnto him. I will declare how the Emperour was receiued at Cambalu by his Subjects, with all the magnificence possible, the Emperour for to gratifie them hauing restored their Priuiledges, the which he had taken from them, for the Rebellion they had committed with Calix: so as the Emperour went ouer all gratifying his Subjects for this new Succession that was lately fallen vnto him, all the Companies comming vnto him: for in these Countreyes they haue no certaine dwellings, they are alwayes wandring in troupes whersoeuer they goe: thither the Empresse (hauing left Prince Axalla to gouerne at Quinzai) came vnto him. The Prince remayned there almost two moneths, hauing in this place giuen order for all the Affaires he had. Cambalu was also neere vnto mount Althay, where they vse to bury the Scythian Emperours, whom we doe call the great Cham.

Articles of a newagreement betweene Tamerlan and the King of China.
1
2
3
4

The Emperor caused the body of the Emperour his Vncle to be brought thither, and himselfe would conduct it with all pompe, honouring not only his body, but also all that hee had loued in the World, and although it was not the custome to cause women for to assist the Funerals, yet would he affoord this honour vnto the Empresse, that she should assist the bringing of the body, going neere vnto the same. This he did, the more to make appeare how much he honoured the memory of the late Emperour in hrs Wife, being his Daughter, and also to the end that if God did take him away, his children being small, shee should haue the greater authority, and bee the better acknowledged worthy to gouerne in the minoritie of his Children; and also for that shee had beene brought vp alwayes in authority, euen since shee was marryed. The Prince desiring thereby the more to acknowledge the honour the Emperour his Vncle had done him, by adopting him as his Sonne, and in hauing left him so great and large an Empire, as that was, whereof he left vnto him the possession. Now the Emperour loued her onely, hauing no other affection in such pleasure, but only the happinesse of a faire Off-spring, the which he hoped for. Now the body of the late Emperour being come vnto Cambalu, he determined to conduct it vnto the buriall according vnto the accustomed Ceremony, and to put the body with the Kings and Emperours his Ancestors. After he had from point to point performed the last Will and Testament of the late Emperour, he returned from thence vnto Cambalu, where he spent all Winter in Tilt and Turnying, going a hunting, making his abode there, because he was in a place neerest vnto the Kingdome of China, to know how matters passed there, hauing now brought thither his last Affaires, purposing to goe thither in person the next Winter, if Odmar did not make an end of the Wars alreadie begunne, and if the King of China did not submit himselfe wholly vnder his obedience, hauing determined not to depart from Cambalu, vntill this Countrey were pacified, the marke he shot at, being only to keepe that which his valour was able to conquer through his good fortune, being desirous to spend the rest of his life in enjoying the fruits of his trauels, and for to publish his prayses vnto his people, and with Millions to maintayne them in peace. He had also a purpose to bring vnto an end that which hee had determined to doe at Samarcand.

The magnificent Funerall of the great Cham of Tartaria.

Tamerlan his vertuous and chaste loue vnto his good Wife.

The young Prince made Couernour of Quinzai and ouer all the Countrey; which seemeth to bee the North parts of China, and perhaps in these times, Nanquin was the Seat of the K. of China and Quinzai, of the Tartarian.

Now Axalla was at Quinzai, as well vnto the contentment of all the men of Warre, as the Inhabitants, who desired much to see their Prince, and hauing caused Prince Axalla in their behalfe to beseech it, that it would please the Emperour to cause his Sonne to bee brought vp amongst them there, the which he did grant vnto them in fauour of the said Prince Axalla, establishing him for to command in the absence of the Prince his Sonne, whom hee made Gouernour of Quinzai, from Cambalu euen vnto the Sea. This Countrey was repleniished with some three hundred Cities, and was in largenesse more then foure hundred leagues, besides an infinite number of Villages. To make short, it was that the Emperour his Vncle gouerned, where this Prince Axalla was his Lieutenant generall, vnder the authoritie of the young Prince his sonne, vnto whom he deliuered him in charge for to be his Gouernour, authorising him vnto the gouernement generall of all his Kingdomes: for the great wisedome that was in this Knight, made him beloued in all the Countreys vnder the Emperours obedience: the seruices also and great victories the which he had caused the Emperour to obtayne by his stout courage, and good conduct, who for these occasions put his principall trust in him, and after himselfe hee thought him onely worthie to preserue for his children his Kingdome and Empresse.

Digitized by Google

Axalla appointed the young Princes Gouernour, and authorised ouer all the Kingdomes of Tamerlan, as Gouernour generall.

The King of China came vnto the Emperour Tamerlans Court, and did sweare vnto him once againe obedience.

The King of China came to visit him at his Court, according vnto the couenants offered vnto him, the which he accepted: he did sweare once againe obedience vnto the Emperour, who caused him to see all his greatest Cities, for to make himselfe the more to be feared of this Barbarian, who kept no more promise then pleased himselfe. Hee was astonished to behold so many Souldiers, and the Countrey so well replenished with people; and aboue all, that they vsed so little curiositie of riches in their apparell and garments, wondring that the Emperour was apparelled in meane Cloth of one colour, without any other fashion: but to counteruaile that, he had about him men which seemed to bee Kings. At the same time when the King of China was at the Court, the Emperour receiued newes of the * victorie against the Soldan, for the which the Emperour reioyced, making feasts and turneys in his Court in token of mirth, and this reioycing continued for the space of eight dayes. After the Emperour had giuen order for the double paying of his Armie that came into Persia, vnder the conduct of the great Chamberlaine, and Synopes Colonell generall in the Imperiall Armie, the Emperour went vnto Quinsay for to see his sonne, and visit the people of this Countrey.

The meane apparell of Tamerlan.

* This battell. for breuitie is omitted, as is also the most part of the Booke.

The Emperour arriuing neere vnto Quinsay, Prince Axalla comming to meet him two dayes iourney off, with all the chiefe Lords of the Countrey, together with the principall Citizens, who were preparing for the Emperour the most magnificent receiuing that might bee, as well by water as by land. As this Citie is one of the richest in the world, so is it one of the greatest, and of the most wonderfull situation, being all wholly diuided and ouerthwarted with channels, vpon the which are framed wonderfull and stately buildings, accompanied with an infinite number of Bridges, vpon the which they passe ouer channels: this Citie aboundeth with all kinde of spices, and in great quantitie, likewise with all manner of merchandises. The Emperour as soone as he was arriued, receiued presents of the Citizens, the which were esteemed to be worth aboue two millions of Gold, with a wonderfull variety of all rare and singular things, the which they presented vnto him, for to testifie the loue and obedience they did owe vnto him. The Emperour was desirous to see his sonne, whom they brought vp with the accustomed greatnesse of Princes: and hauing caused the child to be brought before him, being of the age of seuen yeeres: he forbad from hence forward they should suffer him to weare any thing vpon his head, and himselfe did hang a Bowe about his necke, saying aloud, that they which from their birth were called vnto soueraignties, should bee vsed both vnto cold and heate, and should bee exercised in Armes betimes, and not brought vp delicately and easily, reprehending them which had the bringing of him vp, demanding of them, if they meant to make a woman of him? And they answering, that he was tender. If he be not borne (said he) for to be strong in Armes, he will not be worthy to succeed mee: for he must not be an effeminate Prince that shall preserue the Parthian Empire. Now he had sent the Empresse vnto Samarcand to be deliuered, where shee was honourably receiued, hauing neuer beene there since shee was married. Hee receiued newes that shee was there deliuered of another goodly sonne, a thing which hee caused to be published ouer all, and himselfe in token of ioy, made feasts fifteene dayes, with all kindes of magnificent turneys: this he did for to shew his agilitie vnto this people, to the end, that as he excelled all his Court in vertues, that they should also iudge him worthie to gouerne them aboue all other men. After he continued there a moneth, and hauing visited all the Seatownes neere vnto Quinsay, hunting all kindes of chases, neglecting nothing notwithstanding which belonged to his charge, saying often, that the recreations hee did take, were helpes for to ease him in the paines of his publike affaires whereunto God had called him. Hauing vpon his returne called together all the people, he published his lawes, which were all reuerenced of this people, as though they had proceeded from the Diuinitie, so much admiration had euery one of the greatnesse of this Prince. The which I will truely declare vnto you, that so long as the Emperour was there, this people did almost nothing, being for the most part busied in beholding of him, not finding any greater contentation then that. Some of his Courtiers, and amongst the rest, Prince Axalla said one day vnto him, that this was a Citie fit for his abode. O my friend, it is not so: if they should see mee daily, they would make no more account of mee: It is a maxime, that the Lord of this great Citie must not goe thither but once in ten yeeres, and when he is there, it behoueth him to temper his actions, as if he were vpon a Scaffold readie for to play some Comedie, where grauitie and good grace is necessary for to content the beholders: for the people doe easily receiue an euill impression of their Prince, as they also doe a good, if you performe it well vnto them.

The description of the Citie of Quinsay, with the wonderfull situation thereof.

Tamerlan receiued with great magnificence into Quinsay, with rich and rare presents.

The order hee tooke for his sonnes education.

Tamerlan his notable saying of succession in his Empire

The Empresse deliuered of an other sonne at Samarcand in Parthia.

Tamerlan his recreations, and notable saying thereof.

The admiration and exceeding loue the people of Quinsay did beare vnto their Emperor.

The nature of the people of Quinsay toward their Emperour.

Now

Digitized by Google

Now I haue forgotten to tell you how the Emperour sent Prince Axalla in his name from Quinsay into China, and his Imperiall Maiestie did not depart out of the Prouince before he returned: he went thither with great diligence for to establish peace there. Prince Axalla went forward towards Paguin, where he was receiued of the Gouernour with all possible honour. And hauing assembled all the Emperours forces, hee set forward towards the borders of China, haue an enteruiew at Pochio, where the meeting place was agreed vpon. He passed by Quantou: went forward vnto Pochio, whither the King came also to meet with him; and hee entred full fiftie leagues into the Countrey newly conquered. It seemed vnto him a thing too much derogating from the greatnesse of the Emperour, the maiestie of whose person hee represented, if he went any further to see this barbarous King, being more fit that he should come forward into the Countrey conquered lately from him by Odmar, after he had obtayned the victory, then to goe into his Countreys although he had subiected them vnto the Emperour, and did pay a very great tribute. So the King of China arriued within a league of Pochio with all his Court: hee set forward vnto a Plaine, where he and Prince Axalla did see each other, who was much better accompanied, from whom the King did as much differ as from the Emperours owne person. They met three seuerall times together: the King desired to bee admitted into a Citie, which the Emperour had granted vnto him by the treatie. Prince Odmar declared that it was of great importance, therefore Prince Axalla was by the Emperour appointed for to bee Iudge of this controuersie, In the end they required another further within the Countrey, the which the King accepted: so hee was put into possession of that Citie, the situation whereof was very pleasant, being compassed about with a Lake. Axalla hauing discouered that this barbarous King, did earnestly desire it onely for his pleasure, and not for any other euill intent, the Citie which hee deliuered being seated vpon a Riuer further within his Countrey, and that other within our Countrey compassed about with our fortresses: but Odmar did not allow of that, and supposed it to bee for an euill purpose, as for to contriue some new practises. Odmar being an olde man, who knew the Kings vnfaithfulnesse, although hee had made him know it well enough vnto his smart, hauing (as I haue said) wonne twenty or thirty Cities from him; and aboue fourescore leagues of Countrey, at such time as hee obtayned the last Battell, during the time that the Emperour was in his last Voyage against the Persians.

Prince Axalla sent into China for to establish a peace there.

The meeting of Prince Axalla with the King of China at Pochio.

So the enteruiew continued yet betweene Prince Axalla and the King of China on the Plaine, a Tent being pitched, whither Prince Axalla did come vnto him, whom hee continually honoured as much as the Emperours owne person, where after they had long time treated by Interpreters, it was in the end agreed, that the King of China should enter againe into Quinanci, not suffering him to put any Garrison into it, nor to fortifie the same: but euen as a Prisoner and Subiect vnto the Emperour, hee should enioy it, and it should bee his owne, enioying all the reuenue thereof, neither should hee carrie any kingly Ensignes, without the expresse leaue of the Gouernour for the Emperour: hee should notwithstanding haue a guard of three hundred men for his person; and should giue knowledge vnto the said Gouernour of his iourney, before he entred into the Emperours Countries, the which hee must passe for to goe thither. Now the Citie was situated in the middest of a very great Lake, in the which were many Ilands, wherein there were an infinite number of houses of pleasure, and it had beene alwaies a very delicate place, where the Kings of China were wont to recreate themselues in all kindes of pleasures that were there to be found: in so much as this barbarous King did not respect the conditions propounded vnto him, so as he might make his abode there, as it were in an Hermitage. Hauing left vnto his brother the gouernment of his whole Kingdome, through the displeasure he had of his bondage whereunto he was brought; a courage certainly magnanimous, and worthie a Nation made ciuill with the best learning, and vnworthie the name of a Barbarian wherewith we called him.

The resolution of the meeting betweene Axalla and King of China.

King of *China*s brother succeeds.

Three times in the weeke at Samercand, Tamerlan ministred open iustice vnto the meanest, in his Imperiall Maiestie, a thing which made him beloued of the people ouer whom hee commanded. In the other dayes hee gaue secret audience for the affaires of his Estate, and tooke aduice for matters of importance, which were decided daily in his presence. He had such seueritie in his counsell, that they must needs deale truely before him, and without all passion in discoursing: notwithstanding he alwaies shewed himselfe courteous in his conuersation, and made himselfe both beloued and feared of his people: hee neuer changed his seruants, except they committed great faults against him: of all the seruants of the late Emperour his Vncle he did not change one of them, but hee did withall encrease their estates, making them in this change to feele his liberalitie, which he made strangers for to taste also, vnto whom he was accustomed to giue, to binde them vnto him. He drew great store of money yeerely for tribute of the Moscouite: but he distributed it within the same countrey for to maintayne his authoritie there, winning those for his which might haue hurt him, by meanes of giuing vnto them. Hee had great care of his reuenues, and he had such a readinesse, that he did see his estate from three moneths vnto three moneths within one houre, both the ordinarie and extraordinarie expences, they presented it so well digested vnto him.

The iustice of Tamerlan.

Tamerlan his great liberalitie.

Tamerlan his care of his reuenue.

But

Digitized by Google

But our haſte of other voyages permits not our ſtay here. Onely we will adde, that after all things ordered, Sickneſſe arreſted and Death conquered this great Conquerour: and this Traueller trauelled the way of all fleſh into another world. Preſently after his death they ranne to call his ſonne, who as ſoone as he was come ſhut his eyes, powring out teares, as alſo did all his ſeruants. The Prince Sautochio his eldeſt ſonne, within two houres after was proclaymed Emperour throughout all the whole Armie, and diſpatches were made from all parts to aduertiſe the Gouernours of Prouinces thereof, the Letters being ſigned with the hand of the new Emperour, who hauing aſſembled all the Armie together, hee made an Oration vnto the Captaines and Souldiers, and cauſed them to make a generall muſter, gratifying all the ancient Seruants of the Emperour his Father: he would not diſpoſe of any thing before he had ſeene Prince Axalla, and was ioyned with the Imperiall Armie. This young Prince, when he came vnto this Empire was nineteene yeeres old, hee was faire, and had much of the Emperor his Fathers naturall diſpoſition. They hoped that hee would wiſely (through the good counſell that was about him) maintayne this great Empire: but they feared greatly the young Prince Letrochio his brother (whom his mother loued) would cauſe diuiſions, as it happened in the times of their great grand-father betweene two brethren, who had beene occaſion of the deſtruction of their eſtate, the which was releeued and lifted vp againe vnto his height by the valour of Tamerlan.

The death of the Emperour Tamerlan.

Prince Sautochie proclaymed Emperor and ſigned diſpatches.

Prince Sautochio nineteene yeeres old when he came vnto his Empire.

CHAP. IX.

Reports of CHAGGI MEMET a Perſian of Tabas in the Prouince of * Chilan, touching his Trauels and Obſeruations in the Countrey of the Great Can, vnto M. G. BAPTISTA RAMVSIO.

* or Gilam.

HE ſaid that he had beene at Succuir and Campion, Cities of the Prouince of Tanguth, in the entrance of the State of Grand Can, who (ſaid he) was called Daimir Can, and ſent his Officers to the gouernment of the ſaid Cities, which are the firſt toward the Muſlemans, and are Idolaters. He went thither with a Carauan, which went with merchandiſes out of Perſia, and from the places adioyning to the Caſpian Sea, for the Regions of Cataio; which Carauan they permit not to pierce further then Succuir and Campion, nor any other Merchant therein, except he goe Ambaſſadour to the great Can.

Succuir and Campion mentioned by M. Polo.

No paſſing into the Countrey.

This Citie of Succuir is great and populous, with faire houſes of hewen ſtones after our manner; and hath many great Temples with their Idols of ſtone. It is ſituate in a Playne where runne infinite Riuolets; is abundant in victuals of all ſorts, and yeelds ſilke there made of the black Mulberies in great quantitie: hath no Wine growing, but they make a drinke with Hony as it were Ale. Of fruits, by reaſon the Countrey is cold, there grow none but Peares, Apples, Apricocks, Peaches, Melons and Cucumers. Hee ſaid that Rhubard (of this commoditie Memet had brought great ſtore at that time to Venice) growes all ouer the Countrey; but the beſt, in certaine high ſtony Hills neere adioyning, where are many Springs and Woods of diuers ſorts of high Trees, and the Land is of a red colour, and by reaſon of many Raynes and Springs almoſt alway myrie. He ſhewed out of his boſome a picture of the Plant, brought out of the Countrey (which Ramuſio in his Preface to M. Polo hath alſo preſented with this diſcourſe) the deſcription of which is this. The leaues, he ſaid, are ordinarily two ſpans long, more or leſſe as the Plant is in bigneſſe; narrow below and broad aboue, downy with (as it were) ſmall hayres in their circumference; the ſtalke or trunke is greene foure fingers high, and ſometimes a ſpan from the ground: the greene leaues with age grow yellow and ſpread on the ground. In the midſt of the trunke growes a thin branch with flowres faſtned within, like the Mamole violets in forme, but of the colour of Milke and Azure, and greater then thoſe violets, of a noyſome ſent. The roote within ground is a ſpan or two long, of a tawny colour in the barke, ſome as bigge as a mans thigh or legge, out of which grow little Roots or Sprigs, which ſpread in the ground, and are cut away from the great Roote; which within is yellow with many veynes of faire red, full of red and yellow juyce, cleauing to the fingers and making the hand yellow: and being cut in peeces the viſcous juyce iſſueth out and the roote becomes light; they lay them therefore on boords turning them vp and downe diuers times a day, that the juyce ſhould incorporate therein, leſt it loſe the goodneſſe; after foure or ſix dayes hanging them to drie in the winde, where the Sunne may not come at them, being in two moneths drie and perfect. They ordinarily take it out of the ground in the Winter, the vertue being then moſt vnited in the Roote (the Spring there beginning at the end of May) which at other times is diſperſed into the leaues and flowers, that juyce alſo being gone and the roote light and hollow.

Rhubarbe deſcribed.

The Root and Iuyce and preparing.

A cold climate.

They ſell one of their Cart lodes of Roots with leaues for ſixteene ſiluer Saggi (not much vnlike ours) for they haue no Coynes, but make their gold and ſiluer in ſmall thin rods, and thence Six Saggi make an ounce.

cut

Digitized by Google

cut peeces of a Saggio weight, which in ſiluer is twentie Soldi Venetian, and in gold a Ducket and halfe. He ſaid that they would not gather it, if forren Merchants ſhould not come to trade for it, themſelues making no reckoning thereof: and that the Merchants of China and India carry away the greateſt part; who if they ſhould cut and dreſſe it as before is expreſſed, after it is brought in Carts, in foure or ſix dayes it would corrupt; and ſeuen burdens greene (hee ſaid) would not yeeld aboue one drie. When it is greene it is intolerably bitter; and in Cataio they vſe it not for medicine, but beate and mixe it with other odoriferous compoſitions for perfumes to their Idols. In ſome places there is ſuch ſtore that they burne it dryed in ſtead of wood; others giue it their craſed horſes, ſo little doe they eſteeme it in Cataio. But there they much prize another ſmall Roote, which growes in the Mountaines of Succuir, where the Rubard growes, and call it Mambroni cini, very deare, vſed for diſeaſes, thoſe ſpecially of the eyes; nor did he thinke any of it was brought into theſe parts. He ſaid alſo, that in all Cataio they much vſe the leaues of another herb, which they call Chiai Catai, which growes in a place of Catai, called Cacianſu. They boyle it, whether new or drie, and taking off a Beaker or two of that decoction faſting (as hot as can be borne) takes away the Feauer, payne of the Head or Stomack, Back, Ioynts, and other diſeaſes, eſpecially the Gowt, and it is good for digeſtion. They vſe to carry it with them in their Voyages, and will giue a ſack of Rubarb for an ounce of Chiai Catai. And the Cataians ſay, that if our Merchants, Perſians and Frankes, knew the goodneſſe thereof, they would buy no Ramend Cini, ſo they call Rubard. Mambroni cini.

I asked him of his Voyage from thence to Conſtantinople, and hee anſwered mee by Mambre our Interpreter, that hee returned not that way he went with the Carauan, by reaſon that the Greene-head Tartars called Ieſcilbas, ſent an Embaſſador at that time when hee was to come away, with a great company, by the way of Tartaria Deſerta, aboue the Caſpian Sea to the great Turke at Conſtantinople, to make a league againſt the Perſian their common enemie. Whereupon he thought good to come with them, and ſo did to Caffa. I asked of the way he went. He ſaid he ſhould haue returned from Campion to Gauta in ſix dayes (eight Farſencs, each of which is three Italian miles, are a dayes iourney, but on the Hils and Deſarts they goe not halfe ſo much) from Gauta to Succuir in fiue dayes, from Succuir to Camul in fifteene, here the Muſulmans (or Mahumetans) begin: from Camul to Turfon is thirteene. From Turfon they paſſe three Cities, Chialis ten dayes iourney thence, after that Cuchia other ten, and after that Acſu in twentie. From Acſu to Caſcar are other twentie dayes all rough Deſart, all the former way being thorow places inhabited. From Caſcar to Samarcand are fiue and twentie dayes. From Samarcand to Bochara in Coraſſam, fiue; from Bochara to Eri, twentie; from thence to Veremi in fifteene; from Veremi to Caſbin in ſix; thence to Soltania in foure, and thence to Tauris in ſix dayes. The way of the Carauan betwixt Tauris and Campion in Catai.

Now for ſome particulars of thoſe places, he related that Campion is ſubiect to Daimir Can, great Emperor of the Tartars; the Citie placed in a fertile Playne all cultiuated and abundant in prouiſions. They are apparelled in black Cotton cloth, furred in Winter with skins of Wolues and Sheepe if they be poore; the richer with Sables and Marterns of great price. They weare black Bonets ſharpe like a Sugar-loafe; the men rather ſmall then great, wearing beards as we doe, ſpecially a certayne time of the yeere. Their houſes are of ſtone like ours, with two or three lofts, ſlope-roofed, and diuerſly painted, and they haue one ſtreet onely of painters. The great men for magnificence make a great Loft or Pageant, and thereon erect two Tents of ſilke embroydered with gold, ſiluer, pearles, and jewels, and there ſtand with their friends. This they cauſe to bee carried by fortie or fiftie Slaues, and ſo goe thorow the Citie in ſolace. The Gentlemen are carried on a ſimple Pageant, by foure or ſix men without other furniture. There Temples are made like our Churches, ſo great that they may contayne foure or fiue thouſand perſons; and haue in them two Statues, of a Man and a Woman, each fortie foot long, all of one peece, ſtretched on the ground, and all gilded. They haue excellent ſtone cutters. They bring quarry ſtones two or three moneths iourney on ſhod Carts of fortie wheeles very high, drawne by fiue or ſix hundred Horſes and Mules. There are alſo ſmall Images with ſix or ſeuen heads and ten hands, all holding diuers things, one a Serpent, another a Bird, a third a Flower, &c. There are ſome Monaſteries in which liue men of holy life, immured within their houſes that they cannot goe out whiles they liue, and haue victuals euery day brought them. There are innumerable, like our Friars, which goe vp and downe the Citie. They haue a cuſtome, when one of their kindred dyes, to clothe themſelues in white many dayes made of Cotton; their garments are made long to the ground with wide ſleeues. They vſe Printing of their Books, which he thought ſomewhat like thoſe I ſhewed him at M. Thomas Gunnes printing houſe. Their Citie is fortified with a thick wall, within filled with earth, able to carry foure Carts abreſt, with Towres and Artillery as thick as thoſe of the great Turke. The Ditch is wide and drie, but they can make it runne with water at their pleaſure. They haue a kind of very great Oxen with long, thin and with hayre. The Cataians and Idolaters are forbidden to goe out of their Countries, to goe on merchandiſe thorow the World.

Campion deſcribed. Apparell. Bearded men. Houſes. Pageants. Temples and Idols. Huge carriages. Anchorets. Friars. White mourners. Printing. Fortification. Polo and Conti tell of ſuch Oxen.

Beyond the Deſart aboue Coraſſam to Samarcand, and till the Idolatrous Cities, the Ieſcilbas rule,

Digitized by Google

The Ieſelbas or Green-head Tartars.

rule, which are Tartars, Muſulmans, wearing greene ſharpe Turbants of felt, ſo making a difference betwixt them and the Perſians, which weare them red: and betwixt them two for diuerſitie of opinions in Religion are continual warres, and diſagreement about their Confines. Bocara and Samarcand are two Cities of theſe Green-heads, each a Signorie of it ſelfe. They haue three particular ſciences, Chimia (in the ſame ſenſe as here) Limia, to make and cauſe loue, and Simia, to make men ſee that which is not. The moneys which they haue are not Coyned, but euery Gentleman and Merchant makes thin rods of gold and ſiluer, as is before ſaid of Campion and Succuir. In the market place of Campion are euery day many Mountebankes which haue that ſcience of Simia, which compaſſed with a great multitude preſent ſtrange ſights, as to cauſe a man to cut off his arme, or thruſt himſelfe thorow with a ſword, and ſeeme to bee all bloudy, with other like.

Chimia, Simia, Limia.

Prating mountebanks and luggling knaues.

CHAP. X.

A Treatiſe of China and the adioyning Regions, written by GASPAR DA CRVZ a Dominican Friar, and dedicated to SEBASTIAN King of Portugall : here abbreuiated.

§. I.

Of Camboia and the Bramenes there; the cauſe of his going to China : Of China and the neighbouring Regions.

Camboia. Siam. Champa.

BEing in Malaca building an houſe of my Order, and preaching, was informed that in the Kingdome of Camboia (which is ſubiect to the King of Siam, and lyeth toward the parts of China, and doth confine with Champa, whence commeth the moſt precious Calambach) was great oportunitie to preach the Goſpell, and to reape ſome fruit. Hauing leaue of my Prelate, I tooke the iourney in hand. And after the paſſing many troubles and hunger in the iourney, with dangers and ſickneſſes, I came a land, and after I had reaſonably informed my ſelfe by a third perſon, conuerſing with the People and with the Fathers, euen before I knew it I found all to the contrary of that which they had told, and that all were deceits of the ſimple Laytie, which of light matters were mooued to preſume of the people that which was not in them. And beſides this, I found many hinderances for the obtayning of my deſires and intent; for firſt, the King is a Bramene, and the Bramenes are his principall men and his fauourites, and moſt familiar, becauſe they are Witches, for they are much giuen to bee pleaſed with witchcrafts, and they doe nothing without conſulting the Witches and Bramenes that are in the Kingdome (for by this meanes they thriue) by the Deuill. And ſo the firſt thing that the King asked me, was if I were a Witch.

King of Camboia a Bramene.

Probar miſſur. Pralocuſſur.

The Bramenes doe worſhip among others one God, which they call Probar miſſur (which they ſaid made the Heauens and the Earth; and another God, which they call Pralocuſſar, this alſo hauing obtayned power of another which they call Praiſſur, for to giue this licence to Probar miſſur) and I ſhewed them, that not onely he had not made the Heauen and the Earth, but that hee had beene a very wicked man and a great ſinner: wherefore theſe Prieſts ſaid, that they would worſhip him no more, hauing worſhipped him thitherto with their God Praput praſar metri: whereupon the hatred of the Bramenes increaſed towards me, and from thence forward I had diſfauours of the King, which was mooued for the zeale of his God, and the God of his Bramenes. There met about theſe matters, the Prieſts of the Idols, and all of their troupe, which goe for Prieſts, and hold themſelues for religious men, and in their conuerſation and life they are ſeparated from all other people, which to my thinking is the third part of the people of the Land; the King thereof ſetting an hundred thouſand men in the field. This religious people, or that holds it ſelfe for ſuch, are exceedingly proud and vaine, and aliue they are worſhipped for gods, in ſort that the inferiour among them doe worſhip the ſuperiour like gods, praying vnto them and proſtrating themſelues before them: and ſo the common people haue a great confidence in them, with a great reuerence and worſhip: in ſort that there is no perſon that dare contradict them in any thing, and their wordes among them are held for ſo ſacred, that in no wiſe they will endure to be gainſayed. Inſomuch that it hapned ſometimes whiles I was preaching, many round about me hearing me very well, and ſatisfying themſelues of that which I ſaid vnto them; if there came any of theſe Prieſts, and ſaid this is good, but ours is better, they would all depart and leaue me alone. Further, they being very ignorant preſumed to be very wiſe, and the common people did hold them for ſuch, all their knowledge being ignorances and Heatheniſh follies.

Praput praſar mitri.

Men aliue worſhipped.

They

Digitized by Google

They make seuen and twenty Heauens, some where there is meate and drinke and faire women whether they say all liuing things doe goe, euen the Flea and the Lowse, for they say, that as they haue soules, that they must liue in the other World. And to these, they say, all doe goe that are not Religious men as they are. They place others higher, whether they say, their holy Priests doe goe that liue in the Wildernesses, and all the felicitie they giue them there, is to sit refreshing themselues with the wind. They place others yet higher, the gods of the which, they say, haue round bodies like Bowles, those which goe to these Heauens, and the honour which they giue them is, to giue them round bodies as the Gods themselues haue. And euen as they make many Heauens, so they doe many Hels, for they make thirteene, to the which they goe according to the grieuousnesse of the sinnes of euery one, eyther higher or lower.

Twenty seuen Heauens.

Thirteene Hels.

They haue a diuision of their religious men, for some they call Massancraches, which are as supreame, which sit aboue the King: others they call Nascendeches, which are as our Bishoppes here. These sit equall with the King. Others they call Mitires, which are in the common degree of Priests, which do sit vnder the King: vnder the which there are yet two degrees, which they call Chaynizes and Sazes. And all these they ascend in degree, so they doe in vanitie and pride, and are more reuerenced. Besides all this, there is another very great inconuenience, that except the Priests and all those that holds themselues for Religious men, all the rest are slaues of the King, and when the owner of the House dyeth, all that is in it returneth to the King, and let the Wife and Children hide what they can, and begin to seeke a new life: the people of the Countrey is of such a nature, that nothing is done that the King knoweth not: and any bodie be he neuer so simple may speake with the King; wherefore euery one seeketh newes to carry vnto him, to haue an occasion for to speake with him: whereby without the Kings good will nothing can be done, and wee haue already shewed before, that hee is vnwilling to the matter of Christianitie. To these things was joyned some disorders of the Portugals, so that by all meanes I found crosses and inconueniences for to obtayne my desires and my pretence: wherefore I hauing beene in the Countrey about a yeare, and seeing I could make no fruit beside the passing of grieuous sicknesses, I determined to leaue this Countrey, and because they told mee many things of China, and the people of it to haue a disposition to Christianitie, and that they loued reason, I determined, seeing in this Countrey I did no good, nor baptized more then one Gentile, which I left in the Caue, to goe to China in a ship, of China which was then in the Countrey; in which they carryed me with a very good will, giuing me the best roome in the ship, not taking any interest of me; yea, they dealt very charitably with vme. This name China is not the proper name of the people of this Countrey, nor of the Countrey it selfe, neither is there commonly in the Countrey notice of such a name, onely among all the people of India, and among those which dwell in the South parts, as in Malaca, Siam, Iaoa, this denomination of Chinas goeth currant, and also among those Chinas which doe traffique among vs. The proper name of the Countrey is Tame, the e. not well pronounced, but almost drowning it: and the name of the people of the Countrey is Tamgin, whence this name China doth come, which is currant among the strangers we know not, but it may be conjectured, that the people which in old time did sayle to those parts, because they passed by the Coast of a Kingdome, which they call Cauchin-china, and traffique in it, and victuall, and take refreshings there for the Iourney of the Countrey that lyeth forward, which is that of China, in the which Kingdome they liue after the manner of the Chinas, and is subject to the Chinas, it seemeth, that omitting Cauchin, from the denomination of this other Kingdome, they called all the Countrey that lyeth along China.

Massancraches, Nascendeches. Mitires.

* As this word Tame in English

China is a great part of Scythia; for as Herodotus saith, Scythia extendeth it selfe vnto India, which may be vnderstood, because the Chinas did possesse many parts of India, and did conquer them of old time, whereof at this day there are some Monuments, as in the Coast of Choromandell, which is towards the Coast of the Kingdome of Narsinga, on that side which we call Saint Thome, because there is a House built by the Apostle, and the Relikes of his bodie. There is at this day a great Temple of Idols, which is a marke for the Nauigators to know the Coast which is very low, the which as the men of the Countrey affirme, was made by the Chinas, of whom there remayned among them a perpetuall memory, and therefore they call it Pagode, of the Chinas, which is to say, Temple of the Chinas. And in the Kingdome of Callecut, which is the head of Malauar, there be very ancient fruit-trees which the men of the Countrey say were planted by the Chinas, and on the shoales of Chilao, which doe runne from the Iland of Ceylan, toward the Coast of Choromandel, is affirmed, by the men of the Countrey, a great Army of the Chinas to be cast away which came for India, which was lost, because the Chinas were but young in that Nauigation. And so the men of the Countrey say the Chinas were Lords of all Iaoa, and of Iautana, which is the Kingdome of Malaca, Siam, and of Chapaa, as it is commonly affirmed in those parts: wherefore some doe affirme, many of this people to bee like the Chinas, that is, hauing small eyes, flat noses, and long faces, for the great commixture that the Chinas had with all of them, especially with them of Iaoa, which commonly are more China-like. But the King of China seeing that his Kingdome went to decay, and was in danger by their

The Tartars rather set forth fleets from China to these Exploits as in Polo you reade.

Digitized by Google

their seeking to conquer other strange Countreyes, he with-drew himselfe with his men to his owne Kingdome, making a publike Edict vnder paine of death that none of the Countrey should sayle out of the Kindome of China: the which lasteth to this day.

Liquos an Iland

The Liquos are not continued with mayne Land, but it is an Iland which standeth in the Sea of China, little more or lesse then thirtie leagues from China it selfe. In this Iland liue these people, which is a well disposed people, more to the white then browne. It is a cleanly and well attyred people; they dresse their haire like women, and tye it on the side of their head, fastened with a siluer bodkin; their grounds are plentifull of many and good waters; it is a people that sayle very seldome being in the middest of the Sea. They weare good short Swords, they were in times past subiect to the Chinas, with whom they had great conuersation, therefore are very like the Chinas. Now this Iland remayning to the Sea from China, as we haue said, the Coast of China runneth, winding from the Prouince of Cantano, and from her Coast vnto the Coast of the Prouince of Nanquin, whether to the Portugals haue sayled, the Coast making neuer a point as the Maps doe make, the which may be seene well pointed in the Sea-cards and in the Maps made among the Portugals.

The Tartars are reckoned among the Scythians, and runne so far along China, with the which it hath continuall Warre, that commonly they affirme to haue betweene the Chinas and the Tartarians, a Wall of an hundred leagues in length. And some will affirme to bee more then a hundred leagues: the first Kingdome that doth confine with it on the Sea-side of India, is one that is called Cauchin-china, which hath about an hundred leagues little more or lesse a long the Sea-coast, the Sea maketh a great entrance betweene it and the Ile Daman, which is of fiftie leagues in length, and is already of the Chinas: and in the end of this entrance this Kingdome abutteth with the Kingdome of China, and is subiect to the King of China. The people of this Kingdome in their Habit, Policie, and Gouernment, doe vse themselues like the people of China. The Countrey is much inhabited and of much people, it is also a very plentifull Countrey. They haue the same Writing that the Chinas haue, although their speech be diuers. Beyond this Kingdome of the Cauchin-chinas, lyeth another very great Kingdome, which runneth within the Land along China, which some doe call Laos, and others Siones, Maons: this by the other side towards India, doth confine with the Kingdome of Camboia, and with the great Kingdome of Syam, and with the rich Kingdome of Pegu, with all the which Kingdomes it hath Traffique: in sort that there remayneth to this Kingdome towards the Sea of India, all the Coast of Pegu, vnto the ends of the Kingdome of Champaa, which doth confine with Cauchin-china. And so there remayne to these Laos toward the side of the Indian Sea, the great Kingdome of Pegu, the Kingdome of Tanaçarin, and that of Quedaa, and that of Malaca, and the Kingdomes of Pan, of Patane, of Syam, of Camboia, and of Champaa which abutteth vpon the Cauchin-chinas. This Kingdome of the Laos, or Sions Maons, was subdued by the Bramas (of the which we will speake presently) in the yeere of fiftie sixe, and among some which they brought captiue to Pegu, they brought some Chinas which the Laos held Captiues, as one George Mello affirmed vnto mee, which went for Captayne of the Voyage to Pegu. And though commonly there be no Warres betweene these Laos and the Chinas, because of the great Mountaynes that are betweene them, on the which the Chinas haue good forces on that side in the Prouince of Camsi, which doth confine with these and with the Bramas: and in the forces they haue continually men in Garrison for the defence of those parts: there bee notwithstanding, continually assaults on the one side and of the other: whereby the Laos might haue some Chinas captiue. Before that these Laos were subdued by the Bramas, they carryed to Sion, to Camboia, and to Pegu some very good Muske and Gold, whereof is affirmed to be great store in that Countrey, and these people hauing Muske, makes a conjecture the great store of Muske which the Chinas haue; they get it from the many beasts that are in the Confines of this Kingdome in the Prouince of Camsi, from whence they bring it.

Cauchin china.

Duman an Iland.

Laos, or Siones Maons.

1559.

Muske what it is.

The Muske is the flesh and bloud of certayne beasts, which they say, to be as bigge as Foxes, the which beaten with strokes and killed, they tye the skinne with the flesh together in lumps, the which they cut after the flesh is rotten, and so they sell it, which the Portugals do call Muske Cods. And when it commeth fresh, presently it appeareth to be rotten flesh and bloud: the rest they sell loose, holding these Cods for the finer Muske. Returning to the Laos, whereof we were speaking, these be the Wares which they brought to the aboue-said Kingdomes, carrying in returne Cotton-clothes and other things they had need of. This people is not very browne, they weare their haire all cut round vnderneath, and all the rest aboue ruffled, raysing it many times vpward with their hands, that it remayneth to them like a Cap, and serueth in stead of one, for they weare nothing on their heads: they goe naked from the middle vpward, and from the hips downward, they weare certayne Cotton-clothes girt about them all white: the women goe couered from the brests to the halfe legge: they haue their faces some-what like the Chinas, they haue the same Heathenish Ceremonies that the Pegus and Siones, and the Camboias: The Priests of their Idols doe weare yellow clothes girt about as the rest of the people, and a certayne manner of yellow Copes, with certayne folds and seames in which they hold their Superstitions.

Of

Of this people I saw many in Camboia, which remayned there the yeere before by the way of Traffique, and that yeare that I was there, they came not because of the Warres, wherein (as I said) they said they were subdued by the Bramas.

These Laos came to Camboia, downe a Riuer many dajes Iournie, which they say, to haue his beginning in China, as many others which runne into the Sea of India: it hath eight, fifteene, and twentie fathome waters, as my selfe saw by experience in a great part of it: it passeth through many vnknowne and desart Countries of great Woods and Forrests, where there are innumerable Elephants, and many Buffes, of which I saw many wild in that Countrie, and Merus, which is like a good Mule, and certayne beasts which in that Countrie they call Badas: of the which the Male haue a pointlesse and blunt Horne in their fore-head, and some of the Hornes are spotted with singular colours, and others all blacke, others of a waxe colour, but they haue no vertue, but only for the Hemorroides, or Piles: and after the Elephant there is no other greater beast, the haire of it is browne and footed like an Elephant, the head like a Cow, and it hath a great lumpe of flesh that falleth vpon his head, whereof I did eate trauelling in those parts. There are also many other wilde Beastes. There bee some Thorny Trees, like Limons and Orenges, and many wilde Grapes through the Woodes. When these Laos doe returne to their Countrie, going against the streame, they goe in three moneths. This Riuer causeth a wonder in the Land of Camboia, worthy of reciting. Comming neere to a place which they call Chudurmuch, which is twelue leagues from the principall Citie of Camboia, it maketh a passage to another Riuer which commeth from a great Lake, that is in the vttermost parts of Camboia, and hath Siam, on the other side: in the middest of the which his bignesse being great, yee can see no Land on neither-side, and this Riuer passeth by Loech, which is the principall Citie of Camboia, vnto Chudurmuch: the waters of this Riuer, which is also verie great, the most of them doe passe to the Riuer that commeth from the Laos, neere to Chudurmuch, and the rest doe run downe the Riuer directly to the Sea, when the great Winter floudes doe come, which happen when it raines not in the Countries of Camboia. The many waters which doe come by the Riuer that commeth from the Laos, which there they call Sistar, doe make a passage right against Chudurmuch, to the Riuer that passeth through Loech, with so great furie, that where the waters of Loech did run downward, by multitude of the other that entreth into it, they are turned backe and run vpward with a great current, in sort that it ouerfloweth all the Countrie of Camboia, whereby all the Countrie is not trauelled in the time of these flouds, but in Boates, and they make their Houses all with high lofts, and vnderneath they are all ouerflowne, and sometimes these flouds are so high, that they are forced to make higher Roomes with Canes to keepe their houshold-stuffe in, and to lodge themselues. This Riuer runneth vpward from July to September, and with the passing from the Riuer that commeth from the Laos, (or from the Riuer Sistor, which is his proper name) of so many waters to the Riuer of Loech, it doth not leaue his running to the Sea, making below verie great armes, and goeth verie high ouer-flowing many Countries downward, but not so much as aboue. The Portugals did shew mee in Loech a field, a great hill of Earth, ouer the which they affirmed that in the time of the flouds a great ship that was made in the Countrie did passe without touching, which ship might well haue sayled from India to Portugall.

Riuer of the Laos.

Merus are a kind of wild Asses.

Badas are the Rhinoceroses: by the fore-head vnderstand the face; for the horne is lower then the fore-head.

Chudurmuch.

Loech.

Sistor.

Strange ouer-flow, a fresh Riuer running vp without Sea-force.

Beyond these Laos, follow the Brames, which is a great people, and very rich of Gold and Precious stones, chiefly of Rubies. It is a proud Nation and valiant, these are now Lords of Pegu, which subdued it by force of Armes some yeares before they subdued the Laos, they are men of good complexion, and well made, they are browne. They haue Pegu and part of Bengala toward the Sea of India. It is a Countrey very scarce of victuals, they apparell themselues as we said of the Laos, but that their clothes are fine, and many do weare them painted or wrought: they are also somewhat like the Chinas in the faces, they haue very rich and gallant shippings garnished with Gold, in the which they sayle in the Riuers: they vse Vessels of Gold and of Siluer, their Houses are of Timber very well wrought, the Kingdome is very great, they haue not commonly warre with the Chinas, because of the great Mountaynes that are betweene the one and the other, and because the Chinas are well fortified on that side: notwithstanding this, sometimes there are Robbers on the one side, and the other that doe make assaults, whereby the Chinas haue some Bramas Captiues, as some Portugals which were Captiues in those parts, which saw them did affirme, and did speake with them in the great Citie of Camsi: and these slaues told them, that from thence it was not very farre to Brama, and that in Pegu, they had seene Portugals.

The Brames.

There followeth along the China beyond the Bramas, the Kingdome of the Patanes, which now are Lords of Bengala, and after them the Mogores. Beyond these Mogores there runneth along the China, the Tartarians, which doe extend themselues from Mogor to the Lake Meotis and the Riuer Thanais, which is a very great Kingdome and of much and innumerable people. This people are commonly red and not white, they goe naked from the waste vpward, they eate raw flesh, and anoint themselues with the bloud of it: whereby commonly they are stinking and haue an ill sent.

The Patanes.

Digitized by Google

An old man of China did affirme vnto me, that sometimes when they came against the Countries of China, if the wind stood on that side where they came, they were discerned by their smell: and when they goe to warre they carry the flesh raw vnder them for to eate, they eate it in this manner, and anoint themselues with the bloud to make themselues the more sturdie and strong, and to prouoke themselues to crueltie in the Warre: these also fight on Horseback with Bowes and Arrowes, and vse short Swords. With these is the continuall Warre of the Chinas, and as I haue said the Chinas haue an hundred leagues (others saying there are more) of a Wall betweene them and the other, where are continually Garrisons of men for the defence of the entries of the Tartarians. It may bee beleeued that this Wall is not continued, but that some Mountaynes or Hils are intermixt betweene; for a Lord of Persia affirmed to me, that the like Workes were in some parts of Persia, with intermixing some Hils and Mountaynes.

Wall of China.

It was affirmed to the Portugals which were Captiues, and in Prison in their Dungeons, in the yeare 1550. that some yeares there is Truce betweene the Chinas and the Tartarians: and in the same yeare the Tartarians made a great entry in China, in the which they tooke a very principall Citie from them: but a great number of people of the Chinas comming and besieging the Citie, and not being able to enter it by force of Armes, by the Councell of a man of low degree, they had a meanes whereby they killed them and their Horses, and remayned Lords againe of the Citie. The same Portugals which afterward were set at libertie, affirmed, that all the Prisoners made great Feasts, and made a great stirre when the Tartarians made this entry, with the hope of being set at liberti6 by the meanes of the Tartarians, if they did possesse China.

Tartarians rodes into China.

In the Citie of Cantan I saw many Tartarians Captiues, which haue no other captiuitie then to serue for men at Armes in other places farre from Tartarie, and they weare for a difference red Caps, in all the rest they are like the Chinas with whom they liue: they haue for their maintenance a certayne stipend of the King, which they haue paid them without faile. The Chinas call them Tatos, for they cannot pronounce the Letter r. Aboue the Lake where Thanais hath his beginning, they doe confront with the skirts of high Almayne, although on the side of Europe, and betweene them and Almayne are Hils that doe diuide them: and of these people of the skirts of the Mountaines, the Chinas say that the King of China hath many men of Warre in pay, that doe keepe the weake passages and the Wals on the side of the Tartarians: and say, they are great men with great Beards, and weare cut Hose, and Caps, and blunt Swords, and a Portugall that was carryed captiue the Land inward, told me that he heard the Chinas say, that they called these * Alimenes.

See Pinto.
* Here followed the diuision of the Countrey into shires or Kingdomes, with their Cities, &c. which wee referre to later and better Intelligence.

§. II.

Cantan described; the publike and priuate buildings and Gouernment. The shipping and Husbandry of China; their contempt of the idle, and prouision for impotent poore.

BEeing to intreate of the Citie of Cantan, I giue first a warning to the Readers, that among many Noble Cities, Cantan is one lesse Noble then many of China; and farre inferiour in building then many other: although it be more populous then many; this is said by all them that saw it, and trauelled within the Land, where they saw many other. This aduice presupposed, it is to be noted, that Cantan in his compasse, is of very strong Wals, very well made, and of a good height, and to the sight they seeme almost new, beeing eighteene hundred yeares since they were made, as the Chinas did affirme: they are very cleane without any cleft, hole, or rift, or any thing threatning ruine. They are of free stone about a mans height, and from thence vpward of brickes made of a clay like vnto that of the Porcelane Dishes, whence it causeth them to bee so strong, that I building a Chappell in Malaca, one of these (which was brought from China) could scarsly bee broken with a good Pick-axe. Iointly with this there is in this Citie and in all the rest an Officer of the King which onely hath care to ouer-see the Wals, for the which he hath a good stipend. And euery yeare when the Gouernour of the Borders commeth to visit the Prouince, hee doth visit this as well as the other Officers, to know if he doth well his Office, and finding him in any fault, or negligence, hee is put from his Office, and punished. And if he standeth in need of any expence for the mending of the Walls, the Ouer-seer of the Rents is bound to giue him that which is necessarie, vnder paine, that if the mending remayneth vndone, he shall bee well punished. For this cause the Wals of all the Cities are continually kept sound and in good reparation. These Walles are within the Citie little more then the walke of the same Citie in their height, which is the cause of beeing much more cooler. The Wals haue in compasse 12350. paces, and it hath eighty three Bulwarks.

The wals of Cantan.

This

This Citie (and so all the rest) hath on the one side the Riuer, along the which, as well this as the rest are built almost in a Valley; and on the other side they haue a Ditch full of water of a good breadth, betweene the which and the wall remayneth a good distance where there may runne together a good troupe of people, and the Earth that was taken out of the Ditch, was cast betweene it and the wall, whereby the foot of the wall remayneth a great deale higher then the other ground. Besides the ditch, notwithstanding, this wall hath a great blemish, for it hath on the contrarie side to the Riuer without the wals, and the ditch a little Hillocke that discouereth all the Citie within the wals. The Riuer and Town-ditch.

This wall hath seuen gates: the entries of the which are sumptuous and high, strong and well made, with Pinacles aboue, not square but made like steps. The other places of the wals haue no Pinacles: the wall at the entring of the gates is twelue paces thicke: the gates are all ouer plated with Iron, and all of them haue their draw-bridges very strong, which are alwayes vp, and are neuer let downe, but are ready against they be needfull: all the gates at the entrings haue Courts, and the Courts that are toward the side of the Suburbs, which lyeth along the Riuer haue euery one three gates, one in the front and two on the sides, which remayne for the seruice of streets that lye along the wall, the wals of the Courts are almost of the height of them within: the gate which is in the front in the Court, is like vnto that of the wals within: it hath also a draw-bridge; the gates which are in the side of the Courts are small. The Courts that are on the other-side of the field where no Suburbe is, haue no more but one gate, and this not right against that of the wals, but stand on the one side: the streets of the Citie are all drawne by a Line very straight without any manner of making a nooke or winding: all the crosse wayes are as straight as the streets: in sort that there is neyther street nor trauerse that maketh any turning. All the streets and trauerses are very well paued, the pauements going along the Houses, and lower in the middest for the course of water: the principall streetes haue triumphant Arches which doe crosse them, high and very well made, which make the streets very beautifull, and enoble the Citie: the principall streets haue along the Houses close Portals, in the which and vnder the Arches many things are sold. The Gates. Draw-bridges. Gate-courts. Strait streets and paued.

The Houses of them which rule the Countrey, are at the entrings very sumptuous, with high Portals, great and well wrought of Masons worke: they haue in the fore-front very great gates like the gates of a Citie, with two Gyants painted with Clubs in their hands: I saw foure in one Pagode, (which is a Temple of Idols) drawne naturally from some which they say, the King hath to keepe his weakest passages from Tartaria. They are of great members, of about twelue or thirteene spans high. On the street side it hath right against the principall Porch a * receite not very great. It hath built along the street a good wall of a good height right against the gate, that when the gate is open they that are within may not be gazed on by them that goe by the street: this gate serueth not, neither is it opened but for dispatching of matters of Iustice, and the principall of the House goe in and out at them; and others that are as honourable or more then they: at the one side of this principall gate is another very great gate, but not so big as the principall, which is for the seruice of the House, and of the Prisoners when the principall gate is shut: and when this principall gate is shut, they set a glued Paper crosse ouer both the leaues, on which is written the name or firme of the principall of the House, and for to open it againe, an Officer of the House bringeth the same firme or marke on a playstered board to the Porter, that hee may open it, without the which token hee may not open it vnder a great punishment. Houses of Magistrates. * Or little Court.

Entring by this gate, there is a great Court and almost square, which is almost a Horse-race, and it hath a Gallery little lesse then the length of the gate, which leadeth straight from the gate to a very great Table that stands at the end of the Court, the which is all paued with square stones with leanings as high as a mans waste, and it is high in the entry of the gate, and there remayneth onely one step in the end of it to the Table, and the course in the sides of the Gallery is low, that they goe downe to it by steps: this Gallery of the middest is of such respect among them, that in no wise it is lawfull for any one to passe through it, but onely some of the chiefest of the House, or others as great or greater then they: and those that goe to negotiate with the Officer of the House when they enter in at the gate, they must goe presently to one side, going downe to the Court which hath very great Trees for shaddow, and they goe vp againe by steps vnto the Table aboue-said, which is at the end of the Court, which is very great. In the end of this Table in all his length there is a step, and within the step a very great walke, all paued with square stones as the Table without it, and very high and all wrought with Masons worke: in the middest of it leaning to the wall of the front are two Chaires, with two Tables before them, a little distant the one from the other, one of them, which stands on the left hand, serueth for the Gouernour of that house, and that of the right hand is void, for if there should come another of a higher dignitie then hee, to sit him downe. To euery one of the sides there are two spaces which runne behind this Gouernour, and are of a good breadth, hauing placed along the sides of these two spaces in euery one fiue Chaires with fiue Tables before them, and as the distance from them to the principall Gouernour is good, they remayne though behind, Sanctitie of Courts, and reuerence of high Magistrates.

Digitized by Google

in sight of the principall Gouernour. These serue for ten Assistants which are with the principall at the dispatching of waightie matters. From these Galleries inward are great Lodgings, as well for the Gouernour of the House, as for the Assistants, and for all the other Ministers and Officers of the House, which are many, as we will shew in their place.

Great Prisons. On euery side of the Court are very great Prisons and great Lodgings, as well for the Iaylours (which also are of great authoritie) as for the Watches that watch by night and by day, but neither these Prisons nor the Chambers of the Ministers of them, nor the Lodgings of the chiefe of the House are seene outward, for they are serued of all things, the doores shut and haue continually their Porters. There are in Cantan foure of these Houses for foure principall Officers, and in euery Prouince in the Citie, that is, the Head of the Prouince there are fiue of these Houses: in Cantan there are but foure; for as the Gouernour of Cantan is also Gouernour of Cansi, he is not resident in Cantan, but in a Citie that is in the Borders of one of the Prouinces, that the recourse in the Affaires of both the Prouinces may be the easier. Besides, these principall Houses of the chiefe Gouernours, there are many other in Cantan, the which though they bee not of so great Maiestie as they, they are notwithstanding very great, of other inferiour Officers, and chiefly those of the chiefe Iaylour which are very great. There is on the wals of Cantan, on the contrary side of the Riuer a high Towre all close behind, that they which are in it may not bee seene, nor gazed on from the Hillocke or Mount aforesaid, that was without the wals, and it is built in length along the wall, so that it is longer then broad, and it is all made in Galleries very sumptuous, from whence they discouer all the Citie, and the Marshes and Fields beyond the Riuer, which serueth for the recreation of them that rule. In the other Cities are such buildings which serue for recreation, many and very sumptuous, and of singular building.

Priuate houses. The Houses of the common people in the outward shew, are not commonly very faire, but within are much to be admired; for commonly they are white as Milke, that they seeme like sleeked Paper, they are paued with square stones: along the ground, of a spanne little more or lesse, they are dyed with Vermilion, or almost blacke; the Timber is all very smooth and euen, and finely wrought and placed, that it seemeth to be all polished, or dyed, or in white, and some there is in white so faire and pleasant to the sight, waued Damaske-like, as it were Gold, and so bright that they should doe it injurie in painting it. I confesse, in truth, that I neuer saw so fine Timber as that. It hath after the House that is at the entrie, a Court with solaces of small Trees; and Bowers with a faire little Fountayne: and then at the entring of the House where the women doe with-draw themselues, it hath a certaine manner of a Gallery open before towards the Court, where they haue verie great Cubboards finely wrought, which takes the one square of the House, in the which they haue their Oratories, and Gods made of Wood, or of Clay: these Oratories are more or lesse curious according to the abilitie of euerie one: all the Houses are tiled with very good Tiles, better, and of more continuance then ours: for besides, they being well made, they are of verie good Clay: those which receiue the water are broad and short, and the vppermost that close, the other are narrower, and at the ends toward the street side, they are garnished with fine Workes made of Lime: for many yeares they haue no need to be tiled againe, for as the Clay is very good, they are not so mouldring as ours, or so rough, but they are very smooth and warme, and beeing so well set, they breed no filthinesse. There bee many Houses faire within, and very few with Lofts, the most are low Houses.

Temple and Mesquit. Suburbes. They haue in the middest of the Citie a Temple of Idols with high Towres, the wals of the which we will speake of hereafter: they haue their Mesquit with Alcoran very high with his Pinacle on the top. The Suburbes without are very great and of many Houses, in such sort that some Portugals would haue compared them in bigneſse with them of Lisbon, but to mee and to others they seemed lesse, though they bee bigger and of more Houses then the Citie within the wals.

Store of people. It is very populous, and the people is so much, that at the entring of the gates on the Riuer side yee can scarce get through. Commonly the people that goeth out and in, doe cry and make a great noyse to giue place to them that carrie burthens.

Victuals. And the Rulers of the Citie commanding to enquire what victuals were spent euery day, it was found to spend only fiue or sixe thousand Porkes, and ten or eleuen thousand Duckes; besides which, they eate great store of Beeues and Buffes, and many Hens, and an infinite deale of fish, whereof the Markets and streets are full, and many Frogs and Shel-fish, great store of Fruits and all other Pulse. Hereby little more or lesse may be seene what people are in Cantan, and whether it may bee compared with Lisbon.

Suburbes. The Houses of the Suburbes are like those of the wals within; the streetes are so well and leuelled by Line as those within, and all for the most part paued also, and some of them are verie broad, and haue triumphant Arches, but very few. Some streets, as well without as within the wals, on the one side and the other along the Houses, haue Trees for to make shadowes. In all the Suburb-gates. streets of the Suburbs at the ends of them are gates with speciall Porters, whose Office is to locke them euery night vnder paine of sore punishment, and euery street hath a Constable and a Iayle. He stands bound, either to yeeld the Malefactor which by night doth any harme in the street, are to pay for it; wherefore all the streets haue euery night a watch, the Neighbours diuiding uiding themselues in quarters: and they make euery night sixe quarters or watches, and for a signe that they are awake, in euery street they sound a Drumme, where they haue all the night a Lanthorne with a light. The gates of the Citie are shut as soone as it is night, and on the two leaues is set a paper, with the chiefe Captaines marke on euery one of them, and they are opened with the Sunne, with a token from the same Captaine to them all, with his marke written on a white boord. Euery gate hath a Captaine, a very honest man, and euery one hath certaine Souldiers, which continually doe watch euery one of the Gates by day and by night. Watches.

In some Cities the water runneth almost thorow euery street; and on the one side and the other of the street are Tables made of stone, for the common seruice of the people: and thorow all the streets are very good and well wrought Bridges to passe from one side to another: and thorow the middest of the streets is great trafficke by water that goe from one place to another. In those places whereby the water entreth into the Citie, they haue made in the walls very good gates, which haue very strong Iron grates for to shut by night: and the most of the streets to the land inward are very well paued with stone, and (where is no stone) with small tyle. In all the Mountaines and Hills where there are wayes, they are very well made, cut with the Pick-axe, and paued where they are needfull. This is one of the good works of China, and it is very generall in euery place of it. Many Hills on the side of the Bramas, and of the Laos, are cut in steps, very well made; and in the height of the Hill is made a low place, very well cut; in the which is a very high Towre, which aboue doth equall with the highest of the Mountain, which is very strong, the wall of one of the Towres was measured at the entring of the gates, and it was sixe fathome thicke and an halfe. There are on this side many of these workes, and so there may be in other places. I heard of a Gentleman of credit, called Galiote Perera, Brother to the chiefe Iustice of Arrayolos, which abode in Canfi, being Captiue, that (with the houses of these kinsmen of the King, being so many and so great) the Citie was so bigge that it seemed they occupied very little of it, and make a very little show in it: and so he had it written in a Rudder of his, whence I tooke a great deale * of that which is heere spoken of: in such sort that the greatnesse of the Citie did hide in it selfe the multitude and greatnesse of these houses. Here followed much of other Cities; but because the Author saw them not, but receiued his intelligence from Pereta, I referre you to him. Other China Cities. High-wayes. Galiote Perera. * Which is therefore here omitted.

As in the Countrey there is great store of Timber and very cheape, and much Iron and cheap, and it is very good, there are infinite number of ships and shippings; for through the Countrey are infinite Groues of Firre trees, and other trees, whereby it is easie for any one though of a little substance, to make a ship and haue shippings, and this causeth the great profit and gayne that is of them with the necessitie the Countrey hath of them: for it hath not onely a great number of Ilands alongst the coast, but also a very great coast where they Nauigate: and besides this, all China within is nauigated, and runne through Riuers which doe cut and water it all, which are many and very great. So that yee may sayle to the ends of the Land, and goe in shippings. Any Captaine along the coast may in a little space ioyne two hundred, three hundred, euen to a thousand ships, if hee stand in need for to fight. And there is no small Towne along the Riuer that is not plentifull in small and great ships. Along the Citie of Cantan, more then halfe a league off the Riuer, is so great a multitude of shipping, that it is a wonderfull thing to see them, and that which is most to wonder, is that, that this multitude neuer decreaseth nor fayleth almost all the yeere: for if thirty, forty, or an hundred goe forth one day, as many doe come in againe the next: I say, the multitude neuer to diminish nor fayle, for though sometime there be more, some lesse, alwaies there remayneth a maruellous multitude: and that which is more, all those that goe forth, goe laden; and all that come in, come laden; carrying goods, and bringing goods: and that which sheweth much the nobleneſse of the Countrey, the plentie and riches thereof is, that all these ships bringing great store of merchandise of Clothes, Silkes, prouisions and other goods, some doe goe into the Land, others come from within the Land, and nothing commeth form without China, neither goeth out of it: and that which the Portugals doe carrie, and some that they of Syam doe carrie, is so little in compatison of the great trafficke of the Countrey, that it almost remayneth as nothing, and vnperceiued; seeing that out of China there goeth no more but that which the Portugals, and they of Syam doe carrie; which is as much as though they brought nothing out of China, fiue or sixe ships comming laden with Silke and Porcelane: the great plentie and riches of the Countrey doth this, that it can sustayne it selfe alone: Pepper and Iuorie which is the principall that the Portugals doe carrie, a man may well liue without it, and the trafficke of merchandise that is in this Countrie, is in all the Cities within the Land, which as we haue said, are almost all built along the Riuers. The Chinas haue a common speech for to shew the nobleneſse of their Kingdome, that the King of China can make a Bridge of ships from China vnto Malaca, which are neere fiue hundred leagues, the which though it seemeth it cannot be, yet by Metaphor it signifieth the greatnesse of China, and the multitude of ships that of it selfe it can make. State of shipping. Riches of China in it selfe. Prouerb.

The great ships they call Iunks; besides which there are ships for warre, made like great ships, to the which they make great Fore-castles and high, and likewise abafte, to fight from them: in such manner that they ouer-master their aduersaries, and because they vse no Ordnance, all Iunkes for war and for trade. Ship-fights. No Ordnance.

Digitized by Google

their vse is to come many together, and compassing the aduersaries ship, they boord it: and at the first on-set they cast a great deale of Lime to blinde the aduersaries, and as well from the Castles as from the tops they cast many sharpe pikes burned at the end, which serue for Top-darts, of a very stiffe wood; they vse also great store of stone, and the chiefest they labour for, is to breake with their ships the dead workes of their aduersaries, that they may be masters ouer them, hauing them vnder them, and being destitute of any thing to shelter them: and as soone as they can enter, they come to the Pike or handy-blowes, for the which they haue long Pikes, and broad-pointed Swords hanging at their sides. There bee other Iunkes for lading of goods, but they are not so high as those of warre, though there bee some very great. All these ships as well of warre as of burthen vse two Oares a-head: they are very great, and foure or fiue men doe rowe euery one of them, laying them along the ship they moue them with such a sleight, that they make the ship goe forward, and they helpe very much for to goe out and in at a barre, and setting vpon the enemies for to boord them; they call these Oares, Liosties: in all manner of their shippings they vse the Liosties, neither doe they vse any other manner of Oares in any kinde of shipping. There be other lesser shippings then Iunkes, somewhat long, called Bancones, they beare three Oares on a side, and rowe very well, and loade a great deale of goods: there be other lesse, called Lanteas, which haue sixe or seuen oares on a side, which doe rowe very swift, and beare a good burthen also: and these two sorts of ships, viz. Bancones and Lanteas, because they are swift, the theeues doe commonly vse. The rowing of these Oares is standing, two men at euery Oare, euery one of his side, setting one foot forward, another backward. In the Iunkes goe foure, fiue, or sixe men at an Oare.

Sudibusve præustis.

They vse Oares.

Small ships.

A kinde of Gallies.

They vse also certaine shippings very long, like vnto Gallies, without Oares or beake-head, which doe lade great store of goods: and they make them so long, because lading bringing a great burden they may sayle the better by the Riuers, which sometimes are not rough. They haue many other shippings of burthen, which is superfluous to tell of euery one. There be many small boats of poore people, in which are husband and wife, and children, and they haue no other dwelling but in their boat in a middle decke, for defence of the Sunne, and of the raine: as also haue the Bancones, and Lanteas, and others which wee said were like Gallies, and these deckes are in such sort, that vnder them are very good lodgings and chambers in the great ships, in these of the poore, they are much inferiour: there they breed their Pigs, their Hennes, and there they haue also their poore little Garden, and there they haue all their poore state and harbouring. The men goe to seeke worke about the Citie to helpe to maintayne their little house; the women goe in the boats, and with a long cane that reacheth well to the bottome of the Riuer (at the end of the which is a little basket made of rods, wherewith they get shell-fish) with their industrie, and passing of people from one side to another, they helpe to sustaine their household. These poore people notwithstanding doe not liue so poorely and beggarly in their apparell, as those which liue poorely in Portugall. There are other great shippings, wherein is the stocke of them both *, which haue great lodgings where they may bestow a great deale of stuffe: these haue a great stocke; they haue certaine Cages made all the length of the ship with canes, in which they keepe two or three thousand Duckes, more or lesse as the vessell is: some of these belong to Lordships, and their seruants goe in them: they feed these Duckes, as followeth.

Dwelling in ships.

* The husbands merchandise, and the wiues huswifery.

After it is broad day, they giue them a little sodden Rice not till they haue enough, when they haue giuen it them, they open a doore to the Riuer where is a Bridge made of canes, and the noise they make at their going forth is wonderfull to see them goe tumbling one ouer another, for the great abundance of them, and the time they take in going out; they feed all the day vntill night among the fields of Rice, those which are owners of the shipping doe receiue a fee of them that owe the fields, for letting them feed in them; for they doe cleanse them, eating the grasse that groweth among them. When night commeth they call with a little Taber, and though they be in sundry Barkes, euery one knowes their owne by the sound of the Taber, and goe vnto it; and because alwaies in time some remayne without that come not in, there are euery where many flockes of wilde Duckes, and likewise of Geese. When I saw such a multitude of Duckes in euery one of these Barkes, and all of one bignesse, and thinking they could not be hatched by Duckes or Hens, for if it were so, some would haue beene bigger then some, seeing so many could not be hatched in one, two, or fifteene dayes, I was willing to know how they hatched them; and they told mee, it was in one of two sorts. In Summer, laying two or three thousand Egs in the dung, and with the heate of the weather and the dung, the Egs are hatched. In the Winter, they make a Hurdle of canes very great, vpon the which they lay this great number of Egges, vnder the which they make a slacke fire, continuing it of one sort a few dayes till the Egges be hatched. And because they are hatched in this sort, there are so many of one bignesse, and all along the Riuer are many of these Barkes, whereby the Countries are well prouided of this food.

Duck-weeders

Artificiall broods.

See an example in Pantoia, of this magnificence.

There are some ships wherein the Rulers doe sayle, which haue very high lodgings, and within houses very well made, gilt, rich, and very sumptuous: and on the one side, and the other they they haue great windowes with their Nets wouen of Silke, and very fine small rods set before them, that they within seeing all them without, may not bee seene of them. Toward the side of the Laos and the Bramaes, are continually watches and wards in the Riuers in many ships, euen a whole moneths Iourney in length vnto the Citie of Cansi: these ships are in the places where the Riuers make any armes, because of the many theeues which commonly are in these parts, being the vttermost of the Kingdome: and because the Riuers haue many armes, many ships are placed in those parts: in euery place where these shippings are, there bee two small ships, which continually doe goe night and day from one watch to another, because they are very swift, and those of the great ships doe diuide themselues into watches at their quarters, for to watch as well in the small as in the great ones. The ships of passage goe alwaies a great number together, that they may defend themselues, one another, while the ships of warre, and the watches do come to them, and at the watch where they make night, there they stay til the morning, and by the small boats they are deliuered safe to the next watch forward, and so from watch to watch they are accompanied of the small vessels till they bee set in safetie. From the Citie of Doncheo, that is, where the Gouernour of Consi and Cantan is resident, vnto the bounds of the Prouince of Cansi, which are places more dangerous, are continually Armadas of fortie or fiftie ships. All these watches are paid of the common Rents of the Kingdome.

Ships for guard.

Fleets.

China is almost all a well husbanded Countrey: for as the Countrey is well inhabited, and people in abundance, and the men spenders, and vsing themselues very deliciously in eating and drinking, and apparell, and in the other seruices of their houses, especially that they are great eaters, euery one laboureth to get a liuing, and euery one seeketh wayes to earne their food, and how to maintayne their great expences. A great helpe to this is the idle people to bee much abhorred in this Countrey, and are very odious vnto the rest, and that laboureth not shall not eate, for commonly there is none that doe giue almes to the Poore; wherefore, if any poore did aske almes of a Portugal and he did giue it him, the Chinas did laugh at them, and in mockage said: why giuest thou almes to this which is a Knaue, let him goe and earne it: onely some Iesters haue some reward, going to some high place gather the people, and telleth them some fables to get something. The Fathers and Priests of their Idols are commonly abhorred and not esteemed, because they hold them for idle people, and the Rulers for any light fault doe not spare them, but giue them many stripes. Wherefore, a Ruler whipping once before a Portugal a Priest of theirs; and he asking him wherefore he did vse their Priests so ill, and held them in so little esteeme, answered him: these are idle and wretched Knaues. One day, I, and certayne Portugals entring into the house of the Ouer-seer of the goods, about the deliuerie of certayne Portugals that were in prison, because the matter belonged to him, for the great profit that came thereof to the King, much people came in with vs to see vs, among the which there was a Priest: assoone as the Ruler said, Set them downe, all of them ran away in great haste, the Priest running as all the rest, for feare of the whip.

Industry, cause of plentie.

Idlenesse hated.

Almes denided.

Idle Idoll-Priests punished with vniust iustice of profane busie Rulers, which made their soules the least and worst part of themselues, and a God of their goods.

Euery one laboureth to seeke a liuing; for that which hee earneth hee enjoyeth freely, and spends it as he will, and that which is left him at his death remaynes to his children and grandchildren, paying onely duties Royall, aswell of the fruits that they gather, as of the goods they deale in, which are not heauie. The greatest Tribute they haue, is euery married man, or that hath house by himselfe, payeth for euery person in his house two Mazes, which are sixtie Reys. From Champan, which as we said, doth confine with Cauchinchina vnto India, are many vnprofitable grounds, and made Wildernesses and Woods, and the men are generally little curious to get or gather together, for they neuer gayne or get so much but it is tyrannized from them, that which they haue is onely theirs as long as the King listeth, and no more. In such sort that as soone as the King knoweth that any of their officers hath much money, hee commandeth him to bee put in prison, and they vse him so hardly, that they make him cast all that hee hath gotten: wherefore there are many in those parts, that if they get any thing or money one day or one weeke, they will not labour till they consume all that they haue earned in eating and drinking, and they doe it because if any tyrannie should chance to come, they may finde nothing to take from them. From hence it commeth, as I say, that they haue in India many grounds in diuers places vnprofitable; which is not so in China, for euery one enioyeth the fruits of his labour.

that is 9d.

Tyrannie growes poore by seeking to grow rich.

Thriftie husbandrie.

Hence it commeth that all the ground that in China can yeeld any kinde of fruit receiuing seede, is husbanded. The high places which are not so good for Corne, haue very faire Groues of Pine Trees, sowing also betweene them some Pulse where it may be: in the drie Lands and stiffe they sow Wheate and Pulse: in the Marshes which are ouerflowed, which are many and very long, they sow Rice; and some of these Marshes doe yeeld two or three Crops a yeere. Onely the Mountaynes that are high and beaten with the weather, and are not fit to plant any thing, remayne vnprofitable. There is nothing lost in the Countrey bee it neuer so vile: for the bones, as well of Dogs as of other Beasts, they doe vse, making toyes, and with workes in stead of Iuorie, they set them in Tables, Beds, and other faire things: they lose not a Ragge of any qualitie, for as well of the fine as of the course, that are not of Wooll, they make fine and course Paper, and they make Paper of barkes of Trees, and of Canes, and of silken Ragges; and in the Paper made Nothing lost.

Paper of diuers matters.

Digitized by Google

made of ſilke they write: the reſt ſerueth for to roll betweene the pieces of ſilke: euen the dung of men yeelds profit, and is bought for mony or in change of herbs, and they carry it from the houſes: in ſort that they giue money or money worth, to ſuffer them to cleanſe their houſes Neat filth. of office, though it ſmelleth euill through the Citie: when they carry it on their backs, they carry it in Tubs very cleane without, and although they goe vncouered, notwithſtanding it ſheweth the cleanlineſſe of the Countrey and Cities. In ſome Cities theſe Tubs vſe to goe couered not to annoy.

They vſe in all things more ſlight then force, whereby they plow with one Oxe, making the Plough in ſuch faſhion that it cutteth well the Earth, though the furrowes are not ſo bigge as among vs. A ſhip be it neuer ſo bigge, and haue it neuer ſo great a leake, the Pomps are made by Pomps which goe by the feet. ſuch a ſlight, that one man alone ſitting mouing his feet as one that goeth vp a paire of ſtayres, in a very little ſpace he pomps it out: theſe pomps are of many pieces as a water wheele, laid along the ſide of the ſhip betweene rib and rib, euery piece hauing a piece of wood of halfe a yard little more or leſſe, one quarter well wrought: in the middeſt of this piece of wood is a ſquare little boord, almoſt of a hand breadth, and they joyne one piece into another in ſuch manner as it may double well, the joynts which are all very cloſe, whereby this manner of pompe doth run, is within of the breadth of the little boardes of euery one of the pieces, for they are all equall: and this manner of pompe bringeth ſo much water as may contayne betweene the two little Puppet playes. boardes. The Chinas vſe alſo Puppets, with the which they make repreſentations. They bring vp Nightingales in Cages which ſing all the yeere, and are vſed to Puppet repreſentations alſo.

Prouiſion for impotent perſons. See of theſe things Pinto. It is a thing worth the noting, that the blinde haue a labour appointed them for to get their food, which is to ſerue in a Horſe-Mill like Horſes grinding Corne: and commonly where is a horſe-mill there are two, becauſe two going together, they may recreate themſelues in talking one with another, as I ſaw them going about with Fannes in their hands cooling themſelues, and talking very friendly. The blinde Women are the common Women, and they haue Nurces that doe dreſſe them and paint them with Vermillion and Ceruſe, and receiue the wages of their euill vſe. The lame and the creeple which either haue no kindred within a certayne degree, or if they haue them and they doe not prouide for them that which is neceſſarie, or are not able to helpe them, they make their Petition to the Ouer-ſeer of the goods of the King, and his kindred being examined by his Officers, if among them are any that can maintayne them, they doe binde the neereſt to take them to them to their charge and maintayne them, and if their kindred bee not able to maintayne them, or if they haue no kindred in the Countrey, the Ouer-ſeer of the goods commandeth they be receiued into the Kings Hoſpitall: for the King hath in all the Cities great Hoſpitals which haue many lodgings within a great incloſure. And the Officers of the Hoſpitall are bound to adminiſter to thoſe that are bedred all things neceſſarie, for the which there are ſufficient Rents appointed out of the Kings Exchequor. The lame that keepe not their bed, haue euery moneth a certayne quantitie of Rice, with the which, and with ſome Hens or a Pigge, which they bring vp in the Hoſpitall, they haue ſufficient to maintayne themſelues, and all theſe things are very well paid without faile: and becauſe commonly thoſe which are receiued into theſe Hoſpitals are incurable, they receiue them for life: and all thoſe which are receiued by commandement of the Ouer-ſeer, are enrolled, and euery yeere the Officers of the Hoſpitall doe yeeld account of the expenſes, and of the prouiſion of the poore ſicke, and if any fault or negligence bee found in them of that which they are bound to doe, without remiſſion they are well puniſhed for it.

§. III.

Of their mechanicall Trades, Merchandiſes and Moneyes: their prouiſions of Fleſh and Fiſh; the perſons and attyre of Men and Women: their Feaſts.

THere are in this Countrey many workmen of all Trades, and great abundance of all things neceſſarie for the common vſe, and ſo it is requiſite, for the people is infinite. And becauſe ſhooes are the thing that moſt is ſpent, there are more workmen of Shoomakers. Shoo-makers then of any other Trade. In Canton are two particular ſtreets of Shoomakers very long, one where they ſell rich ſhooes, and of ſilke, another where they ſell common ſhooes of leather: and beſides theſe two ſtreets, there are many workmen ſcattered about the Citie. The rich Bootes and Shooes, are couered with coloured ſilke, embroydered ouer with twiſt, of very fine workes, and there be Bootes from ten Crownes, to one Crowne price, and ſhooes of two Crownes and thence downward, and in ſome places are ſhooes of three pence. So that the rich and the very poore may weare ſhooes: and the rich as they liſt; the ſhooes of three three pence, or of a Riall, are of ſtraw, and I ſay of three pence, for there is money that anſwereth our three pence. There bee many rich husband-men, that ſet men by the wayes with many of theſe ſtrawen ſhooes for the poore Trauellers (and it is no wonder to haue this charitie among theſe Infidels, for in the parts of the India are many rich Gentils which haue very great houſes, wherein they ſpend continually much Rice, giuing foode to all the poore of what qualitie ſoeuer, that will come thither to eate: and by the wayes they haue men ſet to giue drinke to the poore Trauellers.) There be alſo many Carpenters, and very good workmen of all manner of worke. They haue continually many Boxes made of many ſorts, ſome varniſhed with a very faire varniſh, others painted, others lyned with leather, and likewiſe of other ſorts. They haue continually a great number of Chaires made, ſome of very faire white wood, and other fairely gilt and ſiluered, very finely wrought.

Almes not almes, the fruit of vain-glorie not of mercy.

They haue alſo Chaires wherein the Rulers are carried on mens backs through the Citie, which are very rich, of a great price and very faire: they haue another manner of Chaires, which are high, very rich and pleaſant all cloſe, with a little window on each ſide very faire with a net made of Iuorie, or of Bone, or of Wood, through the which they that goe within doe ſee on the one ſide, and on the other of the ſtreet without being ſeene: theſe ſerue for to carry the Women about the Citie when they goe abroad. The ſeate is of the height of one of our Chaires, where they goe ſitting with their legs at length. There be many of theſe Chaires very rich, and of a great price: and there are ſome plaine, and haue Pinacles on the tops very faire: there are alſo many bed-ſteads very pleaſant and very rich, all cloſe round about, of wood finely wrought. I being in Cantan there was a rich one made wrought with Iuorie, and of a ſweet wood, which they call Cayolaque, and of Sandalum, that was prized at foure hundred Crownes, and of little Boxes gilt, and Maundes, and Baskets, Desks, and Tables, all as well gilt as with Siluer is without number: Gold-ſmiths, Siluer-ſmithes, Copper-ſmiths, Iron-ſmiths, and of all other Trades there be many and perfect Workmen, and great abundance of things of euery Trade, and very perfect. They vſe infinite Veſſels of Latten: and from China they furniſh all Iaoa and Siam, with theſe Veſſels, which in India they call Bategaria, and they are in euery kind very perfect. They vſe Skillets, and Chafing-diſhes, and other Veſſels of caſt Iron, and not only they doe caſt theſe Veſſels of Iron, but after they are broken they buy them againe for to re-caſt them. There are many Merchants of pieces and Clothes of Silke, becauſe they ſpend many in the ſame Countrie, and in Siam, and there are pieces of Damaske and Taffata among themſelues ſo rich, that they bring them not to vs, becauſe they giue them not for them what they are worth within the Land: they ſell alſo great ſtore of fine and courſe Serge of ſundry colours. There are many Merchants of white and dyed Linnen cloth, for it is that which is moſt ſpent in the Countrie. They gaue me a piece of Linnen cloth of about ten cubits, which was valued at tenne Crownes, there is both fine and courſe as euery one will haue it.

Chaires.

Silkes.

And howſoeuer the Porcelane which is vſed in all the Countrie of China, and in all India is of common Clay; notwithſtanding, there is very much courſe Porcelane, and other very fine, and there is ſome that is lawfull to be ſold commonly, for the Rulers onely vſe it becauſe it is red and greene, and gilt, and yellow: ſome of this is ſold but very little, and that ſecretly. And becauſe there are many opinions among the Portugals which haue not beene in China, about where this Porcelane is made, and touching the ſubſtance whereof it is made, ſome ſaying, that of Oyſters ſhels, others of dung rotten of a long time, becauſe they were not enformed of the truth, I thought it conuenient to tell here the ſubſtance whereof it is made, according to the truth of them that ſaw it. The ſubſtance of the Porcelane is a white and ſoft ſtone, and ſome is redde, which is not ſo fine, or in better ſpeaking, it is a hard clay, the which after well beating and grinding it and laying in Ciſternes of water (which they haue very well made of free-ſtone, and ſome playſtered, and they are very cleane) and after it is ſtirred in the water, of the Creame that remayneth on the top they make the very fine Porcelane: and ſo the lower the courſer, and of the dregs they make the courſeſt and baſe, which the poore people of China doe vſe. They make them firſt as the potters doe any other veſſell; after they are made, they drie them in the Sunne, and then paint them as they liſt with Azure, which is ſo fine as we ſee: after theſe Pictures are drie, they lay on the Glaſſe, and then harden them.

Porcelane.

Fables of it.

How it is made

The principall ſtreets of the Merchants, are the moſt principall ſtreets, which haue couerts on the one ſide and on the other: notwithſtanding, the chiefeſt ſale of the Porcelane is in the Gates of the Cities, and euery Merchant hath at his doore written in a Table all that is ſold within his ſhop: thoſe which ſell ſimples for medicines, haue at their doores tyed and hanging in a ſtring, a piece of euery thing. There is in China great ſtore of Rubarbe, but it is not brought to Cantan, but ſodden, there is none found raw. As the goods of China are very great and many, ſo the rents which the King of China hath in euery part of his Kingdome are very great. Some China Merchants did affirme that Cantan did yeeld euery yeere to the King three thouſand pieces of Siluer, and euery three Picos make one Baar, euery Baar hath foure Kintals, euery Kintall hath foure * Arrobas: ſo that one Baar is ſixteene Quarters, and three thouſand Picos, making one thouſand Baars, by conſequence, one thouſand Baars make y ſixteene thouſand

Merchants Tables.

Rhubarbe.

Kings Cuſtomes.

x Or Quarters.

y Which amounteth to 400000. pound weight of Siluer.

Digitized by Google

ſand Quarters; and wee ſpeake of weight, for in China is no money of Gold or Siluer, but onely of Braſſe, the Gold and Siluer goeth by weight. But theſe as they are popular people, though occupied in the trafficke of the Countrie, it ſeemes they know not well the trueth of this, and that the ſumme is greater which is collected of the rents Royall, for the Countrie is very great, and the merchandiſe many and very ſubſtantiall. I was informed by meanes of the Rulers, which is a more certaine information, becauſe the rents doe paſſe thorow their hands, that the rent of the Salt in Cantan did yeeld alone to the King 300. Picos of Siluer, which doe make 100. Baars, which are 400. Kintals, that are 1600. * quarters of Siluer.

* Which is 40000. pound weight of Siluer.

Euery one hath a paire of ſcales and weights in his houſe, which all are exceedingly perfect. The weights that they commonly haue, are from ten crownes to one, and from ten Tangas to one, one Tanga is nine pence. By the name of their Countrie, the leſſer great weight is of one Tael, one Tael is ſixe Mazes, one Maez is the ſame that a Tanga: of the ſmall weights, the ſmalleſt is one Conderin, ten Conderins make one Tanga, or one Maez: one Conderin hath ten Caxos; and becauſe the common that goeth in ſtead of money is Siluer by weight, euery one hath weights of his owne, as abouesaid: for one laboureth by all the meanes hee can to deceiue the other, none doe truſt the ſcales and weights of the other, and euery one that goeth to buy in the Market, carrieth a weight and balance, and broken Siluer, and the balance is a little beame of Iuorie with a weight hanging at the one end with a ſtring, and on the other end a little ſcale, and the ſtring of the weight runneth along by the beames, which hath his markes from one Conderin to ten, or of one Maez vnto ten. Theſe ſcales ſerue for to buy by retale, for to buy by groſſe they haue perfect ſcales very curious and fine, with very perfect weights. They carrie the Siluer commonly full of mixture, and becauſe they encreaſe it with the mixture, from hence it commeth that he which will make good markets in the Countrie of China, and that it may be cheape, carrieth Siluer rather then goods, for by the encreaſe which the Chinas make of the Siluer with the mixture, they giue the merchandiſe good and cheape for the Siluer. The Merchants are commonly falſe and lyars.

Very Merchants.

Victuals.

There is great abundance of Rice in all the Countrie, for there are many mariſhes, which yeeld two or three crops euery yeere. There is alſo much and very good Wheat, whereof they make very good Bread, which they learned to make of the Portugals; their vſe before were Cakes of the ſame Wheat. There be many French Beanes, and other Pulſe: there is great ſtore of Beefe, and Buffes fleſh, which is like Beefe: there are many Hens, Geeſe, and innumerable Duckes: there are infinite Swine, which is the fleſh they moſt loue: they make of the Hogs many ſingular flitches, whereof the Portugals carrie an infinite number to the India, when they goe thither by way of trafficke. The Chinas doe eſteeme the Porke ſo much, that they giue it to the ſicke. They eate Frogs alſo, which are ſold in great Tubs full of water at the gates, and they that ſell them are bound to flay them. All fleſh is ſold by weight aliue, except Beefe, and Buffes fleſh, and Porke, which commonly is ſold by the pound, except if they doe buy it whole, for then they are to weigh it whole: and that it may weigh the more, they fill it firſt with meat and drinke: the Hens to make them weigh the more, they fill them likewiſe with water, and their crops full of ſand and other things. The pound of the Hen, Gooſe, Ducke, and Frogs, is all at one price; the Porke, Beefe, and Buffes fleſh is worth leſſe, and all at one price. The fiſh is exceeding much, and all very good, and it neuer wanteth in the markets: there be many Crabs, and Oyſters, and other ſhell-fiſh, and all is very good: and of all theſe things the markets are full. The Markets are commonly at the gates of the Cities, and vnder the triumphant Arches which are in the large and principall ſtreets, as we ſaid before, and along the Portals of the ſame ſtreets: but not to ſell here fleſh or fiſh, for there be particular ſtreets, excepting quicke fleſh, which is ſold euery where.

Porke ſtore.

Frogs.

Markets.

Herbs.

Fruits.

There are many Garden-herbes, ſc. Turneps, Radiſh, Cabage, and all ſmelling Herbs, Garleeke, Onions, and other herbes in great abundance. There are alſo many fruits, ſcil. Peaches, Damſons, and another manner of Plummes which wee haue not, with long, round, and ſharpe ſtones at both ends, and of theſe they make Prunes: There are many Nuts, and very good, and many Cheſnuts both ſmall and great. There is a kinde of Apples that in the colour and rinde are like gray Peares, but in ſmell and taſte better then they. There is a fruit whereof there are many Orchards, it groweth on great and large boughed trees, it is a fruit as bigge as a Plumme round and a little bigger, they caſt the huske, and it is very ſingular and rare fruit, none can haue his fill of it, for alwaies it leaueth a deſire of more, though they eate neuer ſo much, and doth no hurt. Of this fruit there is another kinde ſmaller, but the biggeſt is the beſt, they are called Lechias. There are Oranges, Figs, and many other fruits, which were to long to recite. And though there be particular ſtreets of Victualling houſes, yet there is through all the Citie almoſt in euery ſtreet of theſe houſes. In theſe Victualling houſes is great ſtore of meate dreſſed. Many Geeſe, Hennes, and Duckes roaſted and ſod, and ſtore of other fleſh and fiſh dreſſed: I ſaw at one doore hanging, a whole Hog roaſted, and let one aske where he will, for all is very cleanly dreſſed: the ſhowe of all the meate that is dreſſed is at the doore, almoſt inciting them that paſſe. At the doore is a veſſell full of Rice, well coloured and dreſſed, and becauſe the matters

Lechias.

Victualling houſes.

Encercijado.

of

of Iustice are commonly almost from ten of the clocke forward, and many haue their houses faste because the Citie is very great, or because they which come from out of Towne with business, as well Inhabitants as Strangers doe eate in these houses. When any man meeteth any acquaintance of his that commeth from abroad, or that he hath not seene him a long time, saluting one another, he asketh him presently if he hath dined, and if he answereth no, he carrieth him to one of these houses, and there they eate and drinke priuily; for there is great store of Wine, and better then in any place of India, which they make of confections: if he answereth that he hath dined alreadie, he carrieth him where they haue onely Wine and Shell-fish, wherewith they drinke, of which houses there are also many, and there he doth feast him.

There is also in Canton along the wall on the outside, a street of Victualling houses, in the which they sell Dogs cut in quarters, roasted, boiled, and raw, with the heads pulled, and their eares; for they scald them all like Pigs, it is a meate which the base people doe eate, and they sell them aliue about the Citie in Cages: through euery street they sell flesh, fish, herbes, fruit, and all things necessarie, crying that which they sell. In the end of Februarie, in March; and part of Aprill, when the great flowings are, there commeth great store of fish from the Sea to spawne, in the mouthes of the Riuers along the Sea, whereby there breedeth infinite small fish of many sorts in the pooles of the Riuers. Of these spawnes in these times all the Fishers along the Sea coast doe meet in their boats, and there meet so many that they couer the Sea, and lie neere the pooles. And these Fishers doe take great quantitie of this small fish, and cast it in Cisternes which they haue made with stakes, and a very thicke Net made of wyer, where they doe feed them, to the end of the fishing time: and at this time there are wont to come a great number of Barkes from all places of China within the Land (for I said alreadie that all China is sailed by Riuers, for it is all cut and watered with great Riuers) and these Barkes doe bring a great many baskets within and without, which are all lined with oyled paper, that it may hold water, and euery one of these Barkes doe buy the fish they haue need of. Then they carrie this fish in these baskets through all the Countrie inward, changing euery day the water, and all men of any possibilitie, within their grounds and inclosures haue great store of fish in ponds, for the which they buy the baskets they haue need, they feed this fish in the ponds in a very short time with Cow dung and Buffes dung, wherewith it groweth very fast. In all the ditches of the Cities likewise they breed great store of fish in the same sort, of which the Rulers are serued. In all the Cities which I said alreadie, are built along the Riuers. The King hath many Sea Crowes in Coopes, in which they breed, with the which they make Royall fishings many times; all the Barkes that are bound to goe a fishing with these Cormorants, doe meet and set round in the Riuer, those that haue charge of the birds, doe tye them about the crops, that they cannot swallow them, and they cast them to fish in the Riuer. They fish till they fill their crops of middle fish, and if it be great, they bring it in the beake, and come to the Barke, where they cast all the fish they haue fished, forcing them to cast it: and in this manner they fish the quantitie they will, till they haue to their contentment: after they haue fished for the Barke they vntye them, and let them goe fish for themselues: after they be full, they come to the Boats, and are put in the Coops: these birds doe fish very much. The King doth giue for a fauour to the Rulers one or two of these Barkes, according as the person is of qualitie for the maintayning of his house with fresh fish.

Dogs flesh.

Fishing with Cormorants.

Though that the Chinas commonly are ill-fauoured, hauing their faces and noses flat, and are beardlesse, with some few haires in the points of the chinne: some notwithstanding there are which haue very good faces, and well proportioned, with great eyes, their beards well set, and their noses well shapen: but these are few, and it may be they are of other Nations. They weare long Coats commonly with plaites after our good ancient vse: with a flappe ouer the breast to tye on the side, and all in generall haue very long sleeues to their coats, they weare commonly blacke Coats of Linnen, or of very fine Serge or course of diuers colours, some weare them of Silk, many doe vse them on the Feast dayes of Silke: the Rulers weare commonly fine Serge, and on their Feasts they vse very fine Silkes, chiefly crimson, which none in the Countrie may weare but they: the poore people weare commonly Coats of white Linnen, because it costs but little: on their head they weare a high Cap made of very fine twigs, and it is round interwouen with blacke Silke, and very well made, they vse their Stockins whole footed, which are very well made and stiched, and they weare Boots or Shooes, as the curiositie or abilitie of euery one is, either of Silke or of Leather: in Winter they weare Stockins of Felt, either fine or course, but the cloth is made of Felt: they vse also in Winter their garments lined with Martines, chiefly about the necke: they vse quilted Iackets, and some doe vse them of Felt in Winter vnder their Coats.

Their persons.

The Attire of the men.

They vse long haire like women, which they weare finely combed, and they combe it many times a day, they weare it tyed on the crowne of the head, and through the knot thrust through with a long small Siluer pin: those which are not married, to wit, the yong Bachelors doe weare for a deuise a fillet or ribband dresse very well made, their Cap remayning aboue it, that it may be seene: they haue a superstition in their haire, therefore they weare it so long, holding that by Long haire.

Digitized by Google

by it they ſhall be carried to Heauen. The common Prieſts doe keepe their haire, but are ſhaueh, for they ſay they neede no helpe to carrie them to Heauen. Yet among them are ſome Prieſts of the Temple of the Idols, which among the Chinas are more reuerenced then the reſt; theſe doe weare haire on the top of the head faſthed with a ſtick, very curiouſly wrought like a cloſe hand, varniſhed with a very fine varniſh, which they call Acharan: and theſe Prieſts doe weare black coates, the other wearing a white coate.

Courteſie. The Chinaes are very curteous men; the common curteſie is, the left hand cloſe, they incloſe it within the right hand, and they bring them very oft to their breſt, ſhewing they haue one another incloſed in their heart; and to this motion of the hands, they joyne wordes of curteſie, though the wordes of the common ſort is to ſay one to another, Chiſan moſan, which is to ſay, Haue yee eaten or no, for all their good in this world is reſolued in eating. The particular curteſies betweene men of ſort which haue not ſeene one another a long while, are the armes bowed and the fingers claſped one within another, they ſtoope and ſpeake with wordes of great curteſie, euery one labouring to giue the hand to the other to make him riſe: and the more honorable they are the longer they ſtand in theſe curteſies. The honorable and noble People doe vſe alſo many curteſies at the Table, the one giuing drinke to the other, and euery one laboureth to giue the hand to the other in their drinking, for at the table there is no other ſeruice but that of drinking. If there come any Gheſt newly to his friends houſe, or his kinſman, if the Maſter of the houſe be not apparelled in holy day clothes, when the Gheſt commeth in, he maketh no account of him nor any mention, till he commandeth to bring his feſtiuall apparell, and after he is ſo apparelled hee goeth to the Gheſt, and receiueth him with many complements and curteſies. For they hold it not conuenient, that a new-come Gheſt and of reuerence bee receiued with common apparell, but clothed in feaſt-like apparell, for in this he ſheweth him that his entring into his houſe is a feaſt day to him.

What ſoeuer perſon or perſons come to any mans houſe of qualitie, hee hath a cuſtome to offer him in a fine basket one Porcelane, or as many as the perſons are, with a kinde of drinke which Cha drinke. they call Cha, which is ſomewhat bitter, red, and medicinall, which they are wont to make of a certayne concoction of herbes ſomewhat bitter: with this they welcome commonly all manner of perſons that they doe reſpect, be they ſtrangers or be they not; to me they offered it ma-
Great eaters. ny times. The Chinaes are great eaters, and they vſe many daintie, they eate at one table Fiſh and Fleſh, and the baſe people dreſſe it ſometime all together. The dainties which are to bee eaten at one table, are ſet all together on the board, that euery one may eate where hee liketh beſt. It is a cleanly and neat people. The common people hath ſome groſſe things.

Certayne noble Portugals went to ſhew me on a day in Canton a banquet, which a rich Merchant made, which was worth the ſight. The houſe where it was made, was with a loft, and very faire, with many faire windowes and caſements, and all of it was a mirror: the Tables were ſet in three places of the houſe, for euery Gheſt enuited a Table and a Chaire very faire and gilt, or with ſiluer, and euery Table had before it a cloth of Damaske downe to the ground. On the Tables was neither cloth nor napkins, as well becauſe the Tables were very fine, as becauſe they eate ſo cleanly that they need none of theſe things: the fruit was ſet along the edges of euery Table, all ſet in order, which was, roſted Cheſnuts and peeled, and Nuts cracked and ſhaled, and ſugar Canes cleane and cut in ſlices, and the fruit we ſpake of before, called Lichias, great and ſmall, but they were dried. All the fruit was ſet in ſmall heapes like Turrets very well made, croſſed betweene with certayne ſmall ſticks very neat: whereby all the Tables round about with theſe little Turrets were very fairly adorned. Preſently after the fruit, were all the ſeruices placed in fine Porcelan diſhes, all very well dreſſed and neatly carued, and euery thing ſet in good order, and although the diſhes were ſet one ouer another, all were ſo finely ſet, in ſuch ſort that he which ſate at the Table might eate what he would, without any need of ſtirring or remouing any of them: and preſently there were two ſmall ſticks very fine and gilt for to eate with, holding them betweene the fingers: they vſe them in ſtead of a paire of Pincers, ſo that they touch nothing of that which is on the board with their hand; yea, though they eate a diſh of Rice, they doe it with thoſe ſticks, without any graine of the Rice falling: and becauſe they eate ſo cleanly, not touching with the hand their meate, they haue no need of cloth or napkins: all comes carued and well ordered to the Table. They haue alſo a very ſmall Porcelan cup gilt, which holdeth a mouth full of wine, and onely for this there is a Waighter at the Table: they drinke ſo little that at euery bit they muſt haue the cup, and therefore it is ſo ſmall. There are ſome Chinaes that weare very long nailes, of halfe a quarter, and a quarter long, which they keepe very cleane, and theſe nailes doe ſerue them in ſtead of the ſticks for to eate withall.

Feaſts. The Chinaes doe vſe on their birth dayes to make great feaſts, continuing yet in them the cuſtome of the old Gentiles. In theſe Feaſts are wont to meet all the Kinſmen and Friends, and all doe helpe him to beare the charges of the Feaſts, with ſending him Preſents, that when they Birth-dayes. doe celebrate their birth dayes they may pay them in the ſame ſort: and becauſe they haue theſe helpes, they make great expence and ſolemnitie. The feaſt laſteth all night long, for all the

Gentiles

Digitized by Google

Gentiles as they walke in darkneſſe liuing without the knowledge of God, ſo all their feaſts through all places of India and in China, are made by night. In theſe feaſts is great abundance of meate and great ſtore of wine, all the night they ſpend in eating and drinking, and muſicke playing on diuers inſtruments. Their Prieſts offer their ſacrifices to their Gods, apparelled very richly. They apparell themſelues in diuers ſorts of garments, and the Prieſts doe ſing their ſongs in a very tunable voice: among theſe ſacrifices, playing and ſinging, the Tables are alwayes furniſhed with ſundrie meates, euery one taking what hee liketh beſt. The Prieſts when they haue ſung as all the reſt, doe make at their doore triumphant Arches very well made of Paper, and Scaffolds with diuers repreſentations of Figures and Statues, and certayne high Trees and hanging on the broken Boughes, very well wrought and painted, many lights, and in euery place many Lanthornes very faire and well made all with lights. Night feaſts.

In the generall Feaſts of all the Towne and People, chiefly on the firſt day of the yeere, all the ſtreets and doores are very richly dreſſed, and chiefly they doe indeauour and labour to deck the triumphall Arches, couering them with many clothes of Damaske and of other ſilke, with many Lanthornes. There is much playing of ſundrie Inſtruments, and ſinging, and ioyntly with this great ſtore of meate of ſundrie kindes, and great abundance of Wine. They vſe many times repreſentations by Actors, which doe repreſent very well and to the life, the Actors hauing very good apparell and well ordered, and fitting as is requiſite for the perſon hee repreſenteth; and they that repreſent a Womans part, beſides the apparell that is requiſite for the part hee repreſenteth, they are painted with Stibium and Ceruſe. Thoſe which vnderſtands them not what they repreſent, are ſometimes wearied, but they that vnderſtand them doe delight very much to heare them: and one whole night, and two, and ſome time three, they are continually buſied in repreſentations one after another. While theſe repreſentations doe laſt, there muſt bee a Table ſet with great ſtore of meate and drinke. They haue in theſe Actions two great inconueniences or blemiſhes, the one is, that if one be to repreſent two parts, and is to change his attyre, he doth it before all the Beholders: the other is, that the Repreſenter as well as hee that ſpeaketh alone, doe ſpeake in a very high voyce almoſt ſinging. Sometime they goe to the ſhips to play, that the Portugals may giue them money. New yeeres day. Comedies.

The Inſtruments they vſe for to play on, are certayne Bandoraes like ours, though not ſo well made, with their Pinnes to tune them, and there bee ſome like Gitternes which are ſmaller, and other like a Viall de gamba, which are leſſe: they vſe alſo Dulcimeres and Rebeckes, and of a certayne kinde of Hoboyſe, reſembling our vſe. They vſe a certayne manner of Inſtrument that hath many wyer ſtrings; they play on them with their nayles, which for that purpoſe they weare; they haue a great ſound and make a good harmonie: they play many Inſtruments together ſometimes, conſorted in foure voyces which make a very good conſonancy. It hapned one night by Moone-ſhine, that I and certayne Portugals ſitting at the doore of our lodging, a few young men paſſing the time came along the Riuer, playing on diuers Inſtruments; and wee being glad to heare the muſick, ſent for them to come neere where wee were, and that wee would inuite them, they as gallant youthes came neere with the Boate and beganne to tune their Inſtruments, in ſuch ſort that wee were glad to ſee them fit themſelues that they might make no diſcord: and beginning to ſound, they began not altogether, but the one tarried for to enter with the other, making many diuiſions in the proceſſe of the muſick, ſome ſtaying, others playing: and the moſt times they played all together in foure parts. The parts were two ſmall Bandoraes for the Tenor, a great one for counter-Tenor, and an Inſtrument called Crano followed the reſt, and ſometime a Rebecke, ſometime a Dulcimere for a Treble. And they vſed a good policy, that wee might remayne the more deſirous, they played but two ſtraines. Inſtruments.

It is not lawfull for any man in all the Countrey to carry any manner of weapon, no not a knife, therefore when one quarrels with another they goe to buffets and pulling by the haire: onely the Souldiers and Miniſters of the Captaines of warre doe weare ſwords on their hangers. Armes and quarrels.

When any man dyeth that hath Houſe, Kindred, and Children, after hee hath giuen vp the ghoſt, they waſh the Coarſe and put on his beſt apparell, and his Cap on his head, and ſet him on a Chaire, and then commeth his Wife and kneeleth downe before him, and with many teares and lamentable wordes ſhee taketh her leaue of him: and after the Wife comes the Children in their order doing the like, and after the Children the reſt of the Kindred, and all the reſt of the Houſe, and his Friends. The ceremonies ended, they put him in a Coffin made for him of Camfiere wood, which is preſeruatiue for dead bodies, and ſmelleth well, they cloſe it and pitch it well that no ſmell may come out of it; they ſet it vpon two little formes, and caſt ouer it a cloath to couer the Coffin downe to the ground, whereon the picture of the man deceaſed is pictured. They make a little houſe before the Coffin of white raw cloath, with a Portall right againſt the Coarſe, where a Table is ſet with candle-ſticks and candles lighted, and ſet thereon bread and all the fruits of the Countrey. And all this they doe of ſuperſtition for a ceremonie, and there they keepe the Coarſe eight or fifteene dayes, in the Funerall rites.

Digitized by Google

which their Priests of their Godsemoe continnally by night to offer their Sacrifices, and to pray their Heathenish inuentions. There they bring many Pictures of men and women, and burne them with many ceremonies. Finally they hang some Pictures of men and women in paper hanging on coards, and with great praying and mooning these pictures by the coards, with great crying and showting, they say, to send the dead man to Heauen. All day and all night while they are in these ceremonies, there is a Table set with great store of meate and drinke. These ceremonies ended, they take the Coffin and set it in a Field where the dead are, and there it consumes with time. Their mourning which they vse is the sharpest that euer I saw, for they weare Coats after the common sort, of verie course wooll next the flesh, and girt with great coards, and on their head a Cappe of the same cloath, made like the Caps that are vsed in the Countrey, sauing that these haue certaine flappes that fall ouer their eyes. Notwithstanding, that they as are neareſt in kindred so they weare the rougher mourning weed. The rest weare raw cloath, and not so course. For Father or Mother, they mourne three yeeres: and if he bee Louthia, as soone as hee heareth the newes presently he leaueth the office he serueth, and goeth to mourne to his owne house for three yeeres, which being ended he goeth to the Court to demand his office.

Mourning.

China womens customes and cloathes.

I haue many China Pictures which represent the women either with their feet wrapped vp, or else very small; their eyes also and noses little, &c. of the rest, as in the Map is seene.

The Women commonly, excepting those of the Sea coast, and the Mountayners, are very white and fine women, some hauing their noses and eyes well proportioned. From their child-hood they wrap their feete in cloathes, that they may remayne small, and they doe it for the China's doe holde them for finer women that haue small Noses and Feete. This is vsed yet among the noble people, and not among the baseſt. They weare their hayre very well combed, close and tyed to the crowne of the head, and bound from the rootes to the toppes with a long lace very well placed. And the lace is garnished with Iewels and peeces of Gold round about. They vse long Coats like the Portugall women, which haue the waste in the same manner that they haue. They weare vpper-bodies with long sleeues, they spend commonly more Silke in their garments then their husbands: but in their common apparell they are cloathed in white Linnen-cloath. They make curteſies as our women doe, but they make three together and very hastely. They vse painting their faces with Vermilion and white Ceruse very well set. They commonly keepe themselues close, so that through all the Citie of Cantan there appeareth not a woman, but some light huswiues, and base women. And when they goe abroad they are not seene, for they goe in close Chayres, (whereof wee spake before) neither when any bodie commeth into the house doth hee see them, except for curiositie they chance vnder the doore-cloath, to looke on them that come in when they are strange people.

Womens retiredneſſe.

Marriage.

Commonly the men haue one Wife, which they buy for their money more or lesse, according as they are, of their Fathers and Mothers. Yet may euery one haue as many wiues as hee is able to maintaine: but one is the principall with whom they liue, and the other he lodgeth in sundry houses. And if hee hath dealings in diuers Countries hee hath in euery one a wife and house with entertainement. If the wife committeth adulterie, and the husband accuseth her and the adulterer, both suffer death. And if the husband doe suffer the wife to play the adulteresse, hee is grieuously punished. I being in Cantan, saw a Marchant of China goe from Iustice to Iustice, verie sharpely handled for suffering his wife to play the adultereſſe. The common women are in no wise permitted to dwell within the walls. And in the Suburbes without they haue their proper streets where they dwell, out of the which they may not liue: All the common women are slaues, they bring them vp for that purpose from their child-hood, they buy them of their mothers, and teach them to play on an Instrument of musique, and to sing. And those that can best doe this, because they gaine most, are worth more. And those which cannot doe that, are worth lesse. The masters either carrie them vnto the men, or sell them to them: and when they are to be set in the street of the common women, they are written by an Officer of the King in a Booke, and the Master is bound to come euerie yeere with a certaine fee to this Officer, they are bound to answer their Master so much euerie moneth. When they are old, with Paynting they make them seeme young. And after they are not for that trade, they are altogether free, without any obligation either to Master or any bodie, and then they feed vpon that which they haue gotten.

Adulterie.

Witaldrie.

Harlots.

I spake so particularly of this matter, for to come to say that in this Countrey of China is no greater captiuitie then this of these Wenches. And let no man say, or affirme any other thing, for about the examining of it I laboured somewhat in Cantan, because some Portugals would affirme it otherwise. The captiuitie in this Countrey is in manner following. If any woman by the death of her husband remayneth a widdow, and hath nothing to maintayne her selfe with, neither the children that are left her are such as are able to get their liuing, neither hath shee any thing to giue her children; this Woman in this necessitie, commeth to a rich man, and agreeth with him for six or seuen Crownes, for a Sonne or a Daughter, and the price receiued shee deliuereth it; if it be a Daughter, shee serueth as abouesaid for a common Woman, and is brought vp for that purpose: if it be a Sonne, hee serueth his Master some time. And when hee is of age to marrie,

The bondage or slauerie of some in China.

Digitized by Google

marrie, the Master giueth him a Wife, and all the Children that are borne to him remayne free, and without any Obligation: notwithstanding, this Seruant is bound to giue his Master so much by the yeere, hauing a house by himselfe: for when he marrieth they giue him a house and he laboureth, either at some Trade, or by his industrie for to earne his liuing. And no man may sell any of these Slaues to the Portugals, hauing great penalties for it. The Women, as by being common, they looke for great profit of them, in no wise they will sell them, besides the running into great penalties also. And all those which commonly are sold to the Portugals are stollen, they carry them deceiued, and secretly to the Portugals, and so they sell them: and if they were perceiued or taken in these stealths, they would bee condemned in the vtmost punishment. The Lawes of China giue authoritie to the Women for to sell their Children, and not to the Men, for as the Men are bound to get a liuing for himselfe and for his Children, if hee want the remedie, they hold that hee is in the fault of that. And that Man may the better labour for their liuing and their Childrens. So farre is China from hauing Slaues that altogether should bee captiues, that neither those which they take in warre are slaues: onely they are bound to the King, and are placed for Souldiers in places farre from their Countries where they were taken, eating of the wages they haue of the King. These doe weare for a deuice a red cap, as I saw the Tartarians weare in Cantan, which had beene taken in the warres.

§. IIII.

Of their Louthias, Mandarines or Magistrates, their creation, priuiledges, maintenance; Of Prisons and Tortures; of the King and of Embassadors.

EVery one that in China hath any office, command or dignitie by the King, is called Louthia, which is to say with vs Señor. How this Title is giuen him, we will in his place make mention of it. There are in euery Prouince of China one thousand Louthias, or according to others three thousand, besides those that are resident in the Court, by whom are ordayned all matters of the Kingdome, and to whom come all the waighty matters of all the Realme. And because they are to dispatch with the King; and conuerse with him within doores, and it is not lawfull for other to conuerse with them, neither doe other see them, and they haue entrance where the Wiues of the King are, which are many, they are commonly Eunuchs. In euery Prouince are fiue, which among the rest are most principall, which haue a very great authoritie and majestie in their persons, and are greatly reuerenced and honored, not onely of the common people, but also of all the other Lothyas.

Sir, Master, or Lord.

Louthias of the Court Eunuchs.

The principall of the fiue is the Gouernour, which in their language is called Tutom, to this come all matters both great and small of all the Prouince, and for the authoritie and majestie of his person he is not resident where the other Lothyas, that hee may not bee frequented of them, and so he may be more esteemed and feared. To these come all the Rents of the Prouinces except the ordinarie expences, and by him as well the businesses as the Rents that are gathered, and all that hapneth in the Prouinces are referred and sent to the Court. The second dignitie of the Prouinces, is the Ouer-seers of the goods, which in their language is called Ponchassi: this hath the care to send to recouer through all the Prouince the Rents thereof, for the which hee hath many Lothyas vnder his iurisdiction, which are particular Officers for the businesses and recoueries of the goods. This prouideth all the ordinarie charges of the Prouince, and with that which remayneth he resorteth to the Tutom, that he may send it to the Court, this may enter-meddle in graue matters of the other Officers inferiour, and hath authoritie ouer them. Likewise, all the matters and affaires of the Prouince resort vnto him, to bee referred by him to the Tutom. Another chiefe dignitie vnder this is the chiefe Iustice, which in their language is called Anchasi, and though there be many other Officers of Iustice, this is aboue all, and by him are the dispatches distributed to the rest, and all matters of Iustice resort vnto him, as one that hath authoritie of the other inferiour. Another dignitie vnder this is the chiefe Captaine, who in their tongue is called Aitao. To this Aitao pertayneth to command to prepare the men of warre, and all that is necessarie of shipping, and victuals, and all other prouision against Enemies and against Theeues: to this belong also the businesses of strangers in cases which belong not to the goods. The fift and last of the great dignities, is of the chiefe Captaine which putteth in execution the matters of warre, and is resident in the Armies which the Aitao, being a land, doth ordayne: when it is necessarie besides the putting matters in execution and order, if the matter require his presence, he goeth in person: and so important may the matter be that the Aitao will goe. This is called in the Countrie language Inthissi. In the house of euery one of these, except the Luthissi, which is the inferiour of the fiue, are other ten which are as Assistants, and are also of great authoritie, fiue of these doe sit at the right hand of the Principal in fiue chaires, recited before when we

The Tutom; Lieutenant, Deputie or Vice-roy.

The Ponchassi or Treasurer.

The Anchasi or chiefe Iustice.

The Aitao or chiefe Captaine.

His Lieutenant, the Luthissi.

Each haue ten Assistants.

Digitized by Google

we spake of the buildings, and fiue doe sit on the left hand: these in matters of importance are at the dispatching with the principall of the house, and the Principall dying or by any other meanes wanting, one of these according to his antiquitie remayneth in his stead: and if it be necessary to goe through the Prouince about some matter of importance, that appertayneth to the dignitie in whose house they assist, one of these doe goe with all the authoritie of the Principall.

Enfignes of dignities, girdle and canopie.

The fiue that sit on the right hand, haue a greater degree and dignitie then the fiue on the left hand. And as the dignitie consisteth in their Girdles and Canopies, those of the right hand weare Girdles of gold and Canopies of yellow, and those of the left hand weare Girdles of siluer and Canopies of blew, or of changeable colour. The Girdles are little lesse then three fingers broad, and an inch thick, and all about of gold or of siluer very well wrought made of peeces. The Canopies are very large and faire, which an Officer doth beare vpon a staffe a fathom long, of a Cloue tree very faire, and they are lined with silke.

The Taissu or Sheriffe.

Besides these Assistants and the fiue Principall, there is among the inferiour one of greater dignitie, which is the chiefe Taylor, whom they call Taissu, which haue very great houses of great receipts, where they haue great prisons, but neither this nor any that are vnder may weare girdle of gold nor siluer, nor a yellow Canopie, except hee bee an Officer or Captaine of men of warre, that for fauour of a Gentleman may haue a yellow Canopie: the rest weare girdles of Tartaruga, or of other matter made like them of gold or siluer, and their Canopies are of changeable stuffe or blew, and all these Inferiour doe speake to the Superiour, when they are before them on their knees, and doe kneele as long as they are with them, except the Taissu, who when he commeth in kneeleth and riseth vp presently, and is alwayes standing. Euery one of the great ones haue many inferiour Officers vnder his iurisdiction, for the matters and businesses necessary to the Office of euery one, all which as they are the Kings officers haue the Title of Lothias and their badges or signes. The fiue Principall with their Assistants doe weare for a Badge the Kings Armes on their brests, and on their backs, which are certayne Serpents wouen with gold thred.

The Chaen or Iudge of the Circuit, or Visitor.

Euery yeere there is one sent to euery Prouince as a Iustice, which is called Chaen, which commeth to take account of all the Lothias, great and small, and examineth all the Students and chooseth Louthias, and visiteth the Prisons, and all that is necessary to be seene and prouided for in all the Prouince. He vseth all meanes to spie out their briberie and injustice, and hath power to displace or preferre. When this entreth newly into this Citie, it is not lawfull for any to worke, they shut their doores and no body walketh through the street, and to preserue his worship and authoritie they will not boldly communicate in sight of the people, and many Officers with Banners displayed of crimson silke, and all the Louthias both great and small are bound to goe and meet him. The same entertainment is vsed to euery one of the fiue, when hee commeth newly to the Prouince where hee is to administer his office. There bee other dignities aboue all these, which are called Quinchais, which is to say, a Place or Seale of gold: which are not sent but about very serious matters and of great importance, for the Kingdome, or the King. Euery Lothia of what qualitie soeuer hee bee, high or low, hath for a signe or badge, besides the aboue-said, a high Cap and round with certayne eares a-crosse, made of small twigges wouen with twist.

The Quinchais, Commissioners extraordinarie.

All the Offices are giuen from three to three yeeres, and none is giuen for longer time, and all giuen to men that are not borne in that part of the Land, because they may not be mooued by affection in matters of Iustice that belong to their offices, and also because they may not become mightie, thereby to preuent insurrections. The offices are distributed by the King with the counsell of the Eunuchs. And because the Eunuchs are those with whose counsell the offices are distributed, they are many times mightily bribed.

The Chaens which the King doth send euery three yeeres, commonly are sound men, and bring commonly more authoritie then the rest. And these (besides the yeerly Chaen) are sent the third yeere, when euery Officer endeth his office. After that the Chaens haue taken the accounts of the Lothyas, they visit the Prisons and giue audience to the Prisoners. After this hee with the other principall Lothias doe visit the Schollers, and all those that hee findeth to haue studied well, he fauoureth and giueth them good hopes, and those which haue not studied well, if hee see they haue abilitie for it, he commandeth them to bee whipped. And if already they haue beene whipped and haue not amended, he commands them to bee put some dayes in prison, besides the whipping of them, that with these punishments from thence forward they may haue a better care. If hee findeth that they neither learne, nor haue abilitie, hee thrusts them out of the Schooles.

The third yeeres Visitor.

This doe onely the Louthias. which come euery three yeeres, after they haue dispatched the businesses of the Prouince, hee busieth himselfe in making Louthias: which hee maketh in forme following. He commandeth to come to the principall Citie of the Prouince, all the Students that haue well studied, from all the Cities of the Prouince, and from all the great Townes, where the King hath Schoole-masters of free Schooles, maintayned at his charge (for the Students did learne the Lawes of the Realme, maintayned at their fathers charge.) And all the principall

Louthias

Digitized by Google

Louthias of the Prouince assembled with Chaen, there examine very well euery one of the Students, demanding of him many things concerning their Lawes: and if he answereth to all well, they command him to be put apart, and if he be not yet well instructed, eyther they send him to learne more, and if it be through his default, eyther they whip him, or being whipped they send him to Prison, as the Portugals saw many in Prison for that fault, where they were in Prison also. After the Examination ended, the Chaen riseth vp, and all the Louthias with great Ceremonies, Feasts, Musickes, and Playings, they giue the degree to euery one of them they found sufficient, which is to giue him the Title of Louthia. And after the passing many dayes in Feasts, and Banquets, they send them to the Court to receiue the Badges of Louthias, which are Caps with eares, broad Girdles and Canopies, and there they stay the distribution of Offices. So that in this manner they make the Louthias, which in the Countrey are to administer Iustice. The Louthias for war are made by Chiualries and famous Deeds which they did in war. So that in these Countries men are much honoured by their Learning, or by their Chiualrie, and yet more for their Learning, because of the Learned doe commonly come the fiue principall Louthias and the Assistants.

Commencement or Act. Of this see more in the following Relations of the Iesuits.

Notwithstanding, there are many Louthias, which are made for simple fauours, either for doing some particular seruice to the King, or to the Realme, or in some Towne, or hauing some particular fauour or qualitie. As they did to a young man of China, because the Portugals beeing in Prison, he serued for an Interpreter, whereby the Louthias gaue him the title and badges of Louthia, because he could speake Portugall. But these and such other doe not commonly serue Offices of the King, but enjoy onely the Liberties of Louthias: as the Gentlemen Portugals haue their Liberties which some enioy by fauour of the King. And these Louthias haue great Liberties in the Countrey: for none can doe him any injurie without punishment, neither can they bee imprisoned but for hainous faults, and they may imprison any that doe wrong them, and many other Liberties. And though there were some Portugals that reported without any certaintie that the Chinaes did studie naturall Philosophie, the truth is that there is no other Studies nor Vniuersities in it nor particular, but onely the Schooles Royall of the Lawes of the Kingdome. The truth is that some are found that haue knowledge of the courses of Heauen, whereby they know the Eclypses of the Sunne and of the Moone. But these if they know it by any Writings that are found among them, they teach it to some person, or persons in particular, but of this there are no Schooles.

Other sorts of Louthias.

Their Priuiledges.

The Chinas haue no certaine Letters in their Writing, for all that they write is by Characters. Their lines are not querthwart as in the Writings of all other Nations, but are written vp and downe.

When the Louthias are dispatched at the Court with Offices for the Prouinces, where they goe to gouerne, they depart carrying nothing of their owne more then the Apparell they are to weare, and some few Seruants to serue him, euen when they haue no Offices, neither need they carry any prouision for the Iourney, nor carriage or shipping at their owne charge: for through all the wayes where he goeth are prouisions, aswell of shipping as of necessarie carriage, and necessary food for all the Kings Officers, which are prouided of the Royall Rents. In all the Cities and great Townes, the King hath many good and Noble Houses for the Louthias both great and small to lodge in, and all those which by any meanes are the Kings, haue sufficient Rents for the maintenance of euery person that shall dwell in the House according to his degree. And that which is to be giuen to euery one for his Expences is alreadie limited. Wherefore he that may lodge there being come, the Officer of the House commeth to him, and asketh him if hee will haue his ordinary in money, or in things necessarie for prouision, and that which hee doth demand, as farre as the money doth extend, hee is to giue him, very well and cleanly dreſt, either Flesh, Fish, Duckes, or Hennes, or what he will. And any Louthia that doth lodge there, may command the Hoast of the House to be whipped, if he serue him not to his will. And if any Louthia will goe to lodge at the House of any acquaintance of his, hee taketh the Money, which the inferiour Louthias doe also sometimes, either to spare some Money, or to bee merry at their wils more freely. And in the prouisions of these Houses there is no want any wayes, for the Ponchasis haue the charge to giue them sufficient prouision that it doe not want. And at the yeares end account is taken of the Officers of the House of the Expenses he made.

Publike Officers wholly maintayned of the publike.

Houses for Officers.

By the wayes at euery League, and at euery two leagues are Houses which onely haue Beds, and Chaires for the Trauellers to rest and ease themselues. And some of those that haue care of these Houses, haue prouision for to giue Wine to the guests: others giue nothing but Chaa. After the Louthias come to the Citie where they are to be resident and execute his Office, they find the Houses, where they are to lodge according to the Offices they haue great or small, greater or smaller. In these Houses they find all the Seruants necessary, Scriueners, Porters, and all other Ministers necessary for their Offices. For these are continually in the houses, for to minister at all times all the Offices of the Houses where they serue. And euery Officer according to his House and person hath his prouision necessary for his meate, drinke, and his apparell (limited so that it sufficeth him well) which is payed to him without faile, euery moneth.

Publike Inns.

Inferiour Officers.

Digitized by Google

Rest in age with dignitie.

When the Louthias are old and wearied in the charges and Offices of the Kingdome, they are lodged in their owne Countries or where they will, and the King alloweth them euery moneth so much according to their qualitie for their maintenance till they dye. And becauſe the Ordinaries of the Louthias are commonly ſufficient, and with ſome abundance, they may alwayes ſpare ſome thing to leaue their Wiues and Children. Before the inferiour Miniſters theſe Officers doe all things of their Offices and matters of Iuſtice, for they are preſent at all things, to preuent Bribes and partialitie. Whiles the Louthia is ſitting in the chaire to heare the parties and diſpatching of matters, the Porters, Scriueners, Sergeants and other Miniſters are at the doore: and when any perſon commeth with any matter, one of the Porters with a high voice that hee may be heard where the Louthias ſitteth (for it is farre off) telleth who and wherefore he commeth. And none ſpeaketh to the Louthias but vpon both their knees on the ground, and commonly they ſpeake a prettie ſpace diſtant from him. And from thence with a high voyce well vnderſtood, he propoundeth his caſe, or ſheweth him his Petition written in Paper, and lifting vp the hand deſireth him to receiue it, and to ſhew him Iuſtice; to whom a Miniſter runneth, the Louthia making a ſigne to him, and preſenteth it vnto him. After the Louthia readeth it, he eyther diſpatcheth him of that which he asketh, writing at the foote of the Petition with redde Inke, or remitteth the party to an inferiour Officer to be diſpatched. So I ſaw it done to a Petition which a woman preſented to the Ponchaſi.

Reuerence.

The promptneſſe and readineſſe wherewith the Louthias are ſerued, and how feared they are, cannot be written with the Pen, nor expreſſed with the Tongue, but it muſt be ſeene with the eye for to know what it is. All doe their meſſages running and with great ſpeed, not onely the Scriueners and Sergeants, and other Miniſters, but alſo the Inferiour Louthias to the Superiour. And if any fayleth neuer ſo little of his diligence and accuſtomed ſpeed, or committeth the leſſe negligence in the World before the Louthia, hee hath not any remiſſion, but immediately they put a little flagge in his hand, and he muſt hold it in his hand kneeling vntill the parties be diſpatched: and then the Louthia commandeth to giue him the ſtripes that he thinke good: and the ſtripes are ſuch as hereafter we will ſpeake of. Whereby all the Miniſters in the Houſes of the Louthias are playſtered or marked with the ſtripes, ſo that already among themſelues they hold it a diſgrace not to be marked with the ſtripes, becauſe it is a thing generally common among them. And when the Louthia waxeth angry or is moued at any thing, it is a wonder to ſee the trouble and feare that is in all the ſtanders by.

Nimia ſeueritas parit contentum.

I being in the Houſe of the Ponchaſi with certayne Portugals, intreating for the deliuerance of certayne Portugals that were Captiues, and impriſoned in the Iayle, for the which wee carried him eight Ounces of Ambar (which at that time was much eſteemed of them, and now by carrying ſo much it is not ſo much eſteemed) we not being willing to giue him the Ambar, without giuing vs both the Portugals, he tooke an occaſion for to terrifie vs, to waxe angry againſt the youth, ſeruant of a Portugall which was in our company and was our Interpretour. Wherefore he roſe out of the Chaire and became red as bloud, and his eyes were inflamed, and ſet one foote forward, putting his thumbes vnder his Girdle, looking to the ſtanders by with a terrible countenance: ſtepping forward, lift vp his foot and ſtampt on the ground with it, and ſaid with a terrible voyce. Taa, which is to ſay, Whippe. It was a wonderfull thing to ſee in how little ſpace they tooke the youth, tyed his hands behind with a Cord, and laid him on his belly with his thighes bare, and two Beadles placed themſelues on each ſide one, with one foote forward, and their Whip readie for to giue him the ſtripes that they ſhould bee commanded to giue him. Certainly it was all done in a moment. The Merchants that came in our fauour were troubled, and ſtood aſide ſhaking with feare. At this time one of the Priſoners ſaid, Sirs, be not afraid, for he cannot whip that youth. And in truth we knew it was ſo, for according to their Lawes there was no fault, whereby he might command him to be whipped, and there was a penaltie if hee did it. The Louthia hearing the voyce of the Priſoner, commanded to carry him with ſpeed to the Iayle againe. And the Louthia did this for nothing elſe but to make vs afraid, that wee ſhould giue him the Ambar for one of the Priſoners, for he could not giue vs the other, becauſe he was alreadie adjudged to dye, and the ſentence confirmed by the King, which was irreuocable, and he was willing to haue the Ambar, for he hoped to haue of the King a greater Reward then to be Ponchaſi for the Ambar. For he did eate it for to ſuſtayne life; and many dayes were paſt ſince they had demanded it of the Portugals, but as they knew not the name we vſed for it, they neuer vnderſtood one another till that the yeare after they had for the Aitao of Cantan a little for the deliuery of a Portugall: whereby he was aduanced to Ponchaſi. And this would alſo haue for the ſame effect the Ambar at our hands for to be aduanced.

Taa.

Notwithſtanding, we ſeeing our ſelues tyed and without an Interpretour by whom to ſpeake, and the youth in diſpoſition of whipping, we gaue him the Ambar. There came preſently a Chaſing-diſh for to proue it, and the Priſoner caſt a little in the fire, and ſeeing the ſmoake aſcend right vp, he was contented, and ſcattering the ſmoake hee ſet his Noſe ouer it and ſaid, Haoa, which is to ſay, it is very good. And commanded preſently to deliuer vs the Priſoner free. It was wonderfull to ſee with what ſpeed it was weighed, and the pieces told and put in a Paper,

and

Digitized by Google

and noted by the Scriuener before them all the number of the pieces, and the waight that was there. And after that Paper another, all glued presently. And after that another. And in the third, the Panchasi set his Marke with Red Letters, and what was contayned within. And at the same instant came a little Boxe, and being put in it was presently stopped, and vpon the couer a Paper glued, and vpon it the Marke of the Ponchasi: and presently came an inferiour Louthia Captayne of the Army with his Souldiers, and all afarre off kneeled downe, and said at euery word Quoo, which is to say, Yes, enclining their heads and hands to the ground. And receiuing his message, presently as he came running, so he returned running with the Boxe to take shipping for to carrie the Ambar to the Tutaen, to bee sent from him to the King. All this that I haue spoken was done in a trice before wee stirred from the place where wee were. This was also desirous to haue the Ambar of vs before the Louthia of that seate did come, which was looked for euery day to come a new: for this was onely a Lieutenant.

Manner of their pompe in the street.

When any Louthia that is not of the fiue, neither the Chaen, neither very inferiour, but as they say of the meaner sort, goeth abroad into the Citie, he hath before him a good space two Ministers with two Maces that seeme to be of siluer, vpon long staues, made almost after our fashion, and the one goeth on the one side the street, the other on the other-side. After these a little distant, goe other two, each with a straight Cane, or Pole in his hand. After these goe other two in the same distance with two Canes trayling along the Pauements, which are the Instruments of Iustice wherewith they doe whip. After these goe other two with two Tables like two Targets bowed and playstered, whereon is written the Title of the Officer that passeth. The formost signifie in their Maces, that he which passeth is in his Office in the Kings place. And the two straight Rods, the right of Iustice which he ought to doe. Those which carrie the Instruments of whipping, doe carrie for a signe certayne long Red Laces, with two great round Tassels at the ends. And all doe carrie very gallant Plumes very well made of the points of a Peacocks tayle. And those that goe before doe now and then say with a loud voyce Huuph, which is to say, Giue place, or beware. While these doe passe it is not lawfull in any wise for any one to crosse, or goe in the middle of the street, vnder paine of being whipped without any remission.

It chanced two Portugals went through the middest of a street in Cantan walking, and behind them came an inferiour Louthia, which had but foure Ministers, which came crying according to their custome they should giue place. The Portugals either gaue no heed or made no regard of those that came: wherefore a Minister comming, gaue a great thrust to the one of them, and the Portugall answered him with a boxe on the eare; and being bound with his hands behind him, was to goe to Prison. It was necessary for the Portugall to come to the Louthia, and pacifie him with faire words, and he made an end of pacifying him with fourteene Crownes that hee gaue him. After the Ministers commeth the Louthia in a rich Chaire gilt and very faire, on foure mens backes. These Chaires are great and sumptuous, and the Louthia goeth compassed with all the Scriueners and other his Ministers. And all of them while hee goeth by the street, goe alwayes running. And the Louthia weareth a long blacke Coate of fine Searge with long sleeues, which is the common wearing: he carrieth the armes a crosse like a Frier, and his eyes low without looking to any side: for euen with their eyes they will not communicate with the common people, for to preserue their authoritie the more with them, that may be more feared.

When any of the foure Louthias goeth abroad, except the Tutan, or the yearely Chaen, they goe accompanied with many Ministers, and sixe Officers doe carrie them on their backes, and they leade a spare Horse with a faire Saddle, and a cloth of Silke ouer it; the Chaire wherein they goe is more sumptuous and richer, they carrie before foure, fiue, or sixe Maces, and two or three Instruments and more Ministers.

Pompe of the greater Officers.

When the Chaen that commeth euery three yeeres commeth into the Citie, or for forme important affaires goeth abroad, or some Quinchay, they shut vp all the doores in the streets where he passeth, and none doth worke, nor is any seene in the street when hee passeth. The shops are shut vp, and euery thing of sale is out of sight. The Officers with coards along the street, doe make three lanes, where the triumphing Arches are made in three Arches: and through the middest passeth the Louthia onely, and the Officers on the two sides. And it is not lawfull for any to passe through the middle: they are accompanied of many inferiour Louthias that goe on foot. And on the one side of the street, and the other are many armed men and others with Banners of red Silke auanced, all standing in good order. In the Court of the house where he is to goe in, are many Kettle-drummes set vpon high stakes to be well played vpon, which are couered downe to the ground with clothes of Silke quartered. After these are many placed in order, with Flags of Silke on high. After these in the same order, are many with Trumpets, and all are in great silence. As soone as the Louthia appeareth they all sound their Instruments in order: the sound of the Instruments ended, they remayne all in so great a silence, as if there were no bodie in the Court, being a great multitude of people. The people as they come in, doe place themselues on the sides, the middest betweene the Instruments remayning voide, whereby the Louthia passeth. Before these Louthias goe commonly many inferiour Louthias, of those that carrie Maces when they goe abroad. There are also in this Court many men at Armes with long Chaen and Quinchays splendour.

Noyse and silence.

Digitized by Google

long gilt Lances, and with very faire Armours. This is all in the first Court. In the second, along the Gallerie (whereof wee spake aboue, when wee treated of the houses of the great men, that onely the Louthias passe through them) on the one side and the other are many inferiour Louthias with Head-pieces on their heads, some gilt, some with Siluer, and with Swords hanging at their belts, and with Coats and Cassocks made in fashion of Frockes with studs of Gold and Siluer, that it seemeth set vpon plates, but it is a very fine worke made vpon very single Silke, which serueth onely for brauerie and ornament. Some vse on their heads white Head-pieces garnished with Gold, but are of a very fine leafe and thinne, that seeming an Armour, are not. In this manner also are the Louthias inferiours, which doe enuiron the superiour Louthia. The Chaires where these doe goe are very rich and of great price, and very sumptuous. The Tables whereon is written the titles of dignitie of these Great men are written with letters of Siluer. And when any of these doth enter newly in any Citie with these feasts and enternaynments, all the Louthias, great and small, receiue him at a house (where hee landeth very rich and noble) and from thence they accompanie him vnto his lodging, and being lodged, all doe take their leaue with many curtesies. In these receiuings they vse no sumptuous apparell. The great men (when most) weare Coats of red Silke. In their owne feasts in their houses, and secretly one with another, and in banquets they vse crimson Silke, and all the brauerie in their apparell, and in rich attires.

Manner of inquisition.

Whensoeuer by way of inquirie or examination any Witnesses are demanded, the Louthias doe it in publicke before the Officers and ministers of his Office, and before all the rest that by any meanes chance to be there present, and this because no falshood may be vsed, nor any sleight in the manner of inquiring: and by consequence in writing. And first they examine the Witnesses seuerally, and if they doe agree, they ioyne them, and examine the one before the other, till they bring them to altercations and quarrelling by words, that by the words the one speaketh to the other they may come to the knowledge of the truth. And if by this meanes they doe not comprehend the truth, they giue them many stripes and tortures that by one meanes or other they may know the truth of the matter they enquire or examine: they vse no Oath, for they esteeme nothing of their Gods. They haue notwithstanding a respect in the witnessing the persons of qualitie, and of whom is presumed that they will not easily lye. When they examine any matter of great weight, or a graue person, then they write themselues, the processe of the examination. It chanceth sometimes that some of the Louthias for a great bribe, or for great friendship let some Prisoner loose, and put another in his place, for there neuer wanteth one naughtipacke that will put himselfe in danger of stripes, or death for interest, or they bring him in by deceit, deceiuing him with words, and making the matter light vnto him, and giuing him some interest, they name him as the Prisoner they will let loose, that the faults and punishments of the guiltie may fall vpon the innocent. And when sometime in this sort they cannot let the guiltie person loose, they labour to bribe all the Officers to giue him for dead among those that die in the prisons. But these inuentions are not vsed but where the bribes are great, or the adherents very great and mightie. And for to eschew the inconueniences which sometime fall out, when any are imprisoned for weightie matters, or the Prisoners haue great aduersaries, they set downe all the markes of the Prisoners, and cause them to be set at the foot of the writing, that so they may not vse any of the malices aboue said.

No Oathes.

Bribe-trickes.

Cane-whipping. Much is here written of Prisons, and Executions, which I haue omitted.

* Huge Reeds, or Canes.

With how much pietie and leasure they kill, with so much crueltie and speed they whip, for in this case they forgiue none. The stripes are such that with reason it might be a sufficient punishment for to amend, for the canes wherewith they whip are plaited below about foure fingers broad, and goe straightning vpward vnto the end, where the Beadles hold them: and they are almost a finger thicke (for in those parts are canes as big as a mans leg. And because in Portugall are many witnesses of knowledge of the same, I dare simply affirme it, and they are of eighty * or ninety spans long.) And their whips are made of these canes of the height of a middle statured man to the breasts. They giue the stripes on the hammes of the mans legs, being layd on his breast, and his legs layd along, and his hands tyed behind. And the Beadles butchering, as they are commanded, the Louthias are altogether voide of compassion, talking one with another, eating and drinking, and picking their teeth. The crueltie is such, that the Court is full of bloud: and when they haue made an end of whipping them, they carrie them not, but like Butchers with much crueltie they draw them by one leg to the Prison. And when the Beadles are whipping, they tell with a loude voyce the stripes. If the miserable Prisoners which are in the Prison for grieuous faults at the time that this correction is to bee done can get a piece of a coard, wherewith they may hang themselues, they goe to buffets who shall hang himselfe first, that that the butcherie of the stripes be not executed on them. And the Portugals affirmed, which were in Prison, that in one day fortie Prisoners did hang themselues in the Prison where they were, to escape the stripes they were rather willing to lose their liues. And they affirmed, that the coard was very short, that scarsely there was so much as to come about the necke to tye it, and on a sticke which they stucke in the wall, and because the sticke was very lowe, they pulled one another till they were choaked, going to buffets who should hang himselfe first. When any doth

Miserable euasion of misery.

Digitized by Google

doth kill himselfe, or dieth in the Prison, it is the order in China to cast him in the house of office, and there to be three dayes, where the Rats doe eate him vp. And sometimes the Chinaes Prisoners doe eate of them with hunger.

Euery Citie that is the Head of the Prouince, hath thirteene Dungeons, and in sixe of them are the men condemned to death: there are in Cantan vpward of fifteene thousand Prisoners. There are in euery Dungeon onely for the condemned to death, one hundred and twenty men that serue for watches, and haue a Louthia ouer them as their Captaine, or Gentleman of the round. There be two sorts of tortures, one for the hands, another for the feet, which are nipped by certaine slickes to the bruising or breaking of the fingers or toes with cruell paines.

Store of free-people, and therefore store of bond, by abused libertie and store.

The King hath as many wiues as he listeth: and within doores all the seruice is almost of women: whereof he hath a great multitude: and likewise great store of Eunuches, and there is no other people within the house. The first son that is borne vnto him of any of his wiues succeedeth in the Kingdome. The rest he marrieth, and at such time as he marrieth them they are lodged in some of the Cities that he best liketh; where they are well prouided of all things necessarie for their maintenance, as sonnes to the King. But they neuer see the Kings face any more after they are married.

The King his wiues, children and seruants.

All the Embassadours that come to China, with Embassages from Kings or Princes, receiue of the King great rewards and fauours, and they giue him Cap and signes of Lothia, whereby he hath great priuiledges in the Countrey. They may whip and punish the Chinaes themselues, so that they touch not any Louthia small or great: for to meddle with these would breed great inconueniences. This was the cause that Fernando * Perez of Adrade going for Embassadour to China, that the Chinaes did rise against him, and hee escaped with his hands on his head, losing some ships: because hauing done vnaccustomed Iustice in China, and vpon the Chinaes, and they forbearing him, he would stretch his hand to the Louthias. The goods of the Embassadour, and of his is free from customes, and to him and to his they giue lodgings to dwell in, and all things necessarie while they are in the Countrie. No man, no not a Louthia may disturbe him in any thing, nor any thing of his. One Lothia would haue whipped one of Siam, for hauing carried a message to the Prison to certaine Portugals that were in Prison. One of the Officers said vnto him that was present, that he was of Siam of the Embassage, wherefore being satisfied therewith he let him goe in peace, desiring him he would not doe so againe.

Embassadours priuiledges.

* Lopo Soarez was sent Viceroy, An. 1515. and sent this Perez with a fleet to China, and therein Thomas Perez Embassadour, who were well entertayned there. But some Portugals vsurping Tamau, a China-Iland, and exercising all outrages, caused T. Perez after 4. moneths trauell from Cantan to the Court to bee taken for a Spie, and sent backe to Cantan, where hee died in Prison among malefactors. See Maffeus l. 5. & 6. who seemeth to disagree: or else his peoples act was ascribed vnto him. For hee had left 6. ships there, when he went to Canton.

With the Chinaes being so great as at the beginning we said and declared, the King hath such meanes and industrie in the gouernement thereof, that euery moneth he knoweth all that passeth through all the Realme, and he knoweth it in this manner. All matters of Iustice and of Warre, and all annuities with all that is worth the knowing in euery one of the Prouinces is referred by the Louthias, and by other persons to the Ponchasi, and the Ponchasi maketh a relation of all by writing to the Tutan. The Tutan is bound to send a Post euery moneth to the Court, which carrieth the information in writing to the King of all things that passed in that moneth. They count their moneths by the Moones, and they are to be dispatched in such sort, that at the beginning of euery Moone the Posts from all the Prouinces are to bee at the Court, that the first day of the Moone it may be presented to the King, as relations of all things happened in euery Prouince. And although some Prouinces are farre distant from the Court, that the Posts cannot come within a moneth to the Court: notwithstanding in such manner they agree that euery Moone the King is to haue the relation of euery Prouince, though the one be of more time then another, because of the one Prouince being farre and the other neere.

The manner of the Posts is as among vs, they carrie a Horne which they winde when they come neere to any Towne, that they may haue a Horse ready in euery Towne within a certaine distance. They are bound when they heare the Horne to haue a Horse ready for him, which is done with such diligence as all the other seruices of the Officers. And where hee is to passe a Foord, as soone as he windeth his Horne with great speed they carrie him a Boat, as I saw once going to the Citie of Cantan, in a Towne that was in the way, called Caaman. Sometimes it hapneth by the malice of some Louthias, when they haue any interest in it, to keepe some things concealed that the King knoweth not: but woe to them if the King come to know it, for they are grieuously punished, as wee shall see in a case hereafter following. Being in India, and also in China, I was enformed that sometimes the King of China doth send some men of great confidence disguised through diuers parts of China, that they might see how his Officers did serue him. And if there were any nouelties or changes whereof they made him not priuie, or some things that were necessarie to prouide.

Disguised Intelligencers.

Digitized by Google

§. V.

Of the Portugall commerce with the Chinois; of the ſeuere Iuſtice executed vpon certaine Magiſtrates, for wrongs done to the Portugals.

BEcauſe we ſpake many times before of Portugals, captiues in China, it will bee a conuenient thing that the cauſes of their Captiuitie be knowne, where many notable things will be ſhewed. Yee are to know, that from the yeere 1554. hitherto, the buſineſſes in China are done very quietly and without danger: and ſince that time till this day, there hath not one ſhip beene loſt but by ſome miſchance: hauing loſt in times paſt many. Becauſe as the Portugals and the Chinaes were almoſt at warres, when the Armies came vpon them, they weighed anchor and put for the Sea, and lay in places vnſheltered from tempeſts, whereby the ſtormes comming, many were loſt vpon the coaſt, or vpon ſome ſhelues. But from the yeere 1554. hitherto, Lionell of Soſa, borne in Algarue, being chiefe Captaine, and married in Chaull, made a couenant with the Chinaes that they would pay their duties, and that they ſhould ſuffer them to doe their buſineſſes in their Ports. And ſince that time they doe them in Cantan, which is the firſt part of China: and thither the Chinaes doe reſort with their Silkes and Muske, which are the principall goods the Portugals doe buy in China. There they haue ſure Hauens, where they are quiet without danger, or any one diſquieting them, and ſo the Chinaes doe now make their merchandiſe well: and now both great and ſmall are glad with the trafficke of the Portugals, and the fame of them runneth through all China. Whereby ſome of the principall of the Court came to Cantan onely to ſee them hauing heard the fame of them. Before the time aforeſaid, and after the riſing which Fernando Perez of Andrade did cauſe, the buſineſſes were done with great trouble, they ſuffered not a Portugall in the Countrey, and for great hatred and loathing called them Facui, that is to ſay, Men of the Deuill.

Portugals called Fancui, and hated.

Now they hold not commerce with them vnder the name of Portugals, neither went this name to the Court when they agreed to pay cuſtomes: but vnder the name of Fangin, which is to ſay, People of another Coaſt. Note alſo, that the law in China is that no man of China doe ſayle out of the Realme in paine of death. Onely it is lawfull for him to ſayle along the coaſt of the ſame China. And yet along the coaſt, nor from one place to another in China it ſelfe it is lawfull to goe without a certificate of the Louthias of the Countrey whence they depart: in which is ſet downe, whither they goe, and wherefore, and the markes of his perſon, and his age. If he carrieth not this certificate he is baniſhed to the Frontiers. The Merchant that carrieth goods carrieth a certificate of the goods hee carrieth, and how hee payed duties for them. In euery Cuſtome-houſe that is in euery Prouince hee payeth certaine duties, and not paying them he loſeth the goods, and is baniſhed to the frontier parts. Notwithſtanding the aboueſaid lawes ſome Chinaes doe not leaue going out of China to trafficke, but theſe neuer returne againe to China. Of theſe ſome liue in Mallaca, others in Siam, others in Patane, and ſo in diuers places of the South ſome of theſe that goe out without licence are ſcattered. Whereby ſome of theſe which liue already out of China doe returne againe in their ſhips vnto China, vnder the protection of ſome Portugall: and when they are to diſpatch the duties of their ſhips they take ſome Portugall their friend to whom they giue ſome bribe, that he may diſpatch it in his name and pay the duties. Some Chinaes deſiring to get their liuing, doe goe very ſecretly in theſe ſhips of the Chinaes to trafficke abroad, and returne very ſecretly, that it bee not knowne, no not to his kindred, that it bee not ſpread abroad, and they incurre the penalty that the like doe incurre. This law was made becauſe the King of China found that the much communication of the ſtrangers might be the cauſe of ſome riſings. And becauſe many Chinaes with an excuſe of ſayling abroad became theeues and robbed the Countries along the Sea coaſt, and yet for all this diligence there are many Chinaes robbers along the Sea coaſt.

Name-policy.

Lawes of Nauigation.

Couetiſe lawleſſe.

China Pirats.

Theſe Chinaes that liue out of China, and doe goe thither with the Portugals, ſince the offence of Fernando Perez of Andrada did direct the Portugals to begin to goe to traffick to Liampo; for in thoſe parts are no walled Cities nor Villages, but many and great Townes along the coaſt, of poore people, which were very glad of the Portugals, and ſold them their prouiſion whereof they made their gayne. In theſe Townes were theſe Merchants of China which came with the Portugals, and becauſe they were acquainted, for their ſake the Portugals were better entertayned. And as theſe Chinaes which were among the Portugals and the Countrey Merchants in their buyings and ſellings, they reaped a great profit thereby. The inferiour Louthias of the Sea coaſt receiued alſo great profit of this trafficke, for they receiued great bribes of the one and of the other, to giue them leaue to trafficke, to carrie and recarrie their goods. So that this trafficke was among them a long while concealed from the King, and from the ſuperiour Louthias of the Prouince. After theſe matters had for ſome ſpace beene done ſecretly in Liampoo, the Portugals went by little and little forward, and began to goe and make their merchandiſe to Chincheo, and to the Ilands of Cantan. And other Louthias permitted them already in euery place for the bribes ſake, whereby ſome Portugals came to trafficke beyond Namqui, which Liampo.

Chincheo.

Namqui, or Nanquin.

Digitized by Google

which is very farre from Cantan, without the King being witting, or hauing knowledge of this trafficke. The matters fell out in such sort, that the Portugals wintered in the Ilands of Liampoo.

Some Chinaes that were among the Portugals, and some Portugals with them, came to disorder themselues in such manner that they made great stealths and robberies and killed some of the people. These euils encreased so much that the clamour of the iniured was so great, that it came not onely to the superiour Louthias of the Prouince, but also to the King. Who commanded presently to make a very great Armada in the Prouince of Fuquen, to driue the theeues from all the coast, especially those that were about Liampoo, and all the Merchants as well Portugals as Chinaes were reputed in this number of theeues. Being ready they went forth along the coast of the Sea. And because the windes serued them not for to goe for Liampoo, they went to the coast of Chincheo, where finding some ships of Portugals, they began to fight with them, and in no wise did they permit any wares to come to the Portugals; who stayed many dayes there (fighting sometimes) to see if they could haue any remedie for to dispatch their businesses. But seeing they had no remedy, they determined to goe without it. The Captaynes of the Armie knowing this, sent a message to them very secretly by night, that if they would that any goods should come to them, that they should send them something. The Portugals very glad with this message, prepared a great and sumptuous present, and sent it them by night because they were so aduised. From thence-forward came many goods vnto them, the Louthias making as though they tooke no heed thereof, dissembling with the Merchants. And so were the businesses ended that yeere, which was the yeere 1548.

Disorders of outragious Chinois, and insolent Portugals.

Briberie.

The yeare following, which was 1549. there was a straighter watch vpon the Coast by the Captaynes of the Armada, and greater vigilancie in the Ports and entrances of China, in such sort that neyther goods nor victuals came to the Portugals: but for all the vigilancie and watching there was, (as the Ilands along the Coast are many, for they all runne in a row along the China) the Armies could not haue so much vigilancie, that some wares were not brought secretly to the Portugals. But they were not so many that they could make vp the ships ladings, and the vttering those goods which they had brought to China. Wherefore leauing the goods which they had not vttered in two ships of China, of such Chinaes as were alreadie dismembred from China, and Traffique abroad vnder the shadow of the Portugals, (in the which they left thirtie Portugals in charge with the ships and with the goods) that they might defend the ships, and in some Port of China where best they could they should sell the goods that remayned in change for some Wares of China, and hauing ordayned this they departed for India.

As the people of the Armie of the Chinaes saw the two ships remayne alone, the other ships being gone, they came vpon them, being induced by some Merchants of the Countrey, which discouered to them the great store of goods that remayned in those Vessels, and the few Portugals that remayned to keepe them. Then they layd an ambush for them, dressing some Chinaes ashoare, which being in armes made as though they would set vpon the ships to fight with them, because they were close to the Land, that the Portugals being prouoked, should come out of the ships to fight with them, & so the ships might remaine without defence to them of the Armada, wichh lay watching in an ambush, & did accordingly set vpon the two Vessels with great furie & celeritie, and slaying some Portugals that were in the ships, and wounding others they tooke the ships. The chiefe Captayn which is the Luthissi, remayned so glorious, that he vsed great crueltie on some Chinaes that hee tooke with the Portugals. Hee laboured to perswade foure Portugals which had more apparance in their persons then the rest, that they should say, they were Kings of Malaca, he perswaded them in the end, because hee promised to vse them better then the rest, and therewith he prouoked them. And finding among the cloathes that hee tooke a Gowne and a Cap, and asking of one of those Chinaes, that were taken with the Portugals what habit that was, they put in his head, that it was the habit of the Kings of Malaca, wherefore he commanded presently to make three Gownes by that patterne, and three Caps, and so he apparelled them all foure in one sort, to make his fayning true, and his victory more glorious. To this was joyned the couetousnesse of the Luthissi to see if hee could detayne the many goods that hee had taken in ships.

Mountayne Mouse-birth.

Spectatum admissi risum teneatis amici?

And to doe this more safely, not to be taken in a lye, he did great executions vpon the Chinaes which he tooke with the Portugals, and killing some of them determined to kill the rest. These things comming to the eares of the Aitao, which was his superior, he disliked greatly that which hee had done, and sent to him presently that hee should kill no more of those which remayned, but that he should come to him presently bringing with him all the prize as well of the men that were yet aliue, as of the goods. The Luthissi ordering his Iourney for to goe to the Aitao, as he was commanded, he commanded foure Chaires to be giuen to them, to whom hee had giuen title of Kings, to be carried in them with more honour. And the other Portugals were carried in Coopes with their heads out fast by the neckes betweene the boards that they could not pull them in, but hauing some wounds in their heads, they went bare headed to the Sunne and to the Dew, and were carried on mens shoulders. The Luthissi went with this Prize through the Countrey with great Majestie, he carried before him foure Banners displayed, on the which Pillory Coops.

were

were written the names of the foure Kings of Malaca. And when he entred into the Townes, he entred with great noyse and Majestie, with sound of Trumpets, and with Cryers which went crying the great victorie, the Luthisi (naming him) had gotten of the foure great Kings of Malaca. And all the great men of the Townes went to receiue him with great Feasts and Honours, all the Townes running to see the new Victorie.

When the Luthisi came with all his pompe and glory where the Aitao was, after the giuing him particular account of all things passed and of his victory, he manifested to him his pretence and agreed with him to diuide the goods betweene them both, and that he should continue the fayning of the Kings of Malaca, that both might receiue of the King Honours and Rewards.

Damnable vanitie. This being set downe they both agreed that to keepe this in secret, the Luthisi should go forward in that which he had begun, to wit, he should slay all the Chinas, that came there captiue. And presently they commanded presently to put it in effect, and so they slue ninetie and odde Chinas, among whom were some young youths slaine. They left notwithstanding three or foure youthes and one man, that by them (bringing them to their owne hand) they might certifie the King all that they would, that was to make of the Portugals Theeues, and conceale the goods which they tooke: certifying also by these that those foure were Kings of Malaca. And the Portugals not hauing the Language of the Countrey, neither had any person to intreate for or fauour them would perish: and they being mightie would make their owne Tale good, following the end by them intended. And for this cause they slue not the Portugals, but left them aliue, for the greater triumph of the victorie.

These Lothias could not doe this so secretly, but many of those which they slue had kindred in the Countrey, which did grieue at the death of theirs. Whereby, as well by these, as by some Louthias that were zealous of Iustice, and would not giue consent in so great euils and fraudulent dealings, this matter came to the Kings eares, and hee was informed how the Portugals were Merchants which came to traffique with their Merchandize to China, and they were no theeues, and how they had falsly giuen the Title of Kings to foure of them, to the end the King should shew great fauours, and doe them great honours, and how they had vsurped great store of goods: and that for to conceale these euils, they killed men and children without fault.

The Kings Iustice. As soone as the King was informed of all aboue said, hee dispatched presently from the Court a Quinchay, (of whom we spake before, that is to say plate of Gold) And with him he sent other two men of great authoritie also, of the which the one had beene Panchasi, the other Anchasi, these two as Inquisitors and Examiners of this matter: Commanding and commending to the Chaen which that yeare went to visit the Prouince of Fuquen, and to the Panchasi and Anchasi, of the same Prouince, their ayde and assistance to the Quinchay, and the two Inquisitors in all things necessary for them in these businesses. The two that came with the Quinchay, as Inquisitors, went presently to certayne great Houses which had in the middest a great Court, and on the one side of the Court were certayne great and faire Lodgings, and on the other side others in the same sort. Each of the Inquisitors entred in one of these Houses aforesaid. The Prisoners were presently brought, and were presented to the one of them, who for courtesie remitted them to the other, that he should examine them first, with many words of courtesie. The other sent them againe with great thankfulnesse. So they were sundry times carried from one to another, each of them willing to giue the hand to the other of beginning first, till that one of them yeelded and began. And as the matter was of great import and much commended to them, all that the guiltie and the accusers did speake these Officers did write with their owne hands. The Portugals had for a great Enemy a China man and Pilot of one of the shippes that were taken, and a China youth which was a Christian, which from a childe was brought vp among the Portugals: for they were both made of the part of the contrarie Louthias, mooued by gifts and promises: the Louthias being alreadie deposed of their Offices, and held for guiltie, for the which they were accused before the King.

But though they were thus handled, they were so mightie and so fauoured, that they could take from the Portugals a China youth that serued them for an Interpreter, which vpon their Petition was againe deliuered them. They examined them in this order, the accused were first brought and examined by one of these Officers, and they carried them to the other to bee examined againe. And while the other was re-examining the accused, the accusers were brought to him that examined first. And as well the accused as the Accusers were all examined by both the Officers, that afterward they both seeing the confessions of the one and the other, they might see if they did agree. And first they examined euery one by himselfe. Afterward they examined them altogeter, for to see if the one did contrary the other, or did contend and reprehend one another, that so by little and little they might gather the truth of the case. In these Examinations the two were contrary, to wit, the Pilot, and the Christian China youth, and had many stripes, because they agreed in some things. The Louthias did alwayes shew themselues glad to heare the Portugals in their defence, who alleadged in their defence, that if they would know who they were, and how they were Merchants and not Theeues, they should send to enquire of them along the Coast of Chincheo, that there they should know the truth, which they might Manner of examination.

know

Digitized by Google

know of the Merchants of the Countrey, with whom a great many yeares agoe they had dealt, and that they might know that they were no Kings, for Kings do not abaſe themſelues ſo much as to come with ſo few men to play the Marchants, and if before they ſaid the contrary, it was by the deceit of the Luthiſi, and to receiue better vſage of him in their perſons.

Hauing this information of the Portugals, preſently with the opinion of the Quinchay and the other Officers, they went to Chincheo both of them, to enquire of the trueth of that which the Portugals had told them; and diſcouering there the truth of the Portugals matter, and the lies of the Luthiſſi, and of the Aitao, they diſpatched preſently a Poſt; wherein they commanded to put the Luthiſſi and the Aitao in Priſon, and in good ſafeguard. Wherefore from thence forward all men began to fauour them very much. If notwithſtanding this examination had bin made in Liampoo, as it was in Chincheo, the Portugals could not haue choſen but haue paſt it ill, according to the greatneſſe of the euils they had done there. After the Louthias returned from Chincheo, they commanded to bring the Portugals before them, and comforted them very much, ſhewing them great good-will, and ſaying to them, that they knew already they were no theeues, but were honeſt men: and they examined againe as well they as their aduerſaries, to ſee if they contradicted themſelues in any thing of that which before they had ſpoken. In theſe later re-examinations the Pilot of China, which before had ſhewed himſelfe againſt the Portugals, and had beene on the Louthias ſide, ſeeing that the Louthias were already in Priſon, and that now they could doe them no good, and that the Portugals were already fauoured, and that the trueth was already knowne, he gainſaid himſelfe of all that he had ſaid, and ſaid that it was true that the Portugals were no theeues nor Kings, but Merchants, and very good men, and diſcouered the goods which the Luthiſſi had taken when he ſurpriſed the Portugals. And that till then he had ſaid to the contrary, was for the great promiſes which the Louthias promiſed him, and for the great threats they vſed to him if he did it not. But ſeeing they were already in Priſon, and he knew they could doe him no hurt, he would now ſpeake the truth. They then commanded to torment him, and whip him very ſore, to ſee if he would gainſay himſelfe, but he ſtill continued in the ſame confeſſion.

When theeues fall out.

All the examinations and diligences neceſſarie in this buſineſſe ended, the Quinchay willing to depart for the Court with his companie, would firſt ſee the Portugals, and giue a ſight of himſelfe to the Citie. The ſight was of great Maieſtie in the manner hee went abroad in the Citie, for he went accompanied with all the great men of it, and with many men in Armes and many Ancients diſplayed and very faire, and with many Trumpets and Kettle-drummes, and many other things which in ſuch pompes are vſed. And accompanied in this manner, hee went to certaine noble and gallant houſes. And all the great men taking their leaue of him, hee commanded the Portugals to come neere him, and after a few words he diſmiſſed them: for this was not but onely to ſee them. Before theſe Louthias departed they commanded the Louthias of the Countrey, and the Iaylors, that all of them ſhould fauour the Portugals, and giue them good entertaynment, and ſhould command to giue them all things neceſſarie for their perſons. And commanded euery one to ſet his name in a piece of Paper, becauſe that while they were at the Court, and their matters were diſpatching, they ſhould not craftily make ſome miſſing. And they commanded to keepe the Luthiſſi in good ſafety, and the Aitao, and that they ſhould not let them communicate with any perſon. Being gone from the Citie, they lodged in a ſmall Towne, where they ſet in order all the Papers, and ingroſſing onely that which was neceſſarie. And becauſe the Papers were many, and were much to write, they helped themſelues with three men. And hauing ingroſſed all that they were to carrie to the Court, they burned all the reſt. And becauſe theſe three men which they tooke for helpers ſhould not ſpread abroad any thing of that which they had ſeene, or heard, or written, they left them ſhut vp with great vigilancie, that none ſhould ſpeake with them, commanding to giue them all things neceſſarie very abundantly vntill the Kings Sentence came from Court, and were declared. The Papers being preſented in Court, and all ſeene by the King and by his Officers, he pronounced the Sentence in * manner and forme following.

The Quinchays magnificent oſtentation.

Cautelous induſtrie.

* It is here abridged.

The Kings Sentence.

Pimpu by commandement of the King. Becauſe Chaipuu, Huchin Tutan without my commandement, or making mee priuie thereto, after the taking of ſo much people, commanded them to bee ſlayne: I being willing to prouide therein with Iuſtice, ſent firſt to know the trueth by Quinſituam, my Quinchei, who taking with him the Louthias which I ſent to examine the trueth of the Portugals, and alſo of the Aitao and Luthiſſi, which had informed mee, that the Portugals were theeues, and that they came to all the coaſt of my Dominion to robbe and to murther. And the trueth of all being knowne, they are come from doing that which I commanded them. And the Papers being ſeene by my Pimpu, and by the great Louthias of my Court, and well examined by them, they came to giue mee account of all. And likewiſe I commanded them to be peruſed by Ahimpu, and Altu Ghaen, and by Athayliſſi Chuquin, whom I commanded to ouerſee thoſe Papers very well, becauſe the matters were of great weight; wherein I would prouide with Iuſtice. Which thus being ſeene and peruſed by them all, it was manifeſt that the Portugals came many yeeres before to the coaſt of Chincheo to doe their affaires, which was not conuenient they ſhould doe in the manner they did it, but in my Markets, as was alwaies the cuſtome in all my Ports. Theſe men of whom hitherto I knew not: I know now that the people of

Digitized by Google

Chincheo went to their ships about their affaires, whereby I know already that they are Merchants and not theeues, as they had written to me they were.

And I doe not blame Merchants to helpe Merchants, but I put great fault in my Louthias of Chincheo: *because that when any ship came to my Ports, they should haue knowne if they were Merchants, and if they would pay their duties, and if they would pay them, to write presently vnto mee. If they had done so; so much euill had not beene done. Or when they were taken, if they had let mee know it, I had commanded to set them at libertie. And although it bee a custome in my Ports the ships that come vnto them to be measured * by cubits for to pay their duties: these being very farre off, it was not necessarie but to let them doe their businesses, and goe for their Countries. Besides this my* Pontoos * which knew these men to be Merchants did not tell it mee, but concealed it from mee, whereby they were the cause of many people being taken and slaine. And those that remayned aliue as they could not speake, did looke toward Heauen, and demanded from their hearts iustice of Heauen (they know no other God supreme but the Heauen.) Besides these things I know that the Aitao, and the Luthissi did so much euill for couetousnesse of the many goods which they tooke from the Portugals, hauing no regard whether those which they tooke, and tooke the goods from, were good or euill men. Likewise the Louthias along the Sea coast knew these men to be Merchants, and certified mee not. And all of them, as disloyall, were the cause of so much euill. I knew more by my Quinchey, that the Aitao, and the Luthissi had Letters, by the which they knew that the Portugals were no theeues but Merchants, and knowing this they were not contented with the taking of them, but they wrote many lyes vnto mee, and were not contented with killing of the men, but killed children also, cutting off the feet of some, of others the hands, and at last the heads of them all: writing vnto mee they had taken and slayne Kings of Mallaca. Which case I beleeuing to be true, grieue in my heart.

And because hitherto so many cruelties haue beene vsed without my commandement, from hence forward I command they be not done. Besides this the Portugals resisted my Armie, being better to haue let themselues beene taken, then to kill my people. Moreouer, it is long since they came to the coast of our Dominion about their affaires in manner of theeues, and not as Merchants: wherefore if they had beene naturall as they are strangers they had incurred paine of death & losse of goods, wherfore they are not without fault. The Tutan *by whose commandement those men were slaine, said * that by this deed I should make him greater; and the people that he commanded to be slayne after they had no heads, their hearts, (that is their soules and their blond) required iustice of Heauen. I seeing so great euils to be done, my eyes could not indure the sight of the Papers without teares, and great griefe of my heart. I know not, my* Louthias seeing they tooke this people, wherefore they let it not goe, that I might not come to know so many cruelties and so great. Wherefore seeing all these things, I doe create Senfuu chiefe Louthia, because hee did his dutie in his charge, and told mee trueth. I create also chiefe Louthia Quinchio, because hee wrote the trueth to mee of the Pontoos which went to doe their merchandise in secret with the Portugals to the Sea. Those which are euill I will make them baser then they which sowe Rice.

Likewise because Pachou did traffick with the Portugals, and for bribes did permit the Merchants of the Countrey to traffick with the Portugals, and yet doing these things, wrote vnto mee that the Portugals were theeues and that they came to my Dominions onely to steale. And the same hee said also to my Louthias (which presently answered, that he lyed, for they knew already the contrarie.) And therefore such a one, and such a one, (he nameth ten Louthias.) It is nothing that all you be banished to red Caps x, to the which I condemne you: but you deserue to be made baser as I doe make you. Chaen for taking these men thou sayedst thou shouldest be greater, and being in the doing of so much euill thou sayedst thou didst not feare mee: such a one, and such a one (he nameth nine) for the taking of these men yee say, I would make you great, and without any feare of mee yee all lyed, such a one, and such a one (he nameth many.) I know also yee tooke bribes. But because you did so, I make you base, (he depriueth them of the dignitie of Lothias.)

Such a one, and such a one (he nameth many. If the Aitao and the Luthissi would kill so many people, wherefore did you suffer it? But seeing that in consenting you were accessarie with them in their death, all are in the same fault. Chifuu, and Chanchituu, were also agreeing to the will of the Aitao and the Luthissi, and were with them in the slaughter, as well those that were as those that were not in fault. Wherefore I condemne you all to red Caps. Lupuu let him haue a good heart, because the Tutan being willing to kill this people, he said that he should let mee first know it. To him I will doe no harme, but good, as he deserueth, and I command that he remayne Louthia. Sanchi I make my Anchassi of the Citie of Cansi. The Antexio I command to be deposed of his honour. Assaon seeing hee can speake with the Portugals, let him haue honour and ordinarie, and he shall be carried to Chaquean, where hee was borne. (This is the youth with whom the Portugals did defend themselues, seruing them for Interpreter, they gaue him title of Louthia, and maintenance.) Chinque Head of the Merchants that went to the Sea to traffick with the Portugals, and deceiued them, bringing great store of goods a land, it shall be demanded of him, and set in good safeguard for the maintenance and expences of the Portugals, and I condemne him and his foure Companions to red Caps, and they shall bee banished whither my Louthias shall thinke good.

To the rest guilty and imprisoned for this matter, I command my Louthias to giue to euery one the punish-

* In China and Siam they pay Custome by measuring the ship from poop to prow how many cubits it is of.

* Pontoos are Sea-watches.

Butcherly insolence.

* Said in his heart, or conceited himself.

Senfu and others rewarded.

x Red Caps are the enligne of men condemned to serue the King in his frontiers against the Enemie.

Digitized by Google

puniſhment he deſerueth. I command the Chaen to bring me hither the Tutan, that his faults being peruſed by the great men of my Court, I may command to doe iuſtice on him as I ſhall thinke good. (This Tutan was alſo a conſenter in the wickedneſſe of the Aitao and the Luthiſſi: for the Luthiſſi, and the Aitao made him partaker, and gaue him part of the booties which they tooke from the Portugals, that as the head he ſhonld hold for good that which they did: for in truth they durſt not haue done that which they did if he had not giuen conſent, and agreed with their opinion. This hearing what was judged againſt him, hung himſelfe, ſaying, that ſeeing the Heauen had made him whole, that no man ſhould take away his head. The Poutoos which yet are in Priſon, ſhall be examined againe, and ſhall preſently be diſpatched. Chuichum ſhall preſently be depriued from being a Louthia, without being heard any more. Chibee, head of ſixe and twenty, I command that hee and his be all ſet at libertie, for I find but little fault in them. Thoſe which owe any money it ſhall bee recouered of them preſently. Famichin, and Tomicher ſhall dye, if my Louthias doe thinke it expedient; if not let them doe as they thinke beſt. Alfonſo of Paiua, and Peter of Cea (theſe were Portugals) Antonie and Franciſco (theſe were ſlaues) finding them to be guilty of killing ſome men of my Armie, ſhall with the Luthiſſi and Aitao be put in Priſon, where according to the cuſtome of my Kingdome, they all ſhall dye at leiſure. The other Portugals that are aliue with all their Seruants which are in all fiftie one, I command them to be carried to my Citie of Canſi, where I command they be well intreated, ſeeing my heart is ſo good towards them that for their ſake I puniſh in this ſort the people of my Countrey, and deale ſo well with them; for it is my cuſtome to doe Iuſtice to all men. The Louthias of the Armada, finding they are in little fault, I command they bee ſet free (I deale in this ſort with all men, that my Louthias may ſee that all that which I doe, I doe it with a good zeale.) All theſe things I command to be done with ſpeed. Hitherto the ſentence of the King.

The Tutan by hanging himſelfe preuents the Hangman, or proued the Hangman rather.

The Portugals that were freed by the ſentence, when they carried them whither the King commanded, found by the way all things neceſſary in great abundance, in the Houſes aboueſaid, that the King had in euery Towne for the Louthias when they trauell. They carried them in ſeates of Chaires made of Canes on mens backes, and they were in charge of inferiour Louthias, which cauſed them to haue all things neceſſarie through all places where they came, till they were deliuered to the Louthias of the Citie of Canſi. From that time they had no more of the King euery moneth but one Foon of Rice (which is a meaſure as much as a man can beare on his backe) the reſt they had need of, euery one did ſeeke by his owne induſtry. Afterward they diſperſed them againe by two and two, and three and three through diuers places, to preuent that in time they ſhould not become mightie ioyning themſelues with others.

What became of the Portugals.

Thoſe that were condemned to death, were preſently put in Priſon of the condemned. And Alfonſo of Paiua had a meanes to giue the Portugals to vnderſtand that were free, that for his welcome they had giuen him preſently fortie ſtripes and intreated him very euill, ſhewing himſelfe comforted in the Lord. Thoſe which were at libertie, now ſome and then ſome, came to the ſhips of the Portugals, by the induſtrie of ſome Chinas, which brought them very ſecretly for the great gifts they receiued of the Merchants of Portugall, which made their Merchandize in the Citie of Cantan.

§. VI.

Of the Religion in China; difficultie of bringing in Chriſtianitie. Terrible Earth-quakes and Tempeſts in China.

IN the Citie of Cantan in the middeſt of the Riuer which is of freſh water and very broad, is a little Ile, in the which is a manner of a Monaſterie of their Prieſts; and within this Monaſterie I ſaw an Oratorie high from the ground very well made, with certayne gilt ſteps before it, made of carued worke; in which was a woman very well made with a childe about her necke, and it had a Lampe burning before it. I ſuſpecting that to bee ſome ſhew of Chriſtianitie, demanded of ſome Lay-men, and ſome of the Idoll Prieſts which were there, what that woman ſignified, and none could tell it mee, nor giue mee any reaſon of it. It might well be the Image of our Ladie, made by the ancient Chriſtians, that Saint Thomas left there, or by their occaſion made, but the concluſion is, that all is forgotten: it imght alſo be ſome Gentiles Image. The greateſt God they haue is the Heauen, the letter that ſignifieth it, is the principall and the firſt of all the Letters. They worſhip the Sun, the Moone, and the Starres, and all the Images they make without any reſpect. They haue, notwithſtanding, Images of Louthias, which they worſhip for hauing beene famous in ſome one thing or other. And likewiſe Statues and Images of ſome Prieſts, of the Idols, and ſome of other men for ſome reſpects particular to them. And not only worſhip they theſe Images, but whatſoeuer ſtone they erect on the Altars in their Temples.

Heauen firſt both God and Character.

Digitized by Google

Omittoffois and their offerings. * A Perfume so called.

They call commonly these Gods Omittoffois, they offer them Incense, Benjamin, Ciuet, and another Wood which they call Cayo, * Laque, and other smelling things. They offer them likewise Ocha, whereof is mention made afore. Euery one hath a place to pray, and at the entries behind the doores of the Houses, in the which they haue their carued Idols: to the which euery day in the Morning and at Euening they offer Incense and other perfumes. They haue in many places (as well in the Townes as out of them) Temples of Idols. In all the ships they sayle in, they make presently a place for to worship in, where they carrie their Idols.

Lots.

In all things they are to enterprize either Iournies by Sea or by land, they vse Lots & cast them before their Gods. The Lots are two sticks made like halfe a Nut-shell, flat on the one side, and round on the other: and as bigge againe as an halfe Nut, and joyned with a string. And when they will cast Lots, they speak first with their God, perswading him with words, and promising him some Offring if he giue him a good Lot, & in it shew him his good Voyage or good successe of his busines. And after many words they cast the Lots. And if both the flats sides fal vpward, or one vp another downe, they hold it for an euill Lot, and turne them toward their Gods very melancholy, they call them Dogs, with many other reproaches. After they are wearie of rating them, they soothe them againe with faire milde words, and aske pardon, saying, that the Melancholy of not giuing them a good Lot, caused them to doe them injurie, and speake injurious words vnto him: but that they will pardon them and giue them a good Lot; and they promise to offer him more such a thing (because the promises are the better for them that promise them, they make many and great promises and offerings) and so they cast Lots so many times till they fall both on the flat sides which they hold for a good Lot, then remayning well contented, they offer to their Gods that which they promised. It happeneth many times when they cast Lots about any weighty matter, if the Lot fall not out good, or launching a ship to the Sea it goeth not well, and some euill came to it, they runne to their Gods and cast them in the water, and put them in the flame of the fire sometimes, and let them scorch a little, and spurning them often, and tread them vnder foot, and giue them rayling words, till their businesse be ended, and then they carrie them with playing and feasts, and giue them their Offerings.

Cruell men to their fooliſh Gods.

Offerings.

They hold for a great Offering a Hogges head boyled: they offer Hennes, Geese, Duckes and Rice all drest, and a great pot of Wine. After they present it all to the Gods, they set his portion apart, which is, to put in a Dish, the small points of the Hogs eare, the bils, and the points of the clawes of the Hennes, Geese, and Duckes, a few cornes of Rice very few, and put in with great heed, three or foure drops of Wine very heedfully, that there fall not many drops from the Pot. These things so set in a Bason that they set them on the Altar to their Gods for to eate, and they set themselues there before the Gods to eate all that which they bring.

The Deuill worshipped.

They worship the Deuill also, which they paint after our fashion: and say that they worship him because he maketh those which are good, Deuils; and the euill, he maketh Buffes, or Kine, or other beasts. And they say that the Deuill hath a Master that teacheth him his Knaueries: these things say the base people: the better sort say they worship him because hee shall doe them no hurt.

When they will launch any new ship to the Sea, their Priests being called by them come into the ships to doe their Sacrifices with long side Garments of Silke. They set about the shippe many flags of Silke, they paint in the prow of the ship the Deuill, to the which they make many reuerences and Offerings, and say they doe it because the Deuill shall doe no hurt to the ship.

Paper Offerings.

They offer to the Gods Papers with diuers Images painted, and other of sundry kinde of cuttings, and they burne them all before the Idols with certayne Ceremonies and well tuned Songs, and while their singing doth last, they ring certayne small Bels, and among all they vse great store of eating and drinking.

Two sorts of Priests. Monkes.

In this Countrey are two manner of Priests, the one that haue their head all shauen, these weare on their heads certayne course Caps like vnto Canopie cloth, they are high, and flat behind (higher before then behind a hand breadth) made like a Mitre with Pinacles: their wearing is white Coates after the Lay-mens fashion. These liue in Monasteries, they haue dining places, and Cels, and many pleasures within their wals. There be others whom commonly the people doe vse for their Burials and Sacrifices, these weare their haire, and blacke silke Coates, or of Searge or Linnen, and long like the Lay-men, hauing for a token their haire made fast in the Crowne of the head with a sticke very well made like a closed hand, varnished blacke. None of these Priests haue Wiues, but they liue wickedly and filthily.

Seculars.

Feasts.

The first day of the yeare, which is in the new Moone of March, they make through all the Land great Feasts, they visit one another, the chiefe principally doe make great Banquets. How much these people are curious in the rule and gouernment of the Countrey, and in their common Traffique, so much they are beastly in their Gentilities, in the vsage of their Gods and Idolatries. For besides that which is said, they haue many Gentilicall Lyes, of men that were turned into Dogges, and afterward into men, and of Snakes that were conuerted into men, and many other ignorances.

Traditionall Fables.

I entred one day into a Temple and came to an Altar, where were certaine stones set vp which which they worshipped, and trusting in the little estimation they held their Gods in, and in being men that would be satisfied with reason, I threw the stones downe to the ground, whereat some ranne very fiercely at me and angry, asking me wherefore I had done that, I went mildly to them, and smiling, said to them, because they were so inconsiderate that they worshipped those stones. They asked me wherefore should they not adore them? and I shewed them how they were better then they, seeing they had the vse of reason, feete, hands, and eyes, wherewith they did diuers things that the stones could not doe, and that seeing they were better they should not abase and esteeme so little of themselues as to worship things so vile they being so noble. They answered me that I had reason, and went out with me in company, leauing the stones on the ground: so that there is likelihood and shew of their becomming Christians. And it maketh also much to this purpose, their not making any difference of meate, as all the people of India doth. And seeing that among all the meates they esteeme the Porke most, it is almost impossible for them to become Turkes.

Digitized by Google

Notwithstanding, there are two verie great inconueniences to make any Christians in this Countrey. The one is, that in no wise they will permit any noueltie in the Countrey, as in some sort it may bee seene in the matter of the Moores. So that whatsoeuer noueltie that is in the Countrey, the Louthias take order presently how to represse it, and it goeth no further. Whence it happened in Cantan, because they saw a Portugall measure the entries of the Gates, they set presently Watches that none should come in without licence, nor goe vpon the Walls. The second is, that no strange person may enter into China without leaue of the Louthias, nor be in Cantan, which doe giue him a certaine time to bee in Cantan. The time of the licence ended, presently they labour to haue them depart. Wherefore because I and those which were with me were one moneth longer in Cantan, they set vp written bords that none should keepe nor harbour vs in their houses, vnder payne of so much, till wee held it our best cheape to goe to the Ships. To the abouesaid is ioyned the common people to bee greatly in feare of the Louthias, wherefore none of them durst become a Christian without their licence, or at the least many would not doe it. Therefore as a man cannot be setled in the Countrey, hee cannot continue Preaching, and by consequence he cannot fructifie and preserue the fruit. There was notwithstanding one way how to Preach freely, and fruit might be made in the Countrey, without any dogge barking at the Preacher, nor any Louthia doe him hurt any way: which is, if hee haue a licence for it of the King: And it might bee obtayned if a solemne Embassage were sent with a solemne present to the King of China, in the name of the King of Portugall, religious men going with the Ambassadour to obtayne the licence to goe about the Countrey, shewing themselues to bee men without Armes. And how our Law is no preiudice to his Dominion and Gouernement, but a great helpe that all might obey him and keepe his Lawes. This onely remedie there is in China, to reape any fruit, and not any other (speaking humanely.) And without this it is impossible for any Religious men to Preach or fructifie, and because I had not this remedie, hauing the abouesaid inconueniences, I came away from China, and therefore neither I, nor they of the company of IESVS which enterprised alreadie this businesse sundry times, could fructifie in China.

No noueltie.

Prouisions against stay of Strangers.

Note.

This people hath besides the ignorances abouesaid, that filthy abomination, that they refraine no sexe among them. Notwithstanding, I Preaching sometimes, as well publike as priuately against this vice, they were glad to heare mee, saying, that I had reason in that which I sayd, but but that they neuer had had any that told them that was a sinne, nor any thing euill done. It seemeth that because this sinne is common among them, God was willing to send them a grieuous punishment in some places of the earth, the which was common in all China. I being in the Citie of Cantan, and being willing to know of a rich China Marchant the euils that had happened in the Countrey, and hee not able to tell it me by word of mouth, gaue me a Letter which they had written vnto him of what had happened: saying to me, that I should translate it and giue it him againe: but not trusting me hee translated it presently, and remayning with the copie gaue me the principall, which I translated into Portugall with the helpe of one that could speake our language and theirs, the tenour of the Letter is this.

Chinois Sodomites.

Plagues happning in China.

The principall Louthias of Sanxi and of Sauiton, wrote vnto the King, saying, that in those Prouinces the earth did shake terribly, and the dayes waxed darke like night (hee saith not how long) a South-sayer told them all that should happen. In the yeere before in the moneth of September, the earth opened in many places, and vnder it were heard great noyses like the sound of Bells, there followed a great winde with much rayne, and the winde ranne about all the Compasse. This winde is called in China, Tufaune, and many yeeres it bloweth but once a yeere, and it is so raging, that it driueth a Ship vnder sayle on the Land a great space, and the men cannot keepe their feete, not leauing and holding one by another, and it doth things worthie admiration and incredible. In the yeere that I was in China, in the part where the Portugals were, they shewed the Boat of a Ship of a good bigneſſe, and the place where it was a land (that this winde carrayed it, might bee a great stones cast from the water) and many did affirme it to mee, that the winde had such force, that it carryed it tumbling till it blew it into the Sea. And all the houses the Portugals had made of timber, and couered with strawe, which were many and Tufon, a terrible tempest.

Digitized by Google

were built vpon great ſtakes, and not very high, it threw them all downe breaking the ſtakes. And one houſe being faſtened with foure Cables, where many Portugals retired themſelues, at the laſt fell alſo, and onely one that was ſheltered with a high place eſcaped that it fell not. To blow downe theſe houſes was nothing, for it doth many other things incredible. This winde is almoſt euerie yeere in China; the which within twentie foure houres that it raigneth, it runneth about all the points of the Compaſſe. With this winde, and the Lands being ſhaken with the Earthquakes, many Cities fell and were made deſolate, in the which dyed innumerable people.

Vinyanfu, ſwallowed vp.

In a Citie called Vinyanfun, in this day was a great Earthquake. And on the weſt ſide a great Fire burſt out, that ſwallowed vp all the Citie, in the which, innumerable people periſhed, eſcaping in one place two, in another three, and ſo ſome of the Mogores eſcaped. In another Citie neere to this, there happened the ſame, but in this none eſcaped. In a Citie called Leuchimen, the Riuer increaſed in ſuch ſort, that it ouer-flowed the Citie, where infinite people were drowned. In a Citie called Hien, was an Earthquake, with the which many houſes fell, which ſlew neere eight thouſand ſoules. In Puchio, the houſe of the Kings kinſman fell and ſlew all that were in the houſe, except a Childe of ſeuen or eight yeeres old his ſonne, (which was carryed to the King) and day and night was a noyſe heard vnder the earth, like the ſound of Bells.

Another Citie quite periſhed.
Leuchimen.
Hien.
Puchio.

Couchue.

In a Countrey called Cochue, with fire from Heauen and with many waters of a Floud, many periſhed, and the land remayned vnable to bee cultiuated againe. In a Countrey called Enchinoen, at midnight the houſes fell, and the Citie remayned deſolate and ruined, where periſhed neere one hundred thouſand ſoules. In a Citie called Inchumen, in one day and a night, the Riuer did flow and ebbe ten times, and with the great floud many people periſhed. Hitherto the tranſlation of the Letter: that which followeth, was heard by word of mouth of the Portugals that were in the Port of Cantan in the moneth of May, and I receiued the Letter in September.

Enchinoen.
Inchumen.

Sanxi.

In a Citie called Sanxi, from midnight till fiue of the clocke in the morning, the earth ſhooke three times, the eighteenth of Ianuarie, 1556. and the next day after, from midnight till noone, happened the ſame: the next day following, the twentie of the ſayd moneth, the earth ſhooke mightily after midnight with great Thunder and Lightnings, and all the Prouince was burnt, and all the people thereof, and all the Suburbes, Townes, and Cities: they ſay it is from bound to bound, fiftie or ſixtie leagues, that there was not one ſaued but a Childe, ſonne to a kinſman of the King, which was carried to the King. And the third of Februarie in the ſame yeere, in the Citie of Panquin where the King is, fell a ſhower of rayne like bloud. Theſe newes brought one of China that came to Cantan, from a Citie neere to Sanxi, to giue newes to a Louthia that hee ſhould reſort to his owne houſe, and ſaid, that the Citie where he was a dweller was ouerflowne, and that he knew not whether it would periſh with the reſt. That which ought to bee held for truth, is, that in three Prouinces which commonly are ſayd to be deſtroyed, there was no more deſtruction then of thoſe places whereof the Letter maketh mention, or little more. The agreeing in the Childe, ſheweth that the Towne, whereof the Letter maketh mention with the childe, was in the Prouince of Sanxi. This hath more apparance of truth, becauſe the Letter was written from the Court, then to ſay that all the three Prouinces periſhed.

Bloudie ſhower.

After the happening of the things aboueſaid: the ſame yeere in the Prouince of Cantan, a woman which went to the Panchaſi, told him that the Prouince of Canſi would bee deſtroyed with power from Heauen, the which after ſhee was well whipt, was impriſoned: but in the moneth of May of the ſame yeere, there fell great ſtore of rayne verie hot, with the which the earth ſeemed to burne, and many people periſhed with the great heate: but the Prouince periſhed not altogether: wherefore this woman was carried to the King, which was in priſon in the place where the Portugals were, which told this.

Reader, foraſmuch as this Author hath often mentioned, and related alſo the ſtorie of certaine Portugals, Priſoners in China (one of which hee nameth Galotte Perera*) from whom hee receiued great part of his* China intelligence: I haue thought good to adde hither Pereras relations, tranſlated long ſince out of Italian, and publiſhed by R. Willes; hauing abbreuiated ſome things in the Frier, that you might rather haue them at the firſt hand from this Gentleman which ſaw them: but abbreuiated to preuent tedionſneſſe.

CHAP.

CHAP. XI.

The relation of GALEOTTO PERERA, a Gentleman of good credit, that lay Prisoner in China.

THis Land of China is parted into thirteene * Shires, which sometimes were each one a Kingdome by it selfe, but these many yeeres they haue beene all subiect vnto one King.

The King maketh alwayes his abode in the great Citie Pachin, as much to say in our language (as by the name thereof I am aduertised,) *the * Towne of the Kingdome.* This Kingdome is so large, that vnder fiue moneths you are not able to trauell from the Townes by the Sea side, to the Court and backe againe, no not vnder three moneths in Poste at your vrgent businesse. The Post-horses in this Countrey are little of bodie, but swift of foote. Many doe trauell the greater part of this iourney by water in certaine light Barkes, for the multitude of Riuers, commodious for passage from one Citie to another.

The King, notwithstanding the hugenesse of his Kingdome, hath such a care thereof, that euerie Moone (by the Moones they reckon their monethis) he is aduertised fully of whatsoeuer thing happeneth therein. Before that wee doe come to Cinceo, we haue to passe through many places, and some of great importance. For this Countrey is so well inhabited neere the Sea side, that you cannot goe one myle but you shall see some Towne, Borough, or Hostrie, the which are so abundantly prouided of all things, that in the Cities and Townes they liue ciuilly. Neuertheless, such as dwell abroad are very poore, for the multitude of them euery where so great, that out of a Tree you shall see many times swarme a number of Children, where a man would not haue thought to haue found any one at all.

From these places in number infinite, you shall come vnto two Cities very populous, and being compared with Cinceo, not possibly to bee discerned which is the greater of them. These Cities are as well walled as any Cities in all the world. As you come into either of them, standeth so great and mightie a Bridge, that the like thereof I haue neuer seene in Portugall, nor elsewhere. I heard one of my fellowes say, that he told in one Bridge fortie Arches. The occasion wherefore these Bridges are made so great, is for that the Country is toward the Sea very plaine and low, and ouerwhelmed euer as the Sea-water encreaseth. The breadth of the Bridges, although it be well proportioned vnto the length thereof, yet are they equally built, no higher in the middle than at either end, in such wise that you may directly see from the one end to the other, the sides are wonderfully well engraued after the manner of Rome workes. But that wee did most maruell at, was therewithall the hugenesse of the stones, the like whereof, as we came into the City, we did see many set vp in places dishabited by the way, to no small charges of theirs, howbeit to little purpose, wheras no body seeth them but such as do come by. The Arches are not made after our fashion, vaulted with sundry stones set together: but paued, as it were, whole stones reaching from one Pillar to another, in such wise that they lie both for the Arches heads, & gallantly serue also for the high-way. I haue been astonied to behold the hugenesse of these aforesaid stones, some of them are twelue paces long and vpward, the least eleuen good paces long, and an halfe. The wayes each where are gallantly paued with foure-square Stone, except it be where for want of Stone they vse to lay Bricke: in this voyage we trauelled ouer certaine Hills, where the wayes were pitched, and in many places no worse paued than in the plaine ground.

The Countrey is so well inhabited, that no one foot of ground is left vntilled: small store of cattell haue we seene this way, we saw onely certaine Oxen wherewithall the countrey-men doe plough their ground. One Oxe draweth the Plough alone, not onely in this Shire, but in other places also, wherein is greater store of cattell. These countrey-men by art dbe that in tillage, which we are constrained to doe by force. Here be sold the voydings of Close-stooles, although there wanteth not the dung of beasts: and the excrements of man are good marchandise throughout all China. The Dung-farmers seeke in euery street by exchange to buy their durtie ware for Hearbs and Wood. The custome is very good for keeping the Citie cleane. There is great abundance of Hennes, Geese, Duckes, Swine, and Goates, Wethers haue they none: the Hennes are sold by weight, and so are all other things. Two pound of Hennes flesh, Goose, or Ducke, is worth two Foi of their money, that is, three halfe pence. Swines flesh is sold at a peny the pound. Beefe beareth the same price, for the scarcitie thereof, howbeit Northward from Fuquieo, and further from the Sea coast, there is Beefe more plentie, and sold better cheape, Beefe onely excepted, great abundance of all these Viands wee haue had in all the Cities wee passed through. And if this Countrey were like vnto India, the Inhabitants whereof eate neither Hen, Beefe, nor Porke, but keepe that onely for the Portugals and Moores, they would bee sold here for nothing. But it so falling out that the Chineans are the greatest eaters in all the world, they doe feed vpon all things, specially vpon Porke, the fatter that is vnto them, the lesse lothsome. The highest price of these things aforesaid, I haue set downe, better cheape shall you sometimes buy

*You shal haue a more full description of the Country by later Authors: who yet could not so well as this, tell their iudiciall proceedings, seuerities, prisons, executions, &c. these 13. are to be vnderstood besides the two royall Prouinces.

Pachin Pochang, or Paquin, or Pequim.

* Cambalu signifieth the same, and so the Mogolls call this Citie.

Poste Horses.

Their months.

Excellent wals and an admirable bridge.

Magnificent stones.

Wayes paued, bricked, or pitched.

Culture and husbandry.

Digitized by Google

buy them for the great plentie thereof in this Countrey. Frogs are sold at the same price that is made of Hennes, and are good meat amongst them, as also Dogs, Cats, Rats, Snakes, and all other vncleane meates.

Building of the Cities.

The Cities be very gallant, specially neere vnto the Gates, the which are maruellously great, and couered with Iron. The Gate-houses built on high with Towers, the lower part thereof is made of Bricke and Stone, proportionally with the walls, from the walls vpward, the building is of Timber, and many stories in it one aboue the other. The strength of their Townes is in the mightie Walls and Ditches; Artillery haue they none. The streets in Cinceo, and in all the rest of the Cities wee haue seene are very faire, so large and so straight that it is wonderfull to behold. Their houses are built with Timber, the foundations onely excepted, the which are laid with Stone, in each side of the streets are pinteses, or continuall Porches for the Marchants to walke vnder: the breadth of the street is neuertheless such, that in them fifteene men may ride commodiously side by side. As they ride they must needes passe vnder many high Arches of triumph, that crosse ouer the streets made of Timber, and carued diuersly, couered with Tile of fine Clay: vnder these arches the Mercers do vtter their smaller wares, and such as list to stand there are defenced from raine, and the heat of the Sunne. The greater Gentlemen haue these Arches at their doores: although some of them be not so mightily built as the rest.

No Artillerie. Large streets.

Archers.

I shall haue occasion to speake of a certaine order of Gentlemen, that are called Loutea, I will first therefore expound what this word signifieth. Loutea, is as much to say in our language as Sir, and when any of them calleth his name, he answereth, Sir. The manner how Gentlemen are created Louteas, & do come to that honour and title, is by giuing a broad Girdle not like to the rest, and a Cap, at the commandement of the King. The name Loutea is more generall and common vnto moe, than equalitie of honour thereby signified, agreeth withall. Such Louteas that doe serue their Prince in weightie matters for iustice, are created after triall made of their learning: but the other which serue in smaller affaires, as Capitaines, Constables, Sergeants by Land and Sea, Receiuers, and such like, whereof there be in euery Citie, as also in this, very many are made for fauour: the chiefe Louteas are serued kneeling.

Loutea.

The whole Prouince China is diuided, as I haue said, into thirteene Shires, in euery Shire at the least is one Gouernour, called there Tutan, in some Shires there be two. Chiefe in office next vnto them be certaine other named Chians, that is, high Commissioners, as you would say, or Visiters, with full authoritie in such wise, that they doe call vnto an account the Tutanes themselues, but their authoritie lasteth not in any Shire longer than one yeere. Neuertheless, in euery Shire, being at the least seuen Cities, yea, in some of them fifteene or sixteene, besides other Boroughs and Townes, not well to be numbred, these Visiters where they come, are so honoured and feared, as though they were some great Princes. At the yeeres end their circuit done, they come vnto that City which is chiefe of others in the Shire, to doe Iustice there: finally, busying themselues in the searching out of such as are to receiue the order of Louteas, whereof more shall be said in another place.

Chian, al. Chaen.

Ouer and besides these officers in the chiefe Citie of each one of these aforesaid thirteene Prouinces, is resident one Ponchiassi, Captaine thereof, and Treasurer of all the Kings reuenues. This Magistrate maketh his abode in one of the foure greatest houses that be in all these head Cities. In the second great house dwelleth another Magistrate, called Anchiassi, a great officer also, for he hath dealings in all matters of Iustice. Tuzi, another officer so called, lieth in the third house, a Magistrate of importance, specially in things belonging vnto warfare, for thereof hath hee charge. There is resident in the fourth house a fourth Officer, bearing name Taissu. In this house is the principall prison of all the Citie. Each one of these Magistrates aforesaid may both lay euill doers in prison, and deliuer them out againe, except the fact bee heynous and of importance: in such a case they can doe nothing, except they doe meet altogether. And if the deed deserue death, all they together cannot determine thereof, without recourse made vnto the Chian whersoeuer he be, or to the Tutan: and eftsoones it falleth out, that the case be referred vnto higher power.

Ponchiassi.

Anchiassi. al. Hexasi.

Tuzi.

Taissu.

Prisons and sentencing offenders.

In all Cities, not onely chiefe in each Shire, but in the rest also are meanes found to make Louteas. Many of them doe studie at the Prince his charges, wherefore at the yeeres end they resort vnto the head Cities, whither the Chians doe come, as it hath beene earst said, as well to giue these degrees, as to sit in iudgement ouer the prisoners.

Louteas Commencement or Act.

The Chians goe in circuit euery yeere, but such as are to be chosen to the greatest offices, meet not but from three yeeres to three yeeres, and that in certain large halls appointed for them to be examined in. Many things are asked them, whereunto if they doe answere accordingly, and be found sufficient to take their degree, the Chian by and by granteth it them: but the Cap and Girdle whereby they are knowne to be Louteas, they weare not before that they bee confirmed by the King. Their examination done, and triall made of them, such as haue taken their degree wont to be giuen them with all Ceremonies, vse to banquet and feast many daies together (as the Chineans fashion is to end all their pleasures with eating and drinking) and so remaine chosen to doe the King seruice in matters of learning. The other examinates found insufficient to proceed, are sent backe to their studie againe. Whose ignorance is perceiued to come of negligence gence and default, such a one is whipped, and sometimes sent to prison, where wee lying that yeere when this kinde of Act was, wee found many thus punished, and demanding the cause thereof, they said it was for that they knew not how to answere vnto certaine things asked them.

Digitized by Google

It is a world to see how these Louteas are serued and feared, in such wise, that in publike assemblies at one shrike they giue, all the seruitors belonging vnto Iustice, tremble thereat. At their being in these places, when they list to moue, be it but euen to the gate, these Seruitors doe take them vp, and carry them in seats of beaten Gold. After this sort are they borne when they goe in the Citie, either for their owne businesse abroad, or to see each other at home. For the dignitie they haue, and office they doe beare, they be all accompanied: the very meanest of them all that goeth in these seats is vshered by two men at the least, that cry vnto the people to giue place, howbeit they need it not, for that reuerence the common people hath vnto them. They haue also in their company certaine Sergeants, with their Maces, either siluered, or altogether Siluer, some two, some foure, other six, other eight, conueniently for each one his degree. The more principall and chiefe Louteas haue going orderly before these Sergeants, many other with Staues, and a great many Catch-poles with Rods of Indian Canes dragged to the ground, so that the streets being paued, you may here a farre off, as well the noise of the Rods, as the voyce of the cryers. These fellowes serue also to apprehend others, and the better to be knowne, they weare liuerie-red Girdles, and in their Caps Pecocks Feathers. Behinde these Louteas come such as doe beare certaine Tables hanged at staues ends, wherein is written in Siluer letters the name, degree, and office of that Loutea, whom they follow. In like manner they haue borne after them Hats agreeable vnto their titles: if the Loutea bee meane, then hath he brought after him but one Hat, and that may not be yellow: but if hee be of better sort, then may hee haue two, three, or foure: the principall and chiefe Louteas, may haue all their Hats yellow, the which among them is accounted great honour. The Loutea for warres, although hee bee but meane, may notwithstanding haue yellow Hats. The Tutanes and Chians, when they goe abroad, haue besides all this before them led three or foure Horses, with their Guard in Armour. Their Maiesty.

Furthermore, the Louteas, yea, and all the people in China, are wont to eat their meat sitting on Stooles at high Tables as wee doe, and that very cleanly, although they vse neither Table-clothes nor Napkins. Whatsoeuer is set downe vpon the boord is first carued, before that it be brought in: they feed with two Sticks, refraining from touching their meat with their hands, euen as we do with Forkes, for the which respect, they lesse doe need any Table-clothes. Neither is the Nation onely ciuill at meat, but also in conuersation and in courtesie they seeme to exceed all other. Likewise in their dealings, after their manner they are so readie, that they farre passe all other Gentiles and Moores: the greater States are so vaine, that they line their clothes with the best silke that may be found. The Louteas are an idle generation, without all manner of exercises and pastimes, except it be eating and drinking. Sometimes they walke abroad in the fields, to make the Souldiers shoot at Pricks with their Bowes, but their eating passeth: they will stand eating euen when the other doe draw to shoot. The Pricke is a great Blanket spread on certaine long Poles, he that striketh it, hath of the best man there standing a piece of Crimson Taffata, the which is knit about his head: in this sort the winner is honoured, and the Louteas with their bellies full, returne home againe. Manner of eating. We, that is, the Italians and Spaniards. Shooting.

The Inhabitants of China, bee very Idolaters, all generally doe worship the heauens: and as we are wont to say, God knoweth it: so say they at euery word, Tien Tautee, that is to say, The Heauens doe know it. Some doe worship the Sunne, and some the Moone, as they thinke good, for none are bound more to one then to another. In their Temples, the which they doe call Meani, they haue a great Altar in the same place as we haue, true it is, that one may goe round about it. There set they vp the Image of a certaine Loutea of that Countrey, whom they haue in great reuerence for certaine notable things he did. At the right hand standeth the Deuill, much more vgly painted then we doe vse to set him out, whereunto great homage is done by such as come into the Temple to aske counsell, or to draw lots: this opinion they haue of him, that he is malicious and able to doe euill. If you aske them what they doe thinke of the soules departed, they will answer, that they be immortall, and that as soone as any one departeth out of this life, he becommetha deuil, if he haue liued well in this world, if otherwise, that the same deuil changeth him into a Busle, Oxe, or Dog. Wherefore to this Deuill doe they much honour, to him do they sacrifice, praying him that he will make them like vnto himselfe, and not like other beasts. They haue moreouer another sort of Temples, wherein both vpon the Altars, and also on the walls doe stand many Idols well proportioned, but bare headed: These beare name Omithofon, accounted of them spirits, but such as in heauen doe neither good nor euill, thought to bee such men and women, as haue chastely liued in this world in abstinence from Fish and Flesh, fed only with Rice and Salates. Of that Deuill they make some account, for these spirits they care little or nothing at all. Againe, they hold opinion, that if a man doe well in this life, the heauens will giue him many temporall blessings, but if he doe euill, then shall he haue infirmities, diseases, troubles, Idolatry. Deuill most respected.

Digitized by Google

troubles, and penurie, and all this without any knowledge of God. Finally, this people knoweth no other thing then to liue and die, yet becauſe they be reaſonable creatures, all ſeemed good vnto them we ſpake in our language, though it were not very ſufficient.

So did the Romans Auguries.

Our manner of praying ſo well liked them, that in priſon importunately they beſought vs to write for them ſomewhat as concerning heauen, the which we did to their contentation, with ſuch reaſons as we knew, howbeit not very cunningly. As they doe their Idolatry they laugh at themſelues. The greateſt fault we doe finde in them is Sodomie, a vice very common in the meaner ſort, and nothing ſtrange amongſt the beſt. Furthermore the Louteas, withall the people of China, are wont to ſolemnize the daies of the new and full Moones in viſiting one each other, and making great banquets, for to that end, as I haue ſaid, doe tend all their paſtimes and ſpending their daies in pleaſure. They are wont alſo to ſolemnize each one his birth day, whereunto their kindred and friends doe reſort of cuſtome, with preſents of Iewells or Money, receiuing againe for their reward good cheere. They keepe in like manner a generall Feaſt, with great Banquets that day their King was borne. But their moſt principall and greateſt Feaſt of all, and beſt cheare, is the firſt day of their new yeere, namely, the firſt day of the New Moone of Februarie, ſo that their firſt moneth is March, and they reckon the times accordingly, reſpect being had vnto the reigne of their Princes: as when any deed is written, they date it thus; Made ſuch a day of ſuch a Moone, and ſuch a yeere of the raigne of ſuch a King.

Sodomie frequent.

New and full Moones.

Birth-dayes.

New yeares day.

Iuſtice.

Now will I ſpeake of the manner the which the Chineans doe obſerue in doing Iuſtice. Becauſe the Chiniſh King maketh his abode continually in the City Pachin, his Kingdome ſo great, the ſhires ſo many, as before it hath beene ſaid: in it therefore the Gouernours and Rulers, much like vnto our Sheriffes be ſo appointed ſuddenly, and ſpeedily diſcharged againe, that they haue no time to grow nought. Furthermore, to keepe the State in more ſecuritie, the Louteas that gouerne one ſhire, are choſen out of ſome other ſhire diſtant farre off, where they muſt leaue their Wiues, Children, and Goods, carrying nothing with them but themſelues. True it is, that at their comming thither they doe find in a readineſſe all things neceſſarie, their Houſe, Furniture, Seruants, and all other things in ſuch perfection and plentie, that they want nothing. Thus King is well ſerued without all feare of Treaſon.

In the principall Cities of the ſhires be foure chiefe Louteas, before whom are brought all matters of the inferiour Townes, throughout the whole Realme. Diuers other Louteas haue the managing of Iuſtice, and receiuing of Rents, bound to yeeld an account thereof vnto the greater Officers. Other doe ſee that there be no euill rule kept in the Citie: each one as it behoueth him. Generally all theſe doe impriſon Malefactors, cauſe them to be whipped and racked, hoyſing them vp and downe by the armes with a cord, a thing very vſuall there, and accounted no ſhame. Theſe Louteas doe vſe great diligence in the apprehending of the Theeues, ſo that it is a wonder to ſee a Thiefe eſcape away in any Towne, Citie, or Village. Vpon the Sea neere vnto the ſhoare many are taken, and looke euen as they are taken, ſo be they firſt whipped, and afterward laid in Priſon, where ſhortly after they all dye for hunger and cold. At that time, when we were in Priſon, there dyed of them aboue threeſcore and ten. Their whips be certaine pieces of Canes, cleft in the middle, in ſuch ſort that they ſeeme rather plaine then ſharpe. He that is to bee whipped lyeth groueling on the ground. Vpon his thighes the Hangman layeth on blowes mightily with theſe Canes, that the ſtanders by tremble at their crueltie. Tenne ſtripes draw a great deale of bloud, twentie or thirtie ſpoyle the fleſh altogether, fiftie or threeſcore will require long time to be healed, and if they come to the number of one hundred, then are they incurable.

The Italians call it the ſtrapado.

Hard Priſons.

Beating with Canes.

Examinations.

The Louteas obſerue moreouer this: when any man is brought before them to bee examined, they aske him openly in the hearing of as many as be preſent, be the offence neuer ſo great. Thus did they alſo behaue themſelus with vs. For this cauſe amongſt them can there be no falſe witnes as daily amongſt vs it falleth out. This good commeth thereof that many being alwayes about the Iudge to heare the Euidence, and beare witneſſe, the Proceſſe cannot be falſified, as it hapneth ſometimes with vs. The Moores, Gentiles, and Iewes, haue all their ſundry Oathes, the Moores doe ſweare by their Moſſafos, the Brachmans by their Fili, the reſt likewiſe by the things they doe worſhip. The Chineans, though they be wont to ſweare by Heauen, by the Moone, by the Sunne, and by all their Idols, in judgement neuertheleſſe they ſweare not at all. If for ſome offence an Oath be vſed of any one, by and by with the leaſt euidence hee is tormented; ſo be the Witneſſes he bringeth, if they tell not the truth, or doe in any point diſagree, except they bee men of worſhip and credit, who are beleeued without any farther matter: the reſt are made to confeſſe the truth by force of Torments and Whips. Beſides this order obſerued of them in Examinations, they doe feare ſo much their King, and he where he maketh his abode keepeth them ſo low, that they dare not once ſtirre. Againe, theſe Louteas as great as they bee, notwithſtanding the multitude of Notaries they haue, not truſting any others, doe write all great Proceſſes and matters of importance themſelues. Moreouer, one vertue they haue worthy of great praiſe, and that is, being men ſo well regarded and accounted of as though they were Princes, they bee patient

Oathes.

Patient hearing.

Digitized by Google

patient aboue meaſure in giuing audience. Wee poore ſtrangers brought before them might ſay what we would, as all to be Lyes and Falaces that they did write, nor did we ſtand before them with the vſuall Ceremonies of that Countrey, yet did they beare with vs ſo patiently, that they cauſed vs to wonder, knowing ſpecially how little any Aduocate or Iudge is wont in our Countrey to beare with vs. For whereſoeuer in any Towne of Chriſtendome ſhould bee accuſed vnknowne men as we were, I know not what end the very Innocents cauſe would haue: but wee in a Heathen Countrey, hauing our great Enemies two of the chiefeſt men in a whole Towne, wanting an Interpreter, ignorant of that Countrey Language, did in the end ſee our great Aduerſaries caſt into Priſon for our ſake, and depriued of their Offices and Honour for not doing Iuſtice; yea, not to eſcape death, for as the rumour goeth, they ſhall bee beheaded. Seuere Iuſtice.

Somewhat is now to be ſaid of the Lawes that I haue beene able to know in this Countrey, and firſt, no Theft or Murther, is at any time pardoned: Adulterers are put in Priſon, and the fact once proued, condemned to dye, the womans Husband muſt accuſe them: this order is kept with men and women found in that fault, but Theeues and Murtherers are impriſoned as I haue ſaid, where they ſhortly dye for hunger and cold. If any one haply eſcape by bribing the Iaylor to giue him meate, his Proceſſe goeth farther, and commeth to the Court where hee is condemned to dye. Sentence being giuen, the Priſoner is brought in publike with a terrible band of men that lay him in Irons hand and foot, with a board at his necke one handfull broad, in length reaching downe to his knees, cleft in two parts, and with a hole one handfull downe-ward in the Table fit for his necke, the which they encloſe vp therein, nayling the board faſt together, one handfull of the board ſtandeth vp behind in the necke: the ſentence and cauſe wherefore the fellon was condemned to dye, is written in that part of the Table that ſtandeth before. This Ceremonie ended, he is laid in a great Priſon in the company of ſome other condemned perſons, the which are found by the King as long as they doe liue. The board aforeſaid ſo made tormenteth the Priſoners very much, keeping them both from the reſt, and eke letting them to eate commodiouſly, their hands being manicled in Irons vnder that board, ſo that in fine there is no remedie but death. In the chiefe Cities of euery ſhire, as we haue beforeſaid, there be foure principall Houſes, in each of them a Priſoner: but in one of them where the Taiſſu maketh his abode, there a greater and a more principall Priſon then in any of the reſt: and although in euery Citie there be many, neuertheleſſe in three of them remayne onely ſuch as bee condemned to dye. Their death is much prolonged, for that ordinarily there is no execution done but once a yeere, though many dye for hunger and cold, as we haue ſeene in this Priſon. Execution is done in this manner. The Chian, to wit the high Commiſſioner or Lord Chiefe Iuſtice, at the yeares end goeth to the head Citie, where hee heareth againe the cauſes of ſuch as bee condemned. Many times he deliuereth ſome of them, declaring that board to haue beene wrongfully put about their neckes: the viſitation ended, he chooſeth out ſeuen or eight, not many more or leſſe, of the greateſt Malefactors, the which, to feare and keepe in awe the people, are brought into a great Market place, where all the great Louteas meete together, and after many Ceremonies and Superſtitions, as the vſe of the Countrey is, are beheaded. This is done once a yeare: who ſo eſcapeth that day, may be ſure that he ſhall not be put to death all that yeare following, and ſo remayneth at the Kings charges in the greater Priſon. In that Priſon where wee lay were alwayes one hundred and moe of theſe condemned perſons, beſides them that lay in other Priſons. A Pillorie board. Execution.

Theſe Priſons wherein the condemned captiues doe remayne are ſo ſtrong, that it hath not beene heard, that any Priſoner in all China hath eſcaped out of Priſon, for, indeed, it is a thing impoſſible. The Priſons are thus builded. Firſt, all the place is mightily walled about, the wals be very ſtrong and high, the gate of no leſſe force: within it three other gates, before you come where the Priſoners doe lye, there many great Lodgings are to be ſeene of the Louteas, Notaries, Parthions, that is, ſuch as doe there keepe watch and ward day and night, the Court large and paued, on the one ſide whereof ſtandeth a Priſon, with two mighty gates, wherein are kept ſuch Priſoners as haue committed enormious offences. This Priſon is ſo great, that in it are ſtreets and Market places wherein all things neceſſary are ſold. Yea, ſome Priſoners liue by that kind of Trade, buying and ſelling, and letting out beds to hire: ſome are daily ſent to Priſon, ſome daily deliuered, wherefore this place is neuer voyd of ſeuen or eight hundred men that goe at libertie. Strength of the Priſons. Store of Priſoners.

Into one other Priſon of condemned perſons ſhall you goe at three Iron gates, the Court paued and vaulted round about, and open aboue as it were a Cloyſter. In this Cloyſter bee eight Roomes with Iron Doores, and in each of them a large Gallerie, wherein euery night the Priſoners doe lye at length, their feet in the ſtockes, their bodies hampered in huge woodden grates that keepe them from ſtiring ſo that they lye as it were in a Cage, ſleepe if they can: in the morning they are looſed againe that they may goe into the Court. Notwithſtanding the ſtrength of this Priſon, it is kept with a Garriſon of men, part whereof watch within the Houſe, part of them in the Court, ſome keepe about the Priſon with Lanthornes, and Watch-bels, anſwering one another fiue times euery night, and giuing warning ſo lowde, that the Louteas reſting in a Chamber not neere thereunto may heare them. In theſe Priſons of condemned perſons remayne

ſome

Digitized by Google

some fifteene, other twentie yeares imprisoned, not executed, for the loue of their honourable Friends that seeke to prolong their liues. Many of these Prisoners bee Shoomakers, and haue from the King a certayne allowance of Rice: some of them worke for the Keeper, who suffereth them to goe at libertie without fetters and boards, the better to worke. Howbeit when the Loutea calleth his Checke Roll, and with the Keeper vieweth them, they all weare their Liueries, that is, boards at their neckes, Ironed hand and foote. When any of these Prisoners dyeth, he is to bee seene of the Loutea and Notaries, brought out at a gate so narrow, that there can but one be drawne out there at once. The Prisoner beeing brought forth, one of the aforesaid Parthians, striketh him thrice on the head with an Iron sledge, that done, hee is deliuered vnto his friends, if hee haue any, otherwise the King hireth men to carrie him to his buriall in the fields.

Course for Debters.

Thus Adulterers and Theeues are vsed. Such as be imprisoned for Debt once knowne, lye there vntill it be paid. The Taissu or Loutea calleth them many times before him by the vertue of his Office, who vnderstanding the cause wherefore they doe not pay their Debts, appointeth them a certaine time to doe it, within the compasse whereof if they discharge not their Debts beeing Debters indeed, then they be whipped and condemned to perpetuall Imprisonment: if the Creditors be many, and one is to be paid before another, they doe, contrary to our manner, pay him first, of whom they last borrowed, and so ordinarily the rest, in such sort that the first Lender be the last Receiuer. The same order is kept in paying Legacies: the last named, receiueth his portion first.

When I said that such as be committed to Prison for Theft, and Murther, were judged by the Court, I meant not them that were apprehended in the deed doing, for they need no tryall, but are brought immediately before the Tutan, who out of hand giueth sentence. Other not taken so openly, and doe need tryall, are the Malefactors put to execution once a yeare in the chiefe Cities, to keepe in awe the people: or condemned, doe remayne in Prison, looking for their day. Theeues being taken, are carried to Prison from one place to another in a Chest vpon mens shoulders, hired therefore by the King, the Chest is sixe handfuls high, the Prisoner sitteth therein vpon a bench, the couer of the Chest is two boards; amidst them both a Pillory-like hole, for the Prisoner his necke, there sitteth he with his head without the Chest, and the rest of his bodie within, not able to moue or turne his head this way or that way, nor to plucke it in: the necessities of nature he voideth at a hole in the bottome of the Chest, the meate he eateth is put into his mouth by others. There abideth he day and night during his whole Iourney: if happily his Porters stumble, or the Chest doe jogge, or be set downe carelesly, it turneth to his great paines that sitteth therein, all such motions being vnto him hanging as it were. Thus were our companions carried from Cinceo, seuen dayes journey, neuer taking any rest as afterward they told vs, and their greatest griefe was to stay by the way: as soone as they came beeing taken out of the Chests, they were not able to stand on their feet, and two of them dyed shortly after.

Fuquieo.

When we lay in prison at Fuquieo, we came many times abroad, and were brought to the Palaces of Noble men, to be seene of them and their wiues, for that they had neuer seene any Portugall before. Many things they asked vs of our Countrey, and our fashions, and did write euery thing, for they be curious in nouelties aboue measure. The Gentlemen shew great curtesie vnto strangers, and so did we finde at their hands, and because that many times we were brought abroad into the Citie, somwhat will I say of such things as I did see therein, being a gallant Citie, and chiefe in one of the thirteene shires afore-said. The Citie Fuquieo, is very great and mightly walled with square stone both within and without, and as it may seeme by the breadth thereof, filled vp in the middle with Earth, laid ouer with Bricke, and couered with Tyle, and after the manner of Porches or Galleries, that one might dwell therein. The stayres they vse, are so easily made, that one may goe them vp and downe a Horse-backe, as eftsoones they doe: the streets are paued, as alreadie it hath beene said: there bee a great number of Merchants, euery one hath written in a great Table at his doore such things as hee hath to sell. In like manner euery Artizan painteth out his craft: the Market places be large, great abundance of all things there be to be sold. The Citie standeth vpon water, many streames runne through it, the bankes pitched, and so broad that they serue for streets to the Cities vse. Ouer the streames are sundry Bridges both of Timber and Stone, that being made leuell with the streets, hinder not the passage of the Barges to and fro, the Chanels are so deepe. Where the streames come in and goe out of the Citie, be certayne Arches in the Wall, there goe in and out their Parai, that is a kind of Barges they haue, and this onely in the day time: at night these Arches are closed vp with gates, so doe they shut vp all the gates of the Citie. These streames and Barges doe embellish much the Citie, and make it as it were to seeme another Venice. The buildings are euen, well made, high not lofted, except it be some wherein Merchandize is laid. It is a World to see how great these Cities are, and the cause is, for that the houses are built euen, as I haue said, and doe take a great deale of roome. One thing we saw in this Citie that made vs all to wonder, and is worthy to be noted: Namely, ouer a Porch at the comming into one of the afore-said foure Houses, the which the King hath in euery shire for his Gouernours as I haue before said,

Parai.

Another Venice.

stan-

Digitized by Google

ſtandeth a Towre built vpon fortie Pillars, each one whereof is but one ſtone, each one fortie handfuls or ſpans-long: in breadth or compaſſe twelue, as many of vs did meaſure them. Beſides this, their greatneſſe ſuch in one piece, that it might ſeeme impoſſible to worke them: they bee moreouer couered, and in colour, length, and breath ſo like, that the one nothing differeth from the other. Towre ſtanding on fortie Pillers, each of one ſtone.

Wee are wont to call this Countrey China, and the people Chineans, but as long as wee were Priſoners, not hearing amongſt them at any time that name, I determined to learne how they were called: and asked ſometimes by them thereof, for that they vnderſtood vs not when wee called them Chineans, I anſwered them, that all the Inhabitants of India named them Chineans, wherefore I prayed them that they would tell me, for what occaſion they are ſo called, whither peraduenture any Citie of theirs bare that name. Hereunto they alwayes anſwered me, to haue no ſuch name, nor euer to haue had. Then did I aske them what name the whole Countrey beareth, and what they would anſwer being asked of other Nations what Countrey-men they were? It was told me, that of ancient time in this Countrey had beene many Kings, and though preſently it were all vnder one, each Kingdome neuertheleſſe enioyed that name it firſt had, theſe Kingdomes are the Prouinces I ſpake of before. In concluſion, they ſayd, that the whole Countrey is called Tamen, and the Inhabitants Tamegines, ſo that this name China or Chineans, is not heard of in that Countrey. I doe thinke that the neareneſſe of another Prouince thereabout called Cochinchina, and the inhabitants thereof Cochineſſes, firſt diſcouered before that China was, lying not farre from Malacca, did giue occaſion both to the one Nation and to the other of that name Chineans, as alſo the whole Countrey to bee named China. But their proper name is that aforeſaid. Name of China. Tamen the proper name of China. Ta ſignifies Great; Magines is neere Polos name of Mangi; Great Mangines.

I haue heard moreouer, that in the Citie Nanquim, remayneth a Table of gold, and in it written a Kings name, as a memorie of that reſidence the Kings were wont to keepe there. This table ſtandeth in a great Palace, couered alwayes, except it bee in ſome of their feſtiuall dayes, at what time they are wont to let it bee ſeene: couered neuertheleſſe as it is, all the Nobilitie of the Citie goeth of dutie to doe it euery day reuerence. The like is done in the head Cities of all the other Shires, in the Palaces of the Ponchiaſſini, wherein theſe aforeſaid tables doe ſtand with the Kings name written in them, although no reuerence bee done thereunto but in ſolemne Feaſts. Tables reuerenced.

I haue likewiſe vnderſtood that the Citie Pachin, where the King maketh his abode, is ſo great, that to goe from one ſide to the other, beſides the Suburbs, (which are greater then the Citie it ſelfe) it requireth one whole day a horſebacke, going hackney pace. In the Suburbs bee many wealthy Merchants of all ſorts. They told me furthermore, that it was Moted about, and in the Motes great ſtore of Fiſh, whereof the King maketh great gaynes. It was alſo told mee that the King of China had no King to wage battell withall, beſides the Tartars, with whom hee had concluded a peace more then foureſcore yeeres agoe. Their enemies

There bee Hoſpitals in all their Cities, alwayes full of people, wee neuer ſaw any poore bodie beg. We therefore asked the cauſe of this: anſwered it was, that in euery Citie there is a great circuit, wherein bee many houſes for poore people, for Blinde, Lame, Old folke, not able to trauell for age, nor hauing any other meanes to liue. Theſe folke haue in the aforeſaid houſes, euer plentie of Rice during their liues, but nothing elſe. Such as bee receiued into theſe houſes, come in after this manner. When one is ſicke, blinde, or lame, hee maketh a ſupplication to the Ponchiaſſi, and prouing that to bee true he writeth, hee remaineth in the aforeſaid great lodging as long as he liueth: beſides this, they keepe in theſe places Swine and Hennes, whereby the poore bee releeued without going a begging.

I ſayd before that China was full of Riuers, but now I minde to confirme the ſame anew: for the farther wee went into the Countrey, the greater we found the riuers. Sometimes we were ſo farre off from the Sea, that where wee came no Sea-fiſh had beene ſeene, and Salt was there very deare, of freſh-water Fiſh yet was there great abundance, and that fiſh very good: they keepe it good after this manner. Where the Riuers doe meete, and ſo paſſe into the Sea, there lyeth great ſtore of Boates, ſpecially where no ſalt-water commeth, and that in March and Aprill. Theſe Boates are ſo many that it ſeemeth wonderfull, neither ſerue they for other then to take ſmall fiſh. By the riuers ſides they make leyres of fine and ſtrong Nets, that lye three handfuls vnder water, and one aboue, to keepe and nouriſh their Fiſh in, vntill ſuch time as other fiſhers doe come with Boates, bringing for that purpoſe certaine great Cheſts lyned with paper, able to hold water, wherein they carrie their fiſh vp and downe the riuer, euery day renewing the cheſt with freſh-water, and ſelling their fiſh in euery Citie, Towne, and Village, where they paſſe, vnto the people as they need it: moſt of them haue Net-leyres to keepe Fiſh in alwayes for their prouiſion. Where the greater Boates cannot paſſe any farther forward, they take leſſer, and becauſe the whole Countrey is very well watred, there is ſo great plentie of diuers ſorts of Fiſh, that it is wonderfull to ſee: aſſuredly, wee were amazed to behold the manner of their prouiſion. Their Fiſh is chiefly nouriſhed with the dung of Buſles and Oxen, that greatly fatteth it. Although I ſayd their fiſhing to bee in March and Aprill, Store of riuers. Plentie of fiſh; and their keeping of them.

Digitized by Google

at what time wee ſaw them doe it, neuertheleſſe they told vs that they fiſhed at all times, for that vſually they doe feed on Fiſh, wherefore it behoooueth them to make their prouiſion continually.

He ſpeaketh of Fuqien ſhire. Quianci where Porcelane is made.

When wee had paſſed Fuquien, we went into Quicen-ſhire, where the fine Clay veſſell is made, as I ſayd before : and we came to a Citie, the one ſide whereof is built vpon the foote of a hill, whereby paſſeth a Riuer nauigable : there we tooke Boate, and went by water toward the Sea: on each ſide of the Riuer we found many Cities, Townes, and Villages, wherein we ſaw great ſtore of Merchandiſe, but ſpecially of fine clay : there did we land by the way to buy victuals and other neceſſaries. Going downe this riuer Southward, wee were glad that we drew neere vnto a warmer Countrey, from whence we had beene farre diſtant : this Countrey wee paſſed through in eight dayes, for our iourney lay downe the ſtreame. Before that I doe ſay any thing of that Shire wee came into, I will firſt ſpeake of the great Citie of Quicin, wherein alwayes remayneth a Tutan, that is a Gouernour, as you haue ſeene, though ſome Tutans doe gouerne two or three Shires.

That Tutan that was condemned for our cauſe, of whom I ſpake before, was borne in this Countrey, but hee gouerned Fuquien-Shire : nothing it auayled him to bee ſo great an Officer. This Countrey is ſo great, that in many places where wee went, there had beene as yet no talke of his death, although he were executed a whole yeere before. At the Citie Quanche whither wee came, the riuer was ſo great that it ſeemed a ſea, though it were ſo little where we tooke water, that wee needed ſmall Boates. One day about nine of the clocke, beginning to row neare the walls with the ſtreame, wee came at noone to a bridge made of many Barges, ouer-linked all together with two mightie chaynes. There ſtayed we vntill it was late, but wee ſaw not one goe either vp thereon or downe, except two Louthia's that about the going downe of the Sunne, came and ſet them downe there, the one in one ſide, the other on the other ſide. Then was the bridge opened in many places, and Barges both great and ſmall to the number of ſixe hundred began to paſſe : thoſe that went vp the ſtreame, at one place, ſuch as came downe, at an other. When all had thus ſhot the Bridge, then was it ſhut vp againe. Wee heard ſay that euery day they take this order in all principall places of Merchandiſe, for paying of the cuſtome vnto the King, ſpecially for Salt, whereof the greateſt reuenues are made that the King hath in this Countrey. The paſſages of the bridge where it is opened, bee ſo neere the ſhore, that nothing can paſſe without touching the ſame. To ſtay the Barges at their pleaſure, that they goe no farther forward, are vſed certaine yron inſtruments. The Bridge conſiſteth of one hundred and twelue Barges, there ſtayed we vntill the Eeuening that they were opened, lothſomly oppreſſed by the multitude of people that came to ſee vs, ſo many in number, that we were enforced to goe aſide from the banke vntill ſuch time as the bridge was opened : howbeit, wee were neuertheleſſe thronged about with many Boates full of people. And though in other Cities and places where we went, the people came ſo importunate vpon vs, that it was needfull to withdraw our ſelues: yet were wee heere much more moleſted for the number of people, and this bridge, the principall way out of the Citie vnto another place ſo well inhabited, that were it walled about, it might bee compared to the Citie. When we had ſhot the bridge, we kept along the Citie vntill that it was night, then met wee with another riuer that ioyned with this, we rowed vp that by the walls, vntill we came to another bridge gallantly made of Barges, but leſſer a great deale then that other bridge ouer the greater ſtreame : heere ſtayed we that night, and other two dayes with more quiet, being out of the preaſe of the people. Theſe riuers doe meete without at one corner-point of the Citie. In either of them were ſo many Barges great and ſmall, that wee all thought them at the leaſt to bee aboue three thouſand : the greater number thereof was in the leſſer riuer, where we were. Amongſt the reſt, heere lay certaine greater veſſels, called in their language Parai, that ſerue for the Tutan, when hee taketh his voyage by other riuers that ioyne with this, towards Pachin, where the King maketh his abode. Deſirous to ſee thoſe Parai we got into ſome of them, where we found ſome chambers ſet foorth with gilded Beds very richly, other furniſhed with tables and ſeates, and all other things ſo neate and in perfection, that it was wonderfull.

Alijs Cheuchi. Great Riuer and ſtore of Boates.

Bridge of 112. Barges.

3000. Barges.

Parai, Barges with faire roomes.

Quiacim-Shire, as farre as I can perceiue, lyeth vpon the South. On that ſide we kept at our firſt entrie thereinto, trauelling not farre from the high mountaines we ſaw there. Asking what people dwelleth beyond thoſe mountaines, it was told me that they bee Theeues, and men of a ſtrange language. And becauſe that vnto ſundry places neere this Riuer, the mountaines doe approach, whence the people iſſuing downe, doe many times great harme, this order is taken at the entrie into Quiacim-Shire. To guard this Riuer whereon continually goe to and fro Parai great and ſmall fraught with Salt, Fiſh powdered with pepper, and other neceſſaries for that Countrey : they doe lay in diuers places certaine Parai, and great Barges armed, wherein watch and ward is kept day and night in both ſides of the Riuer, for the ſafetie of the paſſage, and ſecuritie of ſuch Parai as doe remayne there, though the trauellers neuer goe but many in company. In euery rode there bee at the leaſt thirtie, in ſome two hundred men, as the paſſage requireth.

This

Digitized by Google

This guard is kept vſually, vntill you come to the Citie Onchio, where continually the Tutan of this Shire, and eke of Cantan, maketh his abode. From that Citie vpward, where the riuer waxeth more narrow, and the paſſage more dangerous, there be alwayes armed one hundred and fiftie Parai, to accompany other veſſels fraught with merchandiſe, and all this at the Kings charges. This ſeemed vnto me one of the ſtrangeſt things I did ſee in this Countrey.

When wee lay at Fuquien, we did ſee certaine Moores, who knew ſo little of their ſect, that they could ſay nothing elſe, but that Mahomet was a Moore, my father was a Moore, and I am a Moore, with ſome other words of their Alcoran, wherewithall, in abſtinence from Swines fleſh, they liue vntill the Deuill take them all. This when I ſaw, and being ſure, that in many Chiniſh Cities the reliques of Mahomet are kept, as ſoone as wee came to the Citie where theſe fellowes bee, I informed my ſelfe of them, and learned the truth. Theſe Moores, as they told me, in times paſt came in great Ships fraught with merchandiſe from Pachin ward, to a Port granted vnto them by the King, as hee is wont to all them that trafficke into this Countrey, where they being arriued at a little Towne ſtanding in the hauens mouth, in time conuerted vnto their Sect the greateſt Loutea there. When that Loutea with all his family was become Mooriſh, the reſt began likewiſe to doe the ſame. In this part of China the people bee at libertie, euery one to worſhip and follow what him liketh beſt. Wherefore no bodie tooke heed thereto, vntill ſuch time as the Moores perceiuing that many followed them in ſuperſtition, and that the Loutea fauoured them, they began to forbid wholly the eating of Swines-fleſh. But all this Countrey-men and women, chooſing rather to forſake Father and Mother, then to leaue off eating of Porke, by no meanes would yeeld to that proclamation. For beſides the great deſire they all haue to eate that kind of meate, many of them doe liue thereby: and therefore the people complained vnto the Magiſtrates, accuſing the Moores of a conſpiracie pretended betwixt them and the Loutea, againſt their King. In this Countrey, as no ſuſpition, no not one trayterous word is long borne withall: ſo was the King ſpeedily aduertiſed thereof, who gaue commandement out of hand that the aforelaid Loutea ſhould bee put to death, and with him the Moores of moſt importance: the other to be layd firſt in Priſon, and afterward to bee ſent abroad into certaine Cities, where they remayned perpetuall ſlaues vnto the King. To this Citie came by hap men and women threeſcore and odde, who at this day are brought to fiue men and foure women, for it is now twentie yeeres agoe this happened. Their offſpring paſſeth the number of two hundred, and they in this Citie, as the reſt in other Cities, whither they were ſent, haue their Moſcheas, whereunto they all reſort euery Friday to keepe their Holiday. But, as I thinke, that will no longer endure, then whiles they doe liue, that came from thence, for their poſteritie is ſo confuſed, that they haue nothing of a Moore in them, but abſtinence from Swines-fleſh, and yet many of them doe eate thereof priuily. They tell me that their natiue Countrey hath name Camarian, a firme land, wherein bee many Kings, and the Indiſh Countrey well knowne vnto them. It may ſo be: for as ſoone as they did ſee our ſeruants (our ſeruants were Preuzaretes) they iudged them to bee Indians: many of their words ſounded vpon the Perſicke tongue, but none of vs could vnderſtand them. I asked them, whither they conuerted any of the Chiniſh Nation vnto their Sect: they anſwered me, that with much adoe, they conuerted the women with whom they doe marrie, yeelding me no other cauſe thereof, but the difficultie they finde in them to bee brought from eating Swines-fleſh, and drinking of Wine. I haue learned moreouer, that the Sea whereby theſe Moores that came to China were wont to trauell, is a very great gulfe, that falleth into this Countrey out from Tartaria and Perſia, leauing on the other ſide all the Countrey of China, and land of the Mogorites, drawing alwayes toward the South: and of all likelyhood it is euen ſo, becauſe that theſe Moores, the which wee haue ſeene, bee rather browne then white, whereby they ſhew themſelues to come from ſome warmer Countrey then China is, neere to Pachin, where the Riuers are frozen in the winter for cold, and many of them ſo vehemently, that Carts may paſſe ouer them.

Moores.

That is their Temples.

It ſeemeth they came vp the riuer from the Caſpian ſea.

Ali. Auoins Tartars.

Wee did ſee in this Citie many Tartars, Mogorites, Bremes, and Laoynes, both men and women. The Tartars are men very white, good Horſe-men, and Archers, confining with China on that ſide where Pachin ſtandeth, ſeparated from thence by great Mountaines that are betwixt theſe Kingdomes. Ouer them bee certaine wayes to paſſe, and for both ſides, Caſtles continually kept with Souldiers: in time paſt, the Tartars were wont alwayes to haue warres with the Chineans, but theſe foureſcore yeeres paſt they were quiet, vntill the ſecond yeere of our Impriſonment.

Monte Vſont.

Mogores.

The Mogores bee in like manner white, and Heathen, wee are aduertiſed that of one ſide they border vpon theſe Tartars, and confine with the Perſicke Tartares on the other ſide, whereof wee ſaw in them ſome tokens, as their manner of cloathes, and that kinde of Hat the Saracens doe weare. The Moores affirmed, that where the King lyeth, there bee many Tartars and Mogorites, that brought into China certaine Blewes of great value.

Bremes.

As for the Bremes, wee haue ſeene in this Citie Chenchi certaine men and women, amongſt whom, there was one that came not long ſince, hauing as yet her hayre tyed vp after the Pegues

Digitized by Google

gues fashion: this woman, and other moe with whom a blacke Moore damosell in our company had conference, and did vnderstand them well enough, had dwelt in Pegbu. This new come woman, imagining that wee meant to make our abode in that Citie, bid vs to bee of good comfort, for that her Countrey was not distant from thence aboue fiue dayes iourney, and that out of her Countrey, there lay a high way for vs home into our owne. Being asked the way, shee answered that the first three dayes the way lyeth ouer certaine great mountaines and wilderneſſe, afterward people to bee met withall againe. Thence two dayes iourney more to the Bremes Countrey. Wherefore I doe conclude, that Chenchi is one of the confines of this Kingdome, separated by certaine huge Mountaines, as it hath beene already sayd, that lye out towards the South. In the residue of these mountaines standeth the Prouince Sian, the Laoyns Countrey, Cambaia, Chinapa, and Cochinchina.

Southward from Chenchi to the Sea.

Auoins.

Chenchi.

This Citie, chiefe of other sixteene, is situated in a pleasant Playne, abounding in things necessarie, Sea-fish onely excepted, for it standeth farre from the Sea: of fresh Fish so much store, that the Market-places are neuer emptie. The walls of this Citie are very strong and high: one day did I see the Louteas thereof goe vpon the walls, to take the view thereof, borne in their seates I spake of before, accompanied with a troupe of Horse-men, that went two and two: It was told me they might haue gone three and three. Wee haue seene moreouer, that within this aforesaid Citie the King hath more than a thousand of his kindred lodged in great Palaces, in diuers parts of the Citie: their gates bee red, and the entrie into their houses, that they may be knowne, for that is the Kings colour. These Gentlemen, according to their neareneſſe in bloud vnto the King, as soone as they bee married, receiue their place in Honour: this place neither encreaseth nor diminisheth in any respect, as long as the King liueth, the King appointeth them their Wiues and Familie, allowing them by the moneth all things necessarie abundantly, as hee doth to his Gouernours of Shires and Cities, howbeit, not one of these hath as long as hee liueth, any charge or gouernment at all. They giue themselues to eating and drinking, and bee for the most part burley men of bodie, insomuch that espying any one of them, whom wee had not seene before, wee might know him to bee the Kings Cousin. They bee neuertheleſſe very pleasant, courteous, and fayre conditioned: neither did wee finde, all the time we were in that Citie, so much honour and good entertainment any where, as at their hands. They bid vs to their houses, to eate and drinke, and when they found vs not, or wee were not willing to goe with them, they bid our seruants, and slaues, causing them to sit downe with the first. Notwithstanding the good lodging these Gentlemen haue so commodious that they want nothing, yet are they in this bondage, that during life they neuer goe abroad. The cause, as I did vnderstand, wherefore the King so vseth his Cousins, is that none of them at any time may rebell against him: and thus bee shutteth them vp in three or foure other Cities. Most of them can play on the Lute: and to make that kinde of pastime peculiar vnto them onely, all other in the Cities where they doe liue, bee forbidden that Instrument, the Curtizans and blinde folke onely excepted, who bee Musicians, and can play.

No Lords but of the bloud royall.

This King furthermore, for the greater securitie of his Realme, and the auoyding of tumults, letteth not one in all his Countrey to bee called Lord, except hee be of his bloud. Many great Estates and Gouernours there be, that during their office are lodged Lord-like, and doe beare the port of mightie Princes: but they bee so many times displaced, and other placed anew, that they haue not the while to become corrupt. True it is, that during their Office they be well prouided for, as afterward, also lodged at the Kings charges, and in pension as long as they liue, payed them monethly in the Cities where they dwell, by certaine officers appointed for that purpose. The King then is a Lord onely, not one besides him as you haue seene, except it bee such as be of his bloud. A Nephew likewise of the King, the Kings Sisters sonne, lyeth continually within the walls of the Citie, in a strong Palace built Castle-wise, euen as his others Cousins doe, remayning alwayes within doores, serued by Eunuches, neuer dealing with any matters. Their festiuall dayes, new Moones, and full Moones, the Magistrates make great banquets, and so doe such as bee of the Kings bloud. The King his Nephew, hath name Vanfuli, his Palace is walled about, the wall is not high, but foure square, and in circuit nothing inferiour to the walls of Goa, the out-side is painted red, in euery square a Gate, and ouer each gate a Tower, made of timber excellently well wrought: before the principall Gate of the foure, that openeth into the high-street, no Loutea, bee he neuer so great, may passe on horse-backe, or carried in his seate. Amidst this quadrangle, standeth the Palace where that Gentleman lyeth, doubtlesse, worth the sight, although wee came not in to see it. By report the roofes of the towers and house, are glased greene, the greater part of the Quadrangle set with sauage Trees, as Oakes, Chesnuts, Cypresse, Pine-apples, Cedars, and other such like that wee doe want, after the manner of a Wood, wherein are kept Stagges, Oxen, and other beasts, for that Lord his recreation neuer going abroad, as I haue said.

One preheminence this Citie hath aboue the rest where wee haue beene, and it of right as we doe thinke, that besides the multitude of Market-places, wherein all things are to bee sold, ſold, through euery ſtreete continually are cryed all things neceſſarie, as Fleſh of all ſorts, freſh-Fiſh, Hearbes, Oyle, Vineger, Meale, Rice, In ſumma, all things ſo plentifully, that many houſes need no ſeruants, euerie thing being brought to their doores. Moſt part of the Merchants remayne in the Suburbs, for that the Cities are ſhut vp euery night, as I haue ſayd. The Merchants therefore, the better to attend their buſineſſe, doe choose rather to make their abode without in the Suburbs, then within the Citie. I haue ſeene in this Riuer a pretie kinde of Fiſhing, not to bee omitted in my opinion, and therefore will I ſet it downe. The King hath in many riuers good ſtore of Barges full of Sea-crowes, that breed, are fed, and doe dye therein, in certaine Cages, allowed monethly a certaine prouiſion of Rice. Theſe Barges the King beſtoweth vpon his greateſt Magiſtrates, giuing to ſome two, to ſome three of them, as hee thinketh good, to Fiſh therewithall after this manner. At the houre appointed to Fiſh, all the Barges are brought together in a circle, where the Riuer is ſhallow, and the Crowes tyed together vnder the wings, are let leape downe into the water, ſome vnder, ſome aboue, worth the looking vpon: each one as hee hath filled his bagge, goeth to his owne Barge and emptieth it, which done, hee returneth to fiſh againe. Thus hauing taken good ſtore of Fiſh, they ſet the Crowes at libertie, and doe ſuffer them to fiſh for their owne pleaſure. There were in that Citie, where I was, twentie Barges at the leaſt, of theſe aforeſaid Crowes. I went almoſt euery day to ſee them, yet could I neuer bee throughly ſatisfied to ſee ſo ſtrange a kinde of Fiſhing.

Digitized by Google

Fiſhing with Cormorants, they tye their gorges, that they ſwallow not their prey. One hath practiſed this in London.

(.)

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

PEREGRINATIONS, VOYAGES, DISCOVERIES, OF CHINA, TARTARIA, RVSSIA, AND OTHER THE NORTH AND EAST PARTS OF THE WORLD,

By English-men, and others.

THE SECOND BOOKE.

CHAP. I.

The beginning of English Discoueries towards the North, and North-east, by Sir HVGH WILLOVGHBY, RICHARD CHANCELLOR, and others; of the Muscouie Trade, as also Voyages by Rusia, ouer the Caspian Sea, and thorow diuers Regions of Tartaria.

§. I.

The first Voyage for Discouerie with three ships, set forth vnder the charge of Sir HVGH WILLOVGHBY Knight, in which he died; and Moscouia was discouered by Captaine CHANCELLOR.

IN the yeere of our Lord 1553. the seuenth of the Raigne of King Edward the sixth of famous memorie, Sebastian Cabota was Gouernour of the Mysterie and Companie of the Merchants Aduenturers for the discouerie of Regions, Dominions, Ilands, and places vnknowne. Certaine instructions were agreed on by him and the said Companie, subscribed by Master Cabota, the ninth of May; the Kings Letters also procured vnto remote Princes in diuers languages, and a fleet of three Ships set forth at that time vnder the command of Sir Hugh Willoughby Knight, Captaine generall, which were in the Bona Esperanza Admirall, a ship of an hundred and twenty tunnes, hauing with her a Pinnace and a Boat: Williams Gefferson was Master of the said ship. The Edward Bonauenture was of an hundred and sixty tunnes, and had with her a Pinnace and a Boat, in which went Richard Chancellor, Captaine and Pilot Maior of the fleet, and Stephen Burrough Master. The Bona Confidentia of ninety tunnes, had with her a Pinnace and a Boat, of which Cornelius Durfoorth was Master. The Seb. Cabota.

See the particulars in Master Hackluyts printed Voyages, Tom. 1.

Digitized by Google

The firſt Voyage.

The Captaines and Maſters were ſworne to doe their true intent, and the ſhips prouided of neceſſaries ſet forth on the tenth of May, 1553. for the diſcouerie of Cathay, and diuers other Regions, Dominions, Ilands, and places vnknowne. The fourteenth of Iuly they diſcouered Land Eaſtward, and went on ſhoare with their Pinnace, and found thirty little houſes, the Inhabitants fled. The Land was full of little Ilands, called as they after learned, Ægeland * and Halgeland, in 66. degrees. The diſtance betweene Orfordneſſe and Ægeland two hundred and fifty leagues. Then we ſayled from thence twelue leagues North-weſt, and found many other Ilands, and there came to anchor the nineteenth day, and manned our Pinnace, and went on ſhoare to the Ilands, and found people mowing and making of Hay, which came to the ſhoare and welcommed vs. In which place were an innumerable ſort of Ilands, which were called the Iles of Roſt, being vnder the Dominion of the King of Denmarke: which place was in latitude 66. degrees and 30. minutes. The winde being contrarie, we remayned there three dayes, and there was an innumerable ſort of Fowles of diuers kindes, of which we tooke very many.

* This diſcourſe was found written in the Speranza which wintered a Arzina, where all the Companie were frozen to death.

Roſt Ilands.

The two and twentieth day, the winde comming faire, wee departed from Roſt, ſayling North North-eaſt, keeping the Sea vntill the ſeuen and twentieth day, and then we drew neere vnto the Land, which was ſtill Eaſt off vs: then went forth our Pinnace to ſeeke harbour, and found many good harbours, of the which we entred into one with our ſhips, which was called Stanſew, and the Land being Ilands, were called Lewſoot, or Lofoot, which were plentifully inhabited, and very gentle people, being alſo vnder the King of Denmarke: but wee could not learne how farre it was from the mayne Land: and we remayned there vntill the thirtieth day, being in latitude 68. degrees, and from the foreſaid Roſt about thirtie leagues North North-eaſt.

Stanſew harbour.

Lofoot.

The thirtieth day of Iuly about noone, wee weighed our anchors, and went into the Seas, and ſayled along theſe Ilands North North-eaſt, keeping the Land ſtill in ſight vntill the ſecond of Auguſt: then hailing in cloſe aboord the Land, to the intent to know what Land it was, there came a Skiffe of the Iland aboord of vs, of whom wee asked many queſtions, who ſhewed vnto vs, that the Iland was called Seynam, which is the latitude of ſeuenty degrees, and from Stanſew thirty leagues, being alſo vnder the King of Denmark, & that there was no merchandiſe there, but only dried fiſh, and Trane-oile. Then we being purpoſed to goe vnto Finmarke, enquired of him, if we might haue a Pilot to bring vs to Finmarke, and he ſaid, that if we could beare in, we ſhould haue a good Harbour, and on the next day a Pilot to bring vs to Finmarke, vnto the Ward-houſe, which is the ſtrongeſt Hold in Finmark, & moſt reſorted to by report. But when he would haue entred into an Harbour, the Land being very high on euery ſide, there came ſuch flawes of wind and terrible whirle-winds, that we were not able to beare in, but by violence were conſtrained to take the ſea againe, our Pinnace being vnſhipt: we ſailed North and by Eaſt, the wind encreaſing ſo ſore, that we were not able to beare any ſayle, but tooke them in, and lay adrift, to the end to let the ſtorme ouer-paſſe. And that night by violence of winde, and thickneſſe of miſts, we were not able to keepe together within ſight, and then about midnight wee loſt our Pinnace, which was a diſcomfort vnto vs. As ſoone as it was day, and the fogge ouer-paſt, we looked about, and at the laſt wee deſcried one of our ſhips to lee-ward off vs: then wee ſpred an hullocke of our fore-ſayle, and bare roome with her, which was the Conſidence, but the Edward we could not ſee. Then the flaw ſomething abating, wee and the Conſidence hoyſed vp our ſayles the fourth day, ſayling North-eaſt and by North, to the end to fall with the Ward-houſe, as we did conſult to doe before, in caſe we ſhould part companie. Thus running North-eaſt and by North, and North-eaſt fifty leagues, then wee ſounded, and had one hundred and ſixty fathoms, whereby we thought to be farre from Land, and perceiued that the Land lay not as the Globe made mention. Wherefore we changed our courſe the ſixth day, and ſayled South-eaſt and by South, eight and forty leagues, thinking thereby to finde the Ward-houſe.

Seynam in 70. degrees.

Auguſt.

The Edward loſt, or rather theſe two loſt; and the Edward found and entred the Bay of Saint Nicolas.

The eighth day much winde riſing at the Weſt North-weſt, we not knowing how the coaſt lay, ſtrooke our ſayles, and lay adrift, where ſounded and found one hundred and ſixty fathoms as before. The ninth day, the winde bearing to the South South-eaſt, we ſayled North-eaſt fiue and twenty leagues. The tenth day we ſounded, and could get no ground, neither yet could ſee any Land, whereat we wondered: then the winde comming at the North-eaſt, we ran South-eaſt about eight and forty leagues. The eleuenth day the winde being at South, wee ſounded and found forty fathoms, and faire ſand. The twelfth day, the winde being at South and by Eaſt, we lay with our ſayle Eaſt, and Eaſt and by North thirty leagues.

The fourteenth day early in the morning wee deſcried Land, which Land wee bare withall, hoyſing out our Boat to diſcouer what land it might be: but the Boat could not come to Land, the water was ſo ſhallow, where was very much Ice alſo, but there was no ſimilitude of habitation, and this Land lieth from Seynam Eaſt and by North, one hundred and ſixty leagues, being in latitude 72. degrees. Then we plyed to the Northward, the fifteenth, ſixteenth, and ſeuenteenth dayes.

Willoughby his Land, in 72. degrees.

The eighteenth day, the winde comming at the North-eaſt, and the Conſidence being troubled with bilge water, and ſtocked, wee thought it good to ſeeke harbour for her redreſſe: then wee bare roome the eighteenth day South South-eaſt, about ſeuenty leagues. The one and and twentieth day wee ſounded, and found ten fathoms, after that wee ſounded againe, and found but ſeuen fathoms, ſo ſhallower and ſhallower water, and yet could ſee no Land, whereat we maruelled greatly: to auoide this danger, we bare roomer into the Sea all that night North-weſt and by Weſt.

Digitized by Google

The next day we ſounded, and had twenty fathoms, then ſhaped our courſe, and ranne Weſt South-weſt vntill the three and twentieth day: then we deſcried lowe Land, vnto which wee bare as nigh as we could, and it appeared vnto vs vnhabitable. Then we plyed Weſtward along by that Land, which lieth Weſt South-weſt, and Eaſt North-eaſt, and much winde blowing at the Weſt, we haled into the Sea North and by Eaſt thirtie leagues. Then the winde comming about at the North-eaſt, wee ſayled Weſt North-weſt: after that, the winde bearing to the North-weſt, wee lay with our ſayles Weſt South-weſt, about fourteene leagues, and then deſcried Land, and bare in with it, being the eight and twentieth day, finding ſhallow water, and bare in till we came to three fathom, then perceiuing it to be ſhallow water, and alſo ſeeing drie ſands, we haled out againe North-eaſt along that Land, vntill we came to the point thereof. That Land turning to the Weſtward, we ranne along ſixteene leagues North-weſt: then comming into a faire Bay, we went on Land with our Boat, which place was vninhabited, but yet it appeared vnto vs that the people had beene there, by croſſes, and other ſignes: from thence we went all along the coaſt Weſtward.

The fourth day of September we loſt ſight of Land, by reaſon of contrarie windes, and the eighth day we deſcried Land againe. Within two dayes after we loſt the ſight of it: then running Weſt and by South about thirtie leagues, we gat the ſight of Land againe, and bare in with it vntill night: then perceiuing it to bee a lee ſhoare, we gat vs into the Sea, to the end to haue Sea roome. The twelfth of September wee haled to ſhoare-ward againe, hauing then indifferent winde and weather: then being neere vnto the ſhoare, and the tide almoſt ſpent, wee came to an anchor in thirtie fathoms water. The thirteenth day we came along the coaſt, which lay North-weſt and by Weſt, and South-eaſt and by Eaſt. The fourteenth day we came to an anchor within two leagues off the ſhoare, hauing ſixtie fathoms. There wee went aſhoare with our Boat, and found two or three good Harbours, the Land being rocky, and high, but as for people could we ſee none. The fifteenth day we ran ſtill along the coaſt vntill the ſeuenteenth day: then the winde being contrarie vnto vs, we thought it beſt to returne vnto the Harbour which we had found before, and ſo we bare roomer with the ſame, howbeit wee could not accompliſh our deſire that day. The next day being the eighteenth, we entred into the Hauen, and there came to an anchor at ſix fathoms. This Hauen runneth into the Mayne, about two leagues, and is in bredth halfe a league, wherein were very many Seale-fiſhes, and other great fiſhes, and vpon the Mayne wee ſaw Beares, great Deere, Foxes, and diuers ſtrange beaſts, as * Guloines, and ſuch other which were to vs vnknowne, and alſo wonderfull. Thus remayning in this Hauen the ſpace of a weeke, ſeeing the yeere farre ſpent, and alſo very euill weather, as Froſt, Snow, and Hayle, as though it had beene the deepe of Winter, wee thought beſt to winter there. Wherefore we ſent out three men South South-weſt, to ſearch if they could finde people, who went three dayes iourney, but could finde none: after that, we ſent other three Weſtward foure dayes iourney, which alſo returned without finding any people. Then ſent we three men South-eaſt three dayes iourney, who in like ſort returned without finding of people, or any ſimilitude of habitation.

September.

In this Hauen they died.

* Or, Hlons.

Heere endeth Sir Hugh Willoughby his note, which was written with his owne hand.

The Riuer or Hauen wherein Sir Hugh Willoughby with the companie of his two ſhips periſhed for cold, is called Arzina in Lapland, neere vnto Kegor. But it appeareth by a Will found in a ſhip that Sir Hugh Willoughby, and moſt of the companie were aliue in Ianuary, 1554.

A Letter of RICHARD CHANCELLOR, written to his Vncle Maſter CHRISTOPHER FROTHINGAM, touching his diſcouerie of Moſcouia.

FOraſmuch as it is meet and neceſſarie for all thoſe that minde to take in hand the trauell into ſtrange Countries, to endeauour themſelues not onely to vnderſtand the orders, commodities, and fruitfulneſſe thereof, but alſo to apply them to the ſetting forth of the ſame, whereby it may incourage others to the like trauell: therefore haue I now thought good to make a briefe rehearſall of the orders of this my trauell in Ruſſia, and Muſcouia, and other Countries thereunto adioyning; becauſe it was my chance to fall with the North parts of Ruſſia, before I came towards Moſcouia, I will partly declare my knowledge therein. Ruſſia is very plentifull both of Land and People, and alſo wealthie for ſuch commodities as they haue. They be very great fiſhers for Salmons and ſmall Cods: they haue much Oyle which wee call Trane Oyle, the moſt whereof is made by a Riuer called Duina. They make it in other places, but not ſo much as there. They haue alſo a great trade in ſeething of ſalt water. To the North part of that Countrey are the places where they haue their Furres, as Sables, Marterns, greeſſe Beuers, Foxes white, blacke, and red, Minkes, Ermines, Menuer, and Harts. There are alſo a fiſhes teeth, which fiſh is called Duina.

Digitized by Google

Note. called a Morsse. The takers thereof dwell in a place called Posteſora, which bring them vpon Harts to Lampas to sell, and from Lampas carrie them to a place called Colmogro, where the high Market is holden on Saint Nicolas day. To the West of Colmogro there is a place called Gratanoue, in our language Nouogorode, where much fine Flaxe and Hempe groweth, and also much Waxe and Honie. The Dutch Merchants haue a Staple-house there. There is also great store of Hides, and at a place called Plesco: and thereabout is great store of Flaxe, Hempe, Waxe, Honie; and that Towne is from Colmogro one hundred and twentie miles.

Vologda. There is a place called Vologda; the commodities whereof are Tallow, Waxe, and Flaxe: but not so great plentie as is in Gratanoue. From Vologda to Colmogro there runneth a Riuer called Duina, and from thence it falleth into the Sea. Colmogro serueth Gratanoue, Vologda, and the Mosco, with all the Countrey thereabout with Salt and salt Fish. From Vologda to Ieraslaue is two hundred miles: which Towne is very great. The commodities thereof are Hides, and Tallow, and Corne in great plentie, and some Waxe, but not so plentifull as in other places.

Ieraslaue.

The Mosco is from Ieraslaue two hundred miles. The Countrey betwixt them is very well replenished with small Villages, which are so well filled with people; that it is wonder to see them: the ground is well stored with Corne, which they carrie to the Citie of Mosco in such abundance that it is wonder to see it. You shall meet in a morning seuen or eight hundred Sleds comming or going thither, that carrie Corne, and some carrie fish. You shall haue some that carrie Corne to the Mosco, and some that fetch Corne from thence, that at the least dwell a thousand miles off: and all their carriage is on Sleds. Those which come so farre dwell in the North parts of the Dukes Dominions, where the cold will suffer no Corne to grow, it is so extreme. They bring thither Fishes, Furres, and Beasts skinnes. In those parts they haue but small store of Cattell.

Mosco. The Mosco it selfe is great: I take the whole Towne to be greater then London with the Suburbes: but it is very rude, and standeth without all order. Their houses are all of timber very dangerous for fire. There is a faire Castle, the walls whereof are of bricke, and very high: they say they are eighteene foot thicke, but I doe not beleeue it, it doth not so seeme; notwithstanding, I doe not certainly know it: for no stranger may come to view it. The one side is ditched, and on the other side runneth a Riuer, called Moscua, which runneth into Tartarie, and so into the Sea, called Mare Caspium: and on the North side there is a base Towne, the which hath also a Bricke wall about it, and so it ioyneth with the Castle wall. The Emperour lieth in the Castle, wherein are nine faire Churches, and therein are Religious men. Also there is a Metropolitan with diuers Bishops, I will not stand in description of their buildings, nor of the strength thereof, because we haue better in all points in England. They be well furnished with Ordnance of all sorts.

The Castle.

The Emperours or Dukes house neither in building nor in the outward shew, nor yet within the house is so sumptuous as I haue seene. It is very lowe built in eight square, much like the old building of England, with small windowes, and so in other points.

Now to declare my comming before his Maiestie: After I had remayned twelue dayes, the Secretarie which hath the hearing of strangers did send for mee, aduertising me that the Dukes pleasure was to haue me to come before his Maiestie, with the King my Masters Letters: whereof I was right glad, and so I gaue mine attendance. And when the Duke was in his place appointed, the Interpreter came for mee into the outer Chamber, where sate one hundred or moe Gentlemen, all in cloth of Gold very sumptuous, and from thence I came into the Counsell-chamber, where sate the Duke himselfe, with his Nobles, which were a faire companie: they sate round about the Chamber on high, yet so that he himselfe sate much higher then any of his Nobles, in a Chaire gilt, and in a long garment of beaten Gold, with an Imperiall Crowne vpon his head, and a Staffe of Crystall and Gold in his right hand, and his other hand halfe leaning on his Chaire. The Chancellour stood vp with the Secretarie before the Duke. After my dutie done, and my Letter deliuered, he bade me welcome, and enquired of mee the health of the King my Master, and I answered, that he was in good health at my departure from his Court, and that my trust was, that he was now in the same. Vpon the which he bade me to dinner. The Chancellor presented my Present vnto his Grace bare-headed (for before they were all couered) and when his Grace had receiued my Letter, I was required to depart: for I had charge not to speake to the Duke, but when he spake to mee. So I departed vnto the Secretaries Chamber, where I remayned two houres, and then I was sent for againe vnto another Palace, which is called, The golden Palace, but I saw no cause why it should be so called; for I haue seene many fairer then it in all points: and so I came into the Hall, which was small and not great as is the Kings Maiesties of England, and the Table was couered with a Table-cloth; and the Marshall sate at the end of the Table with a little white rod in his hand, which Boord was full of vessell of Gold: and on the other side of the Hall did stand a faire Cupboord of Plate.

Hee commeth before the Duke.

Dineth with the Duke.

From thence I came into the dining Chamber, where the Duke himselfe sate at his Table without Cloth of estate, in a Gowne of Siluer, with a Crowne Imperiall vpon his head, he sate in a Chaire somewhat high: there sate none neere him by a great way. There were long tables set round about the chamber, which were full set with such as the Duke had at dinner: they were all in white. Also the places where the tables stood were higher by two steps then the rest of the house. In the middest of the chamber stood a Table or Cupboord to set Plate on; which stood full of Cups of Gold: and amongst all the rest

Digitized by Google

reſt there ſtood foure marueilous great Pots or Crudences as they call them, of Gold and Siluer: I thinke they were a good yard and a halfe high. By the Cupboard ſtood two Gentlemen with Napkins on their ſhoulders, and in their hands each of them had a Cup of Gold ſet with Pearles and Precious Stones, which were the Dukes owne drinking Cups: when hee was diſpoſed, hee drunke them off at a draught. And for his ſeruice at meate it came in without order, yet it was very rich ſeruice: for all were ſerued in Gold; not onely he himſelfe, but alſo all the reſt of vs, and it was very maſſie: the Cups alſo were of Gold and very maſſie. The number that dined there that day was two hundred perſons, and all were ſerued in Golden Veſſell. The Gentlemen that wayted were all in Cloth of Gold, and they ſerued him with their Caps on their heads. Before the ſeruice came in, the Duke ſent to euery man a great ſhiuer of Bread, and the Bearer called the party ſo ſent to by his name aloude, and ſaid, Iohn Baſiliuich Emperour of Ruſſia, and great Duke of Moſcouia, doth reward thee with Bread: then muſt all men ſtand vp, and doe at all times when thoſe words are ſpoken. And then laſt of all hee giueth the Marſhall Bread, whereof he eateth before the Dukes Grace, and ſo doth reuerence and departeth. Then commeth the Dukes ſeruice of the Swans all in pieces, and euery one in a ſeuerall diſh: the which the Duke ſendeth as he did the Bread, and the Bearer ſaith the ſame words as hee ſaid before. And as I ſaid before, the ſeruice of his meate is in no order, but commeth in Diſh by Diſh: and then after that the Duke ſendeth drinke, with the like ſaying as before is told. Alſo before Dinner he changed his Crowne, and in Dinner time two Crownes; ſo that I ſaw three ſeuerall Crownes vpon his head in one day. And thus when his ſeruice was all come in, hee gaue to euery one of his Gentlemen Wayters meate with his owne hand, and ſo likewiſe drinke. His intent thereby is, as I haue heard, that euery man ſhall know perfectly his ſeruants. Thus when Dinner is done hee calleth his Nobles before him name by name, that it is wonder to heare how he could name them, hauing ſo many as hee hath. Thus when Dinner was done I departed to my Lodging, which was an houre within night.

Golden Veſſel.

Shiuer of Bread.

Crowne chaunged.

I will leaue this, and ſpeake no more of him nor his Houſhold: but I will ſomewhat declare of his Land and people, with their nature and power in the Warres. This Duke is Lord and Emperour of many Countries, and his power is marueilous great. For hee is able to bring into the field two or three hundred thouſand men: he neuer goeth into the field himſelfe with vnder two hundred thouſand men: And when hee goeth himſelfe, hee furniſheth his Borders all with men of Warre, which are no ſmall number. He leaueth on the Borders of Lieſland fortie thouſand men, and vpon the borders of Letto, ſixtie thouſand men, and toward the Nagayan Tartars ſixtie thouſand, which is wonder to heare of: yet doth hee neuer take to his Warres neither Husbandman nor Merchant. All his men are Horſe-men: hee vſeth no Foot-men, but ſuch as goe with the Ordnance and Labourers, which are thirtie thouſand. The Horſe-men are all Archers, with ſuch Bowes as the Turkes haue, and they ride ſhort as doe the Turkes. Their Armour is a Coate of Plate, with a skull on their heads. Some of their Coates are couered with Veluet or Cloth of God: their deſire is to be ſumptuous in the field, and eſpecially the Nobles and Gentlemen: as I haue heard their trimming is very coſtly, and partly I haue ſeene it, or elſe I would ſcarcely haue beleeued it: but the Duke himſelfe is richly attyred aboue all meaſure: his Pauilion is couered eyther with Cloth of Gold or Siluer, and ſo ſet with ſtones that it is wonderfull to ſee it. I haue ſeene the Kings Maieſties of England and the French Kings Pauilions, which are faire, yet not like vnto his. And when they be ſent into farre or ſtrange Countries, or that ſtrangers come to them, they be very gorgeous. Elſe the Duke himſelfe goeth but meanly in apparell: and when hee goeth betwixt one place and another hee is but reaſonably apparelled ouer other times. In the while that I was in Moſco, the Duke ſent two Ambaſſadours to the King of Poleland, which had at the leſt fiue hundred Horſes; their ſumptuouſneſſe was aboue meaſure, not onely in themſelues, but alſo in their Horſes, as Veluet, Cloth of Gold, and Cloth of Siluer ſet with Pearles, and not ſcant. What ſhall I further ſay? I neuer heard of nor ſaw men ſo ſumptuous: but it is no daily guize, for when they haue not occaſion, as I ſaid before, all their doing is but meane. And now to the effect of their Warres: They are men without all order in the field. For they run hurling on heaps, and for the moſt part they neuer giue battayle to their Enemies: but that which they do, they do it all by ſtealth. But I beleeue they be ſuch men for hard liuing as are not vnder the Sunne: for no cold will hurt them. Yea, and though they lye in the field two moneths, at ſuch time as it ſhall freeze more then a yard thicke, the common Souldier hath neither Tent nor any thing elſe ouer his head: the moſt defence they haue againſt the weather is a Felt, which is ſet againſt the wind and weather, and when Snow commeth he doth caſt it off, and maketh him a fire, and layeth him downe thereby. Thus doe the moſt of all his men, except they be Gentlemen which haue other proniſion of their owne. Their lying in the field is not ſo ſtrange as is their hardneſſe: for euery man muſt carrie and make proniſion for himſelfe, and his Horſe for a moneth or two, which is very wonderfull. For hee himſelfe ſhall liue vpon water and Oate-meale mingled together cold, and drinke water thereto: his Horſe ſhall eate greene wood, and ſuch like baggage, and ſhall ſtand open in the cold field without couert, and yet will hee labour and ſerue him right well. I pray you amongſt all our boaſting Warriours how many ſhould we find to endure the field with them but one moneth. I know no ſuch Region about vs that beareth that name for man and beaſt. Now what might bee made of theſe men if they were trayned and broken to order and knowledge of Ciuill Warres: if this Prince had within his Countries ſuch men as could make them to vnderſtand the things aforeſaid, I doe beleeue that two of the beſt or greateſt Princes in Chriſtendome were not well able to match with him, conſidering the greatneſſe of his power and the hard-

Dukes forces.

Armour and rich attyre.

Extreames.

Vndiſciplined Souldiers.

Hardineſſe.

Digitized by Google

hardneſſe of his people, and ſtraight liuing both of people and Horſe, and the ſmall charges which his Wars ſtand him in: for he giueth no wages, except to ſtrangers. They haue a yearely ſtipend and not much. As for his owne Countreymen, euery one ſerueth of his owne proper coſts and charges, ſauing that hee giueth to his Harquebuſiers certayne allowance for Powder and ſhot: or elſe no man in all his Countrey hath one penie wages. But if any man hath done very good ſeruice, he giueth him a Ferme, or a piece of Land; for the which he is bound at all times to be readie with ſo many men as the Duke ſhall appoint: who conſidereth in his minde, what that Land or Ferme is well able to find: and ſo many ſhall he be bound to furniſh at all and euery ſuch time as Warres are holden in any of the Dukes Dominions. For there is no man of liuing, but he is bound likewiſe, whether the Duke call for eyther Souldier or Labourer, to furniſh them with all ſuch neceſſaries as to them belong.

Knights Fee.

Duke heire Generall.

Alſo, if any Gentleman or man of liuing doe dye without Iſſue Male, immediately after his death the Duke entreth his Land, notwithſtanding he haue neuer ſo many Daughters, and peraduenture giueth it forth-with to another man, except a ſmall portion that he ſpareth to marry the Daughters withall. Alſo, if there be a Rich man, a Fermour, or man of Liuing, which is ſtricken in age or by chance is maymed, and be not able to doe the Duke ſeruice, ſome other Gentleman that is not able to line and more able to doe ſeruice, will come to the Duke and complaine, ſaying, your Grace hath ſuch an one, which is vnmeete to doe ſeruice to your Highneſſe, who hath great abundance of wealth, and likewiſe your Grace hath many Gentlemen which are poore and lacke liuing, and we that lacke are well able to doe good ſeruice, your Grace might doe well to looke vpon him, and make him to helpe thoſe that want. Immediately the Duke ſendeth forth to inquire of his wealth: and if it be ſo proued, hee ſhall be called before the Duke, and it ſhall bee ſaid vnto him, Friend, you haue too much liuing, and are vnſeruiceable to your Prince, leſſe will ſerue you, and the reſt will ſerue other men that are more able to ſerue. Whereupon immediately his liuing ſhall be taken away from him, ſauing a little to find himſelfe and his Wife on, and he may not once repine thereat: but for anſwere hee will ſay, that hee hath nothing, but it is Gods and the Dukes Graces, and cannot ſay, as wee the common people in England ſay, if wee haue any thing; that it is Gods and our owne. Men may ſay, that theſe men are in wonderfull great awe, and obedience, that thus one muſt giue and grant his goods which he hath beene ſcraping and ſcratching for all his life to be at his Princes pleaſure and commandement. Oh, that our ſturdie Rebels were had in the like ſubiection to know their dutie toward their Princes. They may not ſay as ſome Snudges in England ſay, I would find the Queene a man to ſerue in my place, or make his Friends tarrie at home if many haue the vpper hand. No, no it is not ſo in this Countrey: for he ſhall make humble ſute to ſerue the Duke. And whom he ſendeth moſt to the Warres hee thinketh he is moſt in his fauour: and yet as I before haue ſaid, he giueth no wages. If they knew their ſtrength, no man were able to make match with them: for they that dwell neere them ſhould haue any reſt of them. But I thinke it is not Gods will: For I may compare them to a young Horſe that knoweth not his ſtrength, whom a little Child ruleth and guideth with a bridle, for all his great ſtrength: for if he did, neither Child nor man could rule him. Their Warres are holden againſt the Crimme Tartarians, and the Nagayans.

No wages.

I will ſtand no longer in the rehearſall of their power and Warres. For it were to tedious to the Reader. But I will in part declare their Lawes, and Puniſhments, and the execution of Iuſtice. And firſt I will begin with the Commons of the Countrey, which the Gentlemen haue rule on: And that is, that euery Gentleman hath Rule and Iuſtice vpon his owne Tenants. And if it ſo fall out that two Gentlemens Seruants or Tenants doe diſagree, the two Gentlemen examine the matter, and haue the parties before them, and ſo giue the Sentence. And yet cannot they make the end betwixt them of the Controuerſie, but either of the Gentlemen muſt bring his Seruant or Tenant before the high Iudge or Iuſtice of that Countrey, and there preſent them, and declare the matter and caſe. The Plaintiffe ſaith, I require the Law, which is granted: then commeth an Officer and arreſteth the partie Defendant, and vſeth him contrary to the Lawes of England. For when they attach any man, they beate him about the legs, vntill ſuch time as he findeth Sureties to anſwere the matter: And if not, his hands and necke are bound together, and hee is led about the Towne, and beaten about the legs, with other extreme puniſhments till he come to his Anſwere: And the Iuſtice demandeth if it bee for Debt, and ſayth: Oweſt thou this man any ſuch Debt? He will, perhaps, ſay nay. Then ſaith the Iudge: Art thou able to deny it? Let vs heare how? By Oath, ſaith the Defendant. Then he commandeth to leaue beating him till further tryall be had.

Gentlemen.

Suits & tryals.

Their order in one point is commendable. They haue no man of Law to plead their Cauſes in any Court: but euery man pleadeth his owne Cauſe, and giueth Bill and Anſwere in writing: contrary to the order in England. The Complaint is in manner of a Supplication, and made to the Dukes Grace, and deliuered him into his owne hand, requiring to haue Iuſtice as in his Complaint is alleaged. The Duke giueth ſentence himſelfe vpon all matters in the Law. Which is very commendable, that ſuch a Prince will take paines to ſee miniſtration of Iuſtice. Yet notwithſtanding it is wonderfully abuſed: and thereby the Duke is much deceiued. But if it fall out that the Officers be eſpied in cloking the truth, they haue moſt condigne puniſhment. And if the Plaintiffe can nothing proue, then the Defendant muſt take his Oath vpon the Crucifixe, whether he be in the right or no. Then is demanded, if the Plaintiffe bee any thing able further to make proofe: if he be not; then ſometimes he will ſay, I am able to proue it by my body and hands, or by my Champions body, ſo requiring the Campe. After the other hath his Oath,

No Lawyer.

Combat-triall.

it

it is granted as well to the one as to the other. So when they goe to the field, they sweare vpon the Crucifixe, that they bee both in the right, and that the one shall make the other to confesse the truth before they depart foorth of the field: and so they goe both to the battell armed with such weapons as they vse in that Countrey: they fight all on foot, and seldome the parties themselues doe fight, except they bee Gentlemen, for they stand much vpon their reputation, for they will not fight, but with such as are come of as good an house as themselues. So that if either partie require the combate, it is granted vnto them, and no Champion is to serue in their roome; wherein is no deceit; but otherwise by champions there is. For although they take great oathes vpon them to doe the battell truely, yet is the contrary often seene: because the common Champions haue no other liuing. And assoone as the one partie hath gotten the victorie, hee demandeth the debt, and the other is carryed to Prison, and there is shamefully vsed till hee take order.

There is also another order in the Law, that the plaintiffe may sweare in some causes of debt. And if the partie defendant bee poore, hee shall be set vnder the Crucifixe, and the partie plaintiffe must sweare ouer his head, and when hee hath taken his oath, the Duke taketh the partie defendant home to his house, and vseth him as his bond-man, and putteth him to labour, or letteth him for hire to any such as neede him, vntill such time as his friends make prouision for his redemption: or else hee remayneth in bondage all the dayes of his life. Bondage. Againe, there are many that will sell themselues to Gentlemen or Merchants, to bee their bond-men, to haue during their life, meate, drinke and cloath, and at their comming to haue a piece of money; yea, and some will sell their wiues and children to be bawds and drudges to the buyer. Punishments for Crimes. Also they haue a Law for Fellons and pickers contrary to the Lawes of England. For by their Law they can hang no man for his first offence; but may keepe him long in Prison, and oftentimes beate him with whips and other punishment: and there hee shall remaine vntill his friends bee able to bayle him. If hee be a picker or a cut-purse, as there bee very many, the second time he is taken, hee hath a piece of his Nose cut off, and is burned in the fore-head, and kept in prison till he finde sureties for his good behauiour. And if hee be taken the third time, he is hanged. And at the first time hee is extreamely punished and not released, except he haue very good friends, or that some Gentleman require to haue him to the warres: And in so doing, hee shall enter into great bonds for him: by which meanes the Countrey is brought into good quietnesse. But they bee naturally giuen to great deceit, except extreame beating did bridle them. Beating. They bee naturally giuen to hard liuing as well in fare as in lodging. I heard a Russian say, that it was a great deale merrier liuing in Prison then foorth, but for the great beating. For they haue meate and drinke without any labour, and get the charitie of well disposed people: But being at libertie they get nothing. The poore is very innumerable, and liue most miserably: for I haue seene them eate the pickle of Herring and other stinking Fish: nor the Fish cannot bee so stinking nor rotten, but they will eate it and praise it to bee more wholesome then other fish or fresh meate. In mine opinion there bee no such people vnder the Sunne for their hardnesse of liuing. Well, I will leaue them in this point, and will in part declare their Religion.

Miserable poore.

They doe obserue the Law of the Greekes with such excesse of superstition, as the like hath not beene heard of. Superstition. They haue no grauen Images in their Churches, but all painted, to the intent they will not breake the Commandement: but to their painted Images they vse such Idolatrie, that the like was neuer heard of in England. Images and Pictures. They will neither worship nor honour any Image that is made foorth of their owne Countrey. For their owne Images (say they) haue Pictures to declare what they bee, and how they be of God, and so be not ours: They say, looke how the Painter or Caruer hath made them, so wee doe worship them, and they worship none before they bee Christened. They say wee be but halfe Christians: because we obserue not part of the old Law with the Turkes. Therefore they call themselues more holy then vs. They haue none other learning but their mother tongue, nor will suffer no other in their Countrey among them. Mother tongue. All their seruice in Churches is in their mother tongue. They haue the old and new Testament, which are daily read among them: and yet their superstition is no lesse. For when the Priests doe reade, they haue such trickes in their reading, that no man can vnderstand them, nor no man giueth eare to them. Seruice. For all the while the Priest readeth, the people sit downe and one talke with another. But when the Priest is at seruice no man sitteth, but gaggle and ducke like so many Geese. And as for their prayers they haue but little skill, but vse to say, As bodi pomele: As much to say, Lord haue mercie vpon me. Prayers. For the tenth man within the Land cannot say the Pater noster. And as for the Creed, no man may bee so bold as to meddle therewith but in the Church: for they say it should not be spoken of, but in the Churches. Creed. Speake to them of the Commandements, and they will say they were giuen to Moses in the Law, which Christ hath now abrogated by his precious Death and Passion: therefore, (say they) wee obserue little or none thereof. Commandements. And I doe beleeue them. For if they were examined of their Law and Commandements together, they should agree but in few points. They haue the Sacrament of the Lords Supper in both kindes, and more ceremonies then we haue. Sacraments. They present them in a dish in both kinds together, and carrie them round about the Church vpon the Priests head, and so doe minister at all such times as any shall require. They bee great offerers of Candles, and sometimes of money, which wee call in England, Soule pence, with more ceremonies then I am able to declare. Candles.

They haue foure Lents in the yeere, whereof our Lent is the greatest. Looke as wee doe begin on the Wednesday, so they doe on the Munday before: And the weeke before that they call the Butter-weeke: And in that weeke they eate nothing but Butter and Milke. Howbeit I beleeue there bee in no other Countrey the like people for Drunkennesse. The next Lent is called Saint Peters Lent, and beginneth Foure Lents.

neth alwayes the Munday next after Trinitie Sunday, and endeth on Saint Peters Eeuen. If they should breake that Fast, their beliefe is, that they should not come in at Heauen gates. And when any of them dye, they haue a testimoniall with them in the Coffin, that when the soule commeth to Heauen gates it may deliuer the same to Saint Peter, which declareth that the partie is a true and holy Russian. The third Lent beginneth fifteene dayes before the later Lady day, and endeth on our Lady Eeuen. The fourth Lent beginneth on Saint Martins day, and endeth on Christmas Eeuen: which Lent is fasted for Saint Philip, Saint Peter, Saint Nicholas, and Saint Clement. For they foure bee the principall and greatest Saints in that Countrey. In these Lents they eate neither Butter, Egges, Milke, nor Cheese; but they are very straightly kept with Fish, Cabbages, and Rootes. And out of their Lents, they obserue truely the Wednesdayes and Fridayes throughout the yeere: and on the Saturday they doe eate flesh. Furthermore, they haue a great number of Religious men: which are blacke Monkes, and they eate no Flesh throughout the yeere, but Fish, Milke and Butter. By their order they should eate no fresh-Fish, and in their Lents they eate nothing but Coleworts, Cabbages, salt Cucumbers, with other rootes, as Radish and such like. Their drinke is like our penie Ale, and is called Quass. They haue Seruice daily in their Churches; and vse to goe to seruice two houres before day, and that is ended by day light. At nine of the clocke they goe to Masse: that ended, to Dinner: and after that to seruice againe: and then to Supper. You shall vnderstand that at euerie dinner and supper they haue declared the exposition of the Gospell that day: but how they wrest and twine the Scripture and that together, by report it is wonderfull. As for Whoredome and Drunkennesse there bee none such liuing: and for Extortion, they bee the most abominable vnder the Sunne. Now iudge of their holinesse. They haue twise as much Land as the Duke himselfe hath: but yet hee is reasonable euen with them, as thus: When they take bribes of any of the poore and simple, hee hath it by an order. When the Abbot of any of their Houses dyeth, then the Duke hath all his goods moueable and vnmoueable: so that the Successour buyeth all at the Dukes hands: and by this meane they bee the best Fermers the Duke hath. Thus with their Religion I make an end, trusting hereafter to know it better.

Chiefe Saints.

Vices.

Abbies.

Some additions for better knowledge of this Voyage, taken by CLEMENT ADAMS, Schoole-master to the Queenes Henshmen, from the mouth of Captaine CHANCELOR.

I haue this booke of Clement Adams, in Latine, written in a very elegant hand and eloquent stile to King Philip; (as I thinke) the very originall.

Richard Chancelor with his Ship and companie being thus left alone, and become very pensiue, heauie, and sorrowfull, by this dispersion of the Fleet, hee (according to the order before taken,) shapeth his course for Ward-house in Norway, there to expect and abide the arriuall of the rest of the Ships. And being come thither, and hauing stayed there the space of seauen dayes, and looked in vaine for their comming, hee determined at length to proceed alone in the purposed voyage. And as hee was preparing himselfe to depart, it happened that hee fell in companie and speech with certaine Scottish-men: who hauing vnderstanding of his intention, and wishing well to his actions, began earnestly to dissuade him from the further prosecution of the discouerie, by amplifying the dangers which hee was to fall into, and omitted no reason that might serue to that purpose. But he holding nothing so ignominious and reproachfull, as inconstancie and leuitie of minde, and perswading himselfe that a man of valour could not commit a more dishonourable part, then for feare of danger to auoyd and shun great attempts, was nothing at all changed or discouraged with the speeches and words of the Scots, remayning stedfast and immutable in his first resolution: determining either to bring that to passe which was intended, or else to dye the death.

And as for them which were with Master Chancelor in his Ship, although they had great cause of discomfort by the losse of their companie (whom the foresaid tempest had separated from them,) and were not a little troubled with cogitations and perturbations of minde, in respect of their doubtfull course: yet notwithstanding, they were of such consent and agreement of minde with Master Chancelor, that they were resolute, and prepared vnder his direction and gouernment, to make proofe and tryall of all aduentures, without all feare or mistrust of future dangers. Which constancie of minde in all the companie did exceedingly increase their Captaines carefulnesse: for hee being swallowed vp with like good will and loue towards them, feared lest through any errour of his, the safetie of the companie should bee indangered. To conclude, when they saw their desire and hope of the arriuall of the rest of the Ships to bee euery day more and more frustrated, they prouided to Sea againe, and Master Chancelor held on his course towards that vnknowne part of the world, and sayled so farre, that hee came at last to the place where hee found no night at all, but a continuall light and brightnesse of the Sunne shining cleerely vpon the huge and mightie Sea. And hauing the benefite of this perpetuall light for certaine dayes, at the length it pleased God to bring them into a certaine great Bay, which was of one hundreth miles or there about ouer. Whereinto they entred, and somewhat farre within within it caſt anchor, and looking euery way about them, it hapned that they eſpyed a farre off a certaine Fiſher-boate, which Maſter Chancelor, accompanied with a few of his men, went towards to common with the Fiſhermen that were in it, and to know of them what Countrey it was, and what people, and of what manner of liuing they were: but they being amazed with the ſtrange greatneſſe of his ſhip, (for in thoſe parts before that time, they had neuer ſeene the like) began preſently to auoyd and to flee: but hee ſtill following them, at laſt ouertooke them, and being come to them, they (being in great feare, as men halfe dead) proſtrated themſelues before him, offering to kiſſe his feete: but hee (according to his great and ſingular courteſie,) looked pleaſantly vpon them, comforting them by ſignes and geſtures, refuſing thoſe duties and reuerences of theirs, and taking them vp in all louing ſort from the ground. And it is ſtrange to conſider how much fauour afterwards in that place, this humanitie of his did purchaſe to himſelfe. For they being diſmiſſed, ſpread by and by a report abroad of the arriuall of a ſtrange Nation, of a ſingular gentleneſſe and courteſie: whereupon the common people came together, offering to theſe new-come gheſts victuals freely, and not refuſing to traffique with them, except they had beene bound by a certaine religious vſe and cuſtome, not to buy any forraine commodities, without the knowledge and conſent of the King.

They arriue in the Bay of Saint Nicholas.

Digitized by Google

By this time our men had learned, that this Countrey was called Ruſſia, or Muſcouie, and that Iuan Vaſilwich (which was at that time their Kings name) ruled and gouerned farre and wide in thoſe places. And the barbarous Ruſſes asked likewiſe of our men whence they were, and what they came for: whereunto anſwer was made, that they were Engliſh-men ſent into thoſe coaſts, from the moſt excellent King Edward the ſixt, hauing from him in commandement certaine things to deliuer to their King, and ſeeking nothing elſe but his amitie and friendſhip, and traffique with his people, whereby they doubted not, but that great commoditie and profit would grow to the ſubiects of both Kingdomes. The Diſcouerie of Ruſſia.

The Barbarians heard theſe things very gladly, and promiſed their ayde and furtherance to acquaint their King out of hand, with ſo honeſt and a reaſonable a requeſt. In the meane time Maſter Chancelor intreated victuals for his money, of the Gouernour of that place (who together with others came aboord him) and required hoſtages of them likewiſe, for the more aſſurance of ſafetie to himſelfe and his companie. To whom the Gouernours anſwered, that they knew not in that caſe the will of their King, but yet were willing in ſuch things as they might lawfully doe, to pleaſure him: which was as then to affoord him the benefit of victuals.

Now, while theſe things were a doing, they ſecretly ſent a meſſenger vnto the Emperour, to certifie him of the arriuall of a ſtrange Nation, and withall to know his pleaſure concerning them. Which meſſage was very welcome vnto him, inſomuch that voluntarily he inuited them to come to his Court. But if by reaſon of the tedioufneſſe of ſo long a iourney, they thought it not beſt ſo to doe, then hee granted libertie to his Subiects to bargaine, and to traffique with them: and further promiſed, that if it would pleaſe them to come to him, hee himſelfe would beare the whole charges of poſte Horſes. In the meane time the Gouernours of the place, differred the matter from day to day, pretending diuers excuſes, and ſaying one while, that the conſent of all the Gouernours, and another while, that the great and weightie affaires of the Kindome compelled them to differ their anſwer: and this they did of purpoſe, ſo long to protract the time, vntill the meſſenger (ſent before to the King) did returne with relation of his will and pleaſure. Meſſenger ſent to the Emperour.

But Maſter Chancelor, (ſeeing himſelfe held in this ſuſpenſe with long and vaine expectation, and thinking that of intention to delude him, they poſted the matter off ſo often,) was very inſtant with them to performe their promiſe: Which if they would not doe, hee told them that he would depart and proceed in his voyage. So that the Muſcouites (although as yet they knew not the minde of their King) yet fearing the departure indeed of our men, who had ſuch wares and commodities as they greatly deſired, they at laſt reſolued to furniſh our people with all things neceſſarie, and to conduct them by land to the preſence of their King. And ſo Maſter Chancelor began his iourney, which was very long and moſt troubleſome, wherein he had the vſe of certaine ſleds, which in that Countrey are very common, for they are carried themſelues vpon ſleds, and all their carriages are in the ſame ſort, the people almoſt not knowing any other manner of carriage, the cauſe whereof is, the exceeding hardneſſe of the ground congealed in the Winter time by the force of the cold, which in thoſe places is very extreame and horrible, whereof hereafter wee will ſay ſomething.

But now they hauing paſſed the greater part of their iourney, met at laſt with the Sled-man (of whom I ſpake before) ſent to the King ſecretly from the Iuſtices or Gouernours, who by ſome ill hap had loſt his way, and had gone to the Sea-ſide, which is neere to the Countrey of the Tartars, thinking there to haue found our ſhip. But hauing long erred and wandered out of his way, at the laſt in his direct returne, hee met (as he was comming) our Captaine on the way. To whom hee by and by deliuered the Emperours letters, which were written to him with all courteſie and in the moſt louing manner that could bee: wherein expreſſe commandement was giuen, that poſt Horſes ſhould be gotten for him and the reſt of his company without any money. Which thing was of all the Ruſſes, in the reſt of their iourney ſo willingly done, that The Emperors courteous letters to Maſter Chancelor.

Digitized by Google

that they began to quarrell, yea, and to fight alſo in ſtriuing and contending which of them ſhould put their poſte horſes to the Sled: ſo that after much adoe, and great paines taken in this long and wearie iourney, (for they had trauelled very neere fifteene hundred miles) Maſter Chancelar came at laſt to Moſco, the chiefe Citie of the Kingdome, and the ſeate of the King.

HONDIVS his Map of Ruſſia.

Riphean hils, a tale of Antiquitie.

Touching the Riphean Mountaines, whereupon the Snow lyeth continually, and where hence in times paſt it was thought that Tanais the riuer did ſpring, and that the reſt of the wonders of nature, which the Grecians fained and inuented of old, were there to bee ſeene: our men which lately came from thence, neither ſaw them, nor yet haue brought home any perfect relation of them, although they remayned there for the ſpace of three moneths, and had gotten in that time ſome intelligence of the language of Moſcouie. The whole Countrey is plaine and champion, and few hils in it: and towards the North, it hath very large and ſpacious Woods, wherein is great ſtore of Firre trees, a wood very neceſſarie, and fit for the building of houſes: there are alſo wilde beaſts bred in thoſe woods, as Buffes, Beares, and blacke Wolues, and another kinde of beaſt vnknowen to vs, but called by them Roſſomakka: and the nature of the ſame is very rare and wonderfull: for when it is great with young, and ready to bring foorth, it ſeeketh out ſome narrow place betweene two ſtakes, and ſo going through them, preſſeth it ſelfe, and by that meanes is eaſed of her burthen, which otherwiſe could not bee done. They hunt their Buffes for the moſt part a horſe-backe, but their Beares a foot, with woodden forkes. The North parts of the Countrey are reported to bee ſo cold, that the very Ice or water which diſtilleth out of the moyſt wood which they lay vpon the fire, is preſently congealed and frozen: the diuerſitie growing ſodainly to bee ſo great, that in one and the ſelfe-ſame fire-brand, a man ſhall ſee both fire and Ice. When the winter doth once begin there, it doth ſtill more and more increaſe by a perpetuitie of cold: neither doth that cold ſlake, vntill the force of the Sunne beames doth diſſolue the cold, and make glad the earth, returning to it againe. Our Mariners which wee left in the Roſſomakka, a ſtrange beaſt.

The ſharpnes of the winter in Moſcouie.

the ſhip in the meane time to keepe it, in their going vp onely from their cabbins to the hatches, had their breath oftentimes ſo ſuddenly taken away, that they eſt-ſoones fell downe as men very neere dead, ſo great is the ſharpeneſſe of that cold Climate: but for the South parts of the Countrey, they are ſomewhat more * temperate.

* The reſt of M. Adams contayning a deſcription of the Country, &c. is here omitted.

The Copie of the Duke of Moſcouie and Emperour of Ruſſia his Letters, ſent to King EDWARD the Sixth, by the hands of RICHARD CHANCELOVR.

THe Almightie power of God, and the incomprehenſible holy Trinitie, rightfull Chriſtian Beliefe, &c. We great Duke Iuan Vaſiliuich, by the Grace of God great Lord and Emperour of all Ruſſia, great Duke of Volodemer, Moſco, and Nouograd, King of Kazan, King of Aſtracan, Lord of Plesko, and great Duke of Smolensko, of Twerria, Ioughoria, Permia, Vadska, Bulghoria, and others, Lord and great Duke of Nouograd in the Low Countrey, of Chernigo, Rezan, Polotskoy, Roſtoue, Yaruſlaueley, Bealozera, Liefland, Oudoria, Obdoria, and Condenſa, Commander of all Siberia, and of the North parts, and Lord of many other Countries, greeting. Before all, right, great and worthy of honour Edward King of England, &c. according to our moſt heartie and good zeale, with good intent and friendly deſire, and according to our holy Chriſtian Faith, and great Gouernance, and being in the light of great vnderſtanding, our Anſwere by this our Honourable Writing vnto your Kingly Gouernance, at the requeſt of your faithfull Seruant Richard Chancelour, with his company, as they ſhall let you wiſely know is this. In the ſtrength of the twentieth yeare of our Gouernance, be it knowne, that at our Sea-coaſts arriued a ſhip, with one Richard, and his company, and ſaid, that he was deſirous to come into our Dominions, and according to his requeſt, hath ſeene our Maieſtie, and [d] our eyes: and hath declared vnto vs your Maieſties deſire, as that wee ſhould grant vnto your Subiects, to goe and come, and in our Dominions, and among our Subiects, to frequent free Marts, with all ſorts of Merchandizes, and vpon the ſame to haue warres for their returne. And they haue alſo deliuered vs your Letters which declare the ſame requeſt. And hereupon wee haue giuen order, that whereſoeuer your faithfull Seruant Hugh Willoughbie, land or touch in our Dominions, to be well entertayned, who as yet is not arriued as your Seruant Richard can declare.

Iuan Vaſiliuich, that is to ſay, Iohn the Sonne of Baſilide.

d That is, come into our preſence.

And we with Chriſtian beliefe and faithfulneſſe, and according to your Honourable requeſt, and my Honourable commandement will not leaue it vndone: and are furthermore willing that you ſend vnto vs your ſhips and Veſſels, when and as often as they may haue paſſage, with good aſſurance on our part to ſee them harmleſſe. And if you ſend one of your Maieſties counſell to treate with vs whereby your Countrey Merchants may with all kindes of Wares, and where they will make their Market in our Dominions, they ſhall haue their free Mart with all free Liberties through my whole Dominions, with all kinde of Wares, to come and goe at their pleaſure, without any let, damage, or impediment, according to this our Letter, our Word and our Seale which wee haue commanded to be vnder ſealed. Written in our Dominion, in our Citie and our Palace in the Caſtle of Moſco, in the yeare 7060. the ſecond Moneth of Februarie.

This Letter was written in the Moſcouian Tongue, in Letters much like to the Greeke Letters, very faire written in Paper, with a broad Seale hanging at the ſame, ſealed in Paper vpon Waxe. This Seale was much like the Broad Seale of England, hauing on the one ſide the Image of a man on Horſe-backe in complete Harneſſe fighting with a Dragon. Vnder this Letter was another Paper written in the Dutch Tongue, which was the Interpretation of the other written in the Moſcouian Letters. Theſe Letters were ſent the next yeare after the date of King Edwards Letters, 1554.

After this, entercourſe of Letters and Embaſſages paſſed betwixt King Philip and Queene Marie, and the Moſcouite: and the Moſcouie Company was inſtituted and receiued Priuiledges both from their owne and that Forraine Prince, a ſecond Voyage beeing ſet forth in May, 1555. and Maſter George Killingworth was made their firſt Agent: the particulars whereof are found at large in Maſter Hakluyts firſt Tome of Voyages, as alſo other things touching that Trade then ſetled: which heere I omit, and come to Maſter Ienkinſons Voyage to Moſco, and thence to Tartaria.

Digitized by Google

§. II.

*The firſt * Voyage made by Maſter* Anthonie Ienkinson, from the Citie of London, toward the Land of Ruſſia, begunne the twelfth of May, in the yeare 1557.

* Hee made three others after, one as Embaſſadour from Queene Elizabeth to the Muſcouite.

FIrſt, by the grace of God, the day and yeare aboue mentioned, I departed from the ſaid Citie, and the ſame day at Grauеſend, embarked my ſelfe in a good ſhip, named the Primroſe, being appointed, although vnworthy, chiefe Captaine of the ſame, and alſo of the other three good ſhips, to ſay, the Iohn Euangeliſt, the Anne, and the Trinitie, hauing alſo the conduct of the Emperour of Ruſſia, his Ambaſſadour named Oſep Nepea Gregoriwich, who paſſed with his company in the ſaid Primroſe. And thus our foure tall ſhips being well appointed, aſwell for men, as victuals, as other neceſſary furniture, the ſaid twelfth day of the moneth of May, we weighed our Anchors, and departed from the ſaid Grauеſend, in the after-noone, and plying downe the Thames, the wind being Eaſterly, and faire weather, the thirteenth day we came a ground with the Primroſe, vpon a ſand called the blacke tayle, where wee ſate faſt vntill the fourteenth day in the morning, and then God bee prayſed, ſhee came off: and that day we plyed downe as farre as our Ladie of Holland, and there came to an Anchor, the winde being Eaſterly, and there remayned vntill the twentieth day: then wee weyed and went out at Goldmore gate, and from thence in at Balſey ſlade, and ſo into Orwell wands, where we came to an Anchor: but as we came out at the ſaid Goldemore gate, the Trinitie came on ground on certayne Rockes, that lye to the North-ward of the ſaid gate, and was like to be bilged and loſt. But by the ayde of God, at the laſt ſhe came off againe, being very leake: and the one and twentieth day the Primroſe remaining at an Anchor in the wands, the other three ſhips bare into Orwell Hauen, where I cauſed the ſaid Trinitie to be grounded, ſearched, and repayred. So we remayned in the ſaid Hauen, vntill the eight and twentieth day: and then the wind being Weſterly, the three ſhips that were in the Hauen, weighed and came forth, and in comming forth the Iohn Euangeliſt came on ground vpon a Sand, called the Andros, where ſhe remayned one tyde, and the next full Sea ſhe came off againe without any great hurt, God be prayſed.

The nine and twentieth day in the morning all foure ſhips weighed in the Wands, and that tyde went as farre as Orfordneſſe, where we came to an Anchor, becauſe the wind was Northerly: And about ſixe of the clocke at night, the wind vered to the South-weſt, and we weighed Anchor, and bare cleere of the Neſſe, and then ſet our courſe North-eaſt and by North vntill mid-night, being then cleare of Yarmouth ſands. Then wee winded North and by Weſt, and North North-weſt, vntill the firſt of Iune at noone, then it waxed calme, and continued ſo vntill the ſecond day at noone: then the wind came at North-weſt, with a tempeſt, and much raine, and we lay cloſe by, and caped North North-eaſt, and North-eaſt and by North, as the wind ſhifted, and ſo continued vntill the third day at noone: then the winde vered Weſterly againe, and we went North our right courſe, and ſo continued our way vntill the fourth day at three of the clocke in the after-noone, at which time the winde vered to the North-weſt againe and blew a freſh gale, and ſo continued vntill the ſeuenth day in the morning, wee lying with all our ſhips cloſe by, and caping to the Northwards: and then the winde vering more Northerly, we were forced to put roomer with the Coaſt of England againe, and fell ouerthwart New-caſtle, but went not into the Hauen, and ſo plyed vpon the Coaſt the eight day and the ninth.

Iune.

The tenth day the wind came to the North North-weſt, and wee were forced to beare roomer with Flamborow head, where we came to an Anchor, and there remayned vntill the ſeuenteenth day. Then the wind came faire, and we weighed, & ſet our courſe North and by Eaſt, time and ſo continued the ſame with a merry wind vntill the one and twentieth at noone, at which we took the Sunne, and had the latitude in ſixtie degrees. Then we ſhifted our courſe, and went North North-eaſt, & North-eaſt and by North, vntill the fiue and twentieth day. Then we diſcouered certain Ilands, called Heilick Ilands, lying from vs Northeaſt, being in the latitude of ſixty ſixe degrees, fortie minutes. Then we went North and by Weſt, becauſe we would not come too nigh the Land, and running that courſe foure houres, we diſcouered, and had ſight of Roſt Ilands, joyning to the mayne Land of Finmarke. Thus continuing our courſe along the Coaſt of Norway and Finmarke, the ſeuen and twentieth day we tooke the Sunne, being as farre ſhot as Lofoot, and had the latitude in ſixtie nine degrees. And the ſame day in the afternoone appeared ouer our heads a Rain-bow, like a Semicircle, with both ends vpward. Note, that there is betweene the ſaid Roſt Ilands and Lofoot, a Whirle-poole called Maleſtrand, which from halfe ebbe vntill halfe floud, maketh ſuch a terrible noyſe, that it ſhaketh the Rings in the doores of the Inhabitants Houſes of the ſaid Ilands ten miles off. Alſo it there commeth any Whale within the current of the ſame, they make a pittifull cry. Moreouer, if great Trees be carryed into it by force of ſtreames, and after with the ebbe be caſt out againe, the ends and boughes of them haue beene ſo beaten, that they are like the ſtalkes of Hempe that is bruized. Note, that all the Coaſt of Heilick Ilands in 66. degrees 40. minutes. Roſt Ilands.

Maleſtrand a ſtrange whirle poole.

Fin-

Digitized by Google

Finmarke is high Mountaynes and Hils, being couered all the yeare with Snow. And hard aboard the shoare of this Coast, there is one hundred, or one hundred and fiftie fathomes of water in depth. Thus proceeding and sayling forward, we fell with an Iland called Zenam, being in the latitude of seuentie degrees. About this Iland wee saw many Whales, very monstrous, about our ships, some by estimation of sixtie foote long: and being the ingendring time they roared and cryed terribly. From thence we fell with an Iland, called Kettlewicke.

Zenam Iland.

Kettlewike Iland.

This Coast from Rost vnto Lofoot lyeth North and South, and from Lofoot to Zenam North-east and South-west, and from Zenam to Kettelwicke, East North-east and West South-west. From the said Kettelwicke we sayled East and by North ten leagues, and fell with a Land called Inger sound, where we fished, being becalmed, and tooke great plentie of Cods. Thus plying along the Coast, we fell with a Cape, called the North Cape, which is the Northermost Land that we passe in our Voyage to Saint Nicholas, and is in the latitude of seuentie one degrees and ten minutes, and is from Inger sound East, and to the North-wards fifteene leagues. And being at this North Cape the second day of Iuly, wee had the Sunne at North foure degrees aboue the Horizon. The third day we came to Wardhouse, hauing such mists that wee could not see the Land. This Wardhouse is a Castle standing in an Iland two miles from the mayne of Finland, subject to the King of Denmarke, and the Eastermost Land that he hath. There are two other Ilands neere adioyning vnto that, whereon the Castle of Wardhouse standeth. The Inhabitants of those three Ilands liue onely by fishing, and make much Stock-fish, which they dry with Frost: their most feeding is fish; bread and drinke they haue none, but such as is brought them from other places. They haue small store of Cattle, which are also fed with fish. From Wardhouse we sayled South South-east ten leagues, and fell with a Cape of Land called Kegor, the Northermost part of the Land of Lappia. And betweene Wardhouse, and the said Cape is a great Bay, called Dommes haff, in the South part whereof is a Monastery of Monkes of the Russes Religion, called Pechinchow. Thus proceeding forward and sayling along the Coast of the said Land of Lappia, winding South-east, the fourth day through great mists and darkenesse we lost the company of the other three ships, and met not with them againe, vntill the seuenth day, when we fell with a Cape or head-land called Swetinoz, which is the entring into the Bay of Saint Nicholas. At this Cape lyeth a great stone, to the which the Barkes that passed thereby, were wont to make Offerings of Butter, Meale, and other Victuals, thinking that vnlesse they did so, their Barkes or Vessels should there perish, as it hath beene oftentimes seene: and there it is very darke and mystie. Note, that the sixt day wee passed by the place where Sir Hugh Willoughby with all his company perished, which is called Arzina reca, that is to say, the Riuer Arzina.

Ward-house.

Cattell fed with fish.

The Monasterie of Pechinchow.

Arzina reca the Riuer where Sir Hugh Willoughby was frozen.

The Land of Lappia is an high Land, hauing snow lying on it commonly all the yeere. The people of the Countrey are halfe Gentiles: they liue in the Summer time neere the Sea side, and vse to take fish, of the which they make bread, and in the Winter they remoue vp into the Countrey into the Woods, where they vse hunting, and kill Deere, Beares, Wolues, Foxes, and other beasts, with whose flesh they be nourished, and with their skins apparelled in such strange fashion, that there is nothing seene of them bare but their eyes. They haue none other habitation, but only in Tents, remouing from place to place, according to the season of the yeere. They know no arte nor faculty, but onely shooting, which they exercise daily, as well men as women, and kill such beasts as serue them for their food. Thus proceeding along the coast from Swetinoz aforesaid, the ninth day of Iuly wee came to Cape Grace, being in the latitude of 66. degrees and 45. minutes, and is at the entring in of the Bay of Saint Nicolas. Aboard this Land there is twentie or thirtie fathoms water, and sundry grounds good to anchor in. The current at this Cape runneth South-west and North-east. From this Cape wee proceeded along vntill we came to Crosse Iland, which is seuen leagues from the said Cape South-west: and from this Iland, wee set ouer to the other side of the Bay, and went South-west, and fell with an Head-land, called Foxenose, which is from the said Iland fiue and twentie leagues. The entring of this Bay from Crosse Iland to the neerest Land on the other side is seuen leagues ouer. From Foxenose proceeding forward the twelfth day of the said moneth of Iuly, all our foure ships arrived in safety at the Road of Saint Nicolas, in the Land of Russia, where we anchored, and had sayled from London vnto the said Road seuen hundred and fiftie leagues. The Russian Ambassadour and his companie with great ioy got to shoare, and our ships heere forthwith discharged themselues: and being laden againe, and hauing a faire winde, departed toward England the first of August. The third of the said moneth I with other of my companie came vnto the Citie of Colmogro, being an hundred verstes from the Bay of Saint Nicolas, and in the latitude of 64. degrees 25. minutes. I tarried at the said Colmogro vntill the fifteenth day: and then I departed in a little Boat vp the Riuer of Duina, which runneth very swiftly, and the selfe same day passed by the mouth of a Riuer called Pinego, leauing it on our left hand fifteene verstes from Colmogro. On both sides of the mouth of this Riuer Pinego is high Land, great Rockes of Alabaster, great Woods, and Pine-apple trees lying along within the ground, which by report haue lyen there since Noes flood. And thus proceeding forward the nineteenth day in the morning, I came in-

The Lappians couered all saue their eies.

The current at Cape Grace.

The entring of the Bay of Saint Nicolas is seuen leagues broad at the least.

August.

Pinego Riuer.

to

Digitized by Google

The Towne of Yemps. Vſtiug.

to a Towne called Yemps, an hundred verſtes from Colmogro. All this way along they make much Tarre, Pitch, and aſhes of Aſpen trees. From thence I came to a place called Vſtiug, an ancient Citie, the laſt day of Auguſt. At this Citie meet two Riuers: the one called Iug, and the other Sucana, both which fall into the aforeſaid Riuer of Duina. The Riuer Ing hath his ſpring in the Land of the Tartars, called Cheremizzi, ioyning to the Countrey of Permia: and Sucana hath his head from a Lake not farre from the Citie of Vologda. Thus departing from Vſtiug, and paſſing by the Riuer Sucana, we came to a Towne called Totma. About this place the water is very ſhallow, and ſtonie, and troubleſome for Barkes and Boats of that Countrey, which they call Naſſades, and Doſneckes, to paſſe that way: wherein merchandiſe are tranſported from the aforeſaid Colmogro to the Citie of Vologda. Theſe veſſels called Naſſades, are very long builded, broad made, and cloſe aboue, flat bottomed, and draw not aboue foure foot water, and will carrie two hundred tunnes: they haue no Iron appertayning to them but all of Timber, and when the winde ſerueth, they are made to ſayle. Otherwiſe they haue many men, ſome to hale and draw by the neckes with long ſmall ropes made faſt to the ſaid Boats, and ſome ſet with long poles. There are many of theſe Barkes vpon the Riuer of Duina: And the moſt part of them belongeth vnto the Citie of Vologda: for there dwell many Merchants, and they occupie the ſaid Boats with carrying of Salt from the Sea ſide vnto the ſaid Vologda. The twentieth of September I came vnto Vologda, which is a great Citie, and the Riuer paſſeth through the midſt of the ſame. The houſes are builded with wood of Firre trees, ioyned one with another, and round without: the houſes are foure ſquare without any Iron or ſtone worke, couered with Birch barkes, and wood ouer the ſame: Their Churches are all of wood, two for euery Pariſh, one to be heated for Winter, and the other for Summer. On the tops of their houſes they lay much earth, for feare of burning: for they are ſore plagued with fire. This Vologda is in 59. degrees 11. minutes, and is from Colmogro, one thouſand verſtes.

The deſcription of their Naſſades.

Good counſell for Trauellers.

All the way I neuer came in houſe, but lodged in the Wilderneſſe, by the Riuers ſide, and carried prouiſion for the way. And he that will trauell thoſe wayes, muſt carrie with him an Hatchet, a Tinder boxe, and a Kettle, to make fire and ſeethe meat, when he hath it: for there is ſmall ſuccour in thoſe parts, vnleſſe it be in Townes.

December.

The firſt day of December, I departed from Vologda in poſte in a Sled, as the manner is in Winter. And the way to Moſcua is as followeth. From Vologda to Commelski, ſeuen and twentie verſtes; ſo to Olmor fiue and twentie verſtes, ſo to Teloytſke twentie verſtes, ſo to Vre thirtie verſtes, ſo to Voſhansko thirtie verſtes, then to Yeraſlaue thirtie verſtes, which ſtandeth vpon the great Riuer Volga, ſo to Roſtoue fiftie verſtes, then to Rogarin thirtie verſtes, ſo to Peraſlaue ten verſtes, which is a great Towne, ſtanding hard by a faire Lake. From thence to Dowbnay thirtie verſtes, ſo to Godoroke thirtie verſtes, ſo to Owchay thirtie verſtes, and laſt to the Emperour of Caſan.

Moſco fiue and twentie verſtes, where I arriued the ſixt day of December.

There are fourteene Poſts called Yannes, betweene Vologda and Moſco, which are accounted fiue hundred verſtes aſunder.

The tenth day of December, I was ſent for to the Emperours Caſtle by the ſaid Emperour, and deliuered my Letters vnto the Secretarie, who talked with mee of diuers matters, by the commandement of the Emperour. And after that my Letters were tranſlated, I was anſwered that I was welcome, and that the Emperour would giue mee that I deſired.

The fiue and twentieth day, being the day of the Natiuitie, I came into the Emperours preſence, and kiſſed his hand, who ſate aloft in a goodly Chaire of eſtate, hauing on his head a Crowne moſt richly decked, and a ſtaffe of Gold in his hand, all apparelled with Gold, and garniſhed with Precious ſtones. There ſate diſtant from him about two yards his Brother, and next vnto him a Boy of twelue yeeres of age, who was Inheritor to the Emperour of Caſan, conquered by this Emperour eight yeeres paſt. Then ſate his Nobilitie round about him, richly apparelled with Gold and ſtone. And after I had done obeyſance to the Emperour, he with his owne mouth calling me by my name, bade me to dinner, and ſo I departed to my lodging till dinner time, which at ſixe of the clocke, by Candle light.

Multitude of Gueſts.

The Emperour dined in a faire great Hall, in the midſt whereof was a Pillar foure ſquare, very artificially made, about which were diuers Tables ſet, and at the vppermoſt part of the Hall ſate the Emperour himſelfe, and at his Table ſate his Brother, his Vncles ſonne, the Metropolitan, the young Emperour of Caſan, and diuers of his Noblemen, all of one ſide. There were diuers Embaſſadours, and other ſtrangers, as well Chriſtians as Heathens, diuerſly apparelled, to the number of ſixe hundred men, which dined in the ſaid Hall, beſides two thouſand Tartars, men of warre, which were newly come to render themſelues to the Emperour, and were appointed to ſerue him in his warres againſt the Lief-landers, but they dined in other Halls. I was ſet at a little Table, hauing no ſtranger with mee, directly before the Emperours face. Being thus ſet and placed, the Emperour ſent mee diuers bowles of Wine, and Meade, and many diſhes of Meate from his owne hand, which were brought mee by a Duke, and my Table ſerued all in Gold and Siluer, and ſo likewiſe on other Tables, there were ſet bowles of Gold, ſet with Stone, worth by eſtimation 400. pounds ſterling one cup, beſides the Plate which ſerued the tables.

There

Digitized by Google

There was alſo a Cupboord of Plate, moſt ſumptuous and rich, which was not vſed: among the which, was a piece of Gold of two yards long, wrought in the top with Towers, and Dragons heads, alſo diuers barrels of Gold and Siluer, with Caſtles on the bungs, richly and artificially made. The Emperour, and all the Hall throughout was ſerued with Dukes: and when dinner was ended, the Emperour called mee by name, and gaue me drinke with his owne hand, and ſo I departed to my lodging. Note, that when the Emperour drinketh, all the companie ſtand vp, and at euery time he drinketh, or taſteth of a diſh of meate he bleſſeth himſelfe. Many other things I ſaw that day, not here noted. Rich ſeruice.

The fourth of Ianuarie, which was Twelf-tide with them, the Emperour, with his brother and all his Nobles, all moſt richly apparelled with Gold, Pearles, Precious ſtones, and coſtly Furres, with a Crowne vpon his head, of the Tartarian faſhion, went to the Church in Proceſſion, with the Metropolitan, and diuers Biſhops and Prieſts. That day I was before the Emperour againe in Ruſſe apparell, and the Emperour asked if that were not I, and his Chancellour anſwered, yea. Then he bad me to dinner: then came hee out of the Church, and went with the Proceſſion vpon the Riuer, being all frozen, and there ſtanding bare-headed, with all his Nobles, there was a hole made in the Ice, and the Metropolitan hallowed the water with great ſolemnitie and ſeruice, and did caſt of the ſaid water vpon the Emperours ſonne, and the Nobilitie. That done, the people with great thronging filled pots of the ſaid water to carrie home to their houſes, and diuers children were throwne in, and ſicke people, and plucked out quickly againe, and diuers Tartars chriſtned: all which the Emperour beheld. Alſo there were brought the Emperours beſt Horſes, to drinke at the ſaid hallowed water. All this being ended, hee returned to his Palace againe, and went to dinner by Candle light, and ſate in a woodden houſe, very fairely gilt. There dined in the place, aboue three hundred ſtrangers, and I ſate alone as I did before, directly before the Emperour, and had my Meat, Bread, and Drinke ſent mee from the Emperour. Twelf-tide. Moſco Riuer hallowed. Riuer of holy water for horſe and man.

The Citie of Moſco is great, the houſes for the moſt part of wood, and ſome of ſtone, with windowes of Iron, which ſerue for Summer time. There are many faire Churches of ſtone, but more of wood, which are made hot in the Winter time. The Emperours lodging is in a faire and large Caſtle, walled foure ſquare of Bricke, high, and thicke, ſituated vpon an Hill, two miles about, and the Riuer on the South-weſt ſide of it, and it hath ſixteene gates in the walls, and as many Bulwarkes. His Palace is ſeparated from the reſt of the Caſtle, by a long wall going North and South, to the Riuer ſide. In his Palace are Churches, ſome of ſtone, and ſome of wood, with round Towres fairely gilded. In the Church doores, and within the Churches are Images of Gold: the chiefe Markets for all things are within the ſaid Caſtle, and for ſundry things ſundry Markets, and euery ſcience by it ſelfe. And in the Winter there is a great Market without the Caſtle, vpon the Riuer being frozen, and there is ſold Corne, earthen Pots, Tubs, Sleds, &c. The Caſtle is in circuit two thouſand and nine hundred paces. Citie of Moſco.

The Countrey is full of mariſh ground, and Playne, in Woods and Riuers abundant, but it bringeth forth good plentie of Corne. This Emperour is of great power: for he hath conquered much, as well of the Lieflanders, Poles, Lettoes, and Swethens, as alſo of the Tartars, and Gentiles, called Samoeds, hauing thereby much inlarged his Dominions. Hee keepeth his people in great ſubiection: all matters paſſe his iudgement, bee they neuer ſo ſmall. The Law is ſharpe for all offenders. The Countrie.

The Metropolitan dealeth in matters of Religion, as himſelfe liſteth, whom the Emperour greatly honoureth. They vſe the Ceremonies and Orders of the Greeke Church. They worſhip many Images painted on Tables, and ſpecially the Image of Saint Nicholas. Their Prieſts bee married, but their wiues being dead, they may not marry the ſecond time, and ſo become Monks, whereof there are a great number in the Land. They haue foure Lents in the yeere, and the weeke before Shrouetide, they call the Butter weeke, &c. The Metropolitan.

They haue many ſorts of meats and drinks, when they banket and delight in eating of groſſe meates, and ſtinking fiſh. Before they drinke they vſe to blow in the Cup: their greateſt friendſhip is in drinking: they are great Talkers and Lyars, without any faith or truſt in their words, Flatterers and Diſſemblers. The Women be there very obedient to their Husbands, and are kept ſtraightly from going abroad, but at ſome ſeaſons. Meats and drinkes.

At my being there, I heard men and women that drunke away their children, and all their goods at the Emperours Tauerne, and not being able to pay, hauing impawned himſelfe, the Tauerner bringeth him out to the high way, and beats him vpon the legs: then they that paſſe by, knowing the cauſe, and hauing peraduenture compaſſion vpon him, giue the money, and ſo hee is ranſomed. In euery good Towne there is a drunken Tauerne, called a Curſemay, which the Emperour ſometime letteth out to farme, and ſometimes beſtoweth for a yeere or two, on ſome Duke or Gentleman, in recompence of his ſeruice: and for that time hee is Lord of all the Towne, robbing and ſpoyling, and doing what pleaſeth him: and then hee being growne rich, is taken by the Emperour, and ſent to the warres againe: where hee ſhall ſpend all that which he hath gotten by ill meanes: ſo that the Emperour in his warres is little charged, but all the Drunkenneſſe.

burden

Digitized by Google

Saddlers.

burden lyeth vpon the poore people. They vſe ſaddles made of wood and ſinewes, with the tree gilded with damaske worke, and the ſeat couered with cloth, ſometimes of gold, and the reſt Saphian leather, well ſtitched. They vſe little drummes at their ſaddle bowes, by the ſound whereof their horſes vſe to runne more ſwiftly.

Ruſſe apparell.

The Ruſſe is apparelled in this manner: his vpper garment is of cloth of gold, ſilke, or cloth, long, downe to the foot, and buttoned with great buttons of ſiluer, or elſe laces of ſilke, ſet on with Brooches, the ſleeues thereof very long, which he weareth on his arme, ruffed vp. Vnder that he hath another long garment, buttoned with ſilke buttons, with a high coller ſtanding vp of ſome colour, and that garment is made ſtraight. Then his ſhirt is very fine, and wrought with red ſilke, or ſome gold, with a coller of pearle. Vnder his ſhirt he hath linnen breeches, vpon his legs, a paire of hoſe without feet, and his bootes of red or yellow leather. On his head hee weareth a white Colepeck, with buttons or ſiluer, gold, pearle, or ſtone, and vnder it a black Foxe cap, turned vp very broad. When he rideth on horſe-back to the warres, or any iourney, he hath a ſword of the Turkiſh faſhion, and his Bowe and Arrowes of the ſame manner. In the Towne he weareth no weapon, but onely two or three paire of kniues, hauing the hafts of the tooth of a Fiſh, called the Morſe.

In the Winter time, the people trauell with Sleds, in Towne and Countrey, the way being hard, and ſmooth with ſnow: the waters and Riuers are all frozen, and one horſe with a Sled, will draw a man vpon it foure hundred miles in three dayes: but in the Summer time, the way is deepe with myre, and trauelling is very ill.

The Ruſſe, if he be a man of any abilitie, neuer goeth out of his houſe in the winter, but vpon his Sled, and in ſummer vpon his Horſe: and in his Sled he ſits vpon a Carpet, or a white Beares skin: the Sled is drawne with a Horſe well decked, with many Foxes and Woolues tailes at his necke, and is conducted by a little boy vpon his backe: his ſeruants ſtand vpon the taile of the Sled, &c.

§. III.

Notes taken out of another mans Relation of the ſame Voyage, touching the Ruſſian Rites.

ON Chriſtmaſſe day we were all willed to dine with the Emperors Maieſtie, where for bread, meate, and drinke, we were ſerued as at other times before: but for goodly and rich Plate, we neuer ſaw the like or ſo much before. There dined that day in the Emperors preſence aboue fiue hundred ſtrangers, and two hundred Ruſſes, and all they were ſerued in veſſels of Gold, and that as much as could ſtand one by another vpon the Tables. Beſides this, there were foure Cup-boards garniſhed with goodly Plate both of gold and ſiluer. Among the which there were twelue barrels of ſiluer, contayning aboue twelue gallons a piece, and at each end of euery Barrell were ſix hoopes of fine gold: this dinner continued about ſix houres.

The hallowing of the Riuer of Moſco.

Euery yeere vpon the twelfth day, they vſe to bleſſe or ſanctifie the Riuer Moſcua, which runneth through the Citie of Moſco, after this manner. Firſt, they make a ſquare hole in the Ice about three fathoms large euery way, which is trimmed about the ſides and edges with white boords. Then about nine of the clocke they come out of the Church with proceſſion towards the Riuer in this wiſe.

Firſt and foremoſt there goe certaine young men with waxe Tapers burning, and one carrying a great Lanthorne: then follow certaine Banners, then the Croſſe, then the Images of our Lady, of Saint Nicholas, and of other Saints, which Images men carry vpon their ſhoulders: after the Images follow certaine Prieſts to the number of one hundred or more: after them the Metropolitan who is led betweene two Prieſts, and after the Metropolitan came the Emperour with his Crowne vpon his head, and after his Maieſtie all his Noble men orderly. Thus they followed the Proceſſion vnto the water, and when they came vnto the hole that was made, the Prieſts ſet themſelues in order round about it. And at one ſide of the ſame Poole there was a Scaffold of boords made, vpon which ſtood a faire Chaire in which the Metropolitan was ſet, but the Emperours Maieſtie ſtood vpon the Ice.

After this the Prieſts began to ſing, to bleſſe and to ſenſe, and did their ſeruice, and ſo by that time that they had done, the water was holy, which being ſanctified, the Metropolitan tooke a little thereof in his hands, and caſt it on the Emperour, likewiſe vpon certaine of the Dukes, and then they returned againe to the Church with the Prieſts that ſate about the water: but that preaſe that there was about the water when the Emperour was gone, was wonderfull to behold, for there came aboue fiue thouſand Pots to be filled of that water: for that Moſcouite which hath no part of that water, thinks himſelfe vnhappy. And very many went naked into the water, both Men and Women and Children: after the preaſe was a little gone, the Emperours Iennets

and

Digitized by Google

and Horſes were brought to drinke of the ſame water, and likewiſe many other men brought their Horſes thither to drinke, and by that meanes they make their Horſes as holy as themſelues. All theſe ceremonies being ended, we went to the Emperour to dinner, where we were ſerued in veſſels of ſiluer, and in all other points as we had beene beforetime.

The Ruſſes begin their Lent alwayes eight weeks before Eaſter: the firſt weeke they eate Egs, Milke, Cheeſe and Butter, and make great cheare with Pan-cakes, and ſuch other things, one friend viſiting another, and from the ſame Sunday vntill our Shroue-ſunday, there are but few Ruſſes ſober, but they are drunke day by day, and it is accounted for no reproach or ſhame among them. The Ruſſes Lent.

The next weeke being our firſt weeke in Lent, or our cleanſing weeke, beginning our Shroue-ſunday, they make and keepe a great Faſt. It is reported; and the people doe verily beleeue that the Metropolitan neither eateth nor drinketh any manner of thing for the ſpace of ſeuen dayes, and they ſay that there are many Religious men which doe the like. The Emperours Maieſtie eateth but one morſell of bread, and drinketh but one draught of drinke once in the day during that weeke, and all men that are of any reputation come not out of their houſes during that time, ſo that the ſtreets are almoſt voide of companie, ſauing a few poore folkes which wander to and fro. The other ſixe weekes they keepe as we doe ours, but not one of them will eate either Butter, Cheeſe, Egs, or Milke.

On Palme-ſunday they haue a very ſolemne Proceſſion, in this manner following. Firſt, they haue a Tree of a good bigneſſe which is made faſt vpon two Sleds, as though it were growing there, and it is hanged with Apples, Raiſins, Figs, and Dates; and with many other fruits abundantly. In the midſt of the ſame Tree ſtand fiue Boyes in white veſtures, which ſing in the Tree, before the Proceſſion: after this there followed certaine young men with Wax Tapers in their hands burning, and a great Lanthorne that all the light ſhould not goe out: after them followed two with long Banners, and ſixe with round plates ſet vpon long ſtaues: the plates were of Copper very full of holes, and thinne: then followed ſixe, carrying painted Images vpon their ſhoulders, after the Images followed certaine Prieſts, to the number of one hundred or more, with goodly veſtures, whereof ten or twelue are of white Damaske, ſet and embroidered round about with faire and orient Pearles, as great as Peaſe, and among them certaine Saphires and other ſtones. After them followed the one halfe of the Emperours Noblemen: then commeth the Emperours Maieſtie and the Metropolitan, after this manner. Palme-ſunday Proceſſion.

Firſt, there is a Horſe couered with white linnen cloth downe to the ground, his eares being made long with the ſame cloth, like to an Aſſes eares. Vpon this Horſe the Metropolitan ſitteth ſide-long like a woman: in his lappe lieth a faire Booke, with a Crucifixe of Gold-ſmiths worke vpon the couer, which he holdeth faſt with his left hand, and in his right hand he hath a Croſſe of Gold, with which Croſſe he ceaſeth not to bleſſe the people as hee rideth. There are to the number of thirtie men which ſpread abroad their garments before the Horſe, and as ſoone as the Horſe is paſt ouer any of them, they take them vp againe and runne before, and ſpread them againe, ſo that the Horſe doth alway goe on ſome of them. They which ſpread the garments are all Prieſts ſonnes, and for their labours the Emperour giueth vnto them new garments. The Emperor leadeth the Metropolitans Horſe in Proceſſion.

One of the Emperours Noblemen leadeth the Horſe by the head, but the Emperour himſelfe going on foot, leadeth the Horſe by the end of the reyne of his Bridle with one of his hands, and in the other of his hands hee had a branch of a Palme tree: after this followed the reſt of the Emperours Noblemen and Gentlemen, with a great number of other people. In this order they went from one Church to another within the Caſtle, about the diſtance of two flight ſhot: and ſo returned againe to the Emperours Church, where they made an end of their ſeruice. Which being done, the Emperours Maieſtie, and certaine of his Noblemen went to the Metropolitan his houſe to dinner, where of delicate fiſhes and good drinkes there was no lacke. The reſt of this weeke vntill Eaſter day they kept very ſolemnely, continuing in their houſes for the moſt part, and vpon Munday or Thurſday the Emperour doth alwaies vſe to receiue the Sacrament, and ſo doe moſt of his Nobles.

Vpon Good-friday they continue all the day in contemplation and prayers, and they vſe euery yeere on Good-friday to let looſe a Priſoner in the ſtead of Barrabas. The night following they goe to the Church, where they ſleepe vntill the next morning, and at Eaſter they haue the Reſurrection, and after euery of the Lents they eate fleſh the next weeke following, Friday, Saturday and all.

They haue an order at Eaſter, which they alwaies obſerue, and that is this: euery yeere againſt Eaſter to dye or colour red with Brazell a great number of Egges, of which euery man and woman giueth one vnto the Prieſt of their Pariſh vpon Eaſter day in the morning. And moreouer, the common people vſe to carrie in their hands one of their red Egges, not onely vpon Eaſter day, but alſo three or foure dayes after, and Gentlemen and Gentlewomen haue Egges gilded which they carrie in like manner. They vſe it, as they ſay, for a great loue, and in token of the Reſurrection, whereof they reioyce. For when two friends meet during the Eaſter holy Egge offerings.

dayes

Digitized by Google

Kissing vsed in the Greeke Church.

dayes, they come and take one another by the hand: the one of them saith, the Lord or Christ is risen, the other answereth, it is so of a truth, and then they kisse and exchange their Egges both men and women, continuing in kissing foure dayes together.

His Majestie heareth all Complaints himselfe, and with his owne mouth giueth sentence, and judgement of all matters, and that with expedition: but Religious matters hee medleth not withall, but referreth them wholly vnto the Metropolitane. His Majestie retayneth and well rewardeth all strangers that come to serue him, and especially men of Warre. He delighteth not greatly in Hawking, Hunting, or any other pastime, nor in hearing Instruments or Musicke, but setteth all his whole delight vpon two things: First, to serue God, as vndoubtedly hee is very deuout in his Religion, and the second, how to subdue and conquer his enemies.

He hath abundance of Gold and Silver in his owne hands or Treasurie: but the most part of his know not a Crowne from a Counter, nor Gold from Copper, they are so much cumbred therewithall, and he that is worth two, three, or foure Grotes, is a rich man.

Monasteries and Monkes.

They haue both Monkes, Friers, and Nunnes, with a great number of great and rich Monasteries: they keepe great Hospitalitie, and doe releeue much poore people day by day. I haue bin in one of the Monasteries called Troietes, which is walled about with Bricke very strongly like a Castle, and much Ordnance of Brasse vpon the walls of the same. They told mee themselues that there are seuen hundred Brethren of them which belong vnto that House. The most part of the Lands, Townes, and Villages which are within fortie miles of it, belong vnto the same.

Images.

They shewed me the Church, wherein were as many Images as could hang about, or vpon the wals of the Church round about, and euen the Roofe of the Church was painted full of Images. The chiefe Image was of our Ladie, which was garnished with Gold, Rubies, Saphirs, and other rich Stones abundantly. In the midst of the Church stood twelue Waxe Tapers of two yards long, and a fathome about in bignesse, and there stands a Kettle full of Waxe with about one hundred weight, wherein there is alwayes the wieke of a Candle burning, as it were a Lampe which goeth not out day nor night.

Miracles.

They shewed me a Coffin couered with Cloth of Gold, which stood vpon one side within their Church, in which they told me lay a holy man, who neuer eate or dranke, and yet that he liueth. And they told me (supposing that I had beleeued them) that he healeth many Diseases, and giueth the blind their sight, with many other Miracles, but I was hard of beliefe, because I saw him worke no miracle whilst I was there.

Drinkes and Vessels.

After this they brought me into their Sellers, and made me taste of diuers kinds of Drinkes, both Wine and Beere, Meade and Quassie, of sundry colours and kinds. Such abundance of Drinke as they haue in their Sellers, I doe suppose few Princes haue more, or so much at once. Their Barrels or Vessels are of an vnmeasurable bignesse and size: some of them are three yards long and more, and two yards and more broad in their heads: they contayne sixe or seuen tuns apiece: they haue none in their Sellers of their owne making that are lesse then a tunne. They haue nine or ten great vaultes which are full of those Barrels which are seldome remooued: for they haue trunkes which come downe through the Roofe of the vaults in sundry places, through which they powre drinke downe, hauing the Caske right vnder it to receiue the same, for it should be a great trouble to bring it all downe the staires.

The Hospitalitie of their Monasteries.

They giue Bread, Meate, and Drinke vnto all men that come to them, not onely while they are at their Abbey, but also when they depart, to serue them by the way. There are a great number of such Monasteries in the Realme, and the Emperours Majestie rideth oftentimes from one to another of them, and lyeth at them three or foure dayes together.

Monke Merchants.

The same Monkes are as great Merchants as any in the Land of Russia, and doe occupie buying and selling as much as any other men, and haue Boates which passe to and fro in the Riuers with Merchandize from place to place where any of their Countrey doe traffique.

Dyet and Apparell.

They eate no flesh during their liues as it is reported: but vpon Sunday, Munday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, it is lawfull for them to eate Egges, Butter, Cheese, and Milke, and at all times to eate fish, and after this sort they lead their liues. They weare all blacke Garments, and so doe none other in all the Land, but at that Abbey onely.

Want of Preachers cause of great ignorance and Idolatrie.

They haue no Preachers, no not one in all the Land to instruct the people, so that there are many, and the most part of the poore in the Countrey, who if one aske them how many Gods there be, they will say a great many, meaning that euery Image which they haue is a God: for all the Countrey and the Emperours Majestie himselfe will bleese and bow, and knocke their heads before their Images, insomuch that they will cry earnestly vnto their Images to helpe them to the things which they need. All men are bound by their Law to haue those Images in their Houses, and ouer euery gate in all their Townes and Cities are Images set vp, vnto which the people bow and bend, and knocke their heads against the ground before them: as often as they come by any Church or Crosse they doe in like manner. And when they come to any House, they bleese themselues three or foure times before they will salute any man in the House.

They reckon and hold it for great sinne to touch or handle any of their Images within the Circle

Digitized by Google

Circle of the board where the painting is, but they keepe them very daintily, and rich men deck them ouer and about with Gold, Siluer, and Stones, and hang them ouer and about with Cloth of Gold. Sinnes of Superſtition.

The Prieſts are marryed as other men are, and weare all their Garments as other men doe, except their Night-caps, which is cloth of ſome ſad colour, being round and reacheth vnto the eares: their crownes are ſhauen, but the reſt of their haire they let grow, as long as Nature will permit, ſo that it hangeth beneath their eares vpon their ſhoulders: their Beards they neuer ſhaue: if his Wife happen to dye, it is not lawfull for him to marry againe during his life. Prieſts.

They miniſter the Communion with Bread and Wine after our order, but hee breaketh the Bread and putteth it into the Cup vnto the Wine, and commonly ſome are partakers with them: and they take the Bread out againe with a Spoone together with part of the Wine, and ſo take it themſelues, and giue it to others that receiue with them after the ſame manner. They will not permit any Nation but the Greekes to be buried in their ſacred Burials, or Church-yards. All their Churches are full of Images, vnto the which the people when they aſſemble, doe bow and knocke their heads, as I haue before ſaid, that ſome will haue knobs vpon their fore-heads with knocking, as great as Egges. All their ſeruice is in the Ruſſie Tongue, and they and the common people haue no other Prayers but this, Ghoſpods Ieſus Chriſtos eſine voze ponuloi naſhe. That is to ſay, O Lord Ieſus Chriſt, Son of God haue mercie vpon vs: and this is their Prayer, ſo that the moſt part of the vnlearned know neither Puter Noſter, nor the Beliefe, nor Ten Commandements, nor ſcarcely vnderſtand the one halfe of their Seruice which is read in their Churches. Sacraments. All their ſeruice is in their Mother tongue.

When any child is borne, it is not baptized vntill the next Sunday, and if it chance that it be not baptized then, it muſt tarry vntill the ſecond Sunday after the birth, and it is lawfull for them to take as many God-fathers and God-mothers as they will, the more the better.

When they goe to the Church, the Mid-wife goeth foremoſt, carrying the Childe, and the God-fathers and God-mothers follow into the midſt of the Church, where there is a ſmall Table readie ſet, and on it an Earthen Pot full of warme water, about the which the God-fathers and God-mothers, with the Childe, ſettle themſelues: then the Clerke giueth vnto euery of them a ſmall Waxe Candle burning, then commeth the Prieſt, and beginneth to ſay certayne words, which the God-fathers and God-mothers muſt anſwere word for word, among which one is, that the Child ſhall forſake the Deuill, and as that name is pronounced, they muſt all ſpit at the word as often as it is repeated. Then he bleſſeth the water which is in the Pot, and doth breathe ouer it; then he taketh all the Candles which the Goſſips haue, and holding them all in one hand letteth part of them drop into the water, and then giueth euery one his Candle againe, and when the water is ſanctified, he taketh the Child and holdeth it in a ſmall Tub, and one of the God-fathers taketh the Pot with warme water, and powreth it all vpon the Childes head. Baptiſme.

After this he hath many more Ceremonies, as anoynting Eares and Eyes with Spittle, and making certayne Croſſes with Oyle vpon the backe, head, and breſt of the Childe: then taking the Childe in his armes, carryeth it to the Images of Saint Nicholas, and our Ladie, &c. and ſpeaketh vnto the Images, deſiring them to take charge of the Childe, that he may liue, and beleeue as a Chriſtian man or woman ought to doe, with many other words. Then comming backe from the Images, he taketh a paire of ſheares and clippeth the young and tender haires of the Childes head, in three or foure places, and then deliuereth the Childe, whereunto euery of the God-fathers and God-mothers lay a hand: then the Prieſt chargeth them, that the Childe bee brought vp in the faith and feare of God or Chriſt, and that it be inſtructed to clinege, and bow to the Images, and ſo they make an end: then one of the God-fathers muſt hang a Croſſe about the necke of the Childe, which hee muſt alwayes weare, for that Ruſſe which hath not a Croſſe about his necke they eſteeme as no Chriſtian man, and thereupon they ſay that wee are no Chriſtians, becauſe we doe not weare Croſſes as they doe.

Their Matrimonie is nothing ſolemnized, but rather in moſt points abominable, and as neere as I can learne, in this wiſe following. Of their Matrimonie.

Firſt, when there is loue betweene the parties, the man ſendeth vnto the woman a ſmall Cheſt or Boxe, wherein is a Whip, Needles, Threed, Silke, Linnen Cloth, Sheares, and ſuch neceſſaries as ſhe ſhall occupie when ſhe is a Wife, and perhaps ſendeth therewithall Raiſins, Figs, or ſome ſuch things, giuing her to vnderſtand, that if ſhe doe offend, ſhe muſt be beaten with the Whip, and by the Needles, Threed, Cloth, &c. that ſhe ſhould apply her ſelfe diligently to ſew, and doe ſuch things as ſhe could beſt doe, and by the Raiſins or Fruits he meaneth if ſhe doe well, no good thing ſhall bee with-drawne from her, nor bee too deare for her: and ſhee ſendeth vnto him a Shirt, Hand-kerchers, and ſome ſuch things of her owne making. And now to the effect.

When they are agreed, and the day of Marriage appointed, when they ſhall goe towards the Church, the Bride will in no wiſe conſent to goe out of the Houſe, but reſiſteth and ſtriueth with them that would haue her out, and fayneth her ſelfe to weepe, yet in the end, two women get her out, and lead her towards the Church, her face being couered cloſe, becauſe of her diſſimulation, that it ſhould not be openly perceiued: for ſhee maketh a great noyſe, as though ſhe were ſobbing and weeping, vntill ſhe come at the Church, and then her face is vncouered. The man commeth after among other of his friends, and they carrie with them to Church a great Pot of Wine or Meade: then the Prieſt coupleth them together much after our order, one promiſing to loue and ſerue the other during their liues together, &c. which being done, they beginnne to drinke, and firſt the woman drinketh to the man, and when he hath drunke he letteth the cup fall to the ground, haſting immediately to tread vpon it, and ſo doth ſhe, and whether of them tread firſt vpon it, muſt haue the victorie and be Maſter at all times after, which commonly happeneth to the man, for he is readieſt to ſet his foot on it, becauſe he letteth it fall himſelfe, then they goe home againe, the womans face being vncouered. The Boyes in the ſtreets cry out, and make a noyſe in the meane time, with very diſhoneſt words.

Digitized by Google

When they come home, the Wife is ſet at the vpper end of the Table, and the Husband next vnto her: they fall then to drinking till they be all drunke, they perchance haue a Minſtrell or two, and two naked men, which led her from the Church, dance naked a long time before all the company. When they are wearie of drinking, the Bride and the Bridegroome get them to Bed, for it is in the Euening alwayes when any of them are marryed: and when they are going to Bed, the Bridegroome putteth certayne Money, both Gold and Siluer, if he haue it, into one of his Boots, and then ſitteth downe in the Chamber, croſſing his legges, then the Bride muſt pluck off one of his Boots, which ſhe will, and if ſhe happen on the Boot wherein the Money is, ſhee hath not onely the Money for her labour, but is alſo at ſuch choice, as ſhe need not euer from that day forth to pull off his Boots, but if ſhee miſſe the Boot wherein the Money is, ſhe doth not onely loſe the Money, but is alſo bound from that day forwards to pull off his Boots continually.

Then they continue in drinking and making good cheere three dayes following, being accompanied with certayne of their friends, and during the ſame three dayes, he is called a Duke, and ſhe a Dutches, although they be very poore perſons, and this is as much as I haue learned of their Matrimony: but one common rule is amongſt them, if the woman be not beaten with the Whip once a Weeke, ſhe will not be good, and therefore they looke for it orderly, and the women ſay, that if their Husbands did not beate them, they ſhould not loue them.

They vſe to marry there very young, their Sonnes at ſixteeene and eighteene yeares old, and the Daughters at twelue or thirteene yeares or younger: they vſe to keepe their Wiues very cloſely, I meane thoſe that be of any reputation, ſo that a man ſhall not ſee one of them but at a chance, when ſhee goeth to Church at Chriſtmaſſe or at Eaſter, or elſe going to viſit ſome of her friends.

The women of Ruſſia paint their faces.

The moſt part of the women vſe to ride a-ſtride in Saddles with ſtirrops, as men doe, and ſome of them on Sleds, which in Summer is not commendable. The Husband is bound to find the Wife colours to paint her with all, for they vſe ordinarily to paint themſelues: it is ſuch a common practice among them, that it is counted for no ſhame: they greaſe their faces with ſuch colours, that a man may diſcerne them hanging on their faces almoſt a flight ſhoot off: I cannot ſo well liken them as to a Millers Wife, for they looke as though they were beaten about the face with a bagge of Meale, but their Eye-browes they colour as blacke as Ieat. The beſt propertie that the women haue, is that they can ſewe well, and imbroider with Silke and Gold excellently.

Of their Buriall.

When any man or woman dyeth, they ſtretch him out, and put a new paire of ſhooes on his feet, becauſe he hath a great Iourney to goe: then doe they wind him in a ſheet, as wee doe, but they forget not to put a teſtimonie in his right hand, which the Prieſt giueth him, to teſtifie vnto Saint Nicholas that he dyed a Chriſtian man or woman. And they put the Corſe alwayes in a Coffin of Wood, although the partie be very poore: and when they goe towards the Church, the Friends and Kinſmen of the partie departed carrie in their hands ſmall Waxe Candles, and they weepe, and howle, and make much lamentation. They that bee hanged or beheaded, or ſuch like, haue no teſtimonie with them: how they are reciued into Heauen, it is a wonder, without their Paſport.

There are a great number of poore people among them which dye daily for lacke of ſuſtenance, which is a pitifull caſe to behold: for there hath bin buried in a ſmall time, within theſe two yeares, aboue eightie perſons yong and old, which haue dyed onely for lacke of ſuſtenance, for if they had had ſtraw and water enough, they would make ſhift to liue: for a great many are forced in the Winter to dry ſtraw and ſtampe it, and to make bread thereof, or at the leaſt they eate it in ſtead of bread. In the Summer they make good ſhift with graſſe, herbes, and roots: barkes of Trees are good meat with them at all times. There is no people in the World, as I ſuppoſe, that liue ſo miſerably as doe the pouertie in thoſe parts: and the moſt part of them that haue ſufficient for themſelues, and alſo to relieue others that need, are ſo vnmercifull that they care not how many they ſee dye of famine or hunger in the ſtreets.

Bread made of ſtraw.

The vnmercifulneſſe of the Ruſſes toward the poore.

It is a Countrey full of Diſeaſes, diuers, and euill, and the beſt remedie is for any of them, as they hold opinion, to goe often vnto the Hot-houſes, as in a manner euery man hath one of his owne, which he heateth commonly twice euery weeke, and all the houſhold ſweat, and waſh themſelues therein.

Stoues or Baths vſuall with the Moſcouites.

The

Digitized by Google

The first and principall Meade is made of the juyce or liquor taken from a Berrie, called in Russia, Malæno, which is of a maruellous sweet taste, and of a Carmosant colour, which Berrie I haue seene in Paris. The second Meade is called Visnoua, because it is made of a Berrie so called, and is like a blacke Gooseberrie: but it is like in colour and taste to the red Wine of France. The third Meade is called Amarodina or Smorodina, short, of a small Berrie much like to the small Raisin, and groweth in great plentie in Russia. The fourth Meade is called Cherennikyna, which is made of the wild blacke Cherrie. The fift Meade is made of Honey and Water, with other mixtures. There is also a delicate Drinke drawne from the Root of the Birch Tree, called in the Russe Tongue Berozenites, which drinke the Noblemen and others vse in Aprill, May, and Iune, which are the three moneths of the Spring-time: for after those moneths, the sap of the Tree dryeth, and then they cannot haue it. Diuers sorts of Russian Drinkes, reported by Thomas Bulley.

I haue by me a Letter of Master Christopher Hoddesdon, written the seuenteenth of Nouember 1555. wherein he writes, that it seemes, there is no great punishment for breaking their Region, some of them aduenturing to eate Milke with him on a Fasting day, which yet others refused. Yaroslasly (so he cals the Towne where he writ) is fairer then Volga, the Riuer almost a mile broad: he was asked seuen Altines for a Sturgeon, he had giuen at Danske nine Mark-sprace for a worser: neither had he seene such abundance of Ling in England, as there of Sturgeons, there being in that dayes Market, aboue three thousand.

§. IIII.

The Voyage of Master ANTHONIE IENKINSON, made from the Citie of Mosco in Russia, to the Citie of Boghar in Bactria, in the yeare 1558. written by himselfe to the Merchants of London, of the Moscouie Company.

THE three and twentieth day of Aprill, in the yeare 1558. (hauing obtayned the Emperour of Russia his Letters, directed vnto sundry Kings and Princes, by whose Dominions I should passe) departed from Mosco by water, hauing with mee two of your Seruants; namely, Richard Iohnson, and Robert Iohnson, and a Tartar Tolmach, with diuers parcels of Wares, as by the Inuentorie appeareth: and the eight and twentieth day wee came to a Towne, called Collom, distant from the Masco twentie leagues, and passing one league beyond the said Collom, we came vnto a Riuer, called Occa, into the which the Riuer Mosco falleth, and loseth his name: and passing downe the said Riuer Occa eight leagues, wee came vnto a Castle called Terreuettisko, which we left vpon our right hand, and proceeding forward, the second day of May, wee came vnto another Castle, called Peroslaue, distant eight leagues, leauing it also on our right hand. The third day we came vnto the place where old Rezan was situate, being now most of it ruined and ouer-growne, and distant from the said Peroslaue, sixe leagues: the fourth day we passed by a Castle, called Terreconia, from Rezan twelue leagues, and the sixt day we came to another Castle, called Cassim, vnder the gouernment of a Tartar Prince, named Utzar Zegoline, sometime Emperour of the worthy Citie of Cazan, and now subiect vnto the Emperour of Russia. But leauing Cassim on our left hand, the eight day we came vnto a faire Towne, called Morom, from Cassim twentie leagues, where wee tooke the Sunne, and found the latitude fiftie sixe degrees: and proceeding forward the eleuenth day, wee came vnto another faire Towne and Castle, called Nyse Nouogrod, situated at the falling of the foresaid Riuer Occa, into the worthy Riuer of Volga, distant from the said Moron fiue and twentie leagues, in the latitude of fiftie sixe degrees eighteene minutes. From Rezan to this Nyse Nouogrod, on both sides the said Riuer of Occa, is raysed the greatest store of Waxe and Honey in all the Land of Russia. We tarryed at the foresaid Nyse Nouogrod vntill the nineteenth day, for the comming of a Captaine which was sent by the Emperour to rule at Astracan, who being arriued, and hauing the number of fiue hundred great Boates vnder his conduct, some laden with Victuals, Souldiers, and Munition: and other some with Merchandize, departed altogether the said nineteenth day from the said Nyse Nouogrod, and the two and twentieth wee came vnto a Castle, called Vasiliagorod, distant fiue and twentie leagues, which wee left vpon our right hand. This Towne or Castle had his name of this Emperours Father, who was called Vasilius, and Gorod in the Russe Tongue is as much to say, as a Castle, so that Vasiliagorod is to say, Vasilius Castle: and it was the furthest place that the said Emperour conquered from the Tartars. But this present Emperour his Sonne, called Iuan Vasilowich, hath had great good successe in his Warres, both against the Christians, and also the Mahometists, and Gentiles, but especially against the Tartars, inlarging his Empire euen to the Caspian Sea, hauing conquered the famous Riuer of Volga, with all the Countreyes thereabout adjacent. Thus proceeding on our journey, the fiue and twentieth day of May afore-said, Mosco in 55. degrees, 10 minutes.

Occa.

Rezan.

Cassim.

Morom.

Nyse Nouogrod.

Honey and Waxe.

Vasiliagorod.

Digitized by Google

we came to another Caſtle called Sabowſhare, which wee left on our right hand, diſtant from Vaſiliagorod, ſixteene leagues. The Countrey hereabout is called Mordouits, and the Habitants did profeſſe the Law of the Gentiles: but now beeing conquered by this Emperour of Ruſſia, moſt of them are chriſtened, but lye in the Woods and Wilderneſſe, without Towne or Habitation.

Swyaske. The ſeuen and twentieth day we paſſed by another Caſtle, called Swyasko, diſtant from Shabowſhare aforeſaid, twentie fiue leagues: we left it on our right hand, and the nine and twentieth came vnto an Iland one league from the Citie of Cazan, from which falleth downe a Riuer called Cazankareca, and entreth into the foreſaid Volga. Cazan is a faire Towne after the Ruſſe or Tartar faſhion, with a ſtrong Caſtle ſituated vpon a high Hill, and was walled round about with Timber and Earth, but now the Emperour of Ruſſia hath giuen order to plucke downe the olde wals, and to build them againe of free ſtone. It hath beene a Citie of great Wealth and Riches, and being in the hands of the Tartars, it was a Kingdome of it ſelfe, and did more vexe the Ruſſes in their Warres, then any other Nation: but nine yeares paſt, this Emperour of Ruſſia conquered it, and tooke the King captiue, who being but young is now baptized, and brought vp in his Court with two other Princes, which were alſo Kings of the ſaid Cazan, and being each of them in time of their Raignes in danger of their Subiects through ciuill diſcord, came and rendred themſelues at ſeuerall times vnto the ſaid Emperour, ſo that at this preſent there are three Princes in the Court of Ruſſia, which had beene Emperours of the ſaid Cazan, whom the Emperour vſeth with great honour.

Cazan ſtands in 55 degrees 33. minutes.

We remayned at Cazan till the thirteenth day of Iune, and then departed from thence: and the ſame day paſſed by an Iland called the Iland of Merchants, becauſe it was wont to be a place where all Merchants, as well Ruſſes and Cazanites, as Nagayans and Crimmes, and diuers other Nations did reſort to keepe Mart for buying and ſelling, but now it is forſaken, and ſtandeth without any ſuch reſort thither, or at Cazan, or at any place about it, from Moſco vnto Mare Caſpium.

The Iland of Merchants.

Thus proceeding forward, the fourteenth day we paſſed by a goodly riuer called Cama, which we left on our left hand. This Riuer falleth out of the Countrey of Permia into the Riuer of Volga, and is from Cazan fifteene leagues: and the Countrey lying betwixt the ſaid Cazan, and the ſaid Riuer Cama on the left hand of Volga is called Vachen, and the Inhabitants bee Gentiles, and liue in the Wilderneſſe without Houſe or Habitation: and the Countrey on the other ſide of Volga, ouer againſt the ſaid Riuer Cama, is called the Land of Cheremizes, halfe Gentiles, halfe Tartars, and all the Land on the left hand of the ſaid Volga, from the ſaid Riuer vnto Aſtracan, and ſo following the North and North-eaſt ſide of the Caſpian Sea, to a Land of the Tartars called Turkemen, is called the Countrey of Mangat or Nagay, whoſe Inhabitants are of the Law of Mahomet, and were all deſtroyed in the yeare 1558. at my beeing at Aſtracan, through Ciuill Warres among them, accompanied with Famine, Peſtilence, and ſuch Plagues, in ſuch ſort that in the ſaid yeare there were conſumed of the people, in one ſort and another, aboue one hundred thouſand: the like Plague was neuer ſeene in thoſe parts, ſo that the ſaid Countrey of Nagay, being a Countrey of great Paſture, remayneth now vnrepleniſhed to the great contentation of the Ruſſes, who haue had cruell Warres a long time together.

The Riuer of Cama.

Vachen.

Mangat or Nagay Tartars.

The Nagayans when they flouriſhed, liued in this manner: they were diuided into diuers companies called Hords, and euery Hord had a Ruler, whom they obeyed as their King, and was called a Murſe. Towne or Houſe they had none, but liued in the open fields, euery Murſe or King hauing his Hords or people about him, with their Wiues, Children, and Cattell, who hauing conſumed the Paſture in one place, remoued vnto another: and when they remooue they haue Houſes like Tents ſet vpon Waggons or Carts, which are drawne from place to place with Camels, and therein their Wiues, Children, and all their Riches, which is very little, is carried about, and euery man hath at the leaſt foure or fiue Wiues beſides Concubines. Vſe of money they haue none, but doe barter their Cattell for apparell and other neceſſaries. They delight in no Art nor Science, except the Warres, wherein they are expert, but for the moſt part they bee paſturing people, and haue great ſtore of Cattell, which is all their Riches. They eate much fleſh, and eſpecially the Horſe, and they drinke Mares Milke, wherewith they be oftentimes drunke: they are ſeditious and inclined to Theft and Murther. Corne they ſow not, neither doe eate any Bread, mocking the Chriſtians for the ſame, and diſabling our ſtrengths, ſaying, wee liue by eating the top of a Weed, and drinke a Drinke made of the ſame, allowing their great deuouring of fleſh, and drinking of Milke to be the increaſe of their ſtrength. But now to proceed forward to my Iourney.

Hords.

All the Countrey vpon our right hand the Riuer Volga, from ouer againſt the Riuer Cama vnto the Towne of Aſtracan, is the Land of Crimme, whoſe Inhabitants bee alſo of the Law of Mahomet, and liue for the moſt part according to the faſhions of the Nagayes, hauing continuall Warres with the Emperour of Ruſſia, and are valiant in the field, hauing countenance, and ſupport from the great Turke.

The Crimme Tartars.

The ſixteenth day of Iune we paſſed by certayne Fiſhermens Houſes, called Petowſe, twentie leagues leagues from the Riuer Cama, where is great fishing for Sturgeon, so continuing our way vntill the two and twentieth day, and passing by another great Riuer called Samar, which falleth out of the aforesaid Countrey, and runneth through Nagay, and entreth into the said Riuer of Volga. The eight and twentieth day we came vnto a great Hill, where was in times past a Castle made by the Crimmes, but now it is ruined, being the just mid-way betweene the said Cazan and Astrachan, which is two hundred leagues or thereabout, in the latitude of one and fiftie degrees, fortie seuen minutes. Vpon all this shoare groweth abundance of Licoris, whose Root runneth within the ground like a Vine.

The Riuer of Samar.

Licoris in great plentie.

Thus going forward, the sixt day of Iuly we came to a place called Perouolog, so named because in times past the Tartars carried their Boats from Volga, vnto the Riuer Tanais, otherwise called Don, by Land, when they would rob such as passed downe the said Volga to Astracan, and also such as passed downe by the Riuer Tanais, to Asou, Caffa, or any other Towne situated vpon Mare Euxinum, into which Sea Tanais falleth, who hath his Springs in the Countrey of the Rezan, out of a plaine ground. It is at this streight of Perouolog from the one Riuer to the other, two leagues by Land, and is a dangerous place for Theeues and Robbers, but now it is not so euill as it hath beene by reason of the Emperour of Russia his Conquests.

Perouolog. Don or Tanais.

Departing from Perouolog, hauing the Wildernesse on both sides, wee saw a great Heard of Nagayans pasturing, as is abouesaid, by estimation aboue a thousand Camels drawing of Carts with Houses vpon them like Tents, of a strange fashion, seeming to bee afarre off a Towne: that Herd was belonging to a great Murse, called Smille, the greatest Prince in all Nagay, who hath slaine and driuen away all the rest, not sparing his owne Brethren and Children, and hauing peace with this Emperour of Russia, hee hath what hee needeth, and ruleth alone: so that now the Russes liue in peace with the Nagayans, who were wont to haue mortall Warres together.

The fourteenth day of Iuly passing by an old Castle, which was Old Astracan, and leauing it vpon our right hand, we arriued at New Astracan, which this Emperour of Russia conquered sixe yeares past, in the yeare 1552. It is from the Mosco vnto Astracan sixe hundred leagues, or thereabout. The Towne of Astracan is situated in an Iland vpon a Hill side, hauing a Castle within the same, walled about with Earth and Timber, neither faire nor strong: The Towne is also walled about with Earth: the Buildings and Houses (except it be the Captaines Lodging, and certaine other Gentlemens) most base & simple. The Iland is most destitute and barren of wood and pasture, and the ground will beare no Corne: the Aire is there most infected, by reason (as I suppose) of much fish, and specially Sturgeon, by which onely the Inhabitants liue, hauing great scarsitie of flesh and bread. They hang vp their fish in their streets and Houses to dry for their prouision, which causeth such abundance of flyes to increase there, as the like was neuer seene in any Land, to their great Plague. And at my being at the said Astracan, there was a great Famine and Plague among the people, and specially among the Tartars, called Nagayans, who the same time came thither in great numbers to render themselues to the Russes their Enemies, and to seeke succour at their hands, their Countrey being destroyed, as I said before: but they were but ill entertayned or releeued, for there dyed a great number of them for hunger, which lay all the Iland through in heapes dead, and like to beasts vnburied, very pittifull to behold: many of them were also sold by the Russes, and the rest were banished from the Iland. At that time it had beene an easie thing to haue conuerted that wicked Nation to the Christian Faith, if the Russes themselues had beene good Christians: but how should they shew compassion vnto other Nations, when they are not mercifull vnto their owne? At my being there I could haue bought many goodly Tartars Children, if I would haue had a thousand, of their owne Fathers and Mothers, to say, a Boy or a Wench for a Loafe of bread worth sixe pence in England, but we had more need of victuals at that time then of any such Merchandize. This Astracan is the furthest hold that this Emperour of Russia hath conquered of the Tartars towards the Caspian Sea, which he keepeth very strong, sending thither euery yeare prouision of men, and victuals, and Timber to build the Castle.

Astracan.

Store of Sturgeons, & flyes.

Miserable Famine.

There is a certayne Trade of Merchandize there vsed, but as yet so small and beggerly, that it is not worth the making mention, and yet there come Merchants thither from diuers places. The chiefest Commodities that the Russes bring thither are red Hides, red sheeps skinnes, woodden Vessels, Bridles, and Saddles, Knines, and other Trifles, with Corne, Bacon, and other Victuals. The Tartars bring thither diuers kinds of Wares made of Cotton Wooll, with diuers kinds of wrought Silkes: and they that come out of Persia, namely, from Shamacki, doe bring sewing Silke, which is the coursest that they vse in Russeland, Crasso, diuers kinds of pide Silkes for Girdles, Shirts of Male, Bowes, Swords, and such like things: and some yeares Corne, and Wal-nuts, but all such things in such small quantitie, the Merchants being so beggerly and poore that bring the same, that it is not worth the writing, neither is there any hope of Trade in all those parts worth the following.

This foresaid Iland of Astracan is in length twelue leagues, and in breadth three, and lyeth East and West in the latitude of fortie seuen degrees, nine minutes: we tarryed there vntill the ſixt day of Auguſt, and hauing bought and prouided a Boate in company with certayne Tartars and Perſians, wee laded our goods and imbarked our ſelues, and the ſame day departed I, with the ſaid two Iohnſons, hauing the whole charge of the Nauigation downe the ſaid Riuer Volga, beeing very crooked, and full of flats toward the mouth thereof. Wee entred into the Caſpian Sea the tenth day of Auguſt at the Eaſterly ſide of the ſaid Riuer, being twentie leagues from Aſtracan aforeſaid, in the latitude of fortie ſixe degrees, twentie ſeuen minutes.

Digitized by Google

They enter into the Caſpian Sea.

Volga.

Volga hath ſeuentie mouthes or fals into the Sea: and we hauing a large wind, kept the North-eaſt ſhoare, and the eleuenth day we ſayled ſeuen leagues Eaſt North-eaſt, and came vnto an Iland hauing an high Hill therein, called Accurgar, a good Marke in the Sea. From thence Eaſt ten leagues, we fell with another Iland, called Bawhrata, much higher then the other. Within theſe two Ilands to the Northwards, is a great Bay called the Blue Sea. From thence wee ſayled Eaſt and by North ten leagues, and hauing a contrary wind, wee came to an Anchor in a fathome water, and ſo rid vntill the fifteenth day, hauing a great ſtorme at South-eaſt, being a moſt contrary wind, which we rid out. Then the wind came to the North, and wee weighed, and ſet our courſe South-eaſt, and that day ſayled eight leagues.

The Blue Sea.

Thus proceeding forwards, the ſeuenteenth day we loſt ſight of Land, and the ſame day ſayled thirtie leagues, and the eighteenth day twentie leagues winding Eaſt, and fell with a Land called Baughleata, being ſeuentie foure leagues from the mouth of the ſaid Volga, in the latitude of fortie ſixe degrees fiftie foure minutes, the Coaſt lying neereſt Eaſt and by South, and Weſt and by North. At the point of this Iland lyeth buried a holy Prophet, as the Tartars call him, of their Law, where great deuotion is vſed of all ſuch Mahometiſts as doe paſſe that way.

Baughleata being 74. leagues from Volga.

Hondius his Map of Tartaria.

The

Digitized by Google

The nineteenth day the winde being West, and wee winding East South-east, we sayled ten leagues, and passed by a great Riuer called Iaic, which hath his spring in the Land of Siberia, nigh vnto the foresaid Riuer Cama, and runneth through the Land of Nagay, falling into this Mare Caspium. And vp this Riuer one dayes iourney is a Towne called Serachicke, subiect to the foresaid Tartar Prince, called Musa Smille, which is now in friendship with the Emperour of Russia. Heere is no trade of merchandise vsed, for that the people haue no vse of money, and are all Men of warre, and Pasturers of cattell, and giuen much to theft and murther. Thus being at an anchor against this Riuer Iaic, and all our men being on Land, sauing I, who lay sore sicke, and fiue Tartars, whereof one was reputed a holy man, because hee came from Mecca, there came vnto vs a Boat with thirtie men well armed and appointed, who boorded vs, and began to enter into our Barke, and our holy Tartar, called Azy, perceiuing that, asked them what they would haue, and withall made a prayer: with that these Rouers stayed, declaring that they were Gentlemen, banished from their Countrey, and out of liuing, and came to see if there were any Russes, or other Christians (which they call Cuphars) in our Barke: To whom this Azi most stoutly answered, that there were none, auowing the same by great oathes of their Law, (which lightly they will not breake) whom the Rouers beleeued, and vpon his words departed. And so through the fidelitie of that Tartar, I with all my companie and goods were saued, and our men being come on boord, and the wind faire, we departed from that place, and winding East and South-east, that day being the twentieth of August sailed sixteene leagues.

Iaic Riuer.

Serachick.

The one and twentieth day we passed ouer a Bay of sixe leagues broad, and fell with a Cape of Land, hauing two Ilands at the South-east part thereof, being a good marke in the Sea: and doubling the Cape the Land trended North-east, and maketh another Bay, into which falleth the greater Riuer Tem, springing out of the Land of Colmack. The two and twentieth, three and twentieth, and foure and twentieth dayes, we were at anchor. The fiue and twentieth, the winde came faire, and we sayled that day twentie leagues, and passed by an Iland of lowe land, and thereabout are many flats and sands: and to the Northward of this Iland there goeth in a great Bay, but we set off from this Iland, and winded South to come into deepe water, being much troubled with shoalds and flats, and ranne that course ten leagues, then East South-east, twentie leagues, and fell with the maine Land, being full of copped Hills, and passing along the coast twentie leagues, the further we sayled, the higher was the Land.

The Country of Colmack.

The seuen and twentieth day we crossed ouer a Bay, the South shoare being the higher Land, and fell with a high point of Land: and being ouerthwart the Cape, there rose such a storme at the East, that we thought verily we should haue perished: this storme continued three dayes. From this Cape we passed to a Port called Manguslaue. The place where we should haue arriued at the Southermost part of the Caspian Sea, is twelue leagues within a Bay: but we being sore tormented and tossed with this foresaid storme, were driuen vnto another Land on the other side the Bay, ouerthwart the said Manguslaue being very lowe Land, and a place as well for the ill commoditie of the Hauen, as of those brute held people, where neuer Barke nor Boat had before arriued, not liked of vs.

The Port of Manguslaue.

But yet there we sent certaine of our men to Land to talke with the Gouernour and people, as well for our good vsage at their hands, as also for prouision of Camels to carrie our goods from the said Sea side to a place called Sellyzure, being from the place of our landing fiue and twentie dayes iourney. Our Messengers returned with comfortable words and faire promises of all things.

Wherefore the third day of September 1558. we discharged our Barke, and I with my companie were gently entertayned of the Prince, and of his people. But before our departure from thence, we found them to bee a very bad and brutish people, for they ceased not daily to molest vs, either by fighting, stealing, or begging, raysing the price of Horse, and Camels, and Victuals, double that it was wont there to be, and forced vs to buy the water that we drinke: which caused vs to hasten away, and to conclude with them as well for the hire of Camels, as for the price of such as wee bought, with other prouision, according to their owne demand: So that for euery Camels lading, being but foure hundred weight of ours, we agreed to giue three Hides of Russia, and foure wooden dishes, and to the Prince or Gouernour of the said people one ninth, and two seuenths: namely, nine seuerall things, and twice seuen seuerall things: for money they vse none.

They goe on land.

And thus being ready, the fourteenth of September we departed from that place, being a Caruan of a thousand Camels. And hauing trauelled fiue dayes iourney, wee came to another Princes Dominion, and vpon the way there came vnto vs certaine Tartars on horsebacke, being well armed, and seruants vnto the said Prince called Timur Soltan, Gouernour of the said Countrey of Manguslaue, where wee meant to haue arriued and discharged our Barke, if the great storme aforesaid, had not disappointed. These aforesaid Tartars stayed our Caruan in the name of their Prince, and opened our Wares, and tooke such things as they thought best for their said Prince without money, but for such things as they tooke from mee, which was a ninth (after much dissention) I rode vnto the same Prince, and presented my selfe before him, requesting his

The Countrey of Manguslaue It standes in 45.

Digitized by Google

his fauour, and Paſport to trauell thorow his Countrey, and not to be robbed or ſpoyled of his people: which requeſt he granted me, and entertayned me very gently, commanding me to be well feaſted with fleſh and Mares milke: for Bread they vſe none, nor other drinke except water: but money he had none to giue me for ſuch things as he tooke of me, which might be of value in Ruſſe money, fifteene Rubbles, but hee gaue mee his Letter, and a Horſe worth ſeuen Rubbles. And ſo I departed from him being glad that I was gone: for he was reported to bee a very tyrant, and if I had not gone vnto him, I vnderſtood his commandement was, that I ſhould haue beene robbed and deſtroyed.

This Sultan liued in the fields without Caſtle or Towne, and ſate, at my being with him, in a little round houſe made of reeds couered without with Felt, and within with Carpets. There was with him the great Metropolitan of that wilde Countrey, eſteemed of the people, as the Biſhop of Rome is in moſt parts of Europe, with diuers other of his chiefe men. The Sultan with this Metropolitan demanded of mee many queſtions, as well touching our Kingdomes, Lawes, and Religion, as alſo the cauſe of my comming into thoſe parts, with my further pretence. To whom I anſwered concerning all things, as vnto me ſeemed beſt, which they tooke in good part. So hauing leaue I departed, and ouertooke our Caruan, and proceeding on our iourney, and trauelled twentie dayes in the Wilderneſſe from the Sea ſide without ſeeing Town or habitation, carrying prouiſion of victuals with vs for the ſame time, and were driuen by neceſſitie to eate one of my Camels and a Horſe for our part, as other did the like: and during the ſaid twentie dayes we found no water, but ſuch as we drew out of old deepe Wells, being very brackiſh and ſalt, and yet ſomtimes paſſed two or three dayes without the ſame. And the firſt day of October enſuing, we came vnto a Gulfe of the Caſpian Sea againe, where we found the water very freſh and ſweet: at this Gulfe the Cuſtomers of the King of Turkeman met vs, who tooke cuſtome of euery fiue and twentie one, and ſeuen ninths for the ſaid King and his brethren, which being receiued they departed, and we remayned there a day after to refreſh our ſelues.

Twentie dayes trauell in the Wilderneſſe, with ſcarſitie of water.

Another Gulfe of the Caſpian Sea.

Note, that in times paſt there did fall into this Gulfe the great Riuer Oxus, which hath his ſprings in the Mountaines of Paraponiſus in India, and now commeth not ſo farre, but falleth into another Riuer, called Ardock, which runneth toward the North, and conſumeth himſelfe in the ground, paſſing vnder the ground aboue fiue hundred miles, and then iſſueth out againe and falleth into the Lake of Kithay.

Will. de Rubricis deſcribeth this Riuer of Ardok, cap. 4.

We hauing refreſhed our ſelues at the foreſaid Gulfe, departed thence the fourth day of October, and the ſeuenth day arriued at a Caſtle, called Sellizure, where the King, called Azim Can, remayned with three other of his brethren, and the ninth day I was commanded to come before his preſence, to whom I deliuered the Emperours Letters of Ruſſia: and I alſo gaue him a Preſent of a ninth, who entertayned me very well, and cauſed me to eate in his preſence as his brethren did, feaſting me with fleſh of a wilde Horſe, and Mares milke without Bread. And the next day he ſent for me againe, and asked of me diuers queſtions, as well touching the affaires of the Emperour of Ruſſia, as of our Countrey and Lawes, to which I anſwered as I thought good: ſo that at my departure he gaue mee his Letters of ſafe conduct.

Sellizure, or Shayzure.

Letters of ſafe conduct.

The Caſtle of Sellizure is ſituated vpon an high Hill, where the King called the Can lieth, whoſe Palace is built of earth very baſely, and not ſtrong: the people are but poore, and haue little trade of merchandiſe among them. The South part of this Caſtle is low land, but very fruitfull, where growe many good fruits, among which there is one called a Dynie, of a great bigneſſe, and full of moiſture, which the people doe eate after meate in ſtead of drinke. Alſo there growes another fruit, called a Carbuſe, of the bigneſſe of a great Cucumber, yellow, and ſweet as Sugar: alſo a certaine Corne, called Iegur, whoſe ſtalke is much like a Sugar cane, and as high, and the Graine like Rice, which groweth at the top of the cane like a cluſter of Grapes; the water that ſerueth all that Countrey is drawne by ditches out of the Riuer Oxus, vnto the great deſtruction of the ſaid Riuer, for which cauſe it falleth not into the Caſpian Sea, as it hath done in times paſt, and in ſhort time all that Land is like to be deſtroyed, and to become a Wilderneſſe for want of water, when the Riuer of Oxus ſhall faile.

The fourteenth day of the moneth wee departed from this Caſtle of Sellizure, and the ſixteenth of the ſame wee arriued at a Citie called Vrgence, where we payed Cuſtome as well for our owne heads, as for our Camels and Horſes. And hauing there ſoiourned one moneth, attending the time of our further trauell, the King of that Countrey called Aly Sultan, brother to the fore-named Azym Can, returned from a Towne called Coraſan, within the borders of Perſia, which he lately had conquered from the Perſians, with whom hee and the reſt of the Kings of Tertaria haue continuall warres. Before this King alſo I was commanded to come, to whom I likewiſe preſented the Emperours Letters of Ruſſia, and he entertayned me well, and demanded of me diuers queſtions, and at my departure gaue me his Letters of ſafe conduct.

Vrgence, in 42. degr. 18. min.

This Citie or Towne of Vrgence ſtandeth in a plaine ground, with walls of the earth, by eſtimation foure miles about it. The buildings within it are alſo of earth, but ruined and out of good order: it hath one long ſtreet that is couered aboue, which is the place of their Market. It hath beene wonne and loſt foure times within ſeuen yeeres by ciuill warres, by meanes whereof there are

Digitized by Google

are but few Merchants in it, and they very poore, and in all that Towne I could not sell aboue foure Kerseys. The chiefest commodities there sold are such wares as come from Boghar, and out of Persia, but in most small quantitie not worth the writing. All the Land from the Caspian Sea to this Citie of Vrgence, is called the Land of Turkeman, and is subiect to the said Azim Can, and his brethren which bee fiue in number, and one of them hath the name of the chiefe King called Can, but he is little obeyed sauing in his owne Dominion, and where hee dwelleth: for euery one will be King of his owne portion, and one brother seeketh alwaies to destroy another, hauing no naturall loue among them, by reason that they are begotten of diuers women, and commonly they are the children of slaues, either Christians or Gentiles, which the father doth keepe as Concubines, and euery Can or Sultan hath at the least foure or fiue wiues, besides young maidens and boyes, liuing most viciously: and when there are warres betwixt these brethren, (as they are seldome without) he that is ouercome if hee be not slaine, fleeth to the field with such companie of men as will follow him, and there liueth in the Wildernesse, resorting to watering places, and so robbeth and spoyleth as many Carauans of Merchants and others, as they be able to ouercome, continuing in this sort his wicked life, vntill such time as he may get power and aide to inuade some of his brethren againe. From the Caspian Sea vnto the Castle of Sellizare aforesaid, and all the Countries about the said Sea, the people liue without Towne or habitation in the wilde fields, remooving from one place to another in great companies with their Cattell, whereof they haue great store, as Camels, Horses, and Sheepe both tame and wilde. Their sheepe are of great stature with great buttockes, weighing sixtie or eightie pound in weight. There are many wilde Horses which the Tartars doe many times kill with their Hawkes, and that in this order.

The Countrey of Turkemia.

The Hawkes are lured to seize vpon the beasts neckes or heads, which with chasing of themselues, and sore beating of the Hawkes are tyred: then the Hunterr following his game doth slay the Horse with his Arrow or Sword. In all this Land there groweth no grasse, but a certaine brush or heath, whereon the Cattell feeding become very fat.

The Tartars neuer ride without their Bowe, Arrowes, and Sword, although it bee on hawking, or at any other pleasure, and they are good Archers both on horse-backe, and on foot also. These people haue not vse of Gold, Siluer, or any other coyne, but when they lacke apparell or other necessaries, they barter their Cattell for the same. Bread they haue none, for they neither till nor sowe: they be great deuourers of flesh, which they cut in small pieces, and eate it by handfuls most greedily, and especially the Horse flesh. Their chiefest drinke is Mares milke sowred, as I haue said before of the Nagayans, and they will bee drunke with the same. They haue no Riuers nor places of water in this Countrey, vntill you come to the foresaid Gulfe, distant from the place of our landing twentie dayes iourney, except it bee in Wells, the water whereof is saltish, and yet distant the one from the other two dayes iourney and more. They eate their meate vpon the ground, sitting with their legs double vnder them, and so also when they pray. Arte or Science they haue none, but liue most idlely, sitting round in great companies in the fields, deuising, and talking most vainely.

They sixe and twentieth day of Nouember, wee departed from the Towne of Vrgence, and hauing trauelled by the Riuer Oxus one hundred miles, wee passed ouer another great Riuer, called Ardocke, where wee payed a certaine petie custome. This Riuer Ardocke is great, and very swift, falling out of the foresaid Oxus, and passing about one thousand mile to the Northward, it then consumeth it selfe in the ground, and passing vnder the same about fiue hundred miles, issueth out againe, and falleth into the Lake of Kitay, as I haue before declared.

The Riuer of Ardock falleth into the Lake of Kitay.

The seuenth of December following, we arriued at a Castle called Kait, subiect to a Sultan called Saramet Sultan, who meant to haue robbed all the Christians in the Carauan, had it not beene for feare of his brother the King of Vrgence, as we were informed by one of his chiefest Counsellours, who willed vs to make him a present, which he tooke, and deliuered: besides, wee payed at the said Castle for Custome, of euery Camell one red hide of Russia, besides petie gifts to his Officers.

The Castle of Kait.

Thus proceeding in our iourney, the tenth day at night being at rest, and our watch set, there came vnto vs foure Horsemen, which we tooke as Spies, from whom we tooke their weapons, and bound them, and hauing well examined them, they confessed that they had seene the tract of many Horsemen, and no footing of Camels, and gaue vs to vnderstand, that there were Rouers and theeues abroad: for there trauell few people that are true and peaceable in that Countrey, but in companie of Carauan, where there be many Camels: and Horse-feeting new without Camels were to be doubted. Whereupon we consulted and determined amongst our selues, and sent a Poste to the said Sultan of Kaite, who immediatly came himselfe with three hundred men, and met these foure suspected men which wee sent vnto him, and examined them so straightly, and threatned them in such sort, that they confessed, there was a banished Prince with fortie men three dayes iourney forward, who lay in wait to destroy vs, if hee could, and that they themselues were of his companie.

The Sultan therefore vnderstanding, that the Theeues were not many, appointed vs eightie men men well armed with a Captaine to goe with vs, and conduct vs in our way. And the Sultan himſelfe returned backe again, taking the foure theeues with him. Theſe ſouldiers trauelled with vs two dayes, conſuming much of our victuals. And the third day in the morning very early they ſet out before our Carauan, and hauing ranged the wilderneſſe for the ſpace of foure houres, they met vs, comming towards vs as faſt as their horſe could runne, and declared that they had found the tract of horſes not farre from vs, perceiuing well that wee ſhould meete with enemies, and therefore willed vs to appoint our ſelues for them, and asked vs what wee would giue them to conduct vs further, or elſe they would returne. To whom wee offered as we thought good, but they refuſed our offer, and would haue more, and ſo wee not agreeing they departed from vs, and went backe to their Sultan, who (as wee coniectured) was priuie to the conſpiracie. But they being gone, certaine Tartars of our companie called holy men, (becauſe they had beene at Mecca) cauſed the whole Carauan to ſtay, and would make their prayers, and diuine how we ſhould proſper in our iourney, and whether wee ſhould meet with any ill companie or no: To which, our whole Carauan did agree. And they tooke certaine ſheepe and killed them, and tooke the blade bones of the ſame, and firſt ſod them, and then burnt them, and tooke of the bloud of the ſaid ſheepe, and mingled it with the powder of the ſaid bones, and wrote certaine Characters with the ſaid bloud, vſing many other ceremonies and words, and by the ſame diuined and found, that wee ſhould meete with enemies and theeues (to our great trouble) but ſhould ouercome them, to which ſorcerie, I and my companie gaue no credit, but wee found it true: for within three houres after that the ſouldiers departed from vs, which was the fifteenth day of December, in the morning, wee eſcryed farre off diuers horſemen which made towards vs, and we (perceiuing them to bee rouers) gathered our ſelues together, being fortie of vs well appointed, and able to fight, and wee made our prayers together euery one after his Law, profeſſing to liue and dye one with another, and ſo prepared our ſelues. When the theeues were nigh vnto vs, wee perceiued them to be in number thirtie ſeuen men well armed, and appointed with bowes, arrowes, and ſwords, and the Captaine a Prince baniſhed from his Countrey. They willed vs to yeeld our ſelues, or elſe to bee ſlaine, but wee defied them, wherewith they ſhot at vs all at once, and we at them very hotly, and ſo continued our fight from morning vntill two houres within night, diuers men, horſes and camels being wounded and ſlaine on both parts: and had it not beene for foure hand-guns, which I and my companie had and vſed, wee had beene ouercome and deſtroyed: for the theeues were better armed, and were alſo better Archers then wee; But after we had ſlaine diuers of their men and horſes with our Guns, they durſt not approach ſo nigh, which cauſed them to come to a truce with vs vntill the next morning, which wee accepted, and encamped our ſelues vpon a hill, and made the faſhion of a Caſtle, walling it about with packes of wares, and layd our Horſes and Camels within the ſame, to ſaue them from the ſhot of arrowes: and the theeues alſo incamped within an arrow ſhot of vs, but they were betwixt vs and the water, which was to our great diſcomfort, becauſe neither wee nor our Camels had drunke in two dayes before.

Digitized by Google

Diuination by ſorcerie.

Fight with theeues.

Hand-guns very profitable.

Thus keeping good watch, when halfe the night was ſpent, the Prince of the Theeues ſent a meſſenger halfe way vnto vs, requiring to talke with our Captaine, in their tongue, the Carauan Baſha, who anſwered the meſſenger, I will not depart from my companie to goe into the halfe way to talke with thee: but if that thy Prince with all his companie will ſweare by our Law to keepe the truce, then will I ſend a man to talke with thee, or elſe not. Which the Prince vnderſtanding as well himſelfe as his company, ſwore ſo loude that wee might all heare. And then we ſent one of our companie (reputed a holy man) to talke with the ſame meſſenger. The meſſage was pronounced aloude in this order. Our Prince demandeth of the Carauan Baſha, and of all you that bee Buſſarmans, (that is to ſay, Circumciſed) not deſiring your bloods, that you deliuer into his hands as many Caphars, that is, vnbeleeuers (meaning vs the Chriſtians) as are among you with their goods, and in ſo doing, hee will ſuffer you to depart with your goods in quietneſſe, and on the contrarie, you ſhall bee handled with no leſſe cruelty then the Caphars, if hee ouercome you, as hee doubteth not. To the which our Carauan Baſha anſwered, that hee had no Chriſtians in his companie, nor other ſtrangers, but two Turkes which were of their Law; and although hee had, hee would rather dye then deliuer them, and that wee were not afraid of his threatnings, and that ſhould hee know when day appeared. And ſo paſſing in talke, the Theeues (contrary to their oath) carried our holy man away to their Prince, crying with a loude voyce in token of victorie, Ollo, ollo. Wherewith wee were much diſcomforted, fearing that that holy man would betray vs: but he being cruelly handled and much examined, would not to death confeſſe any thing which was to vs preiudiciall, neither touching vs, nor yet what men they had ſlaine and wounded of ours the day before. When the night was ſpent, in the morning wee prepared our ſelues to battell againe: which the theeues perceiuing, required to fall to agreement, and asked much of vs: And to bee briefe, the moſt part of our company being loath to goe to battell againe, and hauing little to loſe, and ſafe conduct to paſſe, wee were compelled to agree, and to giue the theeues twentie ninths (that is to ſay) twentie times nine ſeuerall things, and a Camell to carrie away the ſame, which being receiued, the theeues departed into the Wilderneſſe to their olde habitation,

A holy man.

Buſſarmans, or Muſlemans Caphars.

Fidelitie of an Infidel.

Digitized by Google

habitation, and wee went on our way forward. And that night came to the Riuer Oxus, where wee refreſhed our ſelues, hauing beene three dayes without water and drinke, and tarried there all the next day, making merrie with our ſlaine Horſes and Camels, and then departed from that place, and for feare of meeting with the ſaid theeues againe, or ſuch like, wee left the high way which went along the ſaid Riuer, and paſſed through a wilderneſſe of ſand, and trauelled foure dayes in the ſame before wee came to water: and then came to a Well, the water being very brackiſh, and we then as before were in need of water, and of other victuals, being forced to kill our Horſes and Camels to eate.

The riuer of Oxus.

A wilderneſſe of ſand.

In this wilderneſſe alſo, wee had almoſt fallen into the hands of Theeues: for one night being at reſt, there came certaine ſcouts, and carried away certaine of our men which lay a little ſeparated from the Carauan where with there was a great ſhoute and crie, and we immediatly laded our Camels, and departed being about midnight, and very darke, and droue ſore till we came to the riuer Oxus againe, and then wee feared nothing being walled with the ſaid riuer: and whether it was for that wee had gotten the water, or for that the ſame theeues were farre from vs when the ſcouts diſcouered vs, we know not, but we eſcaped that danger.

So vpon the three & twentieth day of December, we arriued at the Citie of Boghar in the land of Bactria. This Boghar is ſituated in the loweſt part of all the Land, walled about with a high wall of earth, with diuers Gates into the ſame: it is diuided into three partitions, whereof two parts are the Kings, and the third part is for Merchants & Markets, and euery Science hath their dwelling and market by themſelues. The Citie is very great, and the houſes for the moſt part of Earth, but there are alſo many Houſes, Temples, and Monuments of ſtone ſumptuouſly builded, and gilt, and ſpecially Bath-ſtoues ſo artificially built, that the like thereof is not in the world: the manner whereof is too long to rehearſe. There is a little riuer running through the midſt of the ſaid Citie, but the water thereof is moſt vnwholeſome, for it breedeth ſometimes in men that drinke thereof, and eſpecially in them that bee not there borne, a Worme of an ell long, which lyeth commonly in the leg, betwixt the fleſh and the skin, and is pluckt out about the Ancle with great art and cunning, the Surgeons being much practiſed therein, and if ſhee breake in plucking out, the partie dyeth, and euery day ſhe commeth out about an inch, which is rolled vp, and ſo worketh till ſhe bee all out. And yet it is there forbidden to drinke any other thing then water, and Mares milke, and whoſoeuer is found to breake that Law, is whipped and beaten moſt cruelly through the open markets, and there are Officers appointed for the ſame, who haue authoritie to goe into any mans houſe, to ſearch if hee haue either Aquauita, Wine, or Brag, and finding the ſame, doe breake the veſſels, ſpoyle the drinke, and puniſh the maſters of the houſe moſt cruelly; yea, and many times if they perceiue but by the breath of a man that hee hath drunke, without further examination he ſhall not eſcape their hands.

Boghar a Citie of Bactria, in 39. degrees, 10. minutes.

A ſtrange Worme in mens legs.

There is a Metropolitane in this Boghar, who cauſeth this law to be ſo ſtraightly kept: and he is more obeyed then the King, and will depoſe the King, and place another at his will and pleaſure, as hee did by this King that raigned at our being there, and his predeceſſour, by the meanes of the ſaid Metropolitan: for hee betrayed him, and in the night ſlew him in his chamber, who was a Prince that loued all Chriſtians well.

This Countrey of Boghar was ſomtime ſubiect to the Perſians, and doe now ſpeake the Perſian tongue, but yet now it is a Kingdome of it ſelfe, and hath moſt cruell warres continually with the ſaid Perſians about their Religion, although they bee all Mahometiſts. One occaſion of their warres is, for that the Perſians will not cut the hayre of their vpper lips, as the Boghorians and all other Tartars doe, which they account great ſinne, and call them Caphars, that is, vnbeleeuers, as they doe the Chriſtians.

Theſe are of the Ieſelbas Tartars.

The King of Boghar hath no great power or riches, his reuenues are but ſmall, and hee is moſt maintained by the Citie: for he taketh the tenth penie of all things that are there ſold, as well by the Craftſmen as by the Merchants, to the great impoueriſhment of the people, whom hee keepeth in great ſubiection, and when hee lacketh money, he ſendeth his officers to the Shops of the ſaid Merchants, to take their wares to pay his debts, and will haue credit of force, as the like hee did to pay me certaine money that he owed me for nineteene pieces of Kerſey. Their money is ſiluer and copper, for gold their is none currant: they haue but one piece of ſiluer, and that is worth twelue-pence Engliſh, and the copper money are called Pooles, and one hundred and twentie of them goeth to the value of the ſaid twelue-pence, and is more common payment then the ſiluer, which the King cauſeth to riſe and fall to his moſt aduantage euery other moneth, and ſomtimes twiſe a moneth, not caring to oppreſſe his people, for that he looketh not to raigne aboue two or three yeeres, before he bee either ſlaine or driuen away, to the great deſtruction of the Countrey and Merchants.

The Coyne of Boghar.

The twentie ſixth day of the moneth, I was commanded to goe before the ſaid King, to whom I preſented the Emperour of Ruſſia his letters, who entertained vs moſt gently, and cauſed vs to eate in his preſence, and diuers times hee ſent for me, and deuiſed with me familiarly in his ſecret chamber, as well of the power of the Emperour, and the great Turke, as alſo of our Countries, Lawes, and Religion, and cauſed vs to ſhoote in hand-guns before him, and did himſelfe practiſe practise the vse thereof. But after all this great entertainment, before my departure hee shewed himselfe a very Tartar: for he went to the warres owing me money, and saw me not payed before his departure. And although indeed hee gaue order for the same, yet was I very ill satisfied, and forced to rebate part, and to take wares as payment for the rest contrary to my expectation: but of a begger better payment I could not haue, & glad I was so to be payd and dispatched.

Digitized by Google

A very Tartar.

But yet I must needs praise and commend this barbarous King, who immediately after my arriuall at Boghar, hauing vnderstood our trouble with the Theeues, sent one hundred men well armed, and gaue them great charge not to returne before they had either slaine or taken the sayd theeues. Who according to their commission ranged the wildernesse in such sort, that they met with the said companie of Theeues, and slew part, and part fled, and foure they tooke and brought vnto the King, and two of them were sore wounded in our skirmish with our Guns: And after the King had sent for me to come to see them, hee caused them all foure to bee hanged at his Palace gate, because they were Gentlemen, to the example of others. And of such goods as were gotten againe, I had part restored me; and this good Iustice I found at his hands.

The Kings iustice.

There is yeerely great resort of Merchants to this Citie of Boghar, which trauell in great Carauans from the Countries thereabout adioyning, as India, Persia, Balgh, Russia, with diuers others, and in times past from Cathay, when there was passage: but these Merchants are so beggerly and poore, and bring so little quantitie of wares, lying two or three yeeres to sell the same, that there is no hope of any good trade there to be had worthy the following. The chiefe commodities that are brought thither out of these foresaid Countries, are these following.

The Indians doe bring fine Whites, which the Tartars doe all roll about their heads, and all other kindes of Whites, which serue for apparell made of Cotton-woll and Crasca, but Gold, Siluer, precious Stones, and Spices they bring none. I enquired and perceiued that all such trade passeth to the Ocean sea, and the veynes where all such things are gotten are in the subiection of the Portugals. The Indians carrie from Boghar againe wrought Silkes, red Hides, Slaues, and Horses, with such like, but of Kersèis and other cloath, they make little account. I offered to bartar with Merchants of those Countries, which came from the furthest parts of India, euen from the Countrey of Bengala, and the riuer Ganges, to giue them Kersèis for their commodities, but they would not barter for such commoditie as Cloath.

Merchandise of India.

The Persians doe bring thither Craska, Woollen-cloath, Linnen-cloath, diuers kindes of wrought pide Silkes, Argomacks, with such like, and doe carrie from thence red hydes with other Russe wares, and Slaues, which are of diuers Countries, but cloath they will buy none, for that they bring thither themselues, and is brought vnto them as I haue inquired from Aleppo in Syria, and the parts of Turkie. The Russes doe carrie vnto Boghar, red hydes, sheepe skinnes, woollen cloath of diuers sorts, woodden vessels, brydles, saddles, with such like, and doe carrie away from thence diuers kindes of wares made of cotten-woll, diuers kindes of silkes, Crasca, with other things, but there is but small vtterance. From the Countries of Cathay are brought thither in time of peace, and when the way is open, Muske, Rubarbe, Satten, Damaske, with diuers others things. At my being at Boghar, there came Carauans out of all these foresaid Countries, except from Cathay: and the cause why there came none from thence, was the great warres that had dured three yeeres before my comming thither, and yet dured betwixt two great Countries and Cities of Tartars, that are directly in the way betwixt the said Boghar and the said Cathay, and certaine barbarous field people, as well Gentiles as Mahometists bordering to the said Cities. The Cities are called Taskent and Caskar, and the people that warre against Taskent are called Cossacks of the law of Mahomet: and they which warre with the said Countrey of Caskar are called Kings, Gentiles and Idolaters. These two barbarous Nations are of great force, liuing in the fields without Houses or Towne, and haue almost subdued the foresaid Cities, and so stopped vp the way, that it is impossible for any Carauan to passe vnspoyled: so that three yeeres before our being there, no Carauan had gone, or vsed trade betwixt the Countries of Cathay and Boghar, and when the way is cleare, it is nine moneths iourney.

Merchandise of Persia.

Merchandise of Russia.

Merchandise of Cathay.

Wares.

Taskent and Caskar.

To speake of the said Countrey of Cathay, and of such newes as I haue heard thereof, I haue thought it best to reserue it to our meeting. I hauing made my solace at Boghar, in the winter time, and hauing learned by much inquisition, the trade thereof, as also of all the other Countries thereto adioyning, and the time of the yeere being come, for all Carauans to depart, and also the King being gone to the warres, and newes come that hee was fled, and I aduertised by the Metropolitan himselfe, that I should depart, because the Towne was like to bee besieged: I thought it good and meete, to take my iourney some way, and determined to haue gone from thence into Persia, and to haue seene the trade of that Countrey, although I had informed my selfe sufficiently therof, as well at Astracan, as at Boghar: and perceiued well the trades not to be much vnlike the trades of Tartaria: but when I should haue taken my iourney that way, it was let by diuers occasions: the one was, the great warres that did newly begin betwixt the Sophie, and the Kings of Tartaria, whereby the wayes were destroyed: and there was a Carauan destroyed with rouers and theeues, which came out of India and Persia, by safe conduct: and about ten dayes iourney from Boghar, they were robbed, and a great part slaine. Also the Metropolitan of Boghar, who is greater then the King, tooke the Emperours letters of Russia from me, without which I should haue beene taken Slaue in euery place: also all such wares as I had receiued in barter for Cloath, and as I tooke perforce of the King, and other his Nobles, in payment of money due vnto me, were not vendible in Persia: for which causes, and diuers others, I was constrained to come backe againe to Mare Caspium, the same way I went: so that the eight of March, 1559. wee departed out of the said Citie of Boghar, being a Caruan of sixe hundred Camels: and if wee had not departed when we did, I and my companie had beene in danger to haue lost life and goods. For ten dayes after our departure, the King of Samarcand came with an armie, and besieged the said Citie of Boghar, the King being absent, and gone to the warres against another Prince his kinsman, as the like chanceth in those Countries once in two or three yeeres. For it is maruell, if a King raigne there aboue three or foure yeeres, to the great destruction of the Countrey, and Merchants.

Carauan destroyed.

tan

Digitized by Google

He returneth the eight of March, 1559.

Samarcand.

The fiue and twentieth of March, we came to the foresaid Towne of Vrgence, and escaped the danger of foure hundred rouers, which lay in wayte for vs backe againe, being the most of them of kindred to that companie of theeues, which wee met with going foorth, as we perceiued by foure spyes, which were taken. There were in my companie, and committed to my charge, two Ambassadors, the one from the King of Boghar, the other from the King of Balke, and were sent vnto the Emperour of Russia. And after hauing tarried at Vrgence, and the Castle of Sellysure, eight dayes for the assembling, and making ready our Caruan, the second of Aprill wee departed from thence, hauing foure moe Ambassadours in our companie, sent from the King of Vrgence, and other Sultans, his brethren, vnto the Emperour of Russia, with answer of such Letters as I brought them: and the same Ambassadours were also committed vnto my charge by the said Kings and Princes: to whom I promised most faithfully, and swore by our Law, that they should bee well vsed in Rusland, and suffered to depart from thence againe in safetie, according as the Emperour had written also in his letters: for they somewhat doubted, because there had none gone out of Tartaria into Russia, of long time before.

Vrgence.

The King of Balke, or Balgh.

The three and twentieth of Aprill, wee arriued at the Mare Caspium againe, where we found our Barke which wee came in, but neither Anchor, Cable, Cocke, nor Sayle: neuertheless we brought Hempe with vs, and spun a Cable our selues, with the rest of our tackling, and made vs a sayle of cloath of Cotton-wooll, and rigged our Barke as well as wee could, but boate or anchor we had none. In the meane time being deuising to make an anchor of wood of a Cart-wheele, there arriued a Barke, which came from Astracan, with Tartars and Russes, which had two Anchors, with whom I agreed for the one: and thus being in a readinesse, wee set sayle and departed, I, and the two Iohnsons, being Master and Mariners our selues, hauing in our Barke the said sixe Ambassadours, and twentie fiue Russes, which had beene Slaues a long time in Tartaria, nor euer had before my comming, libertie, or meanes to get home, and these Slaues serued to row when need was. Thus sayling sometimes along the coast, and sometimes out of sight of land. The thirteenth day of May, hauing a contrary winde, we came to an anchor, being three leagues from the shoare, and there arose a sore storme, which continued fortie foure houres, and our cable being of our owne spinning, brake, and lost our anchor, and being off a lee shoare, and hauing no boate to helpe vs, wee hoysed our sayle, and bare roomer with the said shoare, looking for present death: but as God prouided for vs, we ranne into a creeke full of Oze, and so saued our selues with our Barke, and liued in great discomfort for a time. For although wee should haue escaped with our liues the danger of the sea, yet if our barke had perished, we knew we should haue been either destroyed, or taken slaues by the people of that Countrey, who liue wildly in the field, like beasts, without house or habitation. Thus when the storme was seased, wee went out of the creeke againe: and hauing set the land with our Compasse, and taken certayn markes of the same, during the time of the tempest, whilest we rid at our anchor, wee went directly to the place where we rid, with our Barke againe, and found our anchor which we lost: whereat the Tartars much maruelled, how we did it. While wee were in the creeke, we made an anchor of wood of Cart wheeles, which we had in our Barke, which we threw away, when we had found our Iron anchor againe. Within two dayes after, there arose another great storme, at the North-east, and we lay a trie, being driuen farre into the sea, and had much adoe to keepe our Barke from sinking, the billow was so great: but at the last, hauing faire weather, wee tooke the Sunne, and knowing how the Land lay from vs, we fell with the Riuer Taik, according to our desire, whereof the Tartars were very glad, fearing that wee should haue beene driuen to the coast of Persia, whose people were vnto them great enemies.

The Caspian sea.

Woodden anchor.

Dangerous tempest, and vse of the Compasse.

Taik.

Note, that during the time of our Nauigation, we set vp the red Crosse of Saint George in our flagges, for honour of the Christians, which I supposed was neuer seene in the Caspian sea before. Wee passed in this voyage diuers fortunes: notwithstanding, the eight and twentieth of May we arriued in safetie at Astracan, and there remayned till the tenth of Iune following, as well to prepare vs small Boates, to goe vp against the streame of Volga, with our goods, as also for the companie of the Ambassadours of Tartarie, committed vnto me, to be brought to the presence of the Emperour of Russia.

The English flag in the Caspian sea, the Country thereof is in 46. deg.

Digitized by Google

This Caſpian ſea (to ſay ſomething of it) is in length about two hundred leagues, and in breadth one hundred and fiftie, without any iſſue to other Seas: to the Eaſt part wherof, ioyneth the great deſart Countrey of the Tartars, called Turkemen: to the Weſt, the Countries of the Chyrcaſſes, the Mountaines of Caucaſus, and the Mare Euxinum, which is from the ſaid Caſpian Sea, a hundred leagues. To the North is the riuer Volga, and the land of Nagay, and to the South part ioyne the Countries of Media and Perſia. This Sea is freſh water in many places, and in other places as ſalt as our great Ocean: It hath many goodly Riuers falling into it, and it auoydeth not it ſelfe except it bee vnder ground. The notable Riuers that fall into it, are firſt the great Riuer of Volga, called in the Tartar tongue Edell, which ſpringeth out of a lake in a marriſh or plaine ground, not farre from the Citie of Nouogrode in Ruſſia, and it is from the ſpring to the Sea, aboue two thouſand Engliſh miles. It hath diuers other goodly Riuers falling into it, as out of Siberia, Yaic, and Yem: Alſo out of the mountaines of Caucaſus, the Riuers of Cyrus and Araſh, and diuers others.

A notable deſcription of the Caſpian ſea.

As touching the trade of Shamakie in Media and Tebris, with other Townes in Perſia, I haue enquired, and doe well vnderſtand, that it is euen like to the trades of Tartaria, that is little vtterance, and ſmall profite: and I haue beene aduertiſed that the chiefe trade of Perſia is into Syria, and ſo tranſported into the Leuant ſea. The few ſhips vpon the Caſpian Seas, the want of Mart and port Townes, the pouertie of the people, and the Ice, maketh that trade naught.

Aſtracan in 47. deg. 9. minuts.

At Aſtracan there were Merchants of Shamakie, with whom I offered to barter, and to giue them Kerſies for their wares, but they would not, ſaying, they had them as good cheape in their Countrey, as I offered them, which was ſixe rubbles for a Kerſie, that I asked: and while I was at Boghar, there were brought thither out of Perſia, Cloath, and diuers commodities of our Countries, which was ſold as good cheape, as I might ſell ours.

The tenth day of Iune, wee departed from Aſtracan towards the Moſco, hauing an hundred gunners in our companie at the Emperours charges, for the ſafe conduct of the Tartar Ambaſſadours and me. And the eight and twentieth day of Iuly following, we arriued at the Citie of Cazan, hauing been vpon the way from Aſtracan thither, ſixe weekes and more, without any refreſhing of victuals: for in all that way there is no habitation.

Cazan is in 55. deg. 33. min.

The ſeuenth of Auguſt following, wee departed from Cazan, and tranſported our goods by water, as farre as the Citie of Morum, and then by land: ſo that the ſecond of September, wee arriued at the Citie of the Moſco, and the fourth day I came before the Emperours Maieſtie, kiſſed his hand, and preſented him a white Cowes tayle of Cathay, and a Drum of Tartaria, which hee well accepted. Alſo I brought before him all the Ambaſſadours that were committed to my charge, with all the Ruſſe ſlaues: and that day I dined in his Maieſties preſence, and at dinner, his Grace ſent me meate by a Duke, and asked me diuers queſtions touching the Lands and Countries where I had beene. And thus I remayned at the Moſco about your affaires, vntill the ſeuenteenth day of Februarie that your wares were ſent downe: and then hauing licence of the Emperours Maieſtie to depart, the one and twentieth day I came to your houſe to Vologhda, and there remayned vntill the breaking vp of the yeere: and then hauing ſeene all your goods laden into your Boates, I departed with the ſame, and arriued withall in ſafetie at Colmogro, the ninth of May 1560. And heere I ceaſe for this time, intreating you to beare with this my large diſcourſe, which by reaſon of the varietie of matter, I could make no ſhorter, and I beſeech God to proſper all your attempts.

His arriuall at Moſco the ſecond of September.

I haue certaine notes which ſeeme to haue beene written at Boghar by ſome of Maſter Ienkinſons companie: which containe intelligences there receiued touching Cathay and the wayes thither. But I hope thereof in that which followes to giue better intelligense. It is there ſaid that the people of Comoron are very beautifull, and that they vſe Kniues and Forkes of gold and ſiluer to eate their meate, not touching it with their hands: that the Muſk-beaſt is as big as a Hound. In Teray they worſhip the Fire, which is thirtie foure dayes iourney from Cathay. At Caſcar is reſident the Can. From Caſcar to Cocheke is foure weekes; it is the firſt Land of the Emperour of Cathay: and then to Camche fiue dayes by land, and to Cataio eight weekes. In this laſt iourney is plentie of all things: both Horſe to bee had, and Women at too eaſie rate, &c. which as newes to them I haue heere touched, rather then related.

See more certaintie in Goes.

I haue alſo by me, the laſt Will of Gabriel Willoughbie, kinſman to that honourable Martyr of Engliſh Northerne Diſcouerie Sir Hugh Willoughbie, mentioned in the beginning of this Chapter, and ſubſcribed with his Name, the worth whereof hath cauſed heere alſo this ſubſcription. It was found in the Ship where they were frozen.

Memoriall of Sir Hugh Willoughbie.

Digitized by Google

§. V.

*Aduertisements and reports of the sixth * Voyage into the parts of* Persia and Media, gathered out of sundry Letters written by CHRISTOPHER BVRROVGH; and more especially a voyage ouer the Caspian Sea, and their shipwracke and miseries there endured by the Ice.

* The other voyages are in Master Hakluyt, this I haue for Tartaria and the Caspian sea brought hither.

FIrst it is to bee vnderstood, that the ships for the voyage to Saint Nicholas in Russia, in which the Factors and merchandise for the Persian voyage were transported, departed from Gravesend the nineteenth of Iune, 1579. which arriued at Saint Nicholas in Russia, the two and twentieth of Iuly, where the Factors and Merchants landed, and the merchandise discharged and laden into Doshnikes, that is, barkes of the Countrey, to be carried from thence vp by Riuer vnto Vologda. And the fiue and twentieth day of the said Iuly, the Doshnikes departed from Rose Iland by Saint Nicholas vp the riuer Dwina Peremene, that is to say in poste, by continuall sayling, rowing, setting with poles, or drawing of men, which came to Colmogro the seuen and twentieth day, and departed thence the nine and twentieth of Iuly vp the said riuer Dwina, and came to Vstyoug (which is at the head of the riuer Dwina, and mouth of Sughano) the ninth of August, where they stayed but a small time, prouiding some victuals, and shifting certaine of their Cossacks or Barkmen, and so departed thence the same day vp the Sughano, and came to Totma (which is counted somewhat more then halfe the way from Vstyoug) the fifteenth day, where they shifted some of their Cossacks, and departed thence the same day, and came to the Citie Vologda the nineteenth of August, where they landed their goods, and stayed at that place till the thirtieth of the same. Hauing prouided at Vologda, Telegas or Waggons, whereupon they laded their goods, they departed thence with the same by land towards Yeraslaue, the said thirtieth of August at eight of the clocke in the morning, and came to the East side of the riuer Volga, ouer against Yeraslaue, with fiue and twentie Telegas laden with the said goods, the seuenth of September at fiue of the clocke afternoone. Then the three stroogs or barkes, prouided to transport the said goods to Astracan, (where they should meete the ship that should carrie the same from thence into Persia) came ouer from Yeraslaue vnto the same side of the riuer Volga, & there tooke in the said goods. And hauing prepared the said Barks ready with all necessarie furniture, they departed with them from Yeraslaue down the riuer of Volga, on the fourteenth day of September at nine of the clocke in the morning, and they arriued at Niznouogrod the seuenteenth day at three of the clocke afternoone, where they shewed the Emperours letters to passe free without paying any custome, and tarried there about three houres to prouide necessaries, and then departing, arriued at Cazan (or neere the same Towne) on the two and twentieth of September at fiue of the clocke afternoone, where (through contrary windes, and for prouiding new Cossacks in the places of some that there went from them) they remayned till the sixe and twentieth day, at what time they departed thence about two of the clocke after noone, and arriued at Tetushagorod, which is on the Crim side of Volga, and in latitude 55. degrees 22. minutes, the eight and twentieth day at ten in the forenoone, where they anchored, and remained about three houres, and departing thence came to Oneak, which is on the Crims side (on the Westerne side of Volga) the fift of October about fiue of the clocke in the morning. This place is accounted halfe the way betweene Cazan and Astracan: and heere there groweth great store of Liquoris: the soyle is very fruitfull: they found there Apple-trees, and Cherrie-trees. The latitude of Oneak is 51. degrees 30. minuts. At this place had beene a very faire stone Castle called by the name Oneak, and adioyning to the same was a Towne called by the Russes, Sodom: this Towne and part of the Castle (by report of the Russes) was swallowed into the earth by the iustice of God, for the wicked nesse of the people that inhabited the same. There remayneth at this day to be seene a part of the ruines of the Castle, and certaine Tombes, wherein as it seemeth haue beene layd noble personages: for vpon a tombe stone might be perceiued the forme of a Horse and a man sitting on it with a Bow in his hand, and Arrowes girt to his side: there was a piece of a Scutchion also vpon one of the stones, which had characters grauen on it, whereof some part had been consumed with the weather, and the rest left vnperfect: but by the forme of them that remained, we iudged them to be characters of Armenia: and other characters were grauen also vpon another tombe stone. Now they departed from Oneak the said fift of October at fiue of the clocke after noone, and came to Perauolok the tenth day about eleuen or twelue of the clocke that night, making no abode at that place, but passed alongst by it. This word Perauolok in the Russe tongue doth signifie a narrow straight or necke of land between two waters, and it is so called by them, because from the riuer Volga, at that place, to the riuer Don or Tanais, is counted thirtie verst, or as much as a man may well trauell on foot in one day. And seuen verst beneath, vpon an Iland called Tsaritsna, the Emperour of Russia hath fiftie Gunners all Summer time to keepe watch, called by the Tartar name Carawool. Betweene this place and Astracan are fiue other Carawools or watches.

Saint Nicholas.
Colmogro.
Vstyoug.
Yeraslaue.
Niznouogrod.
Cazan.
Great store of Liquoris.
Sodom.
Strange iudgement.
Perauolok.
Tsaritsna.

Digitized by Google

The Firſt is named Kameni Carawool, and is diſtant from Peranolok one hundred and twentie verſtes. The ſecond named Stupino Carowool, diſtant from the firſt fiftie verſtes. The third called Polooy Carowool, is one hundred and twentie verſtes diſtant from the ſecond. The fourth named Keezeyur Carawool, is fiftie verſtes diſtant from the third. The fift named Ichkebre, is thirtie verſtes diſtant from the fourth, and from Ichkebre to Aſtracan is thirtie verſtes.

Ice at Aſtracan for foure moneths.

The ſixteenth of October they arriued at Aſtracan. The ninteenth of Nouember the winde being northerly, there was a great froſt, and much Ice in the Riuer: the next day being the twentieth of Nouember, the Ice ſtood in the Riuer, and ſo continued vntill Eaſter day.

The ſixth of Ianuarie being Twelfe day (which they call Chreſhenia) the Ruſſes of Aſtracan brake a hole in the Ice vpon the Riuer Volga, and hallowed the water with great ſolemnitie, according to the manner of their Countrey, at which time all the Souldiers of the Towne ſhot off their ſmall Peeces vpon the Ice, and likewiſe to gratifie the Captaine of the Caſtle, being a Duke, whoſe name is Pheodor Michalouich Troiocouria, who ſtood hard by the ſhip, beholding them as they were on the Riuer, was ſhot off all the Ordnance of our ſhip being fifteene Peeces, viz. two Faulcons, two Faulconets, foure Fowlers, foure Fowlers Chambers, and three other ſmall Peeces made for the Stroogs to ſhoot Haile-ſtones, and afterwards the great Ordnance of the Caſtle was ſhot off.

An Eclipſe.

On the one and thirtieth of Ianuarie there happened a great Eclipſe of the Moone, which began about twelue of the clocke at night, and continued before ſhee was cleere an houre and an halfe by eſtimation, which ended the firſt of Februarie about halfe an houre paſt one in the morning: ſhee was wholly darkned by the ſpace of halfe an houre.

The variation of the Compaſſe in Aſtracan, was 13. degrees 40. min.

The ſeuenteenth of Aprill, the variation of the Compaſſe obſerued in Aſtracan, was 13. degrees 40. minutes from North to Weſt. This Spring there came newes to Aſtracan, that the Queene of Perſia (the King being blind) had beene with a great Armie againſt the Turkes that were left to poſſeſſe Media, and had giuen them a great ouerthrow: yet notwithſtanding Derbent, and the greateſt part of Media were ſtill poſſeſſed and kept by the Turkes. The Factors of the Companie conſulting vpon their affaires, determined to leaue at Aſtracan the one halfe of their goods with Arthur Edwards, and with the other halfe, the other three Factors would proceed in the ſhip on their purpoſed Voyage to the coaſt of Media, to ſee what might bee done there: where, if they could not finde ſafe trafficke, they determined to proceed to the coaſt of Gilan, which is a Prouince neere the Caſpian Sea bordering vpon Perſia: and thereupon appointed the ſaid goods to be laden aboord the ſhip, and tooke into her alſo ſome merchandiſe of Tiſiks or Perſian Merchants.

Gilan.

The ſecond of May they weighed, and plyed downe the Riuer Volga, toward the Caſpian Sea. The ſeuenth of May in the morning, they paſſed by a Tree that ſtandeth on the left hand of the Riuer as they went downe, which is called Mahomet Agatch, or Mahomets Tree, and about three verſtes further, that is to ſay, to the Southwards of the ſaid Tree, is a place called Vchoog, that is to ſay, The Ruſſe Weare: (but Ochoog is the name of a Weare in the Tartar tongue) where are certaine Cotages, and the Emperour hath lying at that place certaine Gunners to guard his Fiſher-men that keepe the Weare. This Vchoog is counted from Aſtracan ſixty verſtes: they proceeded downe the ſaid Riuer without ſtaying at the Vchoog. The ninth and tenth dayes they met with ſhallow water, and were forced to lighten their ſhip by the Panos: The eleuenth day they ſent backe to the Vchoog for an other Panos: This day by miſchance the ſhip was bilged on the grapnell of the Panos, whereby the companie had ſuſtayned great loſſes, if the chiefeſt part of their goods had not beene layd into the Panos: for notwithſtanding their pumping with three Pumps, heauing out water with Buckets, and all the beſt ſhifts they could make, the ſhip was halfe full of water ere the leake could be found and ſtopt. The twelfth day the Panos came to them from the Vchoog, whereby they lighted the ſhip of all the goods. The thirteenth day in the morning there came to them a ſmall Boat, ſent by the Captaine of Aſtracan, to learne whether the ſhip were at Sea cleare off the flats. The fifteenth day by great induſtrie and trauell they got their ſhip cleare off the ſhoales and flats, wherewith they had beene troubled from the ninth day vntill then: they were forced to paſſe their ſhip in three foot water or leſſe. The ſixteenth day they came to the Chetera Bougori, or Iland of foure Hillockes, which are counted fortie verſtes from Vchoog, and are the furtheſt Land towards the Sea. The ſeuenteenth day they bare off into the Sea, and being about twelue verſtes from the Foure hillockes, riding in fiue foot and a halfe water about eleuen of the clocke in the fore-noone, they tooke their goods out of the Panoſes into the ſhip, and filled their ſhip with all things neceſſarie. The eighteenth day in the morning about ſeuen of the clocke, the Panoſes being diſcharged departed away towards Aſtracan, the winde then at South-eaſt, they rode ſtill with the ſhip, and obſeruing the eleuation of the Pole at that place, found it to be 45. degrees 20. minutes. The nineteenth day, the winde South-eaſt, they rode ſtill. The twentieth day, the winde at North-weſt, they ſet ſayle about one of the clocke in the morning, and ſteered thence South by Weſt, and South South-weſt, about three leagues, and then anchored in ſixe foot and a halfe water, about Vchoog.

Shallow water.

Flats.

Chetera Bougori.

The Caſpian Sea.

45. deg. 20. minutes.

The firſt obſeruation in the Caſpian Sea.

Digitized by Google

bout nine of the clocke before noone, at which time it fell calme: the eleuation of the Pole at that place 45. degrees 13. minutes. The one and twentieth, hauing the winde at North-weſt, they ſet ſayle, and ſteered thence South by Weſt, and South vntill eleuen of the clocke, and had then nine foote water: and at noone they obſerued the latitude, and found it to bee 44. degrees 47. minutes: then had they three fathoms and a halfe water, being cleare off the flats. It is counted from the Foure hillockes to the Sea about fiftie verſtes. From the ſaid noone-tide vntill foure of the clocke, they ſayled South by Eaſt fiue leagues and a halfe: then had they fiue fathoms and a halfe, and brackiſh water: from that till twelue at night they ſayled South by Eaſt halfe a league, Eaſt ten leagues: then had they eleuen fathoms, and the water ſalter. From that till the two and twentieth day three of the clocke in the morning, they ſayled three and fiftie leagues, then had they ſixteene fathoms water: from thence they ſayled vntill noone South and by Weſt ſeuen leagues and a halfe, the latitude then obſerued 43. degrees 15. minutes, the depth then eight and twentie fathoms, and ſhallow ground: from that vntill eight of the clocke at night, they ſayled South by Eaſt fiue leagues and a halfe, then had they three and fortie fathoms ſhallow ground. From thence till the three and twentieth at foure of the clocke in the morning, they ſayled South South-weſt three leagues and a halfe: then could they get no ground in two and fiftie fathoms deepe. From thence vntill noone they ſayled South nine leagues, then the latitude obſerued, was 42. degrees 20. minutes. From that till the foure and twentieth day at noone, they ſayled South by Weſt ſeuenteene leagues and a halfe, then the latitude obſerued, was one and fortie degrees two and thirtie minutes. From noone till ſeuen of the clocke at night, they ſayled South South-weſt foure leagues, then had they perfect ſight of high Land or Hills, which were almoſt couered with Snow, and the midſt of them were Weſt from the ſhip, being then about twelue leagues from the neereſt Land: they ſounded but could finde no ground in two hundred fathoms. From thence they ſayled South-weſt vntill mid-night: about three leagues from thence till the fiue and twentieth day, foure of the clocke in the morning, they ſayled Weſt three leagues, being then little winde, and neere the Land, they tooke in their ſayles, and lay hulling: at noone the latitude obſerued, was 40. degrees 54. minutes: they ſounded but could get no ground in two hundred fathoms. At foure of the clocke in the after-noone, the winde North-weſt, they ſet their ſayles: and from thence till the ſixe and twentieth day at noone, they ſayled Eaſt South-eaſt foure leagues. From thence they ſayled till eight of the clocke at night South-weſt three leagues, the winde then at North. From thence they ſayled vntill the ſeuen and twentieth day two of the clocke in the morning, Weſt South-weſt eight leagues, the winde blowing at North very much. From the ſaid two till foure of the clocke, they ſayled South by Weſt one league: then being day light, they ſaw the Land plaine, which was not paſt three leagues from them, being very high ragged Land. There were certaine Rockes that lay farre off into the Sea, about fiue leagues from the ſame Land, (which are called Barmake Taſh) they ſayled betweene thoſe Rockes and the Land, and about fiue of the clocke they paſſed by the Port Bilbill, where they ſhould haue put in but could not: and bearing long the ſhoare about two of the clocke after noone, they came to Bildih in the Countrey of Media or Sheruan, againſt which place they anchored in nine foot water. Preſently after they were at anchor, there came aboord of them a Boat, wherein were ſeuen or eight perſons, two Turkes, the reſt Perſians, the Turkes vaſſals, which bade them welcome and ſeemed to be glad of their arriuall, who told the Factors that the Turke had conquered all Media, or the Countrey Sheruan, and how that the Turkes Baſha remayned in Derbent with a Garriſon of Turkes, and that Shamaky was wholly ſpoyled, and had few or no Inhabitants left in it. The Factors then being deſirous to come to the ſpeech of the Baſha, ſent one of the Tiſikes (or Merchants that went ouer with them from Aſtracan, paſſingers) and one of the Companies ſeruants Robert Golding, with thoſe Souldiers, to the Captaine of Bachu, which place ſtandeth hard by the Sea, to certifie him of their arriuall, and what commodities they had brought, and to deſire friendſhip to haue quiet and ſafe trafficke for the ſame. Bachu is from Bildih, the place where they rode, about a dayes iourney, on foot eaſily to be trauelled, which may be ſixe leagues the next way ouer Land: it is a walled Towne, and ſtrongly fortified. When the ſaid Meſſenger came to the Captaine of Bachu, the ſaid Captaine gaue him very friendly entertaynement.

Brackiſh water farre within the Sea.

43. degrees 15. minutes.

41. degrees 32. minutes.

40. degrees 54. minutes.

Bilbill.

Bachu Port.

In the morning very early, hee ſent Horſe for the reſt of the companie which ſhould goe to Derbent, ſending by them that went, ten Sheepe for the ſhip. Whileſt they were at breakfaſt, Maſter Turnbull, Maſter Tailboyes, and Thomas Hudſon the Maſter of the ſhip, came thither, and when they had all broken their faſts, they went to Bachu. And from Bachu they proceeded towards Derbent, as it was by the Captaine promiſed, being accompanied on their way for their ſafe conduct, with a Gentleman, and certaine Souldiers, which had the Captaine of Bachu his Letters to the Baſha of Derbent, very friendly written in their behalfe. In their iourney to Derbent they forſooke the ordinarie wayes, being very dangerous, and trauelled thorow Woods till they came almoſt to the Towne of Derbent: and then the Gentleman rode before with the Captaines Letters to the Baſha, to certifie him of the Engliſh Merchants comming, who receiuing the Letters, and vnderſtanding the matter, was very glad of the newes, and ſent forth to re-

Digitized by Google

The receiuing of the English into Derbent.

ceiue them certaine Souldiers Gunners, who met them about two miles out of the Towne, saluting them with great reuerence, and afterwards rode before them: then againe met them other Souldiers, somewhat neerer the Castle, which likewise hauing done their salutations rode before them, and then came forth Noblemen, Captaines, and Gentlemen, to receiue them into the Castle and Towne. As they entred the Castle, there was a shot of twentie Peeces of great Ordnance, and the Bashaw sent Master Turnbull a very faire Horse with furniture to mount on, esteemed to be worth an hundred Markes, and so they were conuayed to his presence: who after he had talked with them, sent for a Coat of cloth of Gold, and caused it to be put on Master Turnbuls backe, and then willed them all to depart, and take their ease, for that they were wearie of their iourney, and on the morrow he would talke further with them. The next day when the Factors came againe to the presence of the Bashaw, according to his appointment, they requested him that he would grant them his priuiledge, whereby they might trafficke safely in any part and place of his Countrey, offering him, that if it pleased his Maiestie to haue any of the commodities that they had brought, and to write his minde thereof to the Captaine of Bachu, it should be deliuered him accordingly. The Bashaes answere was, that he would willingly giue them his priuiledge: yet for that he regarded their safety, hauing come so farre, and knowing the state of his Countrey to be troublesome, he would haue them to bring their commoditie thither, and there to make sale of it, promising he would prouide such commodities as they needed, and that he would be a defence vnto them, so that they should not be iniured by any: whereupon the Factors sent Thomas Hudson backe for the ship to bring her to Derbent. The latitude of Bildih by diuers obseruations is 40.deg.25.m. the variation of the Compas 10.deg.40.min. from North to West. They arriued at anchor against Derbent East and by South from the said Castle in foure fathom & a halfe water, the two and twentieth of Iune, at ten of the clock in the morning: then they tooke vp their Ordnance, which before they had stowed in hold for easing the ship in her rolling. In the afternoone the Bashaw came down to the water side against the ship, and hauing the said Ordnance placed, and charged, it was all shot off to gratifie him: and presently after his departure backe, he permitted the Factors to come aboord the ship. The nine and twentieth day their goods were vnladen, and carried to the Bashaes Garden, where hee made choice of such things as he liked, taking for custome of euery fiue and twentie Kersies, or whatsoeuer, one, or after the rate of foure for the hundred. The Factors after his choice made, determined to send a part of the rest of the goods to Bachu, for the speedier making sale thereof. They departed from Derbent with the said Barke the nineteenth of Iuly, and arriued at Bildih the fiue and twentieth day. Robert Golding desirous to vnderstand what might bee done at Shamaky, which is a dayes iourney from Bachu, went thither, from whence returning, he was set on by theeues, and was shot into the knee with an Arrow, who had very hardly escaped with his life and goods, but that by good hap he killed one of the theeues Horses with a Caliuer, and shot a Turke thorow both cheekes with a Dag. On the sixt day of August, the Factors being aduertised at Derbent that their ship was so rotten and weake, that it was doubtfull shee would not carrie them backe to Astracan, did thereupon agree and bargaine at that place with an Armenian, whose name was Iacob, for a Barke called a Busse, being of burden about fiue and thirtie tunnes, which came that yeere from Astracan, and was at that instant riding at an Iland called Zere, about three or foure leagues beyond, or to the Eastward of Bildih, which Barke for their more safety, they meant to haue with them in their returne to Astracan, and thereupon wrote vnto Wincoll and the rest at Bachu, that they should receiue the same Busse, and lade in her their goods at Bildih, to be returned to Derbent, and to discharge their first Boat, which was obserued by them accordingly. When all their goods were laden aboord the said Busse at Bildih, and being readie to haue departed thence for Derbent, there arose a great storme with the winde out of the Sea, by force whereof the Cables and Halsers were broken, and their Vessell put ashoare, and broken to pieces against the Rockes: euery of them that were in her saued their liues, and part of the goods. But there was a Carobia or Chist, wherein were Dollers, and Gold, which they had receiued for the commodities of the Companie, which they sold at Bachu, which at the taking out of the Busse, fell by the Barkes side into the water amongst the Rockes, and so was lost. The packes of Cloth which they could not well take out of the Busse were also lost: other things that were more profitable they saued.

The latitude of Bildih 40. deg.25.min. The variation of the Compasse 10.deg. 40.min.

Zere Iland.

The English suffer shipwracke.

The third day of October all things were brought from the shoare aboord the ship: and that day the Factors went to the Bashaw to take their leaue of him, vnto whom they recommended those the Companies seruants, &c. which they had sent to Bachu, making account to leaue them behind in the Countrey: who caused their names to be written, and promised they should want nothing, nor be iniured of any. After this leaue taken, the Factors went aboord, purposing presently to haue set sayle and departed towards Astracan, the winde seruing well for that purpose at South South-east: And as they were readie to set sayle, there came against the ship a man, who weued: whereupon the Boat was sent ashoare to him, who was an Armenian sent from William Wincoll, with his writing tables, wherein the said Wincoll had written briefly, the mis-hap of the losse of the Busse, and that they were comming from Bildih towards Derbent, they, they, and ſuch things as they ſaued with a ſmall Boat, forced to put aſhoare in a place by the Sea ſide called the Armenian Village: Whereupon the Factors cauſed the ſhip to ſtay, hoping that with the Southerly winde that then blew, they would come from the place they were at to the ſhip; but if they could not come with that winde, they meant to ſayle with the ſhip, with the next wind that would ſerue them, againſt the place where they were, and take them in, if they could: which ſtay and loſſe of thoſe Southerly winds, was a cauſe of great troubles, that they afterwards ſuſtayned through Ice, &c. entring the Volga as ſhall be declared. The Armenian Village.

Digitized by Google

The latitude of Derbent (by diuers Obſeruations exactly there made, is fortie one degrees fiftie two minutes. The variation of the Compaſſe at that place about eleuen degrees from North to Weſt. From Derbent to Bildih by Land fortie ſixe leagues. From Derbent to Shamaky by Land, fortie fiue leagues. From Shamaky to Bachu, about ten leagues, which may bee thirtie miles. From Bachu to Bildih fiue or ſixe leagues by Land, but by water about twelue leagues. From the Caſtle Derbent Eaſt-wards, there reach two ſtone wals to the border of the Caſpian Sea, which is diſtant one Engliſh mile. Thoſe wals are nine foot thicke, and eight and twentie or thirtie foot high, and the ſpace betweene them is one hundred and ſixtie Geometricall paces, that is, eight hundred foot. There are yet to bee perceiued of the ruine of thoſe wals, which doe now extend into the Sea about halfe a mile: alſo from the Caſtle Weſt-ward into the Land, they did perceiue the ruines of a ſtone wall to extend, which wal, as it is reported, did paſſe from thence to Pontus Euxinus, & was built by Alexand. the great, when the caſtle Derbent was made. The latitude of Derbent 41. degrees 52. minutes. The variation of the Compaſſe.

The fift of October about noone, the winde North North-eaſt they weighed Anchor, and ſet ſayle from Derbent, being alongſt the Coaſt to the South-wards to ſeeke their men: but as they had ſailed about foure leagues the winde ſcanted Eaſterly, ſo that they were forced to Anchor in three fathome water.

The ſeuenth day about ſeuen of the clocke in the morning, they ſet ſayle, the wind South-weſt. They conſidered the time of the yeare was farre ſpent, the ſhip weake, leake, and rotten, and therefore determining not to tarry any longer for Wincoll and his fellowes, but to leaue them behind, bent themſelues directly towards Aſtracan: and ſayling North North-eaſt vntill midnight about ſixteene leagues, the wind then came to the North North-weſt, and blew much, a very ſtorme, which cauſed them to take in all their Sayles, ſauing the fore Corſe, with which they were forced to ſteere before the Sea, South by Weſt, and South South-weſt. And on the eight day about two of the clocke in the morning, their great Boat ſunke at the ſhips ſterne, which they were forced to cut from the ſhip to their great griefe and diſcomfort: for in her they hoped to ſaue their liues if the ſhip ſhould haue miſcarried. About ten of the clocke before noone, they had ſight of the Land about fiue leagues to the South of Derbent, and bare alongſt the Coaſt to the South-eaſt-wards vnto Nezauoo, where they came at Anchor in three fathomes, and blacke Ozie, good Anchor hold, whereof they were glad, as alſo that the winde was ſhifted to the North-weſt, and but a meane gale. Wincoll and the reſt of his fellowes being in the Armenian Village, which is about eighteene Verſts to the Weſt-wards of Nezauoo, the place where againſt they rode at Anchor, ſaw the ſhip as ſhe paſſed by that place, and ſent a man in the night following alongſt the Coaſt after her, who came againſt the ſhip where ſhee rode, and with a fire-brand in the top of a Tree made ſignes, which was perceiued by them in the ſhip, whereupon they hoyſed out their Skiffe, and ſent her aſhoare to learne what was meant by the fire: which returned a Letter from Wincoll, wherein he wrote that they were with ſuch goods as they had at the Armenian Village, and prayed that there they might, with the ſame goods bee taken into the ſhips. Nezauoo.

The tenth day they ſent their Skiffe to the Armenian Village to fetch thoſe men and the goods they had, with order that if the winde ſerued, that they could not returne to fetch the ſhip, they of the ſhip promiſed to come for them, againſt the ſaid Village. But in their want God ſent them two Couies of Partridges, that came from the ſhoare, and lighted in and about their ſhips, whereby they were comforted, and one that lay ſicke, of whoſe life was ſmall hope, recouered his health. The particulars of their returne are omitted. A ſtrange accident of prouiſion for their reliefe.

Pauoſes were ſent from Aſtracan, in which they laded the ſhips goods, leauing her at Anchor with Ruſſes to keepe her.

The thirteenth of Nouember they departed alſo in thoſe Lighters, with the goods towards the Chetera Bougori, leauing the ſhip at Anchor, and in her two Ruſſes, which with three more that went in the Pauoſes to prouide victuals for themſelues and the reſt, and therewith promiſed to returne backe to the ſhip with all ſpeed, had offered to vndertake for twentie Rubbles in Money, to carrie the ſhip into ſome Harbour, where ſhee might ſafely winter, or elſe to keepe her where ſhe rode all Winter, which was promiſed to bee giuen them if they did it: and the ſame day when with thoſe Lighters they had gotten ſight of the foure Ilands, being about eight Verſtes South-weſt from them, the wind then at North-eaſt, did freeſe the Sea ſo as they could not row, guide, ſtirre, or remoue the ſaid Lighters, but as the wind and Ice did force them. And ſo they continued driuing with the Ice, South-eaſt into the Sea by the ſpace of fortie houres, and then being the ſixteenth day, the Ice ſtood. Whiles they droue with the Ice, the dangers which they,

Digitized by Google

they incurred were great: for oftentimes, when the Ice with force of wind and Sea did breake, pieces of it were tolled and driuen one vpon another with great force, terrible to behold, and the ſame happened at ſometimes ſo neere vnto the Lighters, that they expected it would haue ouer-whelmed them to their vtter deſtruction: but God who had preſerued them from many perils before, did alſo ſaue and deliuer them then.

Within three or foure dayes after the firſt ſtanding of the Ice, when it was firme and ſtrong, they tooke out all their goods, being fortie and eight Bales or Packes of Raw Silke, &c. laid it on the Ice, and couered the ſame with ſuch prouiſions as they had. Then for want of victuals, &c. they agreed to leaue all the goods there vpon the Ice, and to goe to the ſhoare: and there-

Trauell vpon the Ice. vpon brake vp their Cheſts and Corobias, wherewith, and with ſuch other things as they could get, they made Sleds for euery of them to draw vpon the Ice, whereon they layed their clothes to keepe them warme, and ſuch victuals as they had, and ſuch other things as they might conueniently carrie, and ſo they departed from the ſaid goods and Pauoſes very early, about one of the clocke in the morning, and trauelling on the Ice, directed their way North, as neere as they could judge, and the ſame day about two of the clocke in the after-noone, they had ſight of Chetera Babbas. the Chetera Babbas (foure Hillocks of Ilands ſo called) vnto the ſame they directed themſelues, and there remayned that night. The goods and Pauoſes which they left on the Ice, they judged to be from thoſe Chetera Babbas, about twentie Verſts. And the next morning departed thence Eaſt-wards, and came to the Chetera Bougories (or foure Ilands before ſpoken of) before noone (the diſtance betweene thoſe places is about fifteene Verſts) where they remained all that night, departing thence towards Aſtracan: the next morning very early they loſt their way through the perſwaſion of the Ruſſes which were with them, taking to much towards the left hand (contrary to the opinion of Maſter Hudſon) whereby wandering vpon the Ice foure or fiue dayes, not knowing whether they were entred into the Crimme Tartars Land or not, at length it fortuned they met with a way that had beene trauelled, which croſt back-wards towards the Sea: that way they tooke, and following the ſame, within two dayes trauell it brought them to a place, called the Craſnoyare (that is to ſay, in the Engliſh Tongue) Red Cliffe, which diuers of the company knew.

There they remayned that night, hauing nothing to eate but one Loafe of Bread, which they happened to find with the two Ruſſes that were left in the ſhip, to keepe her all the Winter (as is aforeſaid) whom they chanced to meet going towards Aſtracan, about fiue miles before they

The Engliſh ſhip cut in pieces with Ice. came to the ſaid Craſnoyare, who certified them that the ſhip was cut in pieces with the Ice, and that they had hard ſcaping with their liues.

In the morning they departed early from Craſnoyare towards the Onchooge, and about nine of the clocke before noone, being within ten Verſts of the Vchooge, they met Amos Riall, with the Carpenter, which he found at Onchooge, and a Gunner newly come out of England, and alſo ſixtie fiue Horſes with ſo many Caſſacks to guide them, and fiftie Gunners for guard, which brought prouiſion of victuals, &c. and were ſent by the Duke to fetch the goods to Aſtracan. The meeting of that company was much joy vnto them.

The Factors ſent backe with Amos Riall, and the ſaid company to fetch the goods, Thomas Hudſon the Maſter, Tobias Paris his Mate, and ſo they the ſaid Factors and their company marDecember. ched on to the Vchooge, where they refreſhed themſelues that day, and the night following. And from thence proceeded on towards Aſtracan, where they arriued the laſt day of Nouember. Theſe that went for the goods after their departure from the Factors, trauelled the ſame day vntill they came within ten Verſts of the Chetera Babbas, where they reſted that night. The next morning by the breake of the day they departed thence, and before noone were at the Chetera Babbas, where they ſtayed all night; but preſently departed thence Thomas Hudſon with the Carpenter and Gunner to ſeeke where the goods lay: who found the ſame, and the next day they returned backe to their company at the Chetera Babbas, and declared vnto them in what ſort they had found the ſaid goods.

The third day early in the morning, they departed all from the foure Babbas towards the ſaid goods, and the ſame day did lade all the goods they could finde vpon the ſaid ſleds, and withall

Aſſaulted by Tartars. conuenient ſpeed returned backe towards Aſtracan. And when they came to the Chetera Bougori, where they reſted the night, in the morning very early before the breake of day, they were aſſaulted by a great company of the Nagays Tartars Horſe-men, which came ſhouting and hallowing with a great noyſe, but our people were ſo inuironed with the ſleds, that they durſt not enter vpon them, but ranne by, and ſhot their Arrowes amongſt them, and hurt but one man in the head, who was a Ruſſe, and ſo departed preſently. Yet when it was day, they ſhewed

Their returne to Aſtracan. themſelues a good diſtance off from our men, being a very great troope of them, but did not aſſault them any more. The ſame day our men with thoſe carriages, departed from thence towards Aſtracan, where they arriued in ſafetie the fourth of December, about three of the clock in the after-noone, where our people greatly rejoyced of their great good hap to haue eſcaped ſo many hard euents, troubles and miſeries, as they did in that Voyage, and had great cauſe therefore to prayſe the Almightie, who had ſo mercifully preſerued and deliuered them.

They

Digitized by Google

They remayned the Winter at Aſtracan, where they found great fauour and friendſhip of the Duke, Captaine, and other chiefe Officers of that place: but that Winter there hapned no great matter, worth the noting.

In the Spring of the yeere 1581. about the midſt of March, the Ice was broken vp, and cleare gone before Aſtracan. The breaking vp of the Ice.

A Letter of Maſter HENRIE LANE to the worſhipfull Maſter WILLIAM SANDERSON, containing a briefe diſcourſe of that which paſſed in the North-eaſt diſcouerie, for the ſpace of three and thirtie yeeres.

MAſter Sanderſon, as you lately requeſted me, ſo haue I ſought, and though I cannot finde ſome things that heretofore I kept in writing, and lent out to others, yet peruſing at London copies of mine old Letters to content one that meaneth to pleaſure many, I haue briefly and as truely as I may, drawne out as followeth: The rough hewing may bee planed at your leaſure, or as pleaſeth him that ſhall take the paines.

Firſt, the honourable attempt to diſcouer by Sea North-eaſt and North-weſt named for Cathay, being chiefly procured by, priuiledge from King Edward the ſixt, and other his Nobilitie, by and at the coſt and ſute of Maſter Sebaſtian Cabota, then Gouernour for Diſcoueries, with Sir Andrew Iudde, Sir George Barnes, Sir William Garrard, Maſter Anthony Huſſie, and a companie of Merchants, was in the laſt yeere of his Maieſties raigne, 1553. The generall charge whereof was committed to one Sir Hugh Willoughbie Knight, a goodly Gentleman, accompanied with ſufficient number of Pilots, Maſters, Merchants, and Marriners, hauing three Ships well furniſhed, to wit, The Bona Sperança, the Edward Bonauenture, and the Confidentia. The Edward Bonauenture, Richard Chancelor being Pilot, and Steuen Burrough Maſter, hauing diſcouered Ward-houſe vpon the Coaſt of Finmark, by ſtorme or fogge departed from the reſt, found the Bay of Saint Nicholas, now the chiefe Port of Ruſſia, there wintred in ſafetie, and had ayde of the people at a Village called Newnox. Anno 1553. Maſter William Burrough was then young, and with his brother in this firſt voyage. Newnox is from the road of S. Nicholas Weſtward 35. miles.

The other two ſhips attempting further Northwards (as appeared by Pamphlets found after written by Sir Hugh Willoughbie) were in September encountred with ſuch extreame cold, that they put backe to ſeeke a wintring place: and miſſing the ſaid Bay fell vpon a deſart Coaſt in Lappia, entring into a Riuer immediately frozen vp, ſince diſcouered, named Arzina Reca, diſtant Eaſt from a Ruſſian Monaſterie of Monkes called Pechingho, from whence they neuer returned, but all to the number of ſeuentie perſons periſhed, which was for want of experience to haue made Canes and Stones. Theſe were found with the Ships the next Summer, Anno 1554. by Ruſſe-fiſhermen: and in Anno 1555. the place ſent vnto by Engliſh Merchants, as hereafter appeareth. Note.

Anno 1554. the ſaid ſhip Edward Bonauenture (although robbed homewards by Flemings*) returned with her companie to* London, ſhewing and ſetting foorth their entertainments and diſcouerie of the Countries, euen to the Citie of Moſco, from whence they brought a priuiledge written in Ruſſe with the Kings or great Dukes ſeale, the other two ſhips looked for and vnknowne to them where they were. Anno 1554.

Anno 1555. the ſaid companie of Merchants for a diſcouerie vpon a new ſupply, ſent thither againe with two Ships, to wit, the Edward Bonauenture, and another bearing the name of the King and Queene, Philip and Marie, whoſe Maieſties by their Letters to the ſaid Muſcouite, recommended ſundry their ſubiects then paſſing, whereof certaine, to wit, Richard Chancelor, George Killingworth, Henrie Lane, and Arthur Edwards, after their arriuall at the Bay, and paſſing vp Dwina to Nologda, went firſt vp to Moſco, where, vpon knowledge of the ſaid Letters, they with their trayne had ſpeciall entertainment, with houſes and dyet appointed, and ſhortly permitted to the Princes preſence, they were with Gentlemen brought through the Citie of Moſco, to the Caſtle and Palace, repleniſhed with numbers of people, and ſome gunners. They entred ſundry roomes, furniſhed in ſhew with ancient graue perſonages, all in long garments of ſundry colours, Gold, Tiſſue, Baldekin, and Violet, as our Veſtments and Copes haue beene in England, ſutable with Caps, Iewels, and Chaines. Theſe were found to bee no Courtiers, but ancient Muſcouites, Inhabitants, and other their Merchants of credit, as the manner is, furniſhed thus from the Wardrobe and Treaſurie, waiting and wearing this apparell for the time, and ſo to reſtore it. Anno 1555. The King and Queenes letters.

Then entring into the Preſence, being a large roome floored with Carpets, were men of more eſtate, and richer ſhew, in number aboue one hundred ſet ſquare: who after the ſaid Engliſh-men came in, doing reuerence, they all ſtood vp, the Prince onely ſitting, and yet riſing at any occaſion, when our King and Queenes names were read or ſpoken. Then after ſpeeches by interpretation, our men kiſſing his hand, and bidden to dinner, were ſtayed in another roome, and at dinner brought through, where might bee ſeene maſſie ſilner and gilt Plate, ſome like and as bigge as Kilderkins, and waſh-bowles, and entring the Dining place, being the greater roome, the Prince was ſet bare-headed, his Crowne and rich Cap ſtanding vpon a pinacle by. Not farre diſtant ſate his Metropolitan, with diuers other of his kindred, and chiefe Tartarian Captaines: none ſate ouer againſt him, or any, at other Tables, their backes towards him: which Entertainment by the Duke.

Digitized by Google

which tables all furnished with ghests set, there was for the English-men, named by the Russes, Ghosti Carabelski, to wit, Strangers or Merchants by ship, a table in the midst of the roome, where they were set direct against the Prince: and then began the seruice, brought in by a number of his young Lords and Gentlemen, in such rich attire, as is aboue specified: and still from the Princes table (notwithstanding their owne furniture) they had his whole messes set oner all in massie fine Gold, deliuered euery time from him by name to them, by their seuer all Christian names, as they sate, viz. Richard, George, Henrie, Arthur. Likewise Bread and sundry drinkes of purified Mead, made of fine white and clarified Honey. At their rising, the Prince called them to his table, to receiue each one a Cup from his hand to drinke, and tooke into his hand Master George Killingworths beard, which reacheth ouer the table, and pleasantly deliuered it the Metropolitane, who seeming to blesse it, said in Russe, This is Gods gift. As indeed at that time it was not onely thicke, broad, and yellow coloured, but in length fiue foote and two inches of assize. Then taking leaue, being night, they were accompanied and followed with a number, carrying pots of drinke, and dishes of meate dressed, to our lodging.

Master Killingworths beard of a maruellous length.

This yeere the two Ships, with the dead bodyes of Sir Hugh Willoughbie, and his people, were sent vnto by Master Killingworth, (which remayned there in Mosco Agent almost two yeeres) and much of the goods and victuals were recouered and saued.

Anno 1556. the disastrous voyage.

Anno 1556. The Companie sent two Ships for Russia, with extraordinarie Masters and Saylers to bring home the two ships, which were frozen in Lappia, in the riuer of Arzina aforesaid. The two ships sent this yeere from England saying from Lapland to the Bay of Saint Nicholas, tooke in lading with passengers, to wit, a Russe Ambassadour, named Ioseph Napea, and some of his men shipped with Richard Chancelor in the Edward. But so it fell out that the two which came from Lappia, with all their new Master and Marriners, neuer were heard of, but in foule weather, and wrought Seas, after their two yeeres wintring in Lapland, became, as is supposed, vnstanch, and sunke, wherein were drowned also diuers Russes Merchants, and seruants of the Ambassadour. A third ship the Edward aforesaid, falling on the North part of Scotland, vpon a rocke was also lost, and Master Chancelor with diuers other, drowned. The said Russe Ambassadour hardly escaping, with other his men, Marriners, and some goods saued, were sent for into Scotland, from the King, Queene, and Merchants, (the messenger being Master Doctor Laurence Hussie, and others:) And then, as in the Chronicles appeareth, honorably entertayned and receiued at London.

Serchthrift.

This yeere also the company furnished and sent out a Pinnesse, named the Serchthrift, to discouer the Harborowes in the North coast from Norway to Waidhouse, and so to the Bay of Saint Nicholas.

Stephen Borough

There was in her Master and Pilot, Stephen Borough, with his brother William, and eight other. Their discouerie was beyond the Bay, toward the Samoeds, people dwelling neere the Riuer of Ob, and found a sound or sea with an Island called Vaigats, first by them put into the Card or Map. In that place they threw Snow out of their said Pinnesse, with shouels in August, by which extremitie, and lacke of time, they came backe to Russia, and wintred at Colmogro.

Anno 1557.

Anno 1557. The companie with foure good Ships, sent backe the said Russe Ambassadour, and in companie with him, sent as an Agent, for further discouerie, Master Antonie Ienkinson, who afterward Anno 1558. with great fauour of the Prince of Muscouia, and his letters, passed the riuer Volga to Cazan, and meaning to seeke Cathay by Land, was by many troupes and companies of vnciuill Tartarians encountred, and in danger: but keeping companie with Merchants of Bactria, or Boghar, and Vrgeme, trauelling with Camels, he with his companie, went to Boghar, and no further: whose entertainment of the King is to be had of Master Ienkinson, which returned Anno 1559. to Muscouie. And in Anno 1560. hee, with Henrie Lane, came home into England: which yeere was the first safe returne, without losse or shipwracke, or dead fraight, and burnings. And at this time was the first trafficke to the Narue in Liuonia, which confines with Lituania, and all the Dominions of Russia: and the Markets, Faires, Commodities, great Townes and Riuers, were sent vnto by diuers seruants: the reports were taken by Henrie Lane, Agent, and deliuered to the companie, 1561. The trade to Rie, and Reuel, of old time hath beene long since frequented by our English Nation, but this trade to the Narue was hitherto concealed from vs by the Danskers and Lubeckers.

Boghar voyage.

Muscouie trade long vnfortunate.

1560. The first trade to the Narue. 1560.

Anno 1561. the said Master Antonie Ienkinson went Agent into Russia, who the next yeere after, passing all the riuer of Volga to Astracan, and ouer the Caspian sea, arriued in Persia, and opened the trade thither.

Alcock slaine in Persia. Banister dyed in Media. Edwards dyed at Astracan.

Also betweene the yeeres of 1568. and 1573. sundry Voyages after Master Ienkinsons, were made by Thomas Alcock, Arthur Edwards, Master Thomas Banister, and Master Geffrey Ducket, whose returne (if spoyle neere Volga had not preuented by rouing Theeues) had altogether salued and recouered the Companies (called the old Companies) great losse, charges, and damages: But the saying is true, By vnitie small things grow great, and by contention great things become small. This may bee vnderstood best by the Companie. The frowardnesse of some few, and euill doing of some vniust Factors, was cause of much of the euill successe.

Arthur Edwards was sent againe 1579. and dyed in the voyage at Astracan. About which matters, are to bee remembred the Voyages of Master Thomas Randolph Esquire, Ambassadour Anno 1567. And late of Sir Ierome Bowes, Anno 1583. both tending and treating for further Discoueries, Freedomes, and Priuiledges, wherewith I meddle not. But in conclusion, for their paines

and

Digitized by Google

and aduentures this way (as diuers doe now adayes other wayes) as worthie Gentlemen sent from Princes, to doe their Countrey good, I put them in your memorie, with my heartie farewell. From Saint Margarets neere Dartforth in Kent.

To the Reader.

I Haue had much trouble to giue thee this Authour, both for his Language, being Portugall (which for this, and some other parts of this worke, I was forced to get as I could) and for the rarities of his Relations, seeming both in themselues so stupendious, and not seconded in many things, that I say not contraried, by other Authours. Besides his booke came not out, till himselfe was gone out of the world. I answere, that Ricius the Iesuite his Relations came not to vs, till himselfe was likewise gone; and that that might rather plead not onely for the Maturitie, but the sinceritie, by that Caesian rule, Cui bono; for whom should a dead man flatter, or for what should hee lye? Yea, hee little spares his owne compante and Nation, but often and eagerly layeth open their vices: and which is more, I finde in him little boasting, except of other Nations; none at all of himselfe, but as if he intended to expresse Gods glorie, and mans merit of nothing but miserie. And howsoeuer it seemes incredible to remember such infinite particulars as this Booke is full of, yet an easie memorie holdeth strong impressions of good or bad: Scribunt in marmore laeti, as said of one; and of the other, Omnia quae curant senes meminerunt. Neither is it likely but that the Authour wrote Notes, which in his manifold disaduentures were lost otherwise, but by that writing written the firmer in his memorie, especially new whetted, filed, furbished with so many companions of miserie, whom in that state, Haec olim meminisse iuuabat; their best musicke in their chaines and wandrings being the mutuall recountings of things seene, done, suffered. More marueil it is, if a lyar, that he should not forget himselfe, and contradict his owne Relations; which sometimes he may seeme to doe in the numbers of the yeere of the Lord; yea, and other numbers: but his leaues were left vnperfect at his death, and those numbers perhaps added by others after: and besides, mine owne experience hath often found figures mistaken from my hand, which being by the Compositor set at large, haue runne at large by ten times so much; and girt in otherwhiles as narrow with the tenth place diminished, or one figure set for another. And none but the Authour, or he which knowes the subiect, can easily amend that fault, being so great by so small and easie a lapse. The graduations of places I doe confesse otherwise then in the Iesuites, *and as I suppose not so truely as theirs: for I thinke that he neither had Arte * or Instrument to calculate the same, but contented himselfe in the writing of this Booke to looke into the common Maps of* China, and to follow them in setting downe the degrees, and so the blind led the blind into errour; no printed Map that I haue seene being true. And perhaps the Chronicler to whom the papers were brought vnfinished might out of those Maps doe it; erring either of ignorance, or (which we haue often seene in Cards of remote places East and West) purposely, to conceale from others that which they haue found sweet and gainfull; the Mariner and Merchant not looking with the generous eyes of the ingenious, ingenuous Scholer.

Note for numbers (if great care bee not had) how easily, how dangrously mistaken.

* So it seemes by those words of his, fol. 122. Ainda que confesso que me falta o milhor, que he saber & engenho para dar a entender o clima & a Altura dos grãos &c.

Falle graduations a common thing in Maps of East and West Indies.

For his repute at home; it was dedicated to King Philip the Third of Spaine, which impudence would not haue obtruded (if altogether a tale) on such Maiestie; licenced by the Holy Office, and printed at Lisbon; translated into the Spanish by the Licentiate, Francisco de Herrera Maldonado, Canon of the Church Riall of Arbas, and dedicated to a Clergie-man Seuerin de Faria, Printed 1620. at Madrid (and small credit it had beene to the House of the Farias, that one of them should publish in Portugall, and in Castile to another should be dedicated, a friuolous tale and deuised foolerie.) I adde also the Authours stile so religious, and his often protestations: his credit, as Herrera reporteth with King Philip the Second, who spent much time in discourse with him about these things. I might adde the Spanish Translators Apologie at large, and out of him Fr. Andrada the Portugall Chroniclers testimonie.

* If this moue thee not to beleeue, yet beleeue thus much, that I haue no minde to deceiue thee, but giue thee what I found, onely much contracted, and not going all the way with our Authour, whose originall Booke is aboue one hundred and fiftie sheets of paper in folio, but contented with his China and Tartaria Relations: that also too much, if not true. And yet I would not haue an Authour reiected for fit speeches framed by the Writer, in which many Historians haue taken libertie; no, if sometimes he doth mendacia dicere, so as he doth not mentiri; that is, if he be so credulous to beleeue, or so improuident to proffer to others faith, probable falshoods related by others (as I will not sweare but of himselfe hee might mistake, and by others be mis-led, the Chinois here might in relating these rarities to him enlarge, and de magnis maiora loqui) so as he still be religious in a iust and true deliuerie of what himselfe hath seene, and belye not his owne eyes: the former is rashnesse and distastfull, the later is dishonest and detestable. Once, the Sunne Rising hath found many worshippers, but the Westerne Sunne is neerer night: and neerer obscuritie and meannesse are our Westerne affaires then those China Raies of the East; and wee were Backes and Owles not to beleeue a greater light then our selues see and vse. All China Authours how diuersified soeuer in their lines, yet concurre in a centre of Admiranda Sinarum, which if others haue not so largely related as this, they may thanke God they payed not so deare a price to see them; and for mee, I will rather beleeue (where reason euicts not an electione firma) then seeke to see Valignanus a great Iesuite wrote a booke with that title.

Digitized by Google

at the Authours rate; and if he hath robbed the Altars of Truth, as he did those of the Calempluy Idols, yet in Pequin equity we will not cut off the thumbs (according to Nanquin rigour) vpon bare surmise without any euidence against him. However, cheaper I am sure he is by farre to thee then to mee, who would haue beene loth to be so true a labourer in a lying Authour, willingly or commonly (in my conceit) falsifying his owne sight, though perhaps not seldome deceiued in things taken vp on China mens trust, or entred into their China Bookes, such as he here often citeth. Men refuse not Siluer for the Oare; gather the Rose notwithstanding the prickles; neglect not Harueſt mixed with weeds, Wheat with the chaffe, Fruit for the shells, and hate not Honie for the Bees sting; nor will I either in prodigalitie of faith beleeue all, or be so penurious as to reiect the most of that which here I present. Vse thou thy freedome, and him at thy pleasure (I say not mee) and if thou wilt not pardon such a briefe collection, thou wouldst hardly giue Castilian entertainement to all, and more then all, often yeelding brauadoes and enlarging flourishes of stile, beyond a translation, as if his Authour had not said enough. The variety, if it had beene meerly deuised, presents I know not how many entercourses as interludes of Comicke and Tragicke euents, more worthie the reading then most in this kinde, and as fit to recreate: how much more, where veritie is (as I suppose) the ground and substance, though perhaps inlayed with other phantasies among. That the Iesuites in some things differ, is their authoritie against his, who as more learned and iudicious, and longer experienced, might finde out some truths better then hee; as his various fortunes, and that time, might let him see many particularities which they could not, writing sixtie yeeres after. In many things they both agree: and Gaspar de Cruz hath many the same things; and that his strange Relation of the Crosse in China and the Hungarian of the Mount Sinai, is deliuered by Lucena, perhaps learned by some of His companie: and these exceptions by mee mentioned, are rather praeoccupations of censorious iudging my iudgement, then my iudiciall sentence, which the iudicious will suspend, and leaue to better experience. Iudicent posteri; veritas Temporis filia.

CHAP. II.

Obseruations of China, Tartaria, and other Easterne parts of the World, taken out of FERNAM MENDEZ PINTO his Peregrination.

§. I.

MENDEZ his many miserable aduentures, his strange expedition with ANTONIO DE FARIA; diuers coasts visited, Pirats tamed, miseries suffered, glorie recouered.

FErnam Mendez Pinto, borne at old Montemor in the Kingdome of Portugall, was placed in seruice at ten or twelue yeeres of age in Lisbon, the thirteenth of December, An. 1521. on the day of breaking the Scutchions, or publike mourning for King Emanuel. A yeere and halfe after he fled vpon occasion of a sudden accident, and got aboord a Caruile which was taken by a French Pirat, which would haue made sale of them at Larache to the Moores. But a fortnight after taking another Portugall ship comming from Saint Thome worth 40000. Duckets, they returned for France, carrying some with them for Sea seruice, the rest they set on shoare by night on the shoare of Melides, naked; which came to Santiago de Cacem, where they were relieued. Thence he went to Setuual, and serued Francisco de Faria a Gentleman belonging to the Master of Santiago, and after that was Page to the Master himselfe. But his meanes being short hee left his seruice.

* See of Gama tom. 1. pag. 26. Straight of Mecca or the Red Sea. Portugall Fortresse in Socotora before the Arabs Conquest. A Martyr of Mahomet. Martyrem non poena sed causa.

An. 1537. he went for India in a Fleet of fiue ships; the Admirall was Don Pedro de Sylua, sonne of Vasco * da Gama (first Discouerer of the Indies, whose bones he carried with him in the ship at his returne, which were receiued by King Iohns appointment in greater Funerall pompe, then had beene seene done to a Subiect.) They arriued at Diu the fifth of September. Thence after seuenteene dayes he went with two Foists for the Straight of Mecca, and came in sight of Curia Muria, and Abedalcuria, almost wracked with foule weather, and comming to Socotora, watered neere the Fortresse which Francisco d'Almeida first Vice-roy of India, had built, 1507. Hauing receiued some refreshing of the Christians there, they departed, and in the heighth of Masua tooke a ship, but fiue men being therein left of eightie; one of which was the Captaine, a Renegado of Malorquy, who for loue of a Moorish woman had denyed his Faith, and refusing to returne to Christianitie, notwithstanding all perswasions, wee bound him hand and and foot, and threw him into Sea with a great ſtone tyed about his necke: The ſhip alſo ſunke, and little was ſaued.

Digitized by Google

They went to Arquico (then) in the Countrey of Preſte Iohn; to deliuer a letter to Antique Barboſa, the Factor of Antonio Sylueira, ſent three yeeres before by Nuno de Cunha, who with fortie others eſcaped from the rebellion Xael, in which Dom Manoel de Meneſes, with one hundred and ſixtie Portugals were taken, foure hundred thouſand Duckets, and ſixe Portugall Ships, which were thoſe that Solyman Baſſa A. 1538. brought with prouiſion for his Armada to the ſiege of Diu; the King of Xael hauing ſent them with ſixtie Portugals for a Cairo preſent; the reſt hee beſtowed as almes on Mahomets houſe at Mecca. I with three others, were ſent ſome dayes iourneys into the Countrey to Barboſa, then in the Fort of Geleytor in guard of the Queene, mother of the Preſte Iohn, who welcommed them, as the nightly dew to the flowerie Garden, and as Helena to Ieruſalem. ſo were they (ſaid ſhe) to her eyes. Xael or Iael inſurrection.

But (to leaue thoſe things) he went thence to Ormus, and then to Goa; there offered his ſeruice to Pero de Faria Captaine of Malaca, which entertained him. The occurrences of Bata, Achem, Aaru in Samatra, Queda in the continent, and his imployments in thoſe parts, as alſo of Siaca, Paon, Patane, I omit.

He ſaith that hee was wracked at Sea comming from Aaru; of eight and twentie, fiue onely eſcaping, two of which the Crocodiles deuoured. Hee was taken and ſold to a Moore, which carried him to Malaca. Thence Pero de Faria ſent him to Patane in trade: from thence againe, imployed by Antonio de Faria to Lugor, Coia Acem a Guzarate Pirate ſet vpon them, tooke, and killed all, Burall and Pinto only eſcaping, which leaping into the Sea were reſerued by a Barke, and ſent to Patane. Faria afraid to return to Malaca, where he was ſo indebted for thoſe goods, vowed to be reuenged of the Pirat. And by helpe of his friends armed a Iunke with fiue & fifty Souldiers, of which I and Borall (extreamely both indebted and wounded) were. From Patane we ſet forth in May, 1540. and to a Hauen called Bralapiſaon, ſome ſixe leagues off the firme Land, where we found a Iunke of the Lequios, bound for Siam with an Embaſſadour of Nautaquim de Lindau, Prince of the Ile of Toſa ſituate in ſix & thirty degrees, which ſeeing vs come, haſted away with all ſpeed. Faria ſent a Chineſe Pilot to them with faire offers of loue and courteſie, who returned with a preſent, a rich Sword, and ſixe and twentie Pearles in a Boxe of Gold, with this anſwer, That the time would come, when they ſhould communicate with vs in the Law of the true God of infinite mercy, who by his death had giuen life to all men, with a perpetuall inheritance in the houſe of the good: and hee beleeued that this ſhould bee after the halfe of the halfe of time were paſt. Neither could Antonie de Faria returne any thing in recompence, they being gotten farre into the Sea. Bralapiſaon. Toſa. Span Loſſa. A ſtrange anſwere.

Heere wee watered, and after coaſted to ſearch the Riuer of Pulo Cambim, which diuides the Kingdome of Champaa, from the Seniorie of Camboia in the height of nine degrees. Thither we came in the end of May, and the Pilot went vp the Riuer three leagues, to a great Towne called Catimparù, where we ſtayed to take in prouiſion twelue dayes. Faria being curious, deſired to know whence that Riuer came, the originall thereof (they told him) was a Lake called Pinator, Eaſtward from that Sea, two hundred and ſixtie leagues in the Kingdome of Quitirvan; which Lake was compaſſed with high Hills, at the bottome of which, alongſt the waters ſide, were eight and thirtie Townes, thirteene great, the reſt ſmall. One of theſe Great ones was named Xincaleu, where was a great Gold Mine, whence euery day was taken a Barre and a halfe of Gold, which in our money amounteth by the yeere to two and twentie millions of Gold. Foure Lords are ſharers, and are ſtill at warres for a ſingular proprietie. They ſaid that one of theſe called Raiabitan, in the Court of his houſe in iarres, had ſet vp to the necke in earth ſix hundred Bars of Gold in poulder, as good as that of Menancabo in Samatra; and that if three hundred of our men were ſent thither, with one hundred Caliuers, they would without doubt become maſters thereof. They ſaid alſo that in Buaquirim, another of thoſe Townes, was a Rocke of Diamonds, better then thoſe of Laue, and of Taniampura in the Ile of Iana. Pullo Cambim. Catimparà. Lake Pinator. Quitiruan. Xincaleu. 22. Millions Duckets. Gold mines, & iron minds. Rocke of Diamonds.

Proceeding along the Coaſt of Champaa, from Pullo Cambim, we came to a ſhelfe called Saleyiacuu, and the next day to the Riuer Toobaſoy, in the mouth whereof a Iunke paſſed by, to which we offered the courteſie of the Sea, and they in ſcorne made ſhew of a Negroes Buttockes, with many trumpets and other iollitie. Hence grew diſpleaſure: in the night three Barks came to aſſaile vs, which we tooke, with the Captain, two Acheners, a Turke, & the Negro. This Negro confeſſed himſelfe a Chriſtian, ſlaue to Gaſper de Mello a Portugall, whom that dogge (he pointed to the bound Captaine) ſlew two yeeres ſince in Liampoo, with ſixe and twentie Portugals beſides with him in the Ship. What ſaid Faria, is this Similau? Yea, ſaid he, and he had thought in ſo ſmall a Barke, there had not beene aboue ſixe or ſeuen, and hee would haue bound your hands and feet, and impaled you as hee ſerued my maſter. Faria hauing ſerued him and his with the ſame ſauce, tooke the Iunke, in which was thirtie ſix thouſand Taels of Iapon Siluer, which make fiftie foure thouſand Cruzados or Duckets, beſides much good merchandize. Similau a Pirate taken.

Faria proceeded alongſt the Coaſt of Champaa, and came to the Riuer Tinacoru, by our men called Varella: into which enter the Ships of Siam and the Malaya Coaſt, which goe for China, and Truck for Gold, Calamba and Iuory, whereof that Kingdome hath ſtore. Many Paraos or ſmall Tinacoreu, or Taurlachim, or Varella Truck for gold.

Digitized by Google

small Barkes came aboord vs, and wondred to see white men with beards. They told him that if he would goe vp the Riuer to the Citie Pilaucacem, where the King resides, hee might in fiue dayes sell his goods: for great Merchants resorted thither from the Lauhos, and Pasuaas, and Gueos. That Riuer they said came from the Hill Moncalor, eightie leagues from that place, and beyond that Hill it is much larger, but shallower, in some places making shallow fields, where bred infinite store of Fowles which couer the ground, in such innumerable numbers, that two and fortie yeeres before they caused the Kingdome of Chintaleuhos, (which is eight dayes iourney) to be dispeopled. Beyond that Country of Birds, is another wilde and mountainous, where abide many creatures much worse then those Birds, Elephants, Rhinocerotes, Lions, Wilde-swine, Buffals, and Wilde-kine. In the midst of that Land or Kingdome (so it had beene in old time) is a great Lake, which the Natiues call Cunebetee, others Chiammay, from which proceeds this riuer, with other three in great quantitie washing that land. That lake, as some write, containeth in circuit sixtie Iaons (each of which is three leagues) alongst which are Mines of Siluer, Copper, Tinne, and Lead, carried thence by Merchants in Casilas, with Elephants and Badas (Rhinocerotes) to the Kingdomes of Sornau, or Siam, Passiloco, Sauady, Tangù, Prom, Calaminhan, and other Kingdomes. Being asked of the weapons of those Countries, they answered, That they haue none but Poles burned, and short Crises of two spannes. They might not go vp the Riuer in lesse then two months, or two and a halfe, by reason of the force of the water, which way downe, they might dispatch in eight or ten dayes.

Pilaucacem.

Bird-wonder.

Cunebetee, or Chiammay.

Faria going from thence, came to Pullo Champeiloo, an Iland not inhabited in fourteene degrees and twentie minutes, at the entrie of the Bay of Cauchin-China: and thence hauing fitted his Ordnance to Ainam, to seeke Coia Acem: and being come to Pullo Capas, a Fleet of fortie great Iunkes, of two or three Deckes * a piece was seene in the Riuer by Boralho, whom Faria had sent to discouer, and after that another seeming two thousand saile great and small, and a walled Towne of some ten thousand houses. At his returne hee saw also one Iunke in the Barre of the Riuer at anchor, which seemed of another Coast. Faria supposed this last was of that Pyrat Coia Acem, which therefore hee assailed and tooke. One of the company was a Christian of Mount Sinai, named Tome Mostangue a Merchant, whose Barke Solyman Bassa had taken A. 1538. in the Port of Indaa, with seuen others to be victuallers for his Armada of sixtie gallies, wherewith he was sent by the Great Turke, to restore Sultan Baadur to his Kingdome of Cambaya, whereof the Mogor had then dispossessed him, and to driue the Portugalls out of India. And when he demanded of the Turkes his freight, which they had promised, they tooke his wife and his daughter, and openly rauished them before his eyes; his sonne, which cried at that spectacle, they threw into the Sea bound hand and foot: and laid himselfe in yrons, tooke away his goods, worth aboue sixe thousand Duckets. His wife and daughter died, and hee as desperate leaped one night into the Sea, at the Bar of Diu, with a sonne which there hee had, and got to Surat, and came thrice to Malacca in a Ship of Garcia de Saa; whence by Stephen Gama he was sent for China, with Christouan Sardinha, Factor of Maluco; whom riding at anchor in Cincapura Quiay Tayiam, Captaine of this Iunke slew with six and twentie Portugals, and saued him aliue because he was a Gunner. Faria cried out that he had heard of this Quiay Tayiam, that he had killed aboue one hundred Portugals, and spoiled them of one hundred thousand Cruzados, and that since he killed Sardinha, he caused himselfe to bee called by his name. Hee asked this Armenian where he was, hee shewed where he with sixe or seuen others were hidden in the Iunke. Faria went and opened the skuttle, and Taiam with his company began a new fight, killed two Portugals and seuen boyes, and wounded twentie; but in the end were slaine. Faria hasted away for feare of the Iunkes in the Riuer, and came to the Coast of Cauchin-China where he rifled this Iunke, and found in her Spices and other goods, to the value of sixtie thousand Cruzados, besides Artillery, which the Pirate had taken out of the Ships of Sardinha, Oliueyra, and Matos.

Pullo Champeiloo.

* Gauias.

Quiay Taiam, a Pirate.

Thomas Mastangue his aduentures.

The next day hee set saile againe for Ainam, and by the way lighted on Boates fishing for Pearles, to whom they offered contract, who told them that Guamboy, a Port somewhat before, (as in Cantan, Chincheo, Lamau, Combay, Sumbor, and Liampoo, and other Coast Cities) was a place of trade for strangers, and counselled him to goe thither: for there they had nothing but Pearles, which they fished for the treasure of the Sonne of the Sunne, by the command of the Tutan of Combay, supreme Gouernor of all Cauchin-China. And that the law was, that if any Barke besides the appointed entred, it should bee burnt with all the people therein. And because hee was a stranger, it was best for him to saile away before Buhaquirim the Mandirin, which was but seuen leagues thence came; who had fortie great Iunkes, with two thousand Mariners, and fiue thousand Souldiers; and did abide there the sixe moneths of fishing, from March to August both included. They much maruelled at the Portugall fashion, hauing neuer seene any such men, and suspected them theeues (they professing themselues Merchants of Siam) with gifts and courtesie they wonne good estimation of these Fishers. One of these being asked touching Aynam, answered, That it was once an absolute Kingdome gouerned by Prechau Gamu, who dying without an heire there arose such contentions, that in foure yeeres and a halfe there dyed sixteen Lacasaas of men, which are so many hundred thousands, whereby the Land was so dispeopled, that Pearle-fishers.

Guamboy, and other Coast Cities of China, Sonne of the Sunne, title of the King of China.

Aynam or Hainam, a great Iland S. from China.

Digitized by Google

that the Cauchin King made himselfe master thereof, with seuen thousand Mogores, which the Tartar sent him from Tuymican, then the chiefe Citie of his Empire. Hee set ouer the same Hoyha Paguarol, who rebelled and made himselfe tributarie to the King of China, paying sixe hundred thousand Duckets, or foure hundred thousand Taeis yearely: and dying without heire, two hundred thirtie fiue yeares since, hee declared the King of China his Successour: and so it hath continued. He counselled him not to goe to Aynam; because they were Dissemblers, nor would the Monson suffer him to go to Liampoo; but to go to the good riuer Tanauquir, still sounding as he went for the shoalds; there he should haue sure Anchorage, and in little space hee might sell all his goods; where yet it was not safe by reason of reasonlesse men to aduenture his goods on Land. Tanauquir.

To that Riuer we went, and in the mouth thereof not able to stemme the Current, two Iunks assayled vs, and their first Language was sixe and twentie Peeces of Ordnance: the Issue was, Faria tooke them both, most of their men being drowned or slaine, and found therein seuenteene Christians Prisoners, by whom hee learned that the Captayne was a Rouer which bare two names, one of a Christian, Francisco de Saa, the other of a Gentile, Necoda Xicaulem. Fiue yeares he had beene a Christian at Malaca; Garcia de Saa Captayne of the Fortresse, in his Baptisme imparting his owne name to him, who married him to a Gentlewoman of Portugall. But hee going, Anno 1534. for Chincheo in a China Iunke with twentie Portugals and his Wife, slue both her and them at Pulo Catan: and the next yeare took another Portugall Iunke at Chinchee, which came from Sunda, and slue ten Portugals in her, and thence-forth practised Pyracie on Chineses, (as hee thought vs to bee) and Portugals. The goods of the two Iunkes amounted to fortie thousand Taeis, and seuenteene Brasse Peeces. The Captayne of this place was in league with him, and shared a third of his Pyracies. Faria therefore went to another Port fortie leagues Eastward, called Mutipinan, wherein were many Merchants which came in Casilas from the Land of the Lauhos, and Pafunas, and Gueos with great store of siluer. The current setting strong against vs at the Rock of Tilauinera. Wee came to Mutipinan, and learned that the Riuer was deepe, the best in that Bay; the people peaceable, that Merchants had come nine dayes before from the Kingdome of Benan in two Casilas, each of fiue hundred Oxen, with store of Siluer, Iuory, Waxe, Benioyn, Camfire, Gold in poulder, to buy Pepper, Drugs, and pearles of Aynam; that they had not any Armada of great ships because the Wars which the Prechau (King) of the Cauchins made were by land, that he abode at Quangepaaru, a Citie twelue dayes iourny thence; that his Mynes yeelded him fifteene thousand Pikes of Siluer, halfe of which by Diuine Law belonged to the people, which had remitted it to him on conditon to pay no other tributes, wherto the ancient Prechaus had sworne to keepe it, as long as the Sun should giue light tothe Earth. There hee sold a great part of his goods till newes of the Tanauquir Rouer made them afraid to come aboard: so that he was forced to set saile. Xicaulem another Pyrate. A Renegado China Robber. Mutipinan. Benan. Quangepaaru.

Thus after many dayes spent in this Bay of Cauchin-china; because Coia Acem and the Pyrates which robbed Christians were in league with the Mandarines, and sold that which they had gotten in Ainan, he pursued that purpose againe, and came to Anchor in Madel a Hauen in that Iland where he encountred with Hmimilau, a Chinese Rouer which had becomne lately a Moore, and bitter enemy of Christians, of which Religion hee had also beene. Fiue Portugall Captiue Boyes, which were aboard him, cryed out for mercy, whereby Faria mooued, sent to know what they were, which answering with stones on their heads that came in the Boat, a cruell fight followed, in which Faria remayned Victor, and seised of the Captaine with fifteene others left aliue. He demanded for the Portugall Boyes, who told them they were in the Prow vnder Hatches; whereupon sending to see, they found them lying on a heape with their heads off, a woman with her two children being also so serued. Faria asked why hee dealt so with the small Innocents? He answered, it was sufficient that they were children of Portugals. Being asked why he had forsaken the Christian Religion; he said, because the Portugals had respected him being a Gentile, with Cap in hand saluting him Quiay Nicoda, but after hee was Christian, made little account of him; whereupon he became a Moore in Bintam, and the King of Iantan vsed him with much honour, his Officers called him Brother, and hee sware on a Booke to become an Enemy to the Portugall and Christian Name as long as he liued, the King and Priest applauding and promising all happinesse to his soule. Seuen yeares he had beene in execution of that Oath, and had taken a Iunke of Luys de Pauia in the Riuer of Liampoo, with foure hundred Bares of Pepper, slue eighteene Portugals, besides slaues: and after that had taken at times foure ships, in which he had slaine neere three hundred persons, seuentie of them Portugals, and taken fifteene or sixteen hundred Bares of Pepper and other Commodities, of which the King of Pan had halfe, to secure him and let him haue sale: in the Riuer Choaboque on the Coast of China, he had killed Ruy Lobo, his old acquaintance, with seuenteene Portugals, escaping a wracke, and taken into his Iunke on condition to pay him two thousand Cruzados, to set him on shoare at Patane; which notwithstanding, hee slue him and the rest by the Moores counsell one night as they were asleepe. Faria would heare no further, but caused him to bee slaine and cast into the Sea. In Silke and other goods he found in the Iunke to the value of fortie thousand Taeis: the Iunke he burned, hauing none to man her. Hmimilau an Ethnike-Christian-Moore Pyrate.

Digitized by Google

The other Necodas or Captaynes of the Iunkes, seeing what Faria had done, consulted together, and seeing he might also doe as much to them, sent two chiefe men to him, desiring him as King of the Sea, to giue them securitie to passe, in dispatch of their businesses before the Monson were ended, and that as his Tributaries, they would giue him twentie thousand Taeis of Siluer: to which he sware, and that no Thiefe should rob them: and with a Present receiued the Money brought him within an houre after. A Boy which writ their Passes, gayned in thirteene dayes aboue foure thousand Taeis (besides gifts for dispatch) each Iunke giuing fiue Taeis and the lesse Barkes two. The Vice-Roy also of Ainan sent him a rich Present, with a Letter to intreat him to serue the Sonne of the Sunne as Admirall from Laman to Liampoo, at ten thousand Taeis annuall wages, besides (after three yeares end) further aduancement: whereto he excused his vnworthinesse, and departed to Quangiparu, a Citie of fifteene thousand Housholds, and so coasted all alongst the Iland of Ainan seuen monothes space, till the Souldiers were wearie, and required their shares as had beene agreed; which was quieted with promise to winter at Siam, and hauing there made Money of all to giue each man his part.

Quangiparu.

Ilha dos ladrones.

With this agreement they came to an Iland, called Theeues Iland, because standing out of the Bay, it is their place to take the first of the Monson. Here at the new Moone in October wee were encountred with a cruell Tempest in the night, by which the foure Vessels were broken in pieces, fiue hundred eightie sixe persons drowned, of which eight and twentie Portugals; three and fiftie of vs by Gods mercie saued, Faria being one, and one and twentie other Portugals, the rest Slaues and Mariners. They spent two dayes and a halfe in Buriall of their dead, and to get some of their prouision, which yet hauing taken Salt-water, would not last aboue fiue dayes of the fifteene they stayed there. Faria comforted them saying, that God would not permit so much euill but for a greater good; nor would haue taken from them fiue hundred thousand Cruzados, but to giue them sixe hundred thousand: God doth not punish with both hands, his mercie curing the wounds which his Iustice maketh.

Miserable wracke, and their fortnights miseries.

Thus we walked naked, and bare-foot on the Strand & in the Wilderne, suffering hunger and cold, many of our companions dying, not so much for want of food, as the stinke and putrified vnholsomnesse thereof. In this disconsolate plight, a Sea-kite * came flying from behind the South Cape of the Iland, and let fall from his Talons a Mullet a span long; which he taking vp with great prayse to God, and Prayer to Iesus Christ, not to consider their merits, but his merits for them, hee caused it to bee rosted and giuen to the sicke. Looking to the place whence the Fowle came, they saw more of them flying vp and downe, and going thitherwards, discouered a Valley with diuers Fruit-trees, and before they came at it, they found a Deere which a Tygre had newly killed, and with their generall cry was scarred from it, hauing begun to eate it. Wee feasted with it, and with many Mullets which those Sea-kites got, and (scarred with our cries) let fall. This fishing they continued from Munday till Saturday, and then seeing a saile they hid themselues in the Woods. It was a Lantea or Barke with Oares, which came thither with thirtie persons to wood and water; and whiles they were disporting themselues, and had left their Barke vnmanned, Faria apprehended the occasion, and hauing instructed them, at the name of Iesus they all ranne vpon it, entred without gain-saying, and loosing the Prow put to Sea. The Chinois seeing their Lantea taken, hasted to the shoare, but scarred with a little Iron-piece out of their Lantea, they fled to the Thickets. We presently fell to eate, what an old man was dressing for the Chinois, and after searched and found Silkes, Damaskes, Muske, and other goods worth foure thousand Cruzados, besides Rice, Sugar, Hennes, which we most esteemed for recouerie of the sicke. There was a Boy of twelue or thirteene yeares old, whom Faria asked, whence and whose the Lantea was: hee answered, it was his Fathers, from whom they had vnhappily taken in lesse then an houre, all hee had gotten in aboue thirtie yeares: hee came from a place, called Quoaman, where in bartar for Siluer he had gotten those goods, which he was going to sell to the Iunkes of Siam in the Port of Comhay: and now hee going to supply his want of water, you haue taken away his goods without feare of the Iustice of Heauen. Faria promising to vse him as his Sonne; then, said hee, set me on shoare in that miserable Land where my true Father is, with whom I had rather dye then liue with so bad people. Much reasoning passed, and he said, they could speake well of God, but little vsed his Law: neither would he eate in three dayes space.

* Milhano.

Reliefe almost miraculous.

Wonderfull prouision.

Admirable escape.

Quoaman.

Comhay.

We determined to goe for Liampoo, two hundred and sixtie leagues Northwards from thence, and to get if we could, a better Barke, this being little, and scarsly able to brooke those New Moone-stormes on the Coast of China. At Sun-set wee set sayle, and next morning going East North-east, came to an Ile called Guintoo, where we tooke a fisher-barke with store of fresh fish, whence we tooke what we thought fit, with eight men of her, twelue to serue for the Lantea, our men being weake. They told vs that eighteene leagues thence was a good Riuer, called Xinguan, within which was a poore fisher-village, called Xamoy, and three leagues higher vp, a Citie of good Trade. The next day in the euening we came to Xamoy, where a Iunke rode fitter for Farias purpose, which in the night he tooke, the men being asleepe; whom he bound, threatning to kill them all if they made any cry; and sayled presently with her to the Ile Pullo Quirim, nine leagues off, and in three dayes after to an Iland called Luxitay, where for the recouery of the sicke

New Moone. Tempests in China.

Guintoo.

Pullo Quirim.

Digitized by Google

sicke hee stayed fifteene dayes. In the Iunke hee found no Merchandize but Rice, the most of which he cast into the Sea to lighten her, and fit her for our Voyage. Thence wee put forth for Liampoo, where we heard were many Portugals from Malaca, Zunda, Siam, and Patane, which vsed there to winter.

In the way we encountred, after two dayes sayling, with a Iunke of Patane, which belonged to a China Pyrate, called Quiay Panian, a great friend of the Portugals, of whom he had thirtie in his company entertayned in his pay. They not knowing vs, began with a terrible salutation of fifteene Peeces of Artillery, but by Crosses in their Banner, we knew them and made signes, by which both congratulated each other with heartiest greetings, and Quiay Panian and he joyned in league to pursue their Fortunes together. They now purposed to goe to Chincheo, and there found fiue sayle of Portugals, which told them of a great Fleet of foure hundred Iunkes, with one hundred thousand men gone to the Iles of Goto, in succour of Sucan of Pontir, who had voluntarily subjected himselfe to the King of China, in one hundred thousand Taeis Tribute yearely. We tooke out of those fiue ships thirtie fiue Souldiers more, and proceeded on our way for Liampoo. In the way we encountred a small Paraoo with eight Portugals sorely wounded, whereof Antonio Anriquez, and Mem Taborda were, rich men of great esteeme.

Quiay Panian a China Pyrate.

Chincheo.

Goto.

These recounted to him that a Guzerate Rouer, Coia Acem, with three Iunks and foure Lanteas (in which were fiue hundred men, one hundred and fiftie of them Moores) set vpon them (hauing parted seuenteene dayes agoe from Liampoo, for Malaca, purposing to goe for India, if the Monson had permitted) before the Ile Gumbor, and after some houres fight tooke them; eightie two persons (eighteene of them Portugals) were slaine, and as many others captiued, with one hundred thousand Taeis valuein their Iunke: one of the Pyrats Iunks was fired and burnt to the water. These few in the furie of the entry escaped in the little Boat which hung at sterne; they being busied in the spoyle, and the Sunne then set, could not follow, but went into the Riuer with much triumph.

Newes of Coia Acem.

Faria and Quiay Panian who had kindred at Lailoo, prouided themselues there of Powder, Lead, Victuals, and other necessaries for Money, by leaue of the Mandarine, (no Countrey in the World being like China for all kind of prouisions) and there got two greater Iunkes in truck of the other, and two Lanteas, and one hundred and sixtie Mariners, so that they were in all fiue hundred persons, of which ninetie fiue were Portugals. They had one hundred & sixty Harquebusses, forty Brasse Peeces, & sixty Quintals of Powder, nine hundred pots of Powder, foure thousand Darts headed with Iron, Arrowes, and many Fire-workes, with other Weapons. Thus prouided, they set forth in pursuit of Coia Acem, and by a Fisher-boat learned that he was in the Riuer Tinlau, there to furnish and fit the Iunke lately taken from the Portugals, to goe with it and two others for Siam (where he was borne) about ten dayes thence. Faria sent Vicente Moroso in the Fisher-boat, with some of his company to informe himselfe more fully, which making a shew of fishing with the rest, he easily did, and brought word aboard of the easinesse of the attempt. In the night they anchored, and went vp the Riuer in the morning, the enemy knowing nothing till they came in sight, and Faria crying out, Hey, my Masters, in the Name of Christ, to them, to them, Santiago, off went the Ordnance, the small shot succeeded, that none now in the Iunkes durst appeare. His small Vessels (Lorche) comming from the shoare with succour were so entertayned with great shot that they could not helpe themselues, and by our small Vessels were fired with the fire-pots; in three of them two hundred persons were slaine. Out of the fourth they leaped into the water, and were most slaine by Panians men.

Lailoo.

Coia Acem which before was not knowne, seeing his Moores ready to try the waters courtesie to escape those fiery enemies, armed in Buffe, with Plates fringed with Gold, cryed out aloud that he might be heard, La Ilah illallah Muhamed roçolalah: what shall you Muslemans and iust men of the Law of Mahomet, suffer your selues to be conquered of so feeble a Nation as are these Dogges, which haue no more heart then white Hens, and bearded women? to them, to them; the Booke of Flowres hath giuen promise from our Prophet to you and me, to bathe our selues in the bloud of these Cafres without Law. With these cursed words, the Deuill so animated them, that it was fearefull to see how they ranne on our Swords. Faria on the other side heartned his in the name of Christ crucified, and with a zealous feruour reached Coia Acem, such a blow with a two hand Sword on his Head-piece of Maile, that he sunke to the ground, and with another blow cut off his legges. Whereupon his men with such furie assayled Faria, not caring for thirtie Portugals which stood about him, that they gaue him two wounds, which put such spirit into our men, that in little space, eight and fortie of the Enemies lay dead vpon Coia Acem, and the rest they slue all but fiue, whom they tooke and bound, the Boyes cutting the others in quarters, and throwing them into the water with Coia Acem, and the King of Bintans chiefe Caciz, or Priest, the shedder and the drinker of Portugall bloud, as he stiled himselfe in the beginning of his Writings, for which hee was of that cursed Sect much honoured.

Opima spolia. Coia Acem slaine.

The Caciz hatred of Christians.

Of the Enemies were slaine three hundred and eightie, of ours fortie two (eight of which were Portugals, Faria searched the Iland, and found a Village therein of fortie or fiftie houses, which Coia Acem had sacked, slaying some of the Inhabitants. Not farre off was a great house ſeeming a Temple full of ſicke and wounded men, ninetie ſixe in number, which the Pyrat had there in cure, whom he burned, ſetting the houſe on fire in diuers places, thoſe that ſought to eſcape being receiued on Pikes and Launces. The Iunke which they had taken from the Portugals, ſixe and twentie dayes before, Faria gaue to Mem Taborda, and Antonio Anriquez in Almes for remiſſion of his ſinnes, taking their Oath to take no more but their owne. He tooke ſpeciall care of the wounded, and cauſed the ſlaues to be ſet free. After all this, there remayned of cleere gaines, one hundred and thirtie thouſand Taeis in Siluer, of Iapan and other goods, which that Pyrat had taken along that Coaſt from Sumbor to Fucheo.

Digitized by Google

§. II.

ANTONIO FARIA his taking of Nouda a Citie in China, triumph at Liampoo; ſtrange Voyage to Calempluy, miſerable ſhipwracke.

Faria wracked the ſecond time.

FAria hauing recouered his ſicke men, ſet ſayle for Liampoo, and beeing comne to the point of Micuy in ſixe and twentie degrees, by a ſtorme he was driuen vpon a Rock in the darke night, and was forced to caſt out all the goods, and cut all their Maſts ouer-board; and with much adoe we eſcaped with their helpe (two and twentie drowned by ouer-haſtineſſe) to the Iunke of Mem Taborda. The ſecond day after came two Portugals from Quiay Panians Iunke, and plained to vs their almoſt like misfortune (one guſt hauing taken away three men, and caſt them a ſtones caſt into the Sea) and the loſſe of the ſmall Iunke with fiftie perſons, moſt of which were Chriſtians, and ſeuen Portugals. One of the Lanteas came and told of their diſaduenture, the other Lantea loſt, only thirteene men eſcaping, which the Countrey people carryed Captiues to Nouday: ſo that two Iunkes and a Lantea with aboue one hundred perſons were loſt, and in Munition and other goods, aboue two hundred thouſand Cruzados, the Captayne and Souldiers hauing nothing left but that on their backes. The Coaſt of China is ſubiect to theſe ſtrokes more then other Countries, ſo that none can ſayle thereon one yeare without diſaſters, except at the full and change, they betake them to their Ports, which are many and good, without barred entries, except Laman and Sumbor.

Violent wind.

Nouday.

China perillous Coaſt.

Faria went and anchored before Nouday and ſent ſome to ſound, and to take ſome of the people to enquire of his men, who brought a Barke with eight men and two women, one of whom (hauing firſt ſworne by the Sea, that it below, and the winds aboue ſhould purſue him if hee brake his Faith, and the beautie of the ſtarres whoſe eyes beheld all wrong, as the Chineſe requeſted) told him that he taking them to be Sea Rouers and Robbers, had taken them and caſt them in Irons. Faria writ to the Mandarin by two of thoſe Chinois, with a Preſent worth two hundred Duckets to returne his men, which returned the next day with an Anſwere written, that himſelfe ſhould come and demand Iuſtice at his feet, and he would doe as hee ſaw cauſe. Hee wrote againe, offering two thouſand Taeis for their Redemption, ſignifying that hee was a Portugall Merchant, which came to trade at Liampoo, and payd Cuſtomes without any Robbery; and that the King of Portugall his Lord was in true amitie with his Brother the King of China, and in Malaca his ſubiects vſed the Chinois juſtly. This calling the King of Portugall the King of Chinas Brother, he tooke ſo hainouſly, that he cauſed the China Meſſengers to be whipped, and their eares cut, and ſent them backe with a railing Anſwere written to Faria, which had ſo proudly blaſphemed, calling his King the Brother of the Sonne of the Sunne, the Lion crowned with incredible power in the Throne of the Vniuerſe, vnder whoſe feet all Crownes of all that gouerne the Earth, are placed with all their Seniories, as all Writers affirme in their Hiſtories. For this Hereſie he burned his Writing with his Picture, as he would doe to himſelfe, charging him preſently to ſet ſayle and be gone. Faria enraged, reſolued to aſſault the Towne, hauing three hundred men, (ſeuentie of them Portugals) with the company of Quiay Panian, for that feat.

Nouday aſſaulted.

Hauing therefore taken foure Barkes, the next morning betimes with them, three Iunkes and a Lorcha or Lantea, he went vp the Riuer, and had ſixe fathomes water and an halfe anchoring by the wals. And ſtriking ſayle without ſalutation of Artillery, we put off our Flagge of contract, after the China cuſtome, to fulfill all complements of peace, ſending new offers of loue and further ſatisfaction for the Priſoners. But the Mandarine full of indignation, hardly vſed the Meſſengers on the wall in ſight of the Armada; whereupon, Faria deſperate of doing any good that way leauing order with the Iunkes continually to ſhoot at the Enemie where they were thickeſt, he with his company landed without contradiction, and marched to the Towne. When we were comne within little more then a Calieuer ſhot of the Ditch without the wall, there iſſued by two gates one thouſand, or twelue hundred; about one hundred of them Horſemen, or Hackneymen rather (for they rode on leane Iades) which began to skirmiſh in ſuch diſordered ſort, encountring one with another, and many of them falling to the ground, that they seemed to be of some neighbour Villages, which came more of force then with force or heart to the busines. Faria expected them, encouraging his men, and making a signe to the Iunkes.

ſee-

The Horsemen diuided themselues, and wheeled about, as if that would haue scarred vs, which seeing, without effect they joyned in one bodie or heape rather; whereat the Captayne commanded all the Caleeuers to shoot off at once, with such successe, that the former halfe of the Horsemen fell to ground. And then wee which till that time had stood still gaue the assault, crying on the name of Iesus, insomuch that they fled so confusedly, that they fell one vpon another, and when they came to the Bridge ouer the Ditch, they thronged themselues so that none could goe forward. In this case we came on them, and slue aboue three hundred, none of them scarsly drawing Sword to defend themselues. Wee prosecuted the victory to the gate, in which was the Mandarine with sixe hundred men, fairely mounted, armed with a Corslet of Crimson Veluet gilded, which we knew after to haue belonged to Tome Perez, which King Emanuel of glorious memorie had sent Embassadour to China. Hee and his began a fight with vs in the entrie of the gate, more valorous then the former, till a Boy of ours dismounted the Mandarine from his Horse with a Harquebusse shot thorow the breast, which caused the rest disorderly to flee, and we with them into the Towne. They casting downe their weapons ranne out at another gate toward the Countrey, none remayning. Antonio Faria gathering his companie together, marched orderly to the Chifanga, the Prison where our men were, brake vp the gates and grates, and freed his men. Then did he appoint halfe an houre to his people for spoile, himselfe going to the Mandarines house, and had 8000. Taeis of Siluer there, & fiue great boxes of Muske: the rest he gaue to the Boyes, which was much Silke twisted, and vnwrought, Damaske, Sattin, Porcelane; the sacke was so rich, that foure Barkes or Vessels in which they came, went foure times laden therewith to the Iunkes, that there was neither Boy nor Mariner which had not a Chist or Chists of pieces, besides what they had secretly. Hauing spent an houre and halfe, he seeing night now come on, set fire in ten or twelue parts of the Citie, which being built of Pine timber suddenly arose into such a flame, that it seemed a Hell. And without impediment, he embarked his company with much riches, and many faire Girles tyed by foures and fiues with Match, they crying, ours triumphing.

Thomas Perez.

The Mandarine slaine.

Prisoners loosed.

The Towne sacked.

It was now late, yet had Faria care of the wounded, which were fiftie of them, eight Portugals, and to burie the dead, which were nine only one Portugall; and keeping good watch that night, as soone as it was day, he went to a Village on the other side of the water, and found not one person in it, the houses still furnished with goods and prouisions, with which he laded the Iunkes: and departed for a desart Iland fifteene leagues from Liampoo, called Pullo Hinhor, where was good water and anchorage. After wee had sayled fiue dayes betwixt the Iles Comolem and the continent, Prematà Gundel a Rouer which had done much damage to the Portugals in Patane, Sunda, Siam, taking vs for Chineses, set vpon vs with two great Iunkes, in which were two hundred fighting men besides Mariners, and grapling with the Iunke of Mem Taborda, had almost taken it, when Quiay Panian came to her succour with such a stroke on her quarter, that both sunke; the three Lorchæ which Faria brought from Nouday comming in, saued most of our men, the enemies being all drowned, and Mem Taborda freed. Meane while, Prematà Gundel had with two hookes and Iron chaines fastned himselfe to Farias Iunke, both in the poope and prow, such a cruell battell following, that in lesse then an houre most of Farias men and himselfe were wounded, and twice in danger of taking, when the three Lorchæ, and a little Iunke which Pero Sylua had taken at Nouday, came in to his succour, so that eightie sixe Moores which had entred Farias Iunke were slaine, who had cooped our men before in the poop-roome; and thence entring the Pirats Iunke, put all therein to the sword.

Comolem Ilands.

Prematà Gundel a Pirate.

Another sea-fight.

Panians Iunke, and another sunke.

Farias victorie.

This victorie cost seuenteene of ours their liues, fiue of them of the best Portugall Souldiers, besides three and fortie wounded. The prize was valued at eightie thousand Taeis, the most of it Iapan Siluer, which the Pirate had taken in three Iunkes, come from Firando bound for Chincheo. In the other sunken Iunkes was said to be as much. With this prize Faria went to a little Iland, called Buncalou, foure leagues off, and stayed there eighteene dayes, making Cottages for the wounded, which there recouered health. Thence they departed, Quiay Panian going in that Iunke of the Pirate, with 20000. Taeis ouer and aboue for his part: in sixe dayes we came to the Ports of Liampoo, which are two Iles, in which the Portugals made at that time their contractation, and was a Towne of one thousand houses, and sixe or seuen Churches built by them, with Sherifs, an Auditor, Alcaides, and other Officers; the Notaries vsing to write, I, N. publike Notarie for the King our Lord, in this Citie of Liampoo, &c. as if it had beene seated betwixt Santarem and Lisbon: and such was their forwardnesse, that some houses cost three or foure thousand Cruzados, all which were razed afterwards by the Chinois; so vncertaine are the things of China (which in these parts are so esteemed) so subiect to disastres and disaduentures.

120000 Cruzados.

Buncalou.

Liampoo, a Portugall Towne on the coast of China, seuen leagues from Liampoo.

When Faria was come to Portas de Liampoo, he sent Mem Taborda, and Anriques first to acquaint the Townes-men what had passed, who sent Ieronymo do Rego with two Lanteas, to thanke him for the bountie shewed in the case of Coia Acem, and with refreshings; and for the busines

Digitized by Google

Ciuill warres in China. Fabulous tumour. Quuaſy.

Farias triumph

Calempluy.

Currents in in the Bay of Nanquin.

Angitur.

Nanganſu.

Silcupaquim.

Bay of Nanquin.

Buxipalem.

Strange Fiſhes

buſineſſe at Nouday, he need not beafraid there to winter, the King of China being as they ſaid, lately dead, and ciuill warres ſucceeding, thirteene competitors being in Armes to enforce their pretended right: and that the Tutan Nay, which was next perſon to the King in all the Gouernment, with meere and mixt Empire of Maieſtie Regall, was beſieged in the Citie of Quoanſy, by Prechan Muan Emperour of Cauchinas; in whoſe fauour it is holden for certaine, that the King of Tartaria is comming with an Armie of nine hundred thouſand men: and that in this troubled eſtate Nouday would not be thought of, which was in compariſon of many other Cities in China, leſſe then Oeiras compared with Lisbon. He was ſixe dayes after with great triumph and glorious ſhewes, made of his owne Fleet, and of the many Boats, Barkes, and Citizens which came to fetch him, there being three hundred men in feſtiuall apparell, with many Gold Chaines, and gilded Swords, till he came into the Port, in which rode in a rew, twentie ſix Ships, and eightie Iunks, beſides a greater number of ſmaller veſſels, faſtned one before another in two wings, making a ſtreet betwixt them, adorned with Laurell, and other greene boughes, and ſweet herbs, the Ordnance thundring on both ſides a congratulation. The Chinois wondred, and asked if he were Brother or neere Kinſman to their King, they receiued him in ſuch honour: Nay, ſaid a conceited Portugall, but his father ſhooed the Kings Horſes, and therefore is he worthie of this honour. Hereat they were more then amazed, and ſaid, There were great Kings in the World, of which their Authours had made no mention, and the King of Portugall ſeemes one of them, and much to exceed the Cauchim, or the Tartar, and it were no ſinne to ſay he may hold compare with the Sonne of the Sunne, the Lion crowned in the Throne of the World. Others confirmed the ſame, alledging the great riches which the bearded men generally poſſeſſed. A glorious Lantea was purpoſely adorned for his perſon in which hee went, with many Muſicall Inſtruments of the Chinas, Malayos, Champaas, Siamites, Borneos, Lequios, and other Nations which there ſecured themſelues vnder the Portugals, for feare of Rouers which filled thoſe Seas.

I ſhould wearie you to let you ſee the reſt of thic pompous ſpectacle, and more to heare their Orations preferring him before Alexander, Scipio, Annibal, Pompey, Cæſar: Neither will Religion let mee goe with him to their Maſſe: nor doe I euer dine worſe then at ſolemne Feaſts; and others will grudge me a roome at Comedies: all which pompes I will leaue to our Author, enlarged by the Spaniſh tranſlator, Canon of the Church of Arbas, as dedicated to Manuel Seuerin de Faria. There hee ſtayed fiue moneths, ſpending the time in Hawking, Hunting, Fiſhing, Feaſting. Quiay Panian in this time dyed. After hee made ready to goe to the Mines of Quoangiparu. Others diſſwaded him by reaſon of warres in thoſe parts, and a famous Pyrat called Similau, told him of an Iland called Calempluy, in which ſeuenteene Kings of China were buried with much treaſures, in Veſts, and Idols of Gold, and other incredible riches; which hee on no other teſtimonie embraced, (without conſulting with his friends, who not a little blamed him therefore) and went with Similau in ſearch of this Iland, ſetting out May the fourteenth, 1542.

He ſet foorth with two Panouras, which are as it were Frigots, but ſomewhat higher: Iunkes he vſed not, both for ſecrecie, and becauſe of the Currents which ſet out of the Bay of Nanquin, which great ſhips cannot ſtemme, by reaſon of the ouer-flowings from Tartaria and Nixiburu Flaon, in thoſe moneths of May, Iune, and Iuly. He had with him ſixe and fiftie Portugals, with a Prieſt, and fortie eight Mariners of Patane, and fortie two Slaues: more our Pilot Similau would not admit, fearing ſuſpition in trauerſing the Bay of Nanquin, and entry of many Riuers much inhabited. That day and night wee cleared the Iles of Angitur, and followed our voyage thorow a Sea before neuer ſayled by Portugals. The firſt fiue dayes, we ſayled with good winde, in ſight of land to the entrie of the Bay of Nanquins fiſhings, and paſſed a gulfe of fortie leagues, and had ſight of a high Hill called Nangaſu, alongſt which we ranne to the North fiue dayes; at the end whereof, Similau put into a ſmall Riuer, the people whereof were white, of good ſtature, with ſmall eyes like the Chinois, but differing in ſpeech and behauiour. After three dayes the tempeſt ceaſing, we ſet ſayle Eaſt North-eaſt, ſeuen dayes together in ſight of land, and croſſing another gulfe, there was a ſtraight open to the Eaſt, called Silcupaquim, ten leagues in the mouth, within which we ſayled fiue dayes in ſight of many Townes and Cities very faire; and this Riuer or ſtraight was frequented with innumerable ſhipping; inſomuch that Faria was afraid to bee diſcouered, and would needs againſt Similaus minde turne ſome other way. Thus out of the Bay of Nanquin (Similau telling them of a moneths worke of ſayling by the Riuer Sumbepadan, one hundred and ſeuentie leagues diſtant thence to the North) wee ſayled fiue dayes, at the end whereof wee ſaw a very high Hill called Fanius, and comming neere it, entred a goodly rode, where one thouſand ſhips might ride at anchor. Wee ſayled thence thirteene dayes along the coaſt, and came to the Bay of Buxipalem in 49. degrees, where wee found it ſomwhat cold and ſaw Fiſhes of ſtrange ſhapes, ſome like Thornbacks, aboue foure braces or fathoms compaſſe, flat noſed like an Oxe; ſome like great Lizards, ſpeckled blacke and greene, with three rewes of prickles on the backe, like briſtles, three ſpannes long, very ſharpe, the reſt of the body full, but of ſhorter; theſe Fiſhes will contract themſelues like Hedge-hogs, and looke fearefully; they haue a ſharpe blacke ſnout with tuskes, after the manner of a Bore, two ſpannes long.

Digitized by Google

long. Other deformities and diuerſities of Fiſhes we ſaw. Fifteene leagues further, we came to an another fairer Bay called Calnidan, ſixe leagues in compaſſe ſet round with Hills, diuerſified with Woods and Riuers, foure very great. Calnidan.

Similau ſayd that the filth of dead Carcaſſes of creatures, proceeding from the ouerflowings, ſpecially in Nouember, December, and Ianuarie, at the full of the Moone, cauſed the generation of ſuch diuerſitie of Fiſhes and Serpents in that Bay, and the former, which were not ſeene in other parts of that Coaſt. Faria asked him whence thoſe Riuers came, and hee ſaid that he knew not, but if it were true which was written, two of them came from a great lake called Moſcumbia, and the other two from a Prouince of great Mountaines, which all the yeere were couered with ſnow, called Alimania, and in Summer when great part of the ſnow was melted, they became ſo impetuous, as wee now ſaw: and for that Riuer in the mouth whereof we were entred, called Paatebenam, wee were now in the name of the Lord of heauen to turne the Prow to the East, and East South-east * to ſearch againe the Bay of Nanquim, which we had left behind two hundred and ſixtie leagues, all which way we had made higher then Calempluy. The ſecond day we came to a high Mountaine called Botmafan, ſtored with diuers kindes of wilde beaſts, which continued neere fiftie leagues and ſixe dayes ſayling: and after came to another Hill as wilde as the former, called Gangitanon, and all the way forward was mountainous, and ſo thicke of trees that the Sunne could not pierce. Similau ſayd, that in ninetie leagues ſpace there was no habitation, and in the skirts thereof liued a deformed ſauage people onely by their Hunting, and ſome Rice which they got in China, by exchange of wilde beaſts skinnes, which hee ſayd came to aboue a million yeerely. Of theſe Giganhos, wee ſaw a beardleſſe youth with ſixe or ſeuen Kine before him, to whom Similau made a ſigne, and hee ſtayed till we came to the Bankes ſide, and ſhewing him a piece of greene Taffata (which hee ſayd they much eſteemed) with a harſh voyce he ſayd, Quiten paran fanfan, words which none vnderſtood. Faria commanded to giue him three or foure Couados of the taffata, and ſixe Porcelanes, which he receiued with much ioy, ſaying, Pur param pocby pilaca bunangue doren, ſigning with his hand to the place whence hee came, and leauing his Kine, he ranne thither. He was cloathed with a Tygers skin, the hayre outward, his armes, head and legges bare, with a rude pole in his hand; well ſhaped, ſeeming ten palmes or ſpans long, his hayre hanging on his ſhoulders. Within a quarter of an houre hee returned with a liue Deere on his backe, and thirteene perſons with him, eight men and fiue women, with three Kine tyed in coards dancing at the ſound of a Drum, giuing now and then fiue ſtrokes on it, and other fiue with their hands, crying aloude, Cur cur bimau falem. Antonio de Faria, cauſed to ſhew them fiue or ſixe pieces and many Porcelanes. All of them were cloathed in like manner, only the women had on their wriſts groſſe bracelets of Tin, their hayre longer then the men, and full of Flowers, and on their neckes a great neck-lace with coloured Shels, as big as Oyſter-ſhels. The men had great poles in their hands, furred halfe way with ſuch Pelts as they wore; they were ſtrong ſet, with thicke lippes, flat noſes, great open noſtrils, bigge faces. Faria cauſed to meaſure them, and none of them were higher then ten ſpannes and a halfe, one old man nigh eleuen, the women not ten; but I ſuppoſe the moſt ſauage that euer yet were diſcouered. Faria gaue them three corges of Porcelane, a piece of greene Taffata, and a basket of Pepper; and they fell on the ground, and lifting vp their hands with their fiſts ſhut, ſayd, Unnguahilen opomguapan lapan, lapan, lapan. They gaue vs the three Kine and the Deere, and after many words, in three houres conference returned with like dance as they came.

Paatebenam.
* A leſte & à leſſueſte.
Botinafan.
Gangitanon.
Giants.
Their wilde dance.
A Corge is 20.

Wee followed our way fiue dayes more vp the Riuer, about fortie leagues, in which we had ſight of that people, and ſixteene dayes more without ſight of any, at the end of which we came to the Bay of Nanquim, hoping in fiue or ſixe dayes to effect our deſires. Similau willed Faria not to let his Portugals be ſeene. And hauing ſayled ſixe dayes East and East North-east, we had ſight of a great Citie called Sileupamor, and entred into the Port two houres within night, being a faire Bay almoſt two leagues in circuit, where abundance of ſhipping rode at anchor, ſeeming aboue three thouſand: which made vs ſo afraid, that out againe we went, and croſſing the Riuer (which may bee about ſixe or ſeuen leagues ouer) wee ranne alongſt a great Champaine the reſt of the day with purpoſe to get ſome refreſhing, hauing paſſed thirteene hungry dayes. We came to an old building called Tanamadel, and got prouiſion to our mindes. This place, the Chinois which wee found there, told vs, belonged to an Hoſpitall two leagnes thence for entertainment of the Pilgrims, which viſited the Kings Sepulcher. Wee continued our voyage ſeuen dayes more, hauing ſpent two moneths and a halfe ſince wee came from Liampoo, and now Faria could no longer conceale his diſcontent, that hee had thus followed Similaus proiect, and receiuing of him anſwer little to the purpoſe, had ſtabbed him with his Dagger if others had not interpoſed Similau, the night following as wee rode at anchor neere the land, ſwam a ſhoare, the watch not perceiuing, which Faria hearing was ſo impatient, that going on ſhoare to ſeeke him, hee returned fruſtrate, and found of his ſixe and fortie Chinais, two and thirtie fled. Full now of confuſion, it was by counſell reſolued to ſeeke Calemplay, which could not be farre off: and the next night entred a Barke riding at anchor, and tooke fiue men ſleeping therein; of whom hee

Sileupamor.
Tanamadel.

learned

Digitized by Google

learned that Calempluy was ten leagues off, and with their helpe found it, eightie three dayes after he had set out on that enterprise.

This Iland was seated in the midst of the Riuer, and seemed to bee a league in Compasse. Hither came Faria with trouble and feare, three houres within night, anchoring about a chamber shot from it. In the morning it was agreed, first to goe about it to see what entrances it had, and what impediments might befall their designe. The Iland was all enuironed with a rampire of hewen Marble, sixe and twentie spannes high, so well cut and set together, that all the wall seemed but one piece, the like whereof wee had neuer seene in India, or elsewhere: from the bottome of the water to the brim, it contayned other sixe and twentie spannes. In the top was a border of the same worke round ingirting it, like a Friers girdle, of the bignesse of a rundlet of twelue gallons, on which were set grates of Latten turned, euery sixe fathoms fastened into holes of the same Latten; in each of which was the Idoll of a woman, with a round ball in her hands, none knowing what it signified. Within these grates, was a rew of many Monsters of cast Iron, which in manner of a dance hand in hand, compassed the Ile round. Further inwards from those monstrous Idols, in the same ranke, was another of Arches of rich worke pleasant to behold. And all from hence inward, was a groue of dwarfe Orange-trees thicke set; in the midst whereof were builded three hundred and sixtie Hermitages, dedicated to the Gods of the yeere, whereof those Paynims haue many fabulous praises. A quarter of a league higher, on a hill to the East, were seene buildings with seuen fronts of houses like Churches, all from the top to the bottome wrought with gold, with high Towers seeming Bell-steeples; and without, two streets with Arches which encompassed these buildings, of the same worke with the fronts; and all from the highest top of the steeple pinacles to the bottom wrought with gold; whereby we iudged it some sumptuous and rich Temple.

The wonderfull wall.

Statues.

360. Hermitages.

Steples-pinacles.

After this view taken, Faria resolued (though it were late) to goe on shoare, to see if he could speake with any in those Hermitages; and so (leauing sufficient guard in the Barkes) with fortie Souldiers, twentie Slaues, and foure Chinois, (which knew the place, and had beene sometimes there, and might serue vs for Interpreters) he committed the two Barkes to Father Diego Lobato, and entred at one of the eight Entrances; walking thorow the Orangetto-groue to an Hermitage, two Caliuer shots from our landing place, with the greatest silence that might bee, and with the name of Iesus in our heart and mouth. Hauing yet seene no person, he felt at the doore of the Hermitage with his Halberd, and perceiued it locked on the inside: hee bade one of the Chinois knocke, which hauing done twice, he heard an answer within answering, Praised bee the Creator which gilded the beautious Heauens, goe about and I will know thy businesse. The Chinois went about and entring the backe doore, opened that where Faria stood, who with his companie going in, found one man seeming aboue one hundred yeeres old, in a long Russet Damaske garment, by his presence seeming Noble (as after wee learned he was) who seeing such a troupe fell downe, trembling hand and foot. A good while it was before hee could speake, and then asked what wee were, and what we sought. The Interpreter answered by Farias command, that hee was the Captaine of these strangers of Siam, who bound for the Port of Liampoo in trade of Merchandise was wracked at Sea; hee and these escaping miraculously, and therefore vowing to come to that Holy land on Pilgrimage, to praise God for deliuerance from so great a danger, and was now come to fulfill it; and withall to demand somewhat in almes to relieue him for his returne, protesting after three yeeres to restore it double whatsoeuer hee now tooke. Hiticon (that was his name) answered, I haue well heard what thou hast said, and that damnable designe whereto thy blindnesse (as the Pilot of Hell) hath drawne thee and thine associates to the bottome of the lake of night. For in stead of thankes for so great a benefit, thou commest to rob: and what I pray thee will the Diuine iustice repay thee at thy last breath! change thou thy euill purpose, and (beleeue me) God will change thy punishment. Faria prayed him, hee would not bee angry, saying, hee had no other remedie of life: whereat the Hermite lifting his hands and eyes to Heauen, sayd, weeping. Blessed bee thou Lord, which sufferest on earth men, which take for remedie of life thine offences, and for certaintie of glorie will not serue thee one day. And then turning his eyes to the companie which were rifling the Hangings and Chests, taking the siluer from amongst the bones of the deceased therein, hee fell twice from his seate with griefe; and pensiuely put Faria in minde of his last breath, of restitution, of penance perpetuall to his flesh, and liberall and discreet communicating to the poore, that the seruant of night should haue nothing to accuse him in the day of account: praying him also to command his companie, to gather vp the bones of the Saints, that they should not lye contemptible on the ground. Faria gaue him many good words and complements, professing himselfe (which hee whispered neerer) sorrie of what had passed, but if hee should not doe it, his companie had threatened to kill him. If it bee so, said the Hermit, then shall thy paine bee lesse then these ministers of night, whom as hungry Dogs, it seemes all the siluer of the world would not satisfie.

He goeth on land.

Iesus made a patron of theeues.

He enters an Hermitage.

The speech betwixt Faria and an Hermit

Absolons vowes

Compleat hypocrisie.

Thus with many good words hee tooke leaue of the Hermit (hauing taken all they could get) who told him his knowledge might make his sinne more penall. Nuno Coelho praying him not to be so

Digitized by Google

so angry for so small a matter, hee replyed, More small is the feare which thou hast of death, when having spent thy life in foule facts, thy soule shall stand as foule at the passage of this dung-hill of thy flesh. And if thou seekest more Siluer to fill thy infernall appetite, thou mayst finde in the houses adioyning enough to make it split, as well in danger of Hell for this already, saue that more burthened thou shalt descend swifter to the bottome. Pray, sayd Coelho, take all in patience, for so God hath commanded in his holy Law : the Hermit shaking off his head, sayd, I now see that which I neuer thought to haue heard, Inbred wickednesse and vertue fained, the same man stealing and preaching: and turning to Faria, prayed him that hee would not suffer them to spet on the Altar, being liefer to dye a thousand times then to see it, which he promised. Hee then demanded of Hitticon, what persons liued in all those houses ; who answered, three hundred and sixtie Talagrepos onely, and fortie Menigrepos which serued them without, for their prouision, and the care of the Sicke. Hee asked if the Kings vsed to come thither : no sayd he, The King being sonne of the Sunne, can absolue all and none may condemne him. Asked of their Armes, hee sayd, To goe to Heauen, there needed not armes to offend, but patience to suffer. For the mixture of that Siluer with dead bones in the chests, hee answered, that it was the Almes which the deceased carryed with them, to prouide them of necessities in the heauen of the Moone. Asked of women with them, hee sayd, that the Bee stings those which eate the honey, and pleasures of the flesh needed not to the life of the Soule. And thus parted hee from the Hermit with embraces, with purpose to returne the next day (it being now night) to the other houses, and not taking aboard with him this Hermit, as hee was aduised, saying, his gowtie legges could carrie no tydings of vs : which yet hee did, creeping to the next, and bidding him goe call the Bonzij.

The Hermitages, Hermits & attendants, as Lay brethren. Papall power.

For an houre after midnight, wee saw fires in a rew, which our Chinois told vs, were signes of our discouerie, and therefore aduised vs to haste away. Faria was awakened, and would needs a shoare with sixe men, and ranne like a mad-man from one place to another : his companie requested him to haste away, and he answered, for his honour hee would first see the danger, and intreated them to stay one halfe houre, and swearing hereto, away hee goeth, and followes the sound of a Bell to an Hermitage, in which were two men in religious habits ; the place was richer then the former wee had beene in. They tooke thence an Idoll of Siluer from the Altar with a myter of Gold on his head, and a wheele in his hand, and three Candlesticks of siluer with long chaynes ; and taking the two Hermits with them, returned aboard the Barkes with great haste. Of one of these, they learned that Pilau Angiroo had come to the house of the Sepulchers of the Kings, and cryed out to them to awaken out of their sleepe, telling them of their oath to the Goddesse Amida, of Strangers with long beards and Iron bodies, which had robbed the Saints, and would kill them all, whence followed the fires, and sending to giue notice to the Cities Corpilem, and Fumbana for ayde, their Religion prohibiting them to handle any thing which might draw bloud. Faria now hauing gone downe the Riuer a great way, was much enraged for omitting such oportunitie, plucking his beard, and beating himselfe with anguish, till not long after his heate was cooled.

They are discouered.

§. III.

Their Shipwracke in which Faria and most of them were drowned ; the miserable wandrings of the rest to Nanquin : their Imprisonment, sentence and appeale to Pequin ; rarities obserued in those places and wayes ; of the beginnings of the China Kingdome, and of their admirable Wall.

SEuen dayes wee layled thorow the Bay of Nanquim, the force of the current carrying vs more speedily, and came all discontent to a Village called Susoquerim, and there prouided our selues of victuall and instruction, and entred into a straight called Xalingau, in which wee ranne in nine dayes one hundred and fortie leagues, and turning to enter the same Bay of Nanquim, which was there ten or twelue leagues wide, wee sayled with Westerly windes thirteene dayes : and being in the sight of the Mines of Conxinacan in 41. degrees and two thirds, there a Tufan or tempest from the South, tooke vs with windes and raines seeming more then naturall, and the winde chopped into the North North-west, the Sea going so high that (except our prouisions and Chests of plate) we threw all into the Sea, cut both our masts ouer-board, and about midnight heard a great cry in the Pantra of Antonia de Faria, Mercy Lord God, whereby wee imagined shee was cast away ; we seconded the same cry, but heard no answer. Our Barke also the next day, split on a Rocke, and of fiue and twentie Portugals, eleuen were drowned, besides eighteene Christian boyes, and seuen China Mariners. This hapned the fifth of August, 1542.

Xalingau.

Conxinacau.

Faria drowned, and both the Barkes wracked.

Wee fourteene which escaped, the next day trauelled into the Land, alongst a Hill, and discouered a Lake, without shew of Land, which made vs returne backe, where wee found our men cast caſt on ſhoare, to the renewing of our ſorrow, and the next day buried them, that the Tigres (of which there are many) ſhould not eate them. In this, hauing nothing but our hands to doe it, and they thirtie ſixe now ſtinking, wee ſpent the moſt part of the day. Thence wee went Northward thorow the Woods three dayes, till wee came at a ſtraight, without ſight of any perſon. In ſwimming ouer three men and a boy were drowned, being faint, the current ſtrong, and the water ſomewhat ſpacious: the men were two brethren Belchior and Gaſpar Barboſa, and Franciſco Borges Cayciro, all of Ponte de Lima, and of good account. Wee which remayned (eleuen men and three boyes) paſſing that obſcure nights winds, raines, and cold, imitated by our diſconſolate ſighs, teares, and feares, ſaw before day a fire Eaſtward, and went right towards it, commending our ſelues to God our only hope. And trauelling along the Riuer, wee came in the euening where fiue men were making Coles, and caſting our ſelues at their feet, deſired them to take pitie on vs, and helpe vs to ſome place where wee might finde reliefe. They gaue vs a little Rice and warme water, and ſhewed vs the way to a Village where was an Hoſpitall, to which wee came an houre within night, and found there foure men appointed to that charge, which vſed vs charitably.

Digitized by Google

Foure other drowned.

An Hoſpitall.

The next day they asked what wee were, and whence: and wee told them, ſtrangers of Siam *, which came from the Port of Liampoo to the fiſhing at Nanquim, where by tempeſt we loſt all but our battered fleſh. They asked what wee intended to doe, and wee anſwered, to goe to Nanquim, to get paſſage to Cantan, or Combay, where our Countrey-men haue trade by licence of the Aitao of Paquim, vnder the ſhadow of The Sonne of the Sunne, the Lion crowned in the Throne of the World; for whoſe ſake we deſired them to let vs ſtay there till we had recouered ſtrength to trauell, and to giue vs ſome clothing to couer vs. They carried vs about the Village, and begged ſome old clothes and victuals, and two Taeis in money for our reliefe, and gaue vs two Taeis of the Houſe; and with words of much comfort to truſt in God, they gaue vs a Letter of commendation to the Hoſpitall of Sileyiacau, which was in a great Towne three leagues thence, and had better maintenance. Thither we went, and ſhewed our Letter from the Ouerſeers of Buatendoo, in the ſaid Village of Catthoran to the Officers of this houſe, which ſate then at Table in conſultation, and the Scribe reading the Letter, they accommodated vs in a neat roome with fourteene Beds, a Table, and many Stooles, and Meate; and next morning examined vs, wee anſwering as before. They gaue charge to a Phyſician to cure vs, and wrote our names in a Booke, to which we ſubſcribed. In eighteene dayes wee all recouered, and went thence to a place called Suſoanganee, fiue leagues off, and ſate downe wearie at a Well, where one came to vs with a handful of Wheat eares, which he wetted in the water, and adjured vs holding the ſame in our hands, by theſe ſubſtances of bread and water, which the high Creator had made for the ſuſtenance of man to tell the truth what we were, &c. which we did, anſwering as before; and he gaue leaue to his neighbours to relieue vs. They layde vs in a Church Porch, and gaue vs victuals, and the next day we begged from doore to doore foure Taeis, which well helped our wants.

* Malaca is ſaid to ſtand in the Kingdome of Siam, though now not yeelding ſubiection.

Sileyiacau.

Suzanganee. Strange oath.

Thence we went two leagues to Xiangulee, with intent to goe to Nanquim, one hundred and fortie leagues diſtant. Comming thither late, three boyes which were feeding Cattell, ranne into the Towne with an out-crie of Theeues; the people running out, and ſo welcomming vs, that one of the boyes died with the blowes. They kept vs two dayes in a Ciſterne of water vp to the waſte, full of Horſ-leaches, without victuals, and our hands bound; whence by a man of Suzanganee, wee were freed, reporting better things of vs. Thence wee went to Fingmilau (in the way finding good reliefe at a Gentlemans houſe) ſtill auoyding Cities and Townes of note, for feare of ſtricter iuſtice, two moneths holding on our way, ſometime in, ſometimes out, from Village to Village, one of which was Chautir, where a woman was then buried which had made the Idoll her Heire, and we were inuited as poore men to eate at her Graue, and had ſixe Taeis giuen vs to pray for her ſoule. At Taypor an Officer charged vs to be Rogues, begging againſt the Law, and therefore layed vs in Priſon, where we continued ſixe and twentie dayes, in which Rodrigues Brauo, one of our companie died. Thence wee were ſent to Nanquim, and there continued ſixe weekes in a miſerable Priſon (in which was ſaid to be foure thouſand Priſoners) where two of our companie and a boy died of the whipping, and the reſt hardly eſcaped; being beſides ſentenced alſo to haue our thumbs cut off as theeues.

Xiangulee hard vſage.

Chautir.

Taypor.

Nanquim.

After this bloudy whipping, they brought vs to a houſe within the Priſon where wee were cured, being as it were an Hoſpitall for the ſicke, where in eleuen dayes wee were pretily well recouered, but lamenting the cutting off our thumbes according to the rigour of the Sentence which had beene giuen, one morning came in two honourable perſons which were Procurers of the poore. Theſe queſtioned vs of our caſe, and hearing the ſame, made a Petition to the Chaem on our behalfe, and the eight Conchacis, which are as it were Criminall Iudges; and being there delayed, they made another Petition to another Table, called Xinfau nicor pitau, where are foure and twentie Talagrepos aſſiſtants, auſtere Religious men, as Capuchines amongſt vs, which reuiew the caſes of the poore, which prohibited the Chaem to proceed, and granted an appeale to the Aitau of Aitaus in Pequim to moderate the Sentence, which the two Procurers brought vs.

Talagrepos.

Wee

Digitized by Google

Wee and thirtie others were embarked, chained with long chaines, the two Procurers procuring vs some clothing, and Rice, and commending vs to Chifu, the Officer or Captaine appointed to carrie vs, with a Certificate in our behalfe to procure vs almes. The Riuers being then high swollen hindred our iourney. Three dayes wee stayed at a Village called Mincacantem, where Chifu dwelt, and embarked his wife and children; wee were tyed to the seats where wee rowed, and could not haue perfect sight of the Cities, yet thus much wee obserued. Nanquim is in 39. degrees and a third, washed by the Riuer Batampina, which signifieth The flower of fish: which Riuer, as I was then told and after saw, comes from Tartaria, out of the Lake Fanoftir, nine leagues from the Citie Lançame, where Tamerlane King of the Tartars resided. This Lake is eight and twentie leagues long, and twelue broad, very deepe, and yeelds fiue Riuers; first, this of Batampina, running thorow the midst of China three hundred and sixtie leagues, and entring the Bay of Nanquin in 36. degrees. The second Lechune which goeth alongst the Hills of Pancruum, & diuiding the Land of Cauchim, and Catebenan, which within the Countrey confines with the Kingdome of Champaa in 16. degrees. The third is Tauquiday, that is, The mother of waters, passing West North-west by the Kingdome of Nacataas (a Land whence China was peopled) and falls into the Sea in the Kingdome of Sornau, or Siam, by the Barre of Cuy an hundred and thirtie leagues beneath Patane. The fourth Riuer is Batobasoy, which passing by the Prouince of Sanfim (which was drowned An. 1556.) goeth into the Sea by the Barre of Cosmim in the Kingdome of Pegù. Leysacotay is the fifth, runneth Eastward to the Archipelagus (as the Chinois say) of Xinxinpou, which confineth the Moscouites, entring into a Sea innauigable, as being in 70. degrees of latitude. The Chinois affirme, that in Nanquin are eight hundred thousand housholds, foure and twentie thousand houses of Mandarines, sixtie two great market places; one hundred and thirtie shambles, each hauing eightie blockes; eight thousand streets, of which the sixe hundred principall haue grates of Latten on both sides all alongst; two thousand three hundred Pagodes or Temples, one thousand of which are Monasteries of Religious persons, richly built, with Towres of sixtie or seuentie Bells of Metall and Iron, which make a noise horrible to heare; thirtie Prisons great and strong, each hauing two or three thousand Prisoners, and an Hospitall. The houses of the Mandarines are of earth, encompassed with Walls and Ditches, with faire Bridges, and rich Arches. The principall Magistrates haue high Towers with gilded pinacles, where are their Armories and Treasures. The Street-arches with their night shut Gates, their new and full Moone feasts, incredible fishings, their ten thousand Silke-loomes, one hundred and thirtie Gates in the strong wall, with as many Bridges ouer the ditch (a Porter, and two Halbardiers in each to see what goeth in or out) twelue Fortresses with Bulwarkes and Towers, but without Artillerie, the value to the King three thousand Cruzados a day, or two thousand Taeis, I can but touch. The rarities of China, compared with the things seene at home, seeme doubtfull or incredible.

In the first two dayes wee saw in our iourney by the Riuer no notable Citie or Towne, but of Villages a great quantitie which seemed to be of Fisher-men and Labourers, and within Land as farre as we saw, appeared woods of Pines and other trees, Orange groues, fields of Wheat, Rice, Millet, Panike, Barley, Rie, Pulse, Flaxe, Cotton, and Gardens with houses for the Grandes. Cattell appeared alongst the Riuer as much as in Prete Iohns Countrey. On the tops of Hills were seene Temples with gilded * Steeples shining farre off. On the fourth day we came to a good Citie called Poeasser, twice as big as Cantan, well walled with Townes and Bulwarkes, in manner like ours, with a Hauen before the wall of two Falcon shots long, fastned with Iron grates in two rewes, with Gates for the entrance and vnlading of ships, which come thither from all parts. In the end of the Towne on a Mount stood a Castle with three Bulwarkes and fiue Towers, in one of which the Chinois told vs, that the Father of this King held Prisoner nine yeeres a King of Tartaria, poisoned at last by his owne vassals, vnwilling to giue so much to redeeme him as was demanded. In this Citie, Chifu gaue leaue to three of vs nine, to goe (with foure Halbardiers to guard vs) and begge Almes, which in sixe or seuen streets gat the worth of twentie Cruzados in clothes and money, besides Flesh, Rice, Fruits, and Meale; halfe of which our Guard had according to the custome. They carried vs to a Temple where was great concurse of people that day, being solemne to that Sect of Taubinarel (one of their 32. Gentile Sects.) That House they said had beene the Kings, and that this Kings Grand-father was borne there, his Mother dying in child-birth, in honour of whose death and buriall in the same chamber he had dedicated this Temple in that Palace. All the Building with the Offices, Gardens, and all the appurtenances are founded in the aire on three hundred and sixtie Pillars (each of one stone) seuen and twentie spannes high, bearing the names of the three hundred and sixtie dayes of the yeere; and in each of them is a feast with much almes, bloody Sacrifices, and dances to the Idoll of that day and Pillar, which stands therein richly enshrined, with a Siluer Lampe before him. Beneath goe eight streets or wayes enclosed on both sides with Latten grates, with doores for the people which come to those feasts.

Ouer the house where the Queene was buried was a round Chappell all lined with Siluer, seeming richer in the worke then matter. In the midst was a siluer Throne of fifteene steps, round

The Iesuites place this Citie in 32. and in other places they likewise disagree in their calculation. The reason I suppose is, that Pinto neuer obserued the height by Instrument, nor perhaps had skill thereby: his he confesseth, cap 105. pag. 222. but followed the Maps which at his returne he saw, which haue placed Nanquin in that height, falsly, as I conceiue to keepe others from the true knowledge of these parts; a thing vsuall in the old Maps of the East and West parts of the World: and sometimes they did graduate places falsly of ignorance.

Nanquin described: See of it in Pantoia.

Their iourney by water from Nanquin to Pequin.

* This gilding perhaps is but a kind of earth which the Chinois haue, looking like gold: Pocasser.

The Tartar Prisoner.

A pensile Palace.

360. Pillars to the 360. dayes of the yeere.

Queens siluer Chappell, and the riches and Images therein

Digitized by Google

to the top encompaſſed with ſixe rewes of ſiluer grates with the tops gilded. On the higheſt of them was a great Globe, and thereon a Lion of ſiluer, bearing vp a chiſt of Gold three ſpans ſquare, in which they ſaid were her bones, by the blind people worſhipped as great Relikes. There hung on foure ſiluer tyres which croſſed the Houſe, fortie three ſiluer Lampes (ſo many yeares ſhe liued) and ſeuen of Gold in memory of her ſeuen Sonnes. Without at the entry were two hundred fiftie three ſiluer Lampes great and rich, which the Chaens and great mens Wiues preſented in her honour. Without the doores were in ſixe rewes round about Statues of Giants fifteene ſpans high, well proportioned of Braſſe, with Halberds and Maces in their hands, which the Chinois ſaid were twelue hundred. Amongſt them were foure and twentie Serpents of Braſſe very great, each hauing a woman ſitting thereon with a Sword in her hand of the ſame metall, and a ſiluer Crowne on the head: ſo many had ſacrificed themſelues at her death to doe her ſeruice in the next World. Another compaſſe enuironed that of the Giants, all of triumphant Arches gilded, with a great quantitie of ſiluer Bels hanging on ſiluer chaines, which by the motion of the Aire continually yeelded a ſtrange ſound. Without thoſe Arches in the ſame proportion ſtand two rankes of Latten grates encircling the whole worke, ſet in ſpaces with Pillars of the ſame, and thereon Lions ſet on balls, which are the Armes of the Kings of China.

The Ieſuits ſay his armes are golden Dragons.

Monſtrous ſtatues.

At the foure corners were placed foure Monſters of Braſſe, one (which the Chinois call the Deuouring Serpent of the deepe Caue of the Houſe of ſmoke) in the figure of a dreadfull Serpent, with ſeuen Serpents comming out of his breſt, ſpotted with greene and blacke with many prickles more then a ſpan long, quite thorow the bodie like Hedge-hogges, each hauing in his mouth a woman ouerthwart, with diſheuelled haires, looking deadly. The old or great Serpent holds in his mouth a Lizard halfe out, of aboue thirty ſpans in length, as bigge as a Pipe, with noſe and lips full of bloud, and in his hands he holds a great Elephant ſo forcibly, that his entrailes ſeeme to come out of his mouth; all ſo naturally repreſented, that it is moſt dreadful to behold. The folds of his tayle were aboue twentie fathome long, enfolding therein another Monſter, the ſecond of the foure, called Tarcamparoo, which they ſay was the Sonne of that Serpent, which ſtands with both his hands in his mouth, which is as bigge as a gate, the teeth ſet in order, and the blacke tongue hanging out aboue two fathomes. Of the two other, one was the Figure of a woman, named Nadelgau, ſeuenteene fathomes long, and ſixe about, from whoſe waſte iſſued a beake or face aboue two fathomes, which caſt ſmoake out of the noſthrils, and flames of fire out of the mouth, which they make therein continually, ſaying, ſhee is the Queene of the Fierie Spheare, and ſhall burne the Earth at the end of the World. The fourth is like a man, ſet cowring with cheekes puffed like ſhips ſayles, ſo monſtrous that a man could not endure the ſight. The Chinois call him Vzanguenaboo, and ſay, that it is hee which makes Tempeſts in the Sea, and throwes downe Houſes by Land, to which the people giue much Almes not to hurt their Iunkes.

Xinligau.

The ſecond day we went from Pocaſſer, and came to another Citie called Xinligau, very great, well built, walled with Tyles, ditched about; with two Caſtles at the end, hauing their Towres, Bul-warkes, and Draw-bridges: in the midſt of each Caſtle was a Towre of ſiue Lofts with many workes painted, in which the Chinois ſaid, were fifteene thouſand Picos of ſiluer, of the Rents gathered in that Archipelago, which this Kings Grand-father there layd vp in memory of his Sonne Leuquinau, which ſignifieth the ioy of all, holden for a Saint, becauſe he dyed a Religious man, and lyes there buried in the Temple of Quiay Varatel, the God of all the Fiſhes in the Sea, of whom they haue large Legends. In that Citie and another fiue leagues from it is made the greateſt part of the Silke of that Kingdome, the waters there giuing quicker colours (they ſay) then in other parts. The Weauers Loomes of theſe Silkes, which they affirme thirteene thouſand, pay yearely to the King three hundred thouſand Taeis. Going further vp the Riuer, wee came the next day Euening to a great Champaigne, continuing ten or twelue leagues, in which were many Kine, Horſes, and Mares, paſtured for the ſhambles as well as other fleſh, and kept by many men on Horſe-backe. Theſe Champaignes paſt, wee came to a Towne, called Iunquileu, walled with Tyles, but without Towres or Bul-warkes. Here wee ſaw a ſtone Monument with an Inſcription, Heere lyeth Trannocem Mudeliar, Vncle to the King of Malaca, who dyed before hee was reuenged of Captayne Alboquerque, the Lion of Sea Robberies. We enquiring hereof, an old Chineſe ſaid, that about fortie yeares agoe, the man there interred had come Embaſſadour from a King of Malaca, to ſue to the Sonne of the Sunne, for ſuccour againſt a Nation of a Land without name, which had comne from the end of the World, and taken Malaca, with other incredible particularities printed in a Booke which hee made thereof. Hauing ſpent three yeares in this Suite, and brought it to ſome maturitie, hee ſicknes of the Aire one night at Supper, dyed in nine dayes, and left this Memoriall.

Leuquinau. God of Sea fiſh.

Silke-loomes.

Huge paſtures.

Iunquileu.

Alboquerque. See tom. 1. lib. 2. pag 32.

The Spaniſh hath the Palſy, and it ſeemes a kind of Palſie gotten by ſtroke or blaſting of the Aire.

Wee proceeded on our way the Riuer growing leſſe, but the Countrey more peopled, ſcarſly a ſtones caſt free of ſome Houſe, eyther of a Pagode, or Labourer. And two leagues higher on a Hill compaſſed with Iron grates were two Braſſe Statues ſtanding on their feete, one of a man, man, the other of a woman, both seuentie foure spans long with their hands in their mouthes, and puffed cheekes; fastned to Cast-Iron Pillars, seuen fathomes high. The Male was named Quiay Xingatalor, the woman Apancapatur. The Chinois told vs that the man was Fire-blower in Hell to torment such as in this life gaue them no Almes: the woman was the Hell-Porter, which suffered the Almes-giuers to flye by a Riuer of cold water, called Ochilenday, and hid them their from the Deuils hurting them. One of our company laughed at this Tale, whereat a Bonzo was so offended, that hee set Chisu in rage with vs, who bound vs hand and foot, and gaue vs one hundred stripes a-piece. Twelue Priests were incensing these Monsters when wee were there with Siluer-censours full of sweet Odours, Saying, as wee serue thee, helpe thou vs: another company of Priests answering: So I promise thee as a good Lord. And thus went they on Procession about the Hill an houres space sounding certayne Bels causing a dreadfull noyse. Two monstrous statues and their deuotions.

Digitized by Google

Hence wee passed vp the Riuer eleuen dayes, all peopled with Cities, Townes, Villages, Castles, in many places, scarsly a Calieuer shot distant one from another: and all the Land in compasse of our sight had store of great Houses, and Temples with gilded Steeples, which amazed vs with the sight. Thus wee came to the Citie Sampitay, where wee stayed fiue dayes by reason of the sickneese of Chisus Wife. There by his leaue wee went thorow the streets, a begging, the people wondering at vs, and giuing vs largely. One woman amongst others which busily questioned with vs, shewed vs a Crosse branded on her left arme, asking if we knew that signe, and wee deuoutly answering, yes; shee lifted vp her hands to Heauen, and sayd, Our Father which art in Heauen, hallowed be thy Name, in Portugues, and could speake no more, but proceeded in China speech, and procured leaue to lodge vs at her House those fiue dayes; telling vs she was named Inez de Leiria, and was the Daughter of Thomas Perez, which came Embassadour to China, and by reason of a Rebellious Portugall Captayne, hee was taken as a Spye with twelue others; so beaten that fiue dyed, the other seuen hundred to diuers places, where they dyed in misery, only Vasco Caluo, being now left aliue. Her Father, she said, was banished to this Towne, and there marryed with her Mother hauing somewhat to mayntaine her, and by him made a Christian. They liued together many yeares like good Catholikes, and conuerued many to the Faith of Christ, in that Citie three hundred assembled on Sundayes to her house to their holies. She shewed vs an Oratorie in which was a Crosse of wood gilded, with a Candlesticke and siluer Lampe. Wee asked her what they did, when they came there, and shee said, nothing but kneele before that Crosse, with their hands and eyes lifted to Heauen, and say, Lord Iesus Christ, as it is true that thou art the true Sonne of God, conceiued by the Holy Ghost in the wombe of the Holy Virgin Mary, for the saluation of Sinners, so pardon our sins, that wee may obtayne to see thy face in the glory of thy Kingdome, where thou sittest at the right hand of the Highest. Our Father which art in Heauen, hallowed be thy Name. In the Name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the Holy Ghost, Amen. And so kissing the Crosse, they embraced one another and went home; alway liuing friendly with each other. Her Father (she said) had left other Prayers written, which the Chinois had stolne away, so that now they could say no more. Whereupon we promised to leaue her other Prayers, and taught the Christians seuen times there, and Christopher Borrall writ in China Letters the Lords Prayer, Aue Mary, Creed, Salue Regina, Tenne Commandements, and other good Prayers. Shee had giuen a Present to Chisus Wife to deale with her Husband to giue vs this leaue, and to vse vs kindly, and the Christians there gaue vs fiftie Taeis of Siluer, and Inez de Leiria other fiftie closely, desiring vs to remember her in our Prayers. Frequencie of China people. Sampitay. See Maff. l. 6. these Portugall Rebels had possessed Tamus, and raised a Fort in the Iland, whence followed that out-rage to Perez after foure moneths trauell from Canton to the Court. Lopez Soarez which sent Peirez to China, weng Vice-roy, A. 1515. China Christians and Christianitie.

We continued our journey vp the Batampina, to a place called Lequimpau, of tenne or twelue thousand Houses. Neere to the wall stood a long house with thirtie Furnaces for the purifying of siluer which was taken out of a Hill fiue leagues distant, called Tuxenguim; in which Mines the Chinois told vs, there continually laboured one thousand men, and that it yeeled to the King yearely fiue thousand * Pikes of siluer. We departed thence in the Euening, and the next Euening anchored betwixt two small Cities standing ouer against one another, one named Pacan, the other Nacau, both well walled and builded. These two Cities occasion mee to recite what I haue heard often heard read in the thirteenth Chapter of the first Chronicle of the foure-score which they haue of the Kings of China; that sixe hundred thirtie nine yeares after the Floud, there was a Land, called Guantipocau, in which liued a pettie Prince, called Turban, which had by his Concubine Nancaa, three Sonnes, refusing to marry, and entring into Religion of the Idoll Gizom (still much esteemed in Iapon, China, Cauchin-china, Camboia, Siam, of which I haue seene many Temples) appointing his eldest Sonne by the said Nancaa his heire. His Mother then liuing was against this, and marryed herselfe with Silau a Priest, and slue Turban; whereupon Nancaa and her children fled downe the Riuer seuentie leagues, and fortified a place which she called Pilaunera, that is, the refuge of the poore. Fiue yeares after Silau prepared a Fleet of thirtie Barkes to destroy her and all her faction, thinking that her Sons comming of age might dispossesse him. But she hauing Intelligence, hauing of men, women, and children, not aboue one thousand and three hundred persons, and but three or foure Boats not sufficient to conueigh away those few, by common consent and aduice appointed a three dayes Fast therein to begge succour Lequimpau, Mynes of Tuxenguim. * 1000. Picoes is a Million of Taeis. Pacan and Nacau. China Chronicles and Legends. Beginnings of the Kingdome of China.

Digitized by Google

of God, in all which time none might eate aboue once, in paine of death. This Faſt ended they caſt Lots and the Lot fell on a Boy of ſeuen yeares old, which was alſo named Silan, whom after all Ceremonies ended) they bid lift vp his hands to Heauen, and tell them ſome remedie to theſe dangers. Who propheſied Victory to her ouer the Tyrant Silan, commanding her to embarke hers in her Enemies Barkes, and at the ſound of the waters to runne along the Land, till God ſhewed where ſhee ſhould found a habitation of great name, which through all times ſhould ſend out his mercy with voyces and bloud of ſtrange Nations: after which words the Boy fell downe dead.

Legend of Pequim.

The thirty Barkes came (ſaith the Storie) fiue dayes after without any people therein: for at a place called Catebaſoy, a blacke Cloud aroſe ouer them, which rayned on them ſcalding drops, which deſtroyed them all. Nancaa with teares and thankes embarked her three Sonnes and the reſt, and went downe the Riuer conducted by the ſound fortie ſeuen dayes, and then came to the place where Pequim now ſtands. Fiue dayes after they came aland, was the firſt ſtone layd thereof by Pequim, eldeſt Sonne of Nancaa, and the Citie called by his owne name. And a ſiluer ſhield hangeth on the Arch of the chiefe gate Pommicotay, and hath this inſcribed, in which are fortie Warders, and in the reſt ordinarily but foure. The day alſo of the foundation (beeing the third of Auguſt) is kept with great Solemnitie, and thereon the King vſeth to ſhew himſelfe to the people. The later Kings alſo haue made a Law that no Strangers, except Embaſſadours and Slaues ſhould enter the Kingdome. The two other Brethren founded theſe two Cities, called by their owne names Pacan and Nacan, and their Mother founded Nanquin, which tooke the name of hers.

No ſtranger may enter China.

IN the fift Booke of the chiefe places of that Empire, is written, that King Criſnagol (which reigned as we may accord our computation with theirs) about the yeare of our Lord 528. builded the wall, the people contributing ten thouſand Pikes of ſiluer (which are fifteene Millions of Cruzados) and two hundred and fiftie thouſand men (thirtie thouſand Officers and the reſt Labourers) which was continued ſeuen and twentie yeares, and then finiſhed, being, ſaith that Booke the length of ſeuentie Iaons (euery Iaon is foure leagues and an halfe) which make three hundred and fifteene leagnes. The Prieſts and Iles are ſaid to contribue as many, and the King and Officers another third, ſo that ſeuen hundred and fiftie thouſand men laboured therein. This wall I haue ſeene and meaſured, being generally ſixe fathomes high, and fortie ſpannes thicke: and foure fathomes runneth a kind of Rampire, twice as thicke as the wall ſtrengthened with a Bituminous ſubſtance on the out-ſide like Potters worke; and in ſtead of Bulwarkes it hath houſes of two lofts with beames of blacke wood, called Caubeſy, that is, Iron-wood, ſeeming ſtronger then if they were of ſtone-worke. This wall or Chanfacan (ſo they call it, that is, ſtrong reſiſtance) runneth with an equall courſe till it encounters with Hils, which are all Chanfred and made ſo that it is ſtronger then the wall it ſelfe, the wall being only in the ſpaces twixt Hill and Hill, the Hils themſelues making vp the reſt.

The wall of China.

Seis braſas dalto & quarenta palmes de largo.

Vam todas chanfradas ao piam.

Fiue Riuers interrupting the wall.

Wall-forts.

In all that way are but fiue entrances, cauſed by the Tartarian Riuers, which with impetuous force cut the Countrey aboue fiue hundred leagues entring the Sea of China, and Cauchin-china: And one of them more forcible then the others enters the Kingdome of Sornau (commonly called Siam) by the Barre of Cuy. At euery of thoſe fiue entrances the King of China hath one Fort and the Tartar another: in euery of the China Forts there are ſeuen thouſand men, ſix thouſand foot, and one thouſand Horſe, in continuall pay; moſt of them Strangers, Mogors, Champaas, Pancrus, Coracones, and Gizares of Perſia, the Chineis being but meane Souldiers. In all the ſpace of this wall are three hundred and twentie Regiments, each of fiue hundred men (in all one hundred & ſixty thouſand) beſides Miniſters, Commanders, and their retinue which the Chineis ſaid, made in all two hundred thouſand men, allowed by the King only ſuſtenance, all or moſt of them being condemned to that ſeruice, and therefore receiuing no pay. And in Pequim is a great and admirable Priſon-houſe, in which are Priſoners continually for the Fabricke of this wall of three hundred thouſand men and vpwards, moſt of them from eighteene to fiue and fortie yeares old: whereof ſome are men of good qualitie, which for their ill behauiours and enormities are hither ſentenced, expecting to be remoued hence to the ſeruice of the wall: whence they may haue returne according to the Statutes thereof made, and approoued by the Chaens, which therin diſpenſe the Regall power with meere and mixt Empire. There are twelue of them which may pay to the King a Million of Gold for Rent.

Thus in Spaine, Malefactors are ſentenced to the Gallies, or Garriſons of Oran, Penon, &c Huge Priſon. Chaens of the wall.

Digitized by Google

§. IIII.

Mindo Salt-pits: Mines of Coretumbaga, Copper-workes; Idolatry and Christianitie; China Trades, and Riuer Faires; their comming to Pequin, tryall and sentence. Rarities of Pequin.

TO returne to our Voyage, from Pacan and Nacan, wee passed vp the Riuer to Mindoo, a greater Citie then either of the former, which on the Land side had a great Lake of Salt-water, with great store of Salt-pits therein, which the Chinois said, did ebbe and flow like the Sea, from which it is aboue two hundred leagues distant; and that this Citie Rents to the King yearely one hundred thousand Taeis, of the thirds of the Salt, and as much more of the Silkes, Sugars, Porcelane, Camfire, Vermillion, Quick-siluer, which are there in great quantitie. Two leagues aboue this Citie were twelue long Houses, in which many men were sounding and purifying Copper, making such a noyse with the Hammers that this place (if any on Earth) may resemble Hell. In each House were fortie Furnaces, twentie on a side, with fortie great Anuiles, on each whereof eight men were hammering round, with such quicknes as scarce permitted the eyes obseruance; so that in each house there were three hundred and twentie continuall Labourers, besides Workmen of other kinds. Wee asked how much Copper they might make yearely, and they answered, betwixt one hundred and ten, and one hundred and twentie thousand Pikes, of which the King had two parts, because the Mynes were his; the Hill where the Mine was, is called Coretumbaga, that is, Riuer of Copper, which in two hundred yeares (so long was since the Discouery) was not emptied.

Mindoo.

The customes 300000. Cruzados.

3840. Hammer-men.

A Pico is 1000. Taeis.

Aboue these Houses one league neere the Riuer, wee saw on a Hill encompassed with three rewes of Iron Grates, thirtie Houses in fiue rankes, very long, with great Towres of Bels of Metall, and Cast-Iron, with gilded Pillars and carued workes, and artificiall Frontispieces of stone. Here we went on Land by Chifus leaue, because hee had so vowed to that Pagode, which is called Bigaypotim, that is, the God of one hundred and ten thousand Gods, Corcheo, Fungane, ginato ginaca, strong & great (say they) aboue all the rest: For they hold euery thing hath a particular God which made it and preserues it in its nature, & that this Bigaypotim brought forth all of them at his arme-pits, and that of him they all hold their being, as of a father by filiall vnion, which they call Bijaporentesay. In Pegu where I haue beene sometimes, there is a Pagode like this (there called Ginocoginana, the God of all greatnesse) whose Temple was built by the Chinois when they ruled in India, which was after their Computation accorded with ours from Anno Dom. 1013. till 1072. conquered by Oxinagan, whose Successor seeing how much bloud was payd for so little good, voluntarily relinquished it. In those thirtie Houses stood a great quantitie of Idols of gilded wood, and as many more of Tinne, Copper, Latten, Iron, Porcelane, so many that I dare not mention the number. Wee had not gone thence sixe or seuen leagues, when we saw a great Citie ruined with the houses and wals on the ground, seeming a league in circuit. The Chinois said, that it had beene called Cobilouzaa, that is, Flowre of the field, sometimes prosperous; and that one hundred fortie two yeares since, as is written in a Booke, name Toxefalem, there came in company of Merchants from the Port of Tanaçarim, a man which wrought Miracles, in a moneths space raising vp fiue dead persons, the Bonzos saying, he was a Witch, and because they could not hold dispute with him, prouoking the people against him, saying, that if they did not kill him, God would punish them with fire from Heauen. The inraged multitude killed one Iohn a Weauer, where he sojourned, and his two Sonnes in Law, and his Sonne; which sought to defend him, and when they had gone about to burne him, in vaine, the fire being extinct, the Bonzos stoned him, preaching Christ vnto them, which had come from Heauen to dye for Sinners, and to giue life to all which professed his Law with Faith and Works. They say, that the bodie was cast into the Riuer, which for the space of fiue dayes would not runne lower, and thereby many were moued to professe that Religion: and as wee doubled a point of Land, we saw a Crosse of stone on a little Hill enuironed with Trees. Chifus Wife falling into trauell (of which she dyed) we stayed there nine dayes, and did our Deuotions thereto, prostrate on the Earth. The people of the Village (called Xisangu) maruelling, came running to the place and falling on their knees, kissed the Crosse often, saying, Christo Iesu, Iesu Christo, Maria Micau, late impone Moudel, that is, was a Virgin in his Conception, Birth, and after it. They asked if they were Christians, and we affirming it, had vs to their Houses and vsed vs kindly, being all of that Weauers Posteritie and Christians. They also confirmed that which the Chinois had told vs, and shewed vs the Booke printed of his Miracles, which they said was named Matthew Escandel, an Hungarian by Nation, an Heremite of Mount Sinay, borne at Buda. That Booke tels that nine dayes after his death, the Citie Cobilouza shooke so, that the people ranne out into the fields, and abode in Tents; to whom the Bonzos came and bid them feare nothing, for they would beseech Quiay Tiguarem, The God of the night, to command the Earth

Bigaypotim.

China ruled ouer India.

Cobilouzaa.

A Christian martyred. Lucena hath this storie.

A Crosse.

Mat. Escandel an Hungarian.

Earthquake. The China Pluto.

Digitized by Google

to doe so no more, otherwise they would giue him no Almes. Thus went the Priests alone in Procession to that Idols House, and making their night-Sacrifices and Perfumes, the Earth quaked about eleuen of the clocke at night, and ouerthrew the whole Citie (one only of about foure thousand Bonzos remayning aliue) into a Lake more then one hundred fathomes deepe, called after this Fiunganorsee, that is, punished from Heauen.

Iunquil.nau. Hence we came to a great Citie, called Iunquilinau, very rich, with many Iunkes and Barkes, where we stayed fiue dayes, Chifu there celebrating his Wiues Exequies, and giuing vs food and rayment for her soule, freeing vs from the Oare, and giuing vs leaue to goe on Land when wee would, without our * Collers, which was very great ease to vs. Thence we went vp the Riuer, still seeing on both sides many and faire Cities and Townes, and other very great populations, strongly walled, and Fortresses alongst the water with Towres and rich Houses of their Sects, with innumerable cattell in the fields, and shipping in the Riuer, in some places fiue hundred, six hundred, yea, one thousand sayle, in which were sold all things could be named. Many Chinois affirmed, that there were as many liued in that Empire on the water, as in Cities and Townes: so many in both, that were it not for the good gouernment of their Trades, they would eate one an other. As in Duckes, one trades in buying and hatching the Egges, and selling the young; another in breeding them for sale when they are great, others in the Feathers, others in the heads, and in wares, others in the Egges, &c. none interloping the others Trade vnder paine of thirtie stripes. In Hogs, one trades in selling them together aliue, others kill them, and sell them by weight, others in Bacon, others in Pigges, others in Souse. So in fish, hee which sels freth may not sell salt, some sell them aliue, &c. and so in Fruits and other things. And none may change his Trade without license. They haue also along this Riuer of Batampina, in which wee went from Nanquin to Pequin, (the distance of one hundred and eightie leagues) such a number of Ingenios for Sugar, and Presses for Wines, and Oyles made of diuers sorts of Pulse and Fruits, that there are streets of them on both sides of the Riuer, of two or three leagues in length. In other parts are many huge store-houses of infinite prouisions of all sorts of flesh, in which are salted and smoked Beese, tame and wilde Hogs, Ducks, Geese, Cranes, Bustards, Emes, Deere, Buffals, Ants, Horse, Tygres, Dogs, and all flesh which the Earth brings forth, which amuzed and amazed vs exceedingly, it seeming impossible that there should bee people in the World to eate the same. Wee saw also great store of Barkes fenced at Poupe and Prow, with Reedes of Canes full of Ducks to sell, in diuers lofts ouer one another, which goe out at foure strokes of a Drumme, sixe or seuen thousand together to feed, where they set them, at the sound of the Drumme returning againe, with like exceeding crie. In the like sort they let them out to lay on the grasse. They that hatch them haue long houses with twentie Furnaces full of dung, with some hundreds of Egges couered therein, and hatched by that heate, the mouth stopped till they thinke fit time, then putting in a Capon halfe plucked and wounded on the brest, they shut it againe, and after two dayes, the Capon hath drawne them all forth, and they put them into holes prouided for them.

Sem colares, nem algemas.

How such infinite numbers liue.

Sugar-houses. Infinite prouisions and store houses.

Pastures of beasts.

Dogs for meat.

We saw along the Riuer in some places store of Swine wild and tame kept by men on Horseback, in other places tame Deere kept by Footmen, all maymed in the right foreleg, that they should not runne away, which they doe when they are young. Wee saw Pennes full of little Dogges to sell, Barkes full of Pigges, others of Lizards, Frogs, Snakes, Snailes, all being meate with them. In these (being of small price) they may sell many kinds. Yea, the dung of men is there sold, and not the worse Merchandize, that stinke yeelding sweet wealth to some, who goe tabouring vp and downe the streets to signifie what they would buy. Two or three hundred sayle are seene sometimes fraighted with this lading in some Port of the Sea; whence the fatned soyle yeelds three Haruests in a yeare.

Moueable Cities on the water.

Wee came to a Faire of China where on the water 2000. Barkes, besides small Boats which goe vp and downe and small Barkes were assembled in one place, and made a Citie with streets in the water aboue a league long, and a third part of a league broad. These Faires are principally on the Holy day of some Pagode, whose Temple is by the waters side. In this Water-citie, by the order of the Aitao of Batampina (who is chiefe President of the thirtie two Admirals of the thirtie two Kingdomes of this Monarchie) are sixtie Captaynes appointed; thirtie for the gouernment and ordering of the same in matters of Iustice, and other thirtie to guard the Merchants in comming safely secured from Theeues. Ouer all these is a Chaem, which hath Mere and mixt Rule in Causes Ciuill and Criminall without Appeale. These Faires last from the new Moon to the full, in which it is a goodly thing to see two thousand streets or ranks strait, enclosed with Barkes, most of them flourishing with Streamers and Banners, and raile painted, whereon are sold all things that can be desired, in others Mechanike Trades, & in the midst Boats going vp and downe with people to trade without any confusion or tumult. As soone as it is night, the streets are enclosed with Cables. In euery street is ten Lanthornes lighted on the Masts (which yeelds a fairer lustre then the former sight by day) to see who goeth by and what is his businesse. In each of these streets is a Watch-bell, and when that of the Chaems sounds, all the rest answer with as strange an Obiect to the Eare as the former to the Eye. In euery of these Vowes are Beauties and glories of this Riuer-Citie.

Ora-

Digitized by Google

Oratories built on Barkes with gilded Tents, where the Idoll and Priests receiue the Deuotions and Offerings of the people.

Amongst other remarkable things we saw one rew or street of aboue one hundred Barkes laden with Idols of gilded wood of diuers sort, which are sold to be offered in the Pagodes; and besides, feet, legs, armes, and heads, which sicke folkes offered for Deuotion. Other Barkes there are with Tents of Silke, in which Comedies and pastimes are represented. In others are sold Letters of Exchange, the Priests giuing them Bils to receiue in Heauen what their folly lay downe there, with great increase (Our Scriueners would scarsly grow rich here with that Trade) others are laden with skuls of dead men, they dreaming that all the Almes of those men, whose skuls these haue beene, shall belong to their soules, and that the Porter of Heauen seeing them come with thus many attending, will open to him as an honourable person: Others haue Cages of Birds, and call to men to set free those Captiues, which are the creatures of God, with their Almes which they which doe, let loose the Bird and bid him tell God what he hath done in his Seruice: others do the like with liuing fishes, offering their freedome to the charitable Redeemers (which themselues will not giue them; much like the sale of Indulgences) saying, they are Innocents which neuer sinned, which freed by Almes are let goe in the Riuer, with commendations of this their Redeemers Seruice to the Creator. Other Barkes carry Fidlers and Musicians to offer their Seruice: Others (the Priests) sell Hornes of sacrificed Beasts, with promise of I know not what Feasts in Heauen: others had Tents of sorrow, Tombes and all Funerall appurtenances with Women-mourners, to be let out for Burials: others laden with Books of all sorts of Historie, and these also haue Scriueners and Proctors; others haue such as offer their seruice to fight in defence of their honour; others haue Mid-wiues, others Nurses; others carry graue men and women to comfort those that haue lost Husbands, Wiues, Children, and the like disconsolate persons: others Boyes and Girles for seruice; others offer Counsellors in Cases of Law or Learning; others Physicians: and to conclude, nothing is to bee sought on the Land which is not here to be found in this Water-citie.

Once, the cause of the greatnesse of this Kingdome of China, is this easie concourse of all parts by water and Riuers: some of which in narrow places haue bridges of stone like ours, and some made of one only stone laid ouer, sometimes of eightie, ninetie, or one hundred spannes, long, and fifteene or twentie broad. All the High-wayes haue large Causies made of good stone, with Pillers and Arches fairely wrought inscribed with the Founders names and prayses in golden Letters. In many places they haue Wels to refresh the Trauellers. And in more barren and lesse inhabited places are single women which giue free entertainment to such as haue no monie, which abuse and abomination, they call a worke of Mercie, and is prouided by the deceased for good of their soules, with Rents and mayntenance. Others haue also bequeathed in the like places, houses with Lights to see the way, and fires for Trauellers, water and Lodging. I haue in one and twentie yeares vnfortunate trauels seene a great part of Asia, and the riches of Europe, but if my testimonie be worthy credit, all together is not comparable to China alone: such are the endowments of nature in a wholsome Ayre, Soyle, Riuers, and Seas, with their Policie, Iustice, Riches and State, that they obscure all the lustres of other parts. Yet such is their bestiall and Deuilish Idolatry, and filthy Sodomitry publikly permitted, committed, taught by their Priests as a vertue, that I cannot but grieue at their vngratitude.

Bridges, and high-wayes admirable.

Filthy charity.

The Authors opinion.

Departing from this admirable Citie, we sailed vp the Riuer, till on the ninth of October, on Tuesday we came to the great Citie of Pequim, whither wee were sent by Appeale. Wee went three and three as Prisoners, and were put in a Prison called Gofania ferca, where for an entrance they gaue each of vs thirtie stripes. Chifu which brought vs presented to the Aitao our Processe signed with twelue seales from Nanquin. The twelue Conchalis which are Criminall Iudges, sent one of their company with two Notaries, and sixe or seuen Officers to the Prison where wee were, and examined vs, to whom we answered as before, and hee appointed vs to make petition to the Tanigores, of the holy Office by our Proctors, and gaue vs a Taell for almes, with a caueat to beware of the Prisoners that they robbed vs not; and then went into another great Roome, where he heard many Prisoners Causes, three houres together, and then caused execution to be done on seuen and twentie men, sentenced two dayes before, which all dyed with the blowes to our great terrour.

Pequim.

Their hard vsage.

And the next day wee were collared and manicled, being much afraid that our Calemplus businesse would come to light. After seuen dayes the Tanigores of the Hospitall of that Prison came in, to whom we with pitifull lamentation gaue the Certificate which wee brought from Nanquin. By their meanes the Conchalis petitioned the Chaem to reuoke the Sentence of cutting off our thumbs, seeing there was no testimonie of theft by vs committed, but only our pouertie, we more needed pitie then rogour. He heard the pleading for and against vs for diuers daies, the Prometor or Fiscall laying hard against vs that wee were theeues; but being able to proue nothing, the Chaem suspended him from his Office, and condemned him in twentie Taels to vs, which was brought vs. And at last we were brought into a great Hall painted with diuers representations of execution of Iustice for seuerall crimes there written, very fearefull to behold: and at the end a fairer gilded roome crossed the same, where was a Tribunall with seuen steps, com-

Their Cause heard.

The Fiscall (set on worke it seemes by the Iudge which had sentenced them) punished.

Tribunal and pompe.

compaſſed with three rewes of grates, Iron, Latten, and blacke Wood; inlayed with Mother of pearle, hauing a Canopie of Damaske fringed with Gold and greene Silke, and vnderneath a Chaire of Siluer for the Chaem, and a little Table before him, with three Boyes attending on their knees richly attired, with chaines of gold on their neckes; the middlemoſt to giue him his Penne, the other two to receiue Petitions and to preſent them on the Table; two other Boyes ſtanding at his ſide in exceeding rich aray, the one repreſenting Iuſtice, the other on the right hand Mercy, without which conioyned, the Iudge (they ſay) becomes a Tyrant. (The reſt of the ſtate and ceremonie I omit) wee kneeling on our knees, with our hands lifted vp, and our eyes caſt downe to the ground, heard gladly our Sentence of abſolution. Only we were for one yeere Quanſy works.

baniſhed to the workes of Quanſy, and eight moneths of that yeere ended to haue free paſport to goe home, or whither we would. After the Sentence pronounced, one of the Conchalys ſtood vp, and fiue times demanded aloud if any could take exception againſt the Sentence: and all being ſilent, the two Boyes repreſenting Iuſtice, and Mercy, touched each others Enſignes which they had in their hands, and ſaid aloud, let them be free according to the Sentence, and preſently two Chumbinis tooke off our Collars and Manicles, and all our bonds. The foure moneths (the Tanigores told vs) were taken off the yeere, as the Kings almes in regard of our pouertie; for had wee beene rich, wee muſt haue ſerued the whole yeere. They gaue vs foure Taeis of almes, and went to the Captaine which was to goe for Quanſy to commend vs to his charitie, which vſed vs accordingly.

The Kings almes.

Deſcription of Paquim, or as the Chinois call it Pequim. Aqueſendoo a Booke written of Pequin.

PEquin may be called the Mother Citie of the Worlds Monarchie for the wealth, gouernment, greatneſſe, iuſtice, prouiſions. It ſtands in the height of 41. degrees to the North; it contayneth in circuit, as the Chinois (and as I after heard read in a little Booke written of the greatneſſe thereof, called Aqueſendoo, which I brought with mee into this Kingdome) thirtie leagues, ten in length, and fiue in bredth, all which ſpace is enuironed with two Walls, and innumerable Towers and Bulwarkes. Without is a larger ſpace, which they ſay, was anciently peopled, which now hath but Hamlets, and ſcattered Houſes, and Garden-houſes (of which 1600. houſes for Deputies.

ſixteene hundred are of principall note, in which are the ſixteene hundred Proctors for the ſixteene hundred Cities and Townes of note, of the two and thirtie Kingdomes of this Monarchie, which reſide there three yeeres for the ſaid Townes. Without this circuit or wall, there 24000. ſepulchers.

are in the ſpace of three leagues broad, and ſeuen long, foure and twentie thouſand Sepulchres of Mandarines, with their little gilded Chappels, encompaſſed with grates of Iron and Latten, with rich Arches at their entries. Neere to them are Gardens, Groues, Tankes, Fountaines; the walls lined within with fine Porcelane, adorned alſo with Lions and Pinacles of diuers paintings. There are in that ſpace fiue hundred Lodgings, called Houſes of the Sonne of the Sunne, Hoſpitals 500.

for entertainment of Souldiers maimed in the Kings warres (beſides many others for the old and ſicke) euery of which receiue their monethly allowance, and haue in them as they ſaid two 24000. Bargemen.

hundred men, in all one hundred thouſand. Wee ſaw another ſtreet very long, where liued foure and twentie thouſand Rowers for the Kings ſhipping: and another aboue a league long, 14000. Purueyors.

where liued fourteene thouſand Tauerners for prouiſion for the Court; and another where were Curteſan ſtreet.

infinite Curteſans freed from tribute (which thoſe of the Citie pay) for ſeruice of the Court, many running from their husbands, and here protected by the Turan of the Court, which is ſupreme in caſes of the Kings houſe.

100000. Landerers.

In that compaſſe alſo liue the Landerers of the Citie, which were, as they told vs, aboue one hundred thouſand, there being many Tankes or Ponds compaſſed with ſtone and Riuers. There are therein, as that Booke ſayth, thirteene hundred Noble houſes of Religious men and women, which profeſſe the foure chiefe Sects of the two and thirtie which are in that Kingdome: ſome of which, they ſay, haue aboue one thouſand perſons within them beſides ſeruitors. There are other houſes ſtore with great walls in which are Gardens, and Groues with game for hunting; and are as it were the Halls of Companies where many reſort to ſee Playes, and the great men make their feaſts there with incredible coſts. Some of theſe houſes coſt aboue a million, main-

1300. Monaſteries.

* By letting the houſes to other men.

tayned by Companies of rich Merchants, which are ſaid to gaine * much thereby. And when any will make a feaſt, he goeth to the Xipatom of the houſe, who ſheweth him a Booke wherein is contayned the order of feaſts and ſeruices (which Booke I haue ſeene and heard read) of all ſorts, and of what prices they are, whether Sacred to their Idols, or Secular, (of which our Authour hath a large Chapter, here omitted.)

360. Gates and Caſtles.

Now for Pequin, it hath three hundred and ſixtie Gates, each hauing a Caſtlet with two Towers, and a Draw-bridge, a Notarie, and foure Warders, to take notice of thoſe which goe

3800. Temples

in and out, and an Idoll proper according to the dayes of the yeere, euery of which is feſtiuall in one of them. The Chinois reported that there are therein three thouſand eight hundred Temples or Pagodes, in which are continually ſacrificed birds and wilde beaſts, which they ſay, are more acceptable then tame: thoſe eſpecially very faire which are of the Menigrepos, and Conquiais, Foure chiefe Sects.

and Talagrepos, the Prieſts of the foure chiefe Sects, of Xaca, Amida, Gizon, and Canom. The ſtreets are long and large, the houſes faire, of one or two lofts, encompaſſed with Iron and Latten ten grates, and at the streets end are triumphall arches, closed at night; in the chiefe are Watch-bells. Euery street hath a Captaine and foure Quarter-masters or Corporals, which euery ten dayes acquaint the Lonchacys or Chaems with occurrents. That Booke reports of one hundred and twentie water-passages, sixe fathome deepe of water, and twelue wide, with many stone bridges, which are said to be eighteene hundred rich and faire, with arches, pillars, and chaines: it tels also of one hundred and twentie Market-places, each of which haue their monethly Faires, (which make some foure faires a day thorow the yeere) of which we saw ten or twelue in our two moneths free abode, very full of horse-men and foot-men with all commodities to be sold. Thereare one hundred and sixtie Shambles, each hauing one hundred blockes for Flesh of all sorts, the price set downe on euery blocke, and besides the shop-weights, are weights at euery Gate to examine the weight againe. And besides those generall shambles, euery street hath fiue or sixe shops which sell all kinde of Flesh: houses also for Poultrie, and for Bacon, and hanged Beefe.

Digitized by Google

120. Riuerets, 1800. Bridges, 120. Market-places. 160. Shambles.

§. V.

Foure Buildings incredibly admirable in Pequin, and diuers of their superstitions: their Hospitals and prouisions for the Poore. The Kings reuenues and Court; their Sects.

BVt nothing seemed to me more admirable, then the Prison, called Xmangwibalen, that is, the Prison of the exiled, whose compasse contayneth about two leagues square, as well in length as breadth, walled high and ditched deepe, with draw-bridges hanged on Iron cast pillars very great. It hath a high arch with two towers, whereon are six great watch-Bels, at the sound whereof the rest within answer, which are sayd to bee one hundred. In this Prison are continually three hundred thousand men from * sixteene to fiftie yeers of age, all condemned to banishment, for the fabrike of the wall betwixt Tartaria and China; whom the King findes maintainance onely, without other pay. After they haue serued sixe yeares they may goe out freely, the King freely remitting their sentence in satisfaction of their labour. And if in the meane time, they kill an enemie, or haue beene thrice wounded in sallies, or performe any worthy exploit, he is also freed. There are * two hundred & ten thousand employed in that seruice, of which yeerly in those that dye, are maimed or freed, one third part is set off, and supplyed from that Prison, which was builded by Goxuley the successor of Crisnagol, the founder of the wall, brought thither from all parts of the Realme, and sent to the Chaem of the wall at his appointment. These prisoners are sent from other prisons, being loose, saue that they weare at their necke, a board of a spanne long and foure fingers broad, inscribed with their name, and sentence of exile, such a time. In this Prison are two Faires yeerely, one of which wee saw, kept in Iuly and Ianuarie, franke and free without payment of tolls; to which are thought to assemble three millions of persons: the Prisoners being meane-while shut vp. The Prison hath three Townes, as it were, with streets and Officers, besides the Chaems lodgings, fit to entertaine a King. There are also all necessaries sold. Their are groues, and tankes of water for washing, Hospitals also and twelue Monasteries, with rich houses, wanting nothing that a rich and noble Citie should haue: the Prisoners hauing their Wiues and Children with them, the King allowing a competent house for them.

Prison of the exiled, to the Tartarian wall, almost eight leagues compasse. *Or 18. to 45. Multitudes of Prisoners and men employed in the wall. *Before hee sayd 200000. Huge Faires.

Another building about as great as that, was the Muxiparan, or treasure of the Dead, compassed with a strong wall and ditch, with many stone Towers and painted pinacles: the wall on the top in stead of battlements, was compassed with Iron grates, close to which were set great store of Idols of different figures, of Men, Serpents, Horses, Oxen, Elephants, Fishes, Snakes, monstrous formes of Wormes, and creatures neuer seene; all of Brasse and cast Iron, and some of Tinne, and Copper; a sight more admirable to the view, then can be imagined. Passing by a bridge ouer the ditch, wee came to a great Hill, * at the first entrie all enuironed with thicke grates of Latten, floored with stones white and blacke, so shining that a man might see himselfe therein, as in a glasse. In the midst of that Hill stood a marble pillar of sixe and thirtie spannes high, all seeming to bee but one stone; on the top whereof stood an Idoll of siluer with a womans face, with both hands griping a Serpent spotted with blacke and white. And further, before the gate (which stood betwixt two high towers, borne vpon foure and twentie bigge stone pillars) stood two figures of men with Iron maces or battle Axes, in their hands, as guarding the passage, one hundred and fortie spannes high, with dreadfull countenances, called Xixipitan Xalican, that is, the Blowers of the House of Smoake. At the entrie of the gate, stood twelue Halberdiers, and two Notaries at a table, which writ downe all that entred. After wee were entred, we came into a large street set on both sides with rich Arches, with infinite bells of Latten hanging thereon, by latten chaynes, by the mouing of the ayre yeelding a great sound. The street was almost halfe a league

Another admirable Fabrike. *Terreyro, and so after. Fire-blowers of Hell.

Digitized by Google

3000 Houſes full of skals.

a league long, and within thoſe arches were two rankes of houſes, like as it were great Churches with gilded pinacles, and painted inuentions, in number as the Chinois affirmed three thouſand, all from the bottome to the roofe full of Sculls of dead men. Behind thoſe houſes was a hill of Bones, reaching to the roofes of the houſes, of the ſame length of halfe a league and very broad. Wee asked the Chinois, if any account were kept thereof, and they anſwered, that the Talagrepos which had the gouernment of thoſe houſes, had regiſters for them all, and that euery houſe yeelded two thouſand Taeis rent, left thereto by the deceaſed for their ſoules diſcharge, the King hauing therof the fourth part, and the Talagrepos the reſt for expences of the Fabrike; the Kings fourth part was ſpent on the exiled Priſoners of Xnamquibalen.

China Chatnel or Purgatorie.

The Deuils banner tryumphant in ſtupendious Serpents; then which neither figure nor creature hath beene more abuſed to ſuperſtition as glorying of that his conqueſt, Gen. 3. though a ſtronger then he repreſented by the brazen Serpent, Ioh. 3. hath taken the old Serpent and led captiuitie captiue, and brake the Serpents head, which heere ſeemes intended with Ethnike vanitie.

Wee walked thorow the ſtreet, and in the midſt ſaw a great hill round encompaſſed, with two rewes of Latten grates; in the midſt whereof was a brazen Serpent, aboue thirtie fathoms in her circles, well proportioned, notwithſtanding that incredible maſſineſſe. This monſtrous Snake which the Chinois call the Serpent deuourer of the Houſe of ſmoake, had ſet in his head, a Ball or Bullet of caſt Iron of two and fiftie ſpannes circumference. Aboue twentie paces further, was the figure of a Man in braſſe, of Giantly limbes and proportion, who ſuſtained with both his hands another bullet, which (eying the Serpent with an angry viſage) made as though he threw it at him. Round about that figure, were many ſmal gilded Idols on their knees, with hands lifted vp to him as in admiration: and in foure wyres of Iron enuironing, were one hundred and ſixtie two ſiluer Candleſticks, each hauing ſixe, ſeuen, and ten noſles. This Idoll gaue name to the whole Fabrike, and was called Muchiparom, who was, ſayth the Chinois, the Treaſurer of all the bones of the dead, and that Serpent comming to rob them, hee threw that bullet in his hands, and made her flee to the darke bottome of the houſe of ſmoake, where God had caſt her for her badneſſe: And that three thouſand yeeres before hee made the former throw, and that three thouſand yeeres after, he ſhall make another, and ſo each three thouſand yeeres another, till the fifth which ſhall kill her: after which all theſe bones ſhall returne to their bodyes, to remayne alway in the houſe of the Moone. This their Bonzos preach, and that thoſe ſoules ſhall bee happie, whoſe bones are thither brought, ſo that no day paſſeth in which two thouſand bones are not brought thither. And they which are too farre diſtant to haue their bones brought, ſend a Tooth or two, which with their almes will doe as much good as the whole: ſo that I ſuppoſe there are teeth enough in thoſe houſes to lade many ſhips.

The third ſtrange Ædifice of Nacapiraw the Iuno of China.

A third building wee ſaw without the walls, ſumptuous and rich, named Nacapiraw, which ſignifieth, The Queene of Heauen; which they meane not of the Virgin Marie, but thinke that as temporall Kings are married, ſo alſo is the Heauenly, and that the Children which hee getteth of Nacapiraw, are the Starres; and when the ſtarres ſeeme to ſhoute or fall in the ayre, that then one of thoſe Children dye, all his brethren weeping ſo many teares, that the Clouds are therewith filled, and water the earth, and make it fruitfull, as being the almes which God giues for the ſoule of the deceaſed. Wee ſaw heere one hundred and fortie Monaſteries, of their wickedly Religious men and women; in euery of which, were ſayd to bee foure hundred perſons, which come to ſixe and fiftie thouſand; beſides ſeruitours, which haue not yet vowed the profeſſion, as thoſe within, who goe in ſacred habite of red with greene ſtoles, their beards and heads ſhauen, with beades about their neckes, for their prayers, but aske no almes, hauing ſuſtenance of their owne proper. In this Edifice of Nacapiraw, the Tartarian King lodged, Anno 1544. when hee layd ſiege to this Citie, as ſhall after bee deliuered; wherein for a diuelliſh and bloudie Sacrifice, he commanded 30000. perſons to be ſlaine: fifteen thouſand of which were Women, or gifts rather, the Daughters of the chiefe men of the Kingdome, and Religious, profeſſed of the Sects of Quiay Figrau, God of the Motes of the Sunne, and of Quiay Nuandel, God of the Battells, and of Compouitau, and of foure others, Quiay Mitru, Quiay Colompom, Quiay Muhelee, and Muhee Lacaſaa, whoſe fiue Sects, are the chiefe of the two and thirtie. Within this building wee ſaw diuers memorable things. One was a Wall againſt the other, almoſt a league compaſſe, borne vp with ſtone arches, and in ſtead of battlements, arounded with Latten grates, and at euery ſixe fathoms, Iron workes on pillers of Braſſe faſtened one to another, whereon by chaynes hung innumerable bells, making a continuall ſtrange noyſe, with the motion of the ayre.

140. Monaſteries.

Tartarian crueltie.

Nunnes ſacred to diuers Gods

The Porters of Hell.

At the great Gate of this ſecond wall, in terrible ſhapes, ſtood the two Porters of Hell (as they call them) Bacharom and Quqifau, with Iron Maces in their hands, terrible to looke on. Paſſing vnder an Iron chayne, faſtened to the breſts of theſe Diuels, wee came into a faire ſtreet long and wide, compaſſed with painted arches, on the top whereof were two rankes of Idols all that length, in which were aboue fiue thouſand Images, wee knew not of what matter, being all gilded, with Myters on their heads of diuers inuentions. At the end of this ſtreet, was a great ſquare Hill ſet with blacke and white ſhining ſtones, the whole ſquare compaſſed with foure rewes of Giants of mettall, each of fifteene ſpannes, with Halberds in their hands, and gilded beards. At the end of all ſtood Quiay Huiaon, God of the Raine, ſet vp againſt a baſtion or border, ſeuentie ſpannes long, and his head ſo high, that it reached to the battlements of the tower, (which were aboue twelue fathoms) by his mouth, eyes, noſtrils, and breſts, caſting out water, which the people below gathered as a great relique. This water came from the top of the tower by Iupiter or God of Rayne.

* Encoſtado à hum bordão.

Digitized by Google

by ſecret pipes. Wee paſſed vnder his legges, which ſtood as a great portall, and came to a large houſe like a Church, with three Iles on marble pillars, and on the walls on both ſides, many Idols great and ſmall of diuers figures, all gilded, ſet on their baſes in good order. At the end of this houſe on a round of fifteene ſteps, ſtood an Altar made in faſhion of a Throne, and thereon the Image of Nacapiran, like a goodly woman, with her hayre looſe, and her hands lifted to heauen, all of gold ſo burniſhed, that it dazeled the eyes. About that tribunall in the foure firſt ſteps, ſtood twelue Kings of China crowned in ſiluer. And beneath, were three rewes of gilded Idols on their knees, with their hands lifted vp, many ſiluer Candle-ſticks hanging about them. Going thence, wee came to another ſtreet of arches like the former; and from thence by two others of rich buildings, to a great hill, in which were eightie two Bells of mettall very great, hanging by chaynes from Iron beames ſuſtained with Iron Columnes. Thence wee went to a ſtrong Gate 'twixt foure towers, in which ſtood a Chiſa with thirtie Halberdiers, and two Notaries, which tooke the names of all paſſengers, to whom wee gaue thirtie Reis for entrance.

Golden ſtatue of Nacapiran.

The fourth remarkable and famous building, was in the Riuer of Batampina, in an Iland about a league in compaſſe, walled round with ſtone eight and thirtie ſpannes aboue water, within filled with earth, round encompaſſed with two rewes of Latten grates; the vttermoſt ſixe ſpannes high for people to leane on, the inner of nine, holding ſiluer Lions with balls, the Armes of the China Kings. Within theſe grates in good order, were placed one hundred and thirteene Chappels, in manner of round Bulwarkes; in each of them, was an alabaſter Sepulcher ſeated on the heads of two ſiluer Serpents, with faces of women and three hornes on their heads. In euery of them were thirteen Candleſticks of ſiluer, with ſeuen lights in each burning. In the midſt of a ſpacious place compaſſed with three rewes of grates, with two rankes of Idols, ſtood a high Tower with fiue ſteeples of diuers paintings, and on their tops, Lions of ſiluer; in which tower the Chinois ſayd, were the bones of the one hundred and thirteene Kings, worſhipped by them for great reliques. Theſe bones ſay they, euery New Moone, feaſt one with another, whereupon the vulgar at thoſe times, offer to them infinite ſtore of Fowles of all ſorts, Rice, Kine, Hogges, Sugar, Honey, and other prouiſion; which the Prieſts receiue, and deceiue them in recompence, with as it were Iubilees, of plenarie Indulgences, and remiſſion of ſinnes as they beleeue.

The fourth glorious Edifice.

113. Chappels, and their contents.

1469. Candleſtickes.

Indulgences.

In this Tower wee ſaw a rich houſe all lined with ſiluer plates, from the top to the bottome, in which ſtood thoſe one hundred and thirteene Kings ſtatues, and the bones of each King in his owne ſtatue; and they ſay, that by night theſe Kings communicate and paſſe the time together, which none may ſee but the Cabizondos, (a higher degree of Bonzos, as that of Cardinals with vs) which fables they beleeue for very certaintie. In this great circuit wee told three hundred and fortie Bells of mettall and caſt Iron, in ſeuenteene places, by twentie in a place, which all ſound on thoſe New-moone feaſts aboueſayd. Neere to that tower, in a rich Chappell built on ſeuen and thirtie columnes of ſtone, ſtood the Image of Amida made of ſiluer, with the hayres of gold, on a Throne of foureteene ſteps, all wrought with gold, the hands eleuated to Heauen: beneath her ſhoulders, hung (like lines of beades) many little Idols, as big as the middle finger: and the ſecret parts were couered with two great Oyſter-pearles, garniſhed with gold: They being demanded the meaning of this myſterie, ſayd, that after the generall Floud in which all mankinde was drowned, God ſent Amida from the Heauen of the Moone, (being great Chamberlaine to Nacapiran his wife) to reſtore the deſtroyed world; who ſetting heere feete in Calemplus before mentioned, being lately freed of the waters, ſhee turned it into gold, and there ſtanding on her feet with her face in heauen, a great quantitie of Creatures iſſued from downe her arme; downe her right hand Males, and Females downe the left; hauing no other place in her bodie whence to bring them foorth, as other women of the world, whom for ſinne God hath ſubiected to filthineſſe of corruption, to ſhew how filthy ſinne is. After ſhee had finiſhed this trauell or child-birth of 33333. Creatures, (as they number) one third part Males, and two parts Females; ſhee remayned ſo weake, hauing no bodie to prouide her any thing, that with dizzineſſe ſhee fell to the ground dead without recouerie. Whereat the Moone in condoling her death couered her ſelfe with ſorrow, which are thoſe ſhadowes wee ſee from the earth; which ſay they, ſhall remaine ſo many yeers as ſhe produced Creatures (33333) & then the Moone ſhall put off her maske of ſorrow, and the night ſhall bee after as cleere as the day. Such and other like mad ſtuffe did they tell, which might make one wonder, and more to weepe, that the Deuill ſhould gull them with ſuch manifeſt lyes, being otherwiſe ſo vnderſtanding a people.

Rich ſiluer Temple.

Lady Amida's Image.

Amida Chamberlaine to Nacapiran, as Iris to Iuno: a tale perhaps deuiſed from that Raine-bow couenant, Gen. 9. 15. as that which followeth from Gen. 3. 16.

From this Hill we went to another Temple of Nuns, ſumptuous and rich, in which they told vs was the Mother of this King, Nhay Camiſama, but would not let vs enter being ſtrangers. Thence by a ſtreet of Arches, wee went to a hauen called Hecharioo Topilen, where was ſtore of ſtrange ſhipping of diuers Kingdomes, which come continually to that Temple for a plenarie Iubilee, which the King with many priuiledges hath granted them, and dyet on free coſt. To ſpeake of other Temples and matters of China, which wee ſaw in our two moneths libertie were infinite.

A Nunnerie.

The

Hoſpitals for children.

The King of China moſt reſideth at Pequin, for ſo he ſweareth at his Coronation. There are certaine ſtreets ſeuered in this Citie by themſelues, wherein are houſes called Laginampur, that is, The Schoole of the poore, in which Orphans which know no father are taught to write and reade, and mechanike trades to earne their liuings. Of theſe Houſes they haue aboue two hundred, and as many more of poore Nurſes which giue ſucke to Children, expoſed or caſt foorth by their Parents (which are puniſhed if they bee knowne) and after they are weaned, are committed to the former houſes. And if any by naturall defect are vnable to learne a Trade, they apply him to that whereto he is able, as thoſe that are blind to Mills, two to grind, and one to ſift; and ſo in other caſes. Beſides, no Tradeſ-man may keepe ſhop without licence, which is not granted but with impoſing on them ſome of theſe poorer. The Miller is to giue meate and drinke to each of thoſe blinde perſons, and clothes, and fifteene ſhillings yeerely, which when hee dieth he may giue for his ſoule, that no poore ſhould periſh, according to the fourth precept of * Amida. For Creeples which cannot goe, they place them with makers of Frailes, Baskets, and other handiworkes: and thoſe which cannot vſe their hands haue great Hampers giuen them, and Baskets to ſerue for Porters to carrie what men buy, from the Markets to their houſes; ſuch as haue neither hands nor feet to vſe, are placed in great houſes like Monaſteries, where are many mercenary women which pray for the dead, halfe of the Offerings remayning to them, the other halfe to the Prieſts. If they be dumbe, they place them in a houſe like an Hoſpitall, where they are ſuſtayned with the Fines impoſed on Regraters and ſcolding women. For common women which are diſeaſed they haue other houſes, where they are cured and prouided for, at the coſts of other common women, each paying a monethly fee. The Dowries or Ioynters of conuicted Adultereſſes are beſtowed on the Hoſpitals of female Orphans, that honeſtie may gaine by diſhoneſties loſſe. Other honeſt poore men are maintayned in other ſtreets, at the charges of Sollicitors and Lawyers which maintayne vniuſt Suits, and of partiall bribed Iudges.

How the poore children are placed to Trades.

* Span. Aminto.

Prouiſions for all ſorts of poore.

Prouiſion againſt ſterility, and for the poore. See ſup. cap. 4. §. 6.

For the prouiſion of the poore I haue further heard read out of their Chronicles that Chanſiran Punagor, Great Grandfather of the King now reigning, deſiring to doe God ſeruice (being blinde after a ſickneſſe which he had) ordayned that in euery Citie there ſhould be ſtore-houſes of Wheat and Rice, that if any dearth ſhould happen, there might be a yeeres prouiſion, and the poore ſhould not periſh: and to this purpoſe he applyed the tenth part of the Kings Cuſtomes. They ſay, that God recompenced this his charitie with reſtitution of his ſight, which continued fourteene yeeres after till his death. This is ſtill obſerued, and the number of thoſe Store-houſes is ſaid to be fourteene thouſand. At Harueſt the old is diuided to the Inhabitants as they haue need, which after two moneths are to lay in as much new, and ſixe in the hundred more, that the ſtore be not diminiſhed. But if the yeere proue barren, it is diuided to them without gaine: and that which is giuen to the poore which haue not to ſatisfie, is paid out of the Kings Rents of that place, as the Kings Almes. And all the reſt of the Royall reuenues are diuided into three parts; one for maintenance of the Kings eſtate, and for the gouernment of the Kingdome; the ſecond for the defence of the Countrey, for Ports, Fleets, and the like; the third is put vp in the Treaſurie at Pequin, with which the King by ordinary power may not meddle, being deputed for defence of the Kingdome againſt the Tartars, and other warres with confining Kings; this part of the treaſure is called Chidampur, that is, The wall of the Kingdome. For they ſay, that if ſuch occaſions happen, the King ſhall not lay tribute whiles that laſteth, nor ſhall the people be vexed, as in other Countries, where ſuch prouidence is not vſed.

Royall reuenue how diſpoſed.

The Ieſuites alſo ſay, the King cannot at pleaſure diſpenſe it.

Indeed I feare to particularize all that we ſaw in this Citie, leſt the Reader ſhould doubt or mutter at the raritie, meaſuring things by that little they haue ſeene, and iudging by their owne curtalled conceits the truth of thoſe things which mine eyes haue ſeene. But high capacities, haughtie ſpirits, and large vnderſtandings, that meaſure not other ſtates by the miſeries and meanneſſe before their eyes, will perhaps be willing to heare things ſo rare; which I hold the more pardonable in others to doubt of, foraſmuch as I verily confeſſe, that I my ſelfe which beheld them with mine eyes, am often amazed, when with my ſelfe I recount the greatneſſes of Pequim, in the admirable eſtate of that Gentile King, in the ſplendor of the Chaens of Iuſtice, and of the Anchacys of gouernment, in the terror and dread cauſed in all by their Officers, in the ſumptuouſneſſe of the Houſes and Temples of their Idols; and of all the reſt therein. For only in the Citie Minapau which ſtands within the wall of the Kings Palace are 100000. * Eunuchs, and 30000. women, 12000. men for his Guard, and 12. Tutans, which is the greateſt dignitie, and commonly called the Sun-beames, as the King is called, the Sonne of the Sunne, whoſe perſon they repreſent. Beneath theſe 12. are 40. Chaens as Vice-royes, beſides the inferiour dignities, as Anchacys, Aytaos, Ponchacys, Lauteaas, and Chumbins, all which in the Court are aboue 500. and none of them haue leſſe then 200. men depending, the greater part of which are Mogores, Perſians, Coraçons, Moens, Calaminbans, Tartars, Cauchins, and ſome Bramaas; the Naturals being little eſteemed as effeminate, and wanting valour, how wittie ſoeuer in Arts and husbandrie: The women are white, chaſte, more giuen to labour then the men.

Not to compare China with what we ſee here. Admiranda Pequini.

* Minapau the Kings Palace: the number of Eunuches perhaps is miſtaken by the Printer: the Span. hath 10000. one cipher leſſe. Yet Pantoia ſaith, that yeere when hee writ, were choſen 3000. out of 20000. and in the Palace were 16000. Eunuchs.

The earth is fertile, which their ingratitude rather aſcribes to the merit of their King, then the prouidence of God. Some Prieſts alſo barter with them vpon Bills of exchange to bee repayed payed an hundred for one in Heauen, which Letters they call Cuchimiocos. Other Priests are of another Sect, called Nauſtolins, which denye the Soules immortalitie, and therefore teach to take their pleaſures in this life. Another Sect is called Trimecau, which holds, that a man ſhall ſo long lie in his Graue as hee hath liued aboue ground; after which, by the prayers of their Prieſts, the Soule ſhall returne into another creature ſeuen dayes, and then ſeeke for the old bodie left in the Graue, to carrie it to the Heauen of the Moone, where it ſhall ſleepe many yeeres, till it be conuerted into a Starre, and there remayne fixed for euer. Another beaſtly Sect, called Gizom, holds that Beaſts onely ſhall enioy Heauen, in recompence of their penance and trauels here ſuſtayned, and not Men which follow their luſts, except they leaue to Prieſts at their death, to pray for them.

Digitized by Google

Sects in China. Cuchimiocos. Nauſtolins. Trimechau. Gizom.

§. VI.

Their remoue to Quanſy, quarrels, miſeries; Tartarian huge Armie, and loſſe at the ſiege of Pequim, reported. Quanſy taken, and Nixianco: MENDEZ his exploit. Their entertaynment by the Tartar King, and going to Cauchinchina with his Embaſſadours, with many Tartarian obſeruations.

AFter we had two moneths and a halfe gone vp and downe in the Citie of Pequim, on Saturday the thirteenth of Ianuary, 1544. they carried vs to Quanſy to fulfill our Sentence, where we were brought before the Chaem, who made vs of his Guard of eightie Halbarders allowed him by the King, which made vs thankfull to God, being a place of little labour and more maintenance and liberty. But after a moneth, the Deuill ſowed ſtrife betwixt two of our companie, which in reaſoning about the Families of the Madureyras, and the Fonſecas, whether were more eminent, grew to heate, thence to brauing words, and after to blowes and wounds, not onely of thoſe two, but by part takings of fiue of the reſt. The Chaem and Anchacys ſentenced vs to thirtie blowes a man, which made vs more bloudy then our wounds. Then they carried vs to a priſon, where we lay in Irons ſixe and forty dayes. After which we were brought to the Barre, and receiued other thirty ſtripes, and remoued to another priſon, where we ſtayed two moneths, then remoued to certaine Iron-works fiue moneths, much pinched in backe and belly, and being diſeaſed with a contagious ſickneſſe, they ſent vs forth to begge, which wee did foure moneths. In this miſerie wee ſware to each other to liue Chriſtianly and louingly, and that each moneth one ſhould bee chiefe, whom all the reſt ſhould obey, whereby wee after liued in peace.

Quanſy. Portuga's quarrell. Paritie a peace-breaker.

Chriſtouan Borralho the chiefe for that moneth, diſtributed vs by couples to take their turnes weekely to begge, two to fetch water, and make ready what we got, two to get wood. I and Gaſpar de Meyrelez went one morning to the Wood, and Meyrelez being Muſicall played on his Viall, and ſung; a thing pleaſing to that people, which ſpend much time in paſtime and banquets, and profitable to vs in procuring almes. As wee went, wee met with a Funerall pompe with Muſicke in the midſt: one of which Muſicians knowing Meyrelez, prayed him to play and ſing as loud as he could, that this dead man wee now carrie to buriall may heare thee, to comfort him in leauiug his wife and children, whereto he was much affected. Hee modeſtly refuſing, the other angerly anſwered, and others intreated, and almoſt forced him to goe with them to the burning Buriall after their cuſtome. I thus left alone, went and got my bundle of wood on my backe. In the way homeward I met in the way an old man, clothed in blacke Damaske furred with white Lambe, who hauing ſhewed mee a ſiluer Croſſe, told me, that he was a poore Portugall, Vaſco Caluo, which ſeuen and twentie yeeres ſince was captiued with Tomé Pirez, whom Lope Soarez had ſent Embaſſadour to China, which had a miſerable ſucceſſe by reaſon of a Portugall Captaine. Hee brought me to his houſe, and told me the ſtorie of his and his fellowes aduentures, and I ours to him: and at his requeſt I fetched the reſt of our companie to his poore houſe. Hee brought vs to another roome, where his wife was, with her two little ſonnes, and two ſmall daughters. Shee entertayned vs louingly, and ſhewed vs her Cloſet with an Altar, and a Croſſe thereon, ſecretly kept; ſhee alſo and her children ſaid a Portugall Prayer, with the Pater noſter, Creed, and Aue Maria, to our great ioy.

Muſick for the comfort of the dead. Vaſco Caluo. See the former note §. 3.

Eight moneths being ſpent in this our miſerie and beggerie, on Wedneſday the thirteenth of Iuly, a great tumult and crie aroſe amongſt the people, by reaſon of newes of the Tartarian King his comming to Pequin, with a greater power then euer any King had in the World; that there were in his Armie 1800000. men, 600000. of which were Horſe-men, which had comne by Land from Lançame, and Faniſtir, and Mecuy, with 80000. Badas * to carrie their prouiſion. Twelue hundred thouſand Foot-men had comne in ſixteene thouſand Laulees and Iangas downe the Batampina. And becauſe the King of China durſt not reſiſt ſo great a power, hee was gone

Newes of the Tartarian Armie, and ſiege of Pequim. Lançame. * Rhino erots. 16000. Barkes, to Nanquim. Moreouer it was said that in the Pinall of Manicataron, a league and halfe off was lodged one Nauticor, a Tartarian Captaine with 70000. Horse, who within few houres would bee at that Citie. This newes much terrified vs, and the next morning the Enemie appeared with Colours quartered greene and white in seuen battels, neere to a Pagode called Petilau Nameioo, a little from the walls. From that Pagode they came with sound of Instruments of warre in one grosse Squadron like a halfe Moone, and encircled the Citie: and being within Caliuer shot, they made a shout as if Heauen and Earth would haue gone together, and scaling it with two thousand Ladders which they brought with them, assaulted it in all places they could very resolutely, and at last brake into the gates by certaine deuices of great Iron Presses, and slue the Chaem with many Mandarines, putting the Citie to the sword, sacke, and fire; killing, as was thought, 60000. persons, and after stay of seuen dayes there, went for Pequim, where their King was.

Digitized by Google

Nauticor commeth to Quansy.

The Citie taken.

Nixiamco a China Castle assaulted.

Two dayes after they were gone, they came to a Castle called Nixiamcoo, which he besieged. Nauticor called the seuentie Captaines to consultation, and agreed to make ready fiue hundred Ladders that night for the next dayes assault. The next day their Palungnindoens (so they call their Martiall Instruments) sounded, and fourteene battalions marched, and gaue assault with great cries, scaling the walls, and fighting furiously; the besieged also defending themselues couragiously, and in two houres killing three thousand Tartars, the rest fleeing; many wounded with poisoned Arrowes, whereof they died. A Counsell of Warre was hereupon called, one of them being the man which had vs in custodie; who returning with two Captains of his acquaintance to supper, in their discourse of that misfortune they cast eyes vpon vs there prisoners, and questioned of what Nation we were, and whether our Kings vsed to warre, and whether any of vs knew any Stratagem to get that Castle, promising our freedome if we could effect it. To which we answered accordingly, and George Mendez vndertooke the designe against our likings fearing his disabilitie, and our further danger. One of these Captaines told the Mitaquer (Nauticor) hereof, who sent to Tileymay the Captaine which had charge of vs, to bring vs to him. He gaue vs a graue welcome (being now in counsell with the seuenty Coronels, two houres after midnight, and first made vs to eate, hauing taken off part of our Irons; and then made large promises to George Mendez if he could doe as he had said; to which he answered, that hee could answere nothing till he saw it, and then he would tell him the way to take it. Wee were remoued to a Tent adioyning, and there guarded, full of feare lest this vndertaking would cost our liues with a People so cruell. The next day George Mendez and two others of our companie were carried with a band of Horse-men about the Castle to view it, and then brought to the Mitaquer, to whom he professeth great facilitie of effecting his purpose: which so contented him, that he sware by the Rice he eate to present vs to the King, and to fulfill his promises, presently taking off the remainder of our Irons. Hee made vs to eate neere him, and did vs other honour. After which, George Mendez as Camp-master appointed store of Chists, Boxes, and matterials to fill vp the ditch, and three hundred large scaling Ladders able to hold each three Souldiers, against the next morning to be made ready two hours before day. All this was happily effected, the ditch filled, and Mendez with two others of vs first scaled the wall, and set vp the Tartars Colours; fiue thousand Tartars gallantly seconding, so that with a hote skirmish the besieged were all slaine, and the Castle taken; the gates opened to the Mitaquer, who with great ceremonies tooke thereof possession. He caused George Mendez and the rest of vs to eate neere him, razed the Castle, and taking Mendez with him on horse-backe returned to his Tent, giuing him 1000. Taeis, and each of vs 100. the cause of much emulation in some of our companie, who by his meanes had obtayned libertie. Thence the Mitaquer marched by places desolate, to a good Towne by the Riuers side, called Lautimey, the people whereof were fled; the Towne these barbarians fired, as they did other places where they came. The next day they burned Bunxay, a sowne field of aboue sixe leagues circuit; most Wheat; and came to the Hill Pommitay, and the next day to the Riuer Palemzitan, within two leagues of the Kings Campe. Guiyay Paran sonne of the King of Persia, at the Castle of Lautir, by the Kings appointment stayed for him; to whom Mitaquer on his knees deliuered his Scimitar, hauing first kissed the ground fiue times. Hee welcomed him with honourable termes, and after that, stepping backe two or three paces with a new ceremonie, and with a voyce high and seuere (as he which represented the Kings person) said, He, whose rich border of his garment my mouth continually kisseth, whose great power ruleth ouer others by Land, and on the Iles of the Sea, sends to tell thee by mee his Slaue, that thy honourable comming is as welcome to his presence as the sweet Summer morning, wherein the bathing of cold water most delights the flesh: and that without delay thou hastenest to heare his voice, mounted on this Horse richly furnished out of his Treasurie with mee, that thou mayest be equall in honour with the principall of his Court, and they which see thee thus honoured may know that thou art a strong member, whose valour deserues this reward.

Mendez his vndertaking.

The Castle taken.

Lautimey.

Thus with great state and pompe they went to the King: and fifteene dayes after he brought vs to the Tents of the King well horsed, then in the sumptuous House of Nacapirau. When he came to the Trenches, hee descended from his Litter (wee from our Horses) and asked leaue of

Nantaran

Digitized by Google

Nautaran to enter, which granted, he againe went to his Litter, and we followed on foot: at the next passage he descended, and went in leauing vs to expect him. An houre after he returned with foure faire Boyes gallantly arayed in greene and white, with their golden Xorcás on their feet, to whom all the people rose vp, and drawing their Scimitars laid them on the ground, saying three times, A hundred thousand yeeres liue the Lord of our heads. Wee lying prostrate with our faces on the ground, one of the Boyes said to vs with a loude voice, Reioyce yee men of the Worlds end, for the houre of your desire is comme, in which the libertie which the Mitaquer promised you in the Castle of Nixianco, shall bee granted you. Lift vp your heads from the ground, and your hands to Heauen, giuing thankes to the Lord which made the Stars. Wee answered as wee were taught, Let it bee our fortune that his foot tread on our heads: the Boy answered, The Lord grant your request. State of the Tartarian Campe and Tent Royall.

These foure Boyes with Mitaquer guided vs on thorow a Gallerie standing on sixe and twentie Pillars of Brasse, from which wee entred a great Hall of timber, in which stood Mogores, Persians, Berdios, Calaminhans, and Bramas: thence wee came to another Hall, called Tigibipan, where were great store of armed men in fiue files quite thorow the Hall, their Swords garnished with Gold. There Mitaquer performed some ceremonies, swearing on the Maces which the foure Boyes carried, kneeling and kissing the ground three times. Then we passed another gate, and came to a square great Hall like the Cloister of a Monasterie, in which stood foure files of brazen Images like Sauages with Maces and Crownes, seuen and twentie spannes high, and sixe broad, which the Tartars said were the three hundred and sixty Gods which made the dayes of the yeere; which the Tartar King had taken out of a Temple, called Angicamoy, in the Citie Xipatom, in a Chappell of the Sepulchres of the Kings of China, to carrie home in triumph. In this Hill was a Garden of strange herbs and flowers, and therein a Tent vpon twelue turned posts of Camphire wood, in which was a Throne all garnished with much curiositie of Gold and Siluer workes, representing very liuely the Sunne, Moone, Starres, Cloudes. In the midst of the Throne stood a siluer great Statue, called Abicaunilancor, that is, God of the health of Kings, (taken also from Angicamoy) about which stood foure and thirtie Idols as big as children about sixe yeeres old, in two rankes set on their knees and hands lifted vp as in veneration. At the entrie of the Tent were foure Boyes gorgeously arayed which went about it with Censers, and at the sound of a Bell prostrated themselues on the ground, and censing, said, Let our crie come vnto thee as a sweet sauour that thou mayest heare vs. That Tent was guarded by sixtie Halbarders, standing a pretie distance from it round about. Beyond that Hill wee entred another place, where were foure rich roomes, in which were many great persons. The Guards. Xipatom. Curious Throne.

Thence we followed Mitaquer and the Boyes vnto a great Hall like a Church, where stood sixe Porters with Maces, which with new ceremonie let vs in. Here was the King of Tartars, accompanied with his Grandes, among which were the Kings of Pasua, Mecuy, Capimper, Rasa Benam, and the Anchesacotay, and other Kings to the number of fourteene, all in rich attire, placed at the foot of the Throne, two or three paces distant; and a little further off stood two and thirtie faire women, playing on diuers Instruments. The King sate on the Throne, encompassed with twelue Boyes on their knees, with small Scepters of gold on their shoulders; amongst which was a faire Damsell which euer and anone fanned the King. This was the sister of Mitaquer, who by her meanes enioyed that grace and respect in the Armie. The King was about fortie yeeres old, tall, not fleshy, well set; his beard short with Mostachos like the Turks, his eyes somewhat small, his countenance seuere; clothed in a shining reddish vesture set with Pearles; on his feet certaine Slippers greene wrought with Gold and Pearles; and on his head a kind of Sallet with a border of Diamonds and Rubies. Before we came at him by ten or twelue paces, we made our courtesie, three times kissing the ground, with other ceremonies which wee were taught. The King commanded the Musike to cease, and bid Mitaquer aske this Nation of the end of the world, if they haue a King, and how their Land is called, and how farre it is from China. One of vs answered for the rest, that our Land was called Portugall, our King was great and mightie, and from thence to Pequin was about three yeeres Voyage; whereat he much maruelled, as not thinking the World so great; and striking on his thigh said aloud with eyes to Heauen, O Creator of all things, which of vs poore Pismires on the Earth may be able to comprehend the maruels of thy greatnesse? And signing with his hand he made vs come neerer to the steps of the Throne where the fourteene Kings were placed, and demanded vs againe, how farre? and when we said, three yeeres; he asked, why we came rather by Sea then by Land? wee answered, that the diuersitie of States and Kings in the way hindred. He asked, What doe you seeke with so farre trauels and great troubles? wee gaue as good reason as we could; whereat he shaking his head, said to the King of Benan, an old man, that it seemed that our Countrey had much Couetousnesse, and little Iustice; so, said the other, it appeares; for those men which flie on the top of all waters, by wit and industrie to get that which God hath not giuen them, either pouerty forceth to forsake their Countrey, or vanitie and blindnesse caused by couetousnesse, makes them forget God and their Fathers. After this, the women began againe to play, and the King retired himselfe into a house alone with his women which played, and the Damsell The Tartar King. His State. His person.

Digitized by Google

that fanned. One of the twelue Scepter-boyes told Mitaquer from his Sister, that the King commanded hee should not goe away, which he tooke for a great grace, and wee returned to our Tents.

Tartars losse. Consultation.

Fortie and three dayes after we came to the Campe Royall (in which space were many fights betwixt the besiegers and besieged, two assaults by scaling with the Tartars losse) the Tartarian called a Councell, where were assembled seuen and twentie Kings, and many great men and Captaines, which agreed that seeing Winter was now comming, and the waters of both Riuers had risen and filled the Trenches, and many were sicke (foure or fiue thousand dying daily) that it was best to rayse the siege. The King therefore embarked the Foot-men with the munitions, fired the Tents, and went away with 300000. Horse by land, and 20000. Badas, 450000. men being found by accounts, to haue dyed in this expedition, most of sickenesse, 300000. Horses and 60000. Badas, for want of prouisions the two last moneths and a halfe of this Siege (which endured sixe moneths and a halfe.) Besides, 300000. had runne to the Chinois, wonne by their great pay. Hee lodged the first night of his departure at a Riuer called Quaytragum; the next day he came to Guisampee, which hee found wholly forsaken; thence to Liampew, and after seuenteene dayes (eight leagues a day) he came to Guauxitum, and forced it, committing therein cruell slaughters, to prouide his Armie of necessaries by the spoyle thereof. The next day hee came to Caixilo, which he medled not with being great and strong, hauing therein 50000. men, of which 10000. were Mogores, Cauchins, and Champaas, better Souldiers then the Chinois. Thence hee passed to the walls of Singrachiron, and the next day to Xipator, and then sent away most of his Soul liers, spending seuen dayes in the pay, and execution of Iustice on Prisoners. Thence discontent, hee went to Lançame by water, (with onely one hundred and twentie Laulees, in which were some ten or twelue thousand men) where sixe dayes after hee arriued in the night without any pompe.

Siege of Pequim breakes vp.

The Kings returne into Tartaria.

Lançame.

There he stayed sixe and twentie dayes, till all his companie were come both of horse and foot; after which hee went to a greater Citie called Tuymican, where he was personally visited by confining Princes and Ambassadours from remoter Kings, Xatamas of Persia, Siammom Emperour of the Gueos, which within the Countrey confine with Brama of Tangu, the Calaminhan Lord of the brute force of Elephants, the Sornau of Odiaa, (intituled King of Siam) whose Seniorie comprehendeth seuen hundred leagues of coast, from Tanauçarim to Champaa, containing seuenteen Kingdomes; the King of the Mogores whose Kingdome lyes within land, betwixt Corazan neere Persia, and the Kingdome of Dely and Chitor, and an Emperour called Caran, whose Seniorie confineth within the Mountaines of Goncalidan, with a Nation which the Naturals call Moscoby, of whom wee saw some in this Citie, ruddie, of bigge stature, with shooes, and furred cloathes, hauing some latine words, but seeming rather for ought wee obserued Idolaters then Christians, and much giuen to vnnaturall lust. To the Ambassadour of that Prince Caran, better entertainment was giuen then to all the rest. Hee brought with him one hundred and twentie men of his guard, with Arrowes and gilded quiuers, all cloathed in Shamois skinnes murrie and greene; and twelue Porters on horsebacke with Maces of Siluer, leading twelue Horses in their right hands with rich embroidered Furnitures. After whom followed twelue men of high and Giant-like stature, cloathed Sauage-like in Tygers skinnes, leading great Grey-hounds in chaynes and collers of Siluer, muzled. Then came twelue Boyes, faire and well proportioned of equall stature in gallant array, & next them Leixigau the Ambassador himselfe, in a Chariot (they call it a Pirange) with three wheeles on a side, garnished with Siluer and a Chayre of the same, attended with fortie Foot-men in murrie and greene, yeelding a goodly sight, all things manifesting the greatnesse of his Lord. Wee were one day in his lodging with Mitaquer, who was sent to visit him, where amongst other strange things, we saw fiue roomes hanged with Tapestrie of Frogges very rich, like that vsed amongst vs, as if they had come from one place; the Canopies, Siluer-tables, Furniture and State, all rich. This Ambassadour came not only to welcome home the Tartar, but to treate also of a Marriage for his Lord, with one of the Tartars Sisters, named Meica Vidau, a woman of thirtie yeeres, very charitable to the poore, whom wee haue often seene in their Festiuall dayes.

Tuymican.

The Mogor is now much altered, & since that time Lord of India, Caran.

A Marriage treated on betwixt the Caran and Tartar.

Mitaquer at our request mentioned vs to the King, who sayd, he would send vs with his Ambassador shortly to Cauchenchina; and caused vs to be brought againe to his presence with great ceremonie of State and Maiestie as before at Pequim, where hee questioned vs, if we would serue him, which we excused saying, we had Wiues and Children in our owne Countrey; and asking George Mendez, hee accepted. Eight of vs were commended to the Ambassadour which was to goe to Vzanguee in Cauchenchina & we went in the same Barke. We set forth from Tuymican the ninth of May, and came to a Schoole or Vniuersitie called Guaipamor, where wee lodged in a Temple (or Monasterie) called Naypatim. Next morning wee followed our voyage downe the Riuer, and two houres within night came to Puxanguim, a small Citie, well fortified with Towers and Bulwarks after our fashion, with store of Artillerie of wood, like the Pumps of ships, the stocks where the Barrels were fastned being plated with Iron, and carrying a bullet as bigge as a Falcon: which inuention they say, they receiued of a people called Alimanis, of a land named

They depart from Tartaria.

Vzanguee.

An Vniuersitie.

Puxanguim.

Guns of wood.

Digitized by Google

named Muscoo, which by a great and deepe lake of salt water, came thither with nine Barkes of oares, in companie of a Lady, which was sayd to bee exiled out of her Countrey by a King of Denmarke. The next day wee came to Linxau, and fiue dayes after we continuing our course downe the Riuer, came to Singuafatur, a huge Temple, more then a league in compasse; in which space were built one hundred and sixtie foure large and long houses full of Skuls, the other bones lying without in great piles. On a Hill compassed with nine grates of Iron, was standing against a strong stone wall, a monstrous statue of Iron thirtie braces high, and six broad, in both his hands holding a bullet sixe and thirtie spannes about, of cast Iron also. (This to wound the Serpent which came to robbe them) himselfe being hee which should one day restore the flesh to their owne bones, if they gaue Almes, otherwise to the most vnable and putrid: his name Pachinaran Dubeeulem Pinanfaque, who 74000. yeeres agoe, was borne of a Tortoyse named Migania, and of a Sea-horse one hundred and thirtie braces long, named Tibremoucan. The Ambassadours told vs, that of his Confraternities, there arose to him of annuall rents aboue 200000. Taeis, and as much more of the Sepulchers of the Nobles, which were by themselues; that there belonged to him twelue thousand Priests preying on him, and praying for the dead, who might not without their Superiours licence depart out of that Circuit. These Priests once a yeare may defile themselues in fornication within that Circuit; without, as oft as they will, without sinne, the Chisangues permitting egresse. There are many women also enclosed, who by their Libangús or Prioresses leaue, permit themselues to those Priests.

Linxau. Singuafatur Temple and superstitions. Monkes and Nuns, chaste in the Deuils name.

The second day after, wee came to a great Citie on the Riuer side called Quanginau, where the Ambassadours stayed three dayes for prouision, and by reason of a Feast at the entrance of Talapicor of Lechune, who is there as a Pope: who had priuiledged these inhabitants to be all Priests, authorised to Sacrifice and giue Bills of exchange for money to bee repayed in Heauen. He gaue the Ambassadour grace to legitimate in his Countrey for money, and to giue tytles of Honour; which hee recompenced, giuing to the Priests all that he could make, and two thousand Taeis the King had giuen vs, for which he gaue vs fifteene in the hundred. Foure dayes wee passed downe the Riuer to Lechune, the mother Citie of that false Religion of Gentilitie, as Reme is with vs, wherein is a sumptuous Temple, in which are seuen and twentie Tartar Emperours buried in rich Chappels lyned with Siluer, hauing abundance of siluer Idols. On the North-side a little from the Temple, was a notable strong great wall, within which were built two hundred and eightie Monasteries, of men and women; in which were sayd to bee two and fortie thousand religious professed, besides seruitours. In those Houses are many Brazen pillars with Idols of their Saints thereon, so much more gilded as esteemed. In one of them was the Kings Sister a widow, which had beene wife of Raia Benan, Prince of Pafua, after whose death shee entred Religion with sixe thousand women. The Ambassadour visited her, and kissed her foot as a Saint.

Quanginau. A Gentile Pope Lechune. Idols. Monasteries.

Departing thence downe the Riuer fiue dayes, wee came to a great Citie called Rendacalem, in the confines of Tartaria. And thence forwasds began the Segniorie of Xinaleygrau, thorow which wee trauelled foure dayes, and then came to a Towne called Voulem, where the Ambassadours were well receiued, and prouided of Pylots for those Riuers; which wee descended seuen dayes without seeing any thing of note, and then came to a straight called Quatanqur, into which the Pylots entred to escape a Pyrat, which had spoyled the most part of the Countrey. Thus wee came to the Lake Singapamor, called by the Naturals Cunebetee, and sayd to contayne sixe and thirtie leagues in Circuit. Foure Riuers runne thence, Ventrau Eastward thorow Siam, entring the Sea by the barre of Chiatabu, in twentie sixe degrees; Iangumaa Southwards by the Laos and Gueos, and part of Dãbambu enter the Sea at Martauan, in the Kingdome of Pegu; Pumfileu runnes thorow all Capimper and Sacotay, and all the Empire of Monginoco, with part of Meleytay and Souady, and so to the barre of Cosmim, neere Arracan. Of the fourth Riuer the Ambassadours could giue vs no instructions, but some thought it to bee Ganges. In seuen dayes more, wee came to a place called Caleypute, where they threw stones at vs, and would not suffer vs to land. Thence we sayled by another larger Riuer nine dayes, and came to Tarem a good Towne, subiect to the Cauchim, where we were well receiued: and in seuen dayes more came to a good Citie called Xolor. There were Siluer mines, in which one thousand men were at worke, whence they sayd was yeerely taken sixe thousand Pikes, which makes eight thousand Quintals of ours. Thence wee went other fiue dayes by that great Riuer, the Countrey being well peopled, and came to the Citie Manaquileu at the foot of the Hills Combay in the borders of China, and Cauchim; thence to Tinamquaxy. Thence they sent their foure Barkes to Huzamguee, the chiefe Citie of Cauchim, and went by Land to Fanaugrem, where the King was.

Xinaleygrau. Singapamor Lake, or Cunabetee. Ventrau. Chiabata. Iangumа. Pumfileu. Caleypute. Tarem. Xolor. Combay. Huzamguee.

Their entertainment there and iourney thence to Iapan, I omit, with their following long Pilgrimage in that Easterne world; wherein I am afraid to wander in places and affaires so vncouth. Wearie already of things so strange, and therefore vncertaine, I will passe to other Authors; and first to the Philippina's and Spanish Commerce of China. The Voyage of Legaspi, is taken out of a Latine Manuscript, the rest out of Mendoza, his Spanish discourse of China, and certayne Friars which went thither; the two Letters except, borrowed of an Italian Author.

Digitized by Google

Chap. III.

Spanish plantation of the Philippinas, and what entercourse hath thence hapned betwixt them and the Chinois.

§. I.

First discouerie of the Philippinas : written by Frier Ivan Gonzales de Mendosa.

Magelane straights.

Magalianes, was the first that discouered these Ilands, hauing passed the straight (which vnto this day beareth the tytle of his name) and came vnto the Iland of Zubu, whereas they did Baptise certaine of the Inhabitants, and afterwards in a banquet, the same Ilanders did kill him, and other fortie of his companions, which was the occasion that Sebastian de Guetaria, a naturall Biskin borne, for to escape with his life, did put himselfe in a ship that remayned of the voyage (which afterwards was named the Victorie) and in her, and with a few people that helped him, with the fauour of God hee came vnto Sinill, hauing compassed the whole world, from the Orient vnto the Ponent, a thing which caused vnto all men great admiration, but in particular vnto the Emperour Charles the first of famous memorie, who after he had giuen many gifts and fauours vnto the sayd Sebastian de Guetaria, he gaue order that a new Armie should bee made readie, and to returne againe in demand of the sayd Ilands, and to discouer that new world.

The second Voyage.

So when all things were in a readinesse, for to depart on their Voyage (the which was done with great breuitie) they ordayned for Generall of all that fleete, one Villa Lobos, commanding him to goe by the Nuoua Espania, The Villa Lobos, arriued at the Ilands of Malucas, and at those of Terrenate, and at other Ilands joyning vnto them, the which Ilands were layd to gage by the aforesayd Emperour vnto the Crowne of Portugall. In these Ilands they had great warres by meanes of the Portugals, and seeing themselues with little helpe and small resistance, for to goe forwards with their conquest, they left it off, and went to the most part of them with the aforesayd Portugals, vnto the India of Portugall, from whence afterwards, they sent them as prisoners vnto the sayd King of Portugall, as offenders, that had entred his Ilands without his licence : who did not onely leaue to doe them any harme, but did intreate them very well, and sent them vnto their owne Countrey of Spaine, and gaue them all things necessarie for their iourney, and that in abundance.

Villa Lobos.

Then certaine yeeres after, Don Philip King of Spaine, being very willing that the discouering should goe forwards, which the Emperour his father had so earnestly procured, sent and commanded Don Luys de Velasco, who was his Vice-roy of the Nuoua Espania, that hee would ordayne an armie, and people for to returne and discouer the sayd Ilands, and to send in the sayd fleete for Gouernour, of all that should bee discouered. Miguel Lopez de Legaspi, who did accompilsh all that his Maiestie had commanded, and made the discouerie thereof as followeth, to bee declared.

When the Spaniards came vnto them, they were without Lord or head, or any other to whom they should shew dutie, but hee which had most power and people, did most command : so that this (and that there were so many of equall power) was the occasion that ciuill warres continued, without any respect of nature, kindred, or any other durie, but like vnto bruite Beasts, killing, spoyling, and captiuing one another, the which was a great helpe vnto the Spaniards, for to subiect that Country with so great ease vnto the King, and called them the Ilands Philippinas, in respect of his name. They did vse amongst them, to make Captiues and Slaues, such as they did take in vnlawfull warres, and for trifling matters, the which God did remedie, by the going thither of the Spaniards : for you should haue a man with fortie or fiftie friends in his companie, or seruants, that vpon a sodaine, would goe and set vpon a small Village of poore people and vnprouided, and take and binde them all, and carrie them away for Slaues, without any occasion or reason, and make them to serue them all the dayes of their life, or else sell them to other Ilands. And if it so chanced, that one did lend vnto another, a basket or two of Rice (the which might bee worth a Ryall of plate) with condition, to returne it againe within ten dayes : if the debtor did not pay it the same day, the next day following hee should pay it double, and afterward to double it euery day, so long as he did keepe it, which in conclusion, would grow to bee so great, that to pay the same, hee is forced to yeeld himselfe for Captiue and Slaue.

But vnto all such as were captiued in this order, or in such like, the King of Spaine hath commanded to giue libertie, yet this iust commandement is not in euery point fulfilled and accomplished, because such as should execute the same, haue interest therein. All these Ilands were Gentiles and Idolaters, but now there is amongst them many thousands Baptised, vnto whom the King

Digitized by Google

King hath shewed great mercie, in sending vnto them the remedie for their soules in so good time: for if the Spaniards had stayed any more yeares, they had beene all Moores at this day, for that there were come vnto the Iland of Burneo, some of that Sect that did teach them, and lacked little, for to worship that false Prophet Mahomet, whose false, peruerse and corrupt memory, was with the Gospel of Christ easily rooted out.

In all these Ilands they did worship the Sunne and Moone, and other second causes, figures of men and women, which are called in their Language Maganitos, at whose Feasts (which they doe make very sumptuous, with great Ceremonies and Superstition) they doe call Magaduras. But amongst them all, they haue in most veneration an Idoll, whom they called Batala, the which reuerence they had for a Tradition, yet can they not say what should be the occasion that he should deserue more then any of the rest, to be had in so great estimation. In certayne Ilands not farre off, called the Illocos, they did worship the Deuill, and made vnto him many Sacrifices, in recompence of a great quantitie of Gold he had giuen vnto them, but now by the goodnesse of God, and the great diligence put and done by the Fathers of the Order of Saint Austin (who were the first that passed into those parts, and liued worthily) and also by the Friers of Saint Francis, which went thither ten yeares after, all these Ilands or the most part of them are baptized, and vnder the Ensigne of Iesus Christ: and the rest which doe remayne and are not, is more for lacke of Ministers and Preachers, then for any obstinacie of their parts. There is now gone thither certayne Fathers of the Order called Iesuits, who will be a helpe vnto them with their accustomed zeale and labour. And now goeth thither many other Religious men, very well learned and Apostolike, of the Order of Saint Dominicke, who will doe their endeuour to conuert them vnto Christ, as it behoooueth Christians to doe.

The Deuil was worshipped.

They of these Ilands were accustomed to celerate their Feasts aforesaid, and to make Sacrifices vnto their Idols, by the order of certayne women which were Witches, whom they doe cal in their Language Holgoi, that were had in as great estimation amongst them, as be the Priests amongst Christians. These did talke ordinarily with the Deuill, and many times in publike, and doe Deuillish Witch-crafts both in wordes and deedes: into whom it is to bee beleeued, that that the Deuill did enter, for that straight-wayes they did answere vnto all things that were demanded of them, although for the most part they would tell a Lye, or else such words that might be giuen diuers interpretations of, and of diuers vnderstandings. They did also vse to cast Lots, they were great Agorismers, or obseruers of times: in so much that if they beginne any Iourney, and at the beginning they meete with a Cayman or Lizard, or any other sauage Worme, they know it to be a signe of euill fortune, whereupon they would straight-wayes leaue off their Iourney, although it did import them very much, and returne vnto their Houses, saying, that the Heauen will not that they should goe forwarde on that Iourney: but all these lyes and falseneese haue beene taught them, and they perswaded to by the Deuill, are ouerthrowne and taken away by the Law of the Gospel (as aforesaid) and haue now amongst them many Monasteries full of Religious men, of the Order of Saint Austine, Saint Francis, and of Iesuits. According vnto the common opinion, at this day there is conuerted and baptized more then foure hundred thousand soules, which is a great number: yet in respect of the quantitie that are not as yet conuerted, there are but a few. It is left vndone (as aforesaid) for want of Ministers, for that, although his Majestie doth ordinarily send thither, without any respect of the great charge in doing the same, yet by reason that there are so many Iland, and euery day they doe discouer more and more, and being so farre off, they cannot come vnto them all, as necessitie requireth. Such as are baptized doe receiue the faith with great firmenesse, and are good Christians, and would be better, if that they were holpen with good ensamples: as those which haue beene there so long time are bound to doe: that the lacke thereof doth cause some of the Inhabitants so much to abhorre them, that they would not see them once painted vpon a wall. For proofe whereof (and for to moue such as haue power and authoritie to put remedie in the same, I will declare vnto you here a strange case, the which royally did passe of a truth in one of these Ilands, and is very well knowne amongst them: that is, there chanced to dye an Ilander, a principall man amongst them: a few dayes after that he was baptized, beeing very contrite for his sinnes, the which he had done against God before he was baptized, and after hee dyed. So after by the Diuine permission of God he appeared vnto many of that Iland whom hee did perswade forthwith to receiue the Baptisme, with reasons of great efficacie, and declared vnto them (as one that had experienced the same) the reward of that good deed which without all doubt should be giuen vnto them, if they would receiue the same, and liue after conformable, and according vnto the Commandements of Christ, for the which he told them, and said, that forth-with so soone as he was dead, he was carried by the Angels into glory, there whereas all things were of delight, pleasure, and content, and did communicate onely in the sight of God, and that there was none that entred therein, neither could enter, except he were baptized, according vnto the preaching of the Spaniards, of whom and of others that were like vnto them, there was an infinite number. Therefore, if so be that they would goe and enjoy of those benefits and delights, it is necessary that first they should be baptized, and afterwards to obserue and keepe the Com-

Witches.

Spaniards hated in the Philippinas.

Spanish report of a Vision.

man-

Digitized by Google

The Indians would not goe into Heauen becauſe there were Spaniſh Souldiers.

mandements that be preached vnto them by the Fathers, that are amongſt the Caſtillas, and therewith he vaniſhed away, and they remayned treating amongſt themſelues, concerning that which they had heard, and was the occaſion that ſome of them forth-with receiued the Baptiſme, and that others did delay it, ſaying, that becauſe there were Spañard Souldiers in glorie, they would not goe thither, becauſe they would not be in their company. All this hurt is done by one peruerſe or impious man, and with one euill enſample, the which amongſt many good, as you haue in thoſe parts: but eſpeciall amongſt them in particular, it ought to bee reprehended and puniſhed ſeuerely with rigour.

Theſe Ilands at the firſt diſcouery of them, had the fame to be Mal Sanos, or vnwholeſome, but ſince experience hath ſhewed and proued it to the contrary: It is a Countrey maruellous fertill, and yeeldeth very much Rice, Wheate, Goates, Hennes, Deere, Buffes, Kine, and great ſtore of Hogges, whoſe fleſh is ſo ſauourie as the Mutton they haue in Spaine: there be alſo many Cats that yeeld Ciuet, great ſtore of fruits which be very good and ſauourie: great abundance of Honey, and Fiſh, and all ſold at ſo ſmall a price, that almoſt it is ſold for nothing. Alſo there is great ſtore of Cinamom, but no Oyle of Oliues, but that which is carried thither out of the Nueua Eſpania: they haue much Oyle of Algongoli, and of Flaxe-ſeed, the which they doe ſpend ordinarily in that Countrey, ſo that the Oyle of Oliues is not miſſed with them.

Ciuit. Honey. Cinamon. Linſeed Oyle.

There is great ſtore of Cloues, Saffron, Pepper, Nutmegs, and many other Drugges: great ſtore of Cotton and Silke of all colours, the which is brought vnto them by Merchants of China, euery yeare a great quantitie, from whence commeth more then twentie ſhips laden with pieces of Silkes of all colours, and with Earthen Veſſell, Powder, Salt-peter, Iron, Steele, and much Quick-ſiluer, Braſſe, Copper, Wheate, Flowre, Walnuts, Bisket, Dates, Linnen Cloth, Counting Cheſts very gallantly wrought, Calls of Net-worke, Buratos, Eſpumillas, Baſons and Ewres, made of Tinne, Parchment Lace, Silke Fringe, and alſo of Gold, the which is ſpunne and twiſted after a faſhion neuer ſeene in all Chriſtendome, and many other things of great curioſitie, and all this aforeſaid is ſold very good cheape. Likewiſe ſuch things as the Ilands doe yeeld, are ſold very good cheape, for you ſhall haue foure Roues of Wine, which commeth of the Palme-tree for foure Rials of Plate (the which for lacke of that made of Grapes is very good) twelue Haneges of Rice for eight Rials of Plate, three Hens for one Riall, a whole Hogge for eighteene Rials, a whole Buffe for foure Rials, a Deere for two Rials, and yet it muſt bee both great and good, foure Roues of Sugar for ſixe Rials, and the like.

§. II.

Firſt Plantation of the Philippinas, by MICHAEL LOPEZ DE LEGASPI.

* This I tranſlated out of a Manuſcript Latine which I found with M. Hak.

Michael * Lopez de Legaſpe, Generall of the Spaniſh Armada, on Tueſday the one and twentieth of Nouember, Anno Dom. 1565. ſet forth of the Hauen of Natiuitie in New Spaine, and ſayled betwixt the South and the Weſt, and after Weſt-ward, till he came in nine degrees; in that height ſeeking the Ilands de los Reyes, thence to make for the Philippinas. After eight dayes, the ſhip called Saint Luke was miſſing, the Captayne whereof was Alfonſus de Arellano, ſuſpected to haue maliciouſly with-drawne himſelfe. The Fleet continuing their courſe in nine and ten degrees, after fiftie dayes had ſight of an Iland of Fiſhermen and many other ſmall Ilands not inhabited, which they paſſed by. It was agreed that they ſhould heighthen their courſe to thirteene degrees, in which way they came on Monday the ſeuenteenth of Ianuary, 1566. to one of the Ilands of Theeues, called Goean, and ſayling toward it, ſixe miles off, fiftie or ſixtie Paraos ſwift ſayling Barkes with eight or ten men quite naked met them and inuited them to their Habitations, where at night they anchored. The next morning, ſixe hundred of their Paraos came about them with victuals to ſell, Rice, Honey, Sugar-canes, Plantans, Fruits of diuers kinds, and Ginger whereof there groweth great ſtore naturally. Their principall deſire in barter was Iron Nailes, giuing a large ſacke of Rice for a Naile; their ſackes deceitfully filled with grauell and chaffe, with Rice in the top. Theſe people are well proportioned and ſtrong. They fought with the Spaniards which were watering, and in the time of fight would be trucking with the ſhips, as ſenſleſſe of their danger. A Mariner which ſtayd behind was ſlaine, whoſe death they reuenged with many of the Sauages ſlaine in the night, one of them being taken and ſent into New Spaine. Their name fits their Theeuiſh diſpoſition.

Iſlas Ladrones.

The Philippinas called alſo the Ilands of the Ponent or Weſt.

Eleuen dayes after the fleet renewed their Voyage, and courſe in thirteene degrees eleuen dayes longer, and then had ſight of the Philippinas, hauing ſailed from the Port of Natiuitie, eight thouſand miles. They anchored in a faire Bay called Baia de Sibabas, and there rode ſeuen dayes; whiles two Boats went to diſcouer, one to the North, the other Southward..

Baia de Sibabas.

Digitized by Google

A Gentleman of one of them was slaine by an Indian, rashly leaping on shoare. These Indians haue Iron Launces, with a head or tongue a handfull and halfe long. They haue also shields, Bowes and Arrowes. In making peace each man takes two or three drops of bloud of his arme or breast and mixe both in some Vessell together, which is drunke with Wine and Water. Many Paraos came to the Spaniards with a white flag in the Prow, in token of peace, and the Admiral erected the like in her Poope to signifie their leaue to enter. These Indians are clothed, but barefoot. The Spaniards demanded prouision, which the other promised, but gaue only to the Captayne a sucking Pigge and an Egge. These people are very timorous, perfidious, and therefore suspicious. The Ilands beare Hogges, Goats, Hennes, Rice, Millet, Potatoes, Pome-citrons, Frisoles, Cocos, Plantans, and many sorts of Fruits. They weare Bracelets, and Earings, and Gold Chaines, and whithersoeuer the Fleet went, was shew of Gold in the Land, whereof they digge but for necessary vses: the Land is their Money bagge. Gold.

The Fleet departed hence, and two dayes after came to the Port of the Ile Tandoia, where a small Riuer enters; vp which they went in Boats, and came to a Towne called Camungo. There they were well entertayned, and had victualls set them: which whiles they were eating, an Indian spake some Spanish words, and asked for Antonio Baptista Villalobos, and Captaine Cabeça de Vaca: for which the Lord of the place was angrie with him, and hee appeared no more. The next day the Spaniards returning found them armed; threatning them if they came on shoare. They minding not to deale cruelly, Martin de Goyte was sent to discouer some conuenient harbour, who saw the Citie Tandaya, and other Townes of other neere Ilands, and hauing gone sixtie miles found the great Bay where was Cabalia a Towne well inhabited. Thither went the Fleet, and the Inhabitants fled. Onely Camatuan the sonne of Malataque a blind man, chiefe of that place, came to them, whom they detayned thinking thereby to get some prouision; but in vaine. He sent forth Souldiers which brought him fiue and fortie Hogs, leauing in lieu somwhat for exchange, and dismissing Camatuan, who had taught the Captaine the names of the neighbouring Iles and of their Gouernours. Hee brought them to Mesagua two and thirtie miles off, and then was sent away apparelled and ioyfull. The Iland Masagua hath beene frequent, but then had but twentie Inhabitants, which would not see the Spaniards. They went to another Iland where the people were fled with their goods. Then went they to Butuan which is subiect to the Ile Vindena or the Ilands Corrientes. The winde draue them to Bohol, where they anchored. The next day they saw a Iunke and sent a Boat to it, which wounded some of their men. They had Arrowes and Lances and a Base, and two brasse Peeces. They cryed to the Spaniards abordo, abordo. The Spaniards sent out another Boat better fitted, which tooke eight, the rest were slaine or fled, hauing fought valiantly. In the Iunke they found white sheets painted, Silke, Almayzarez, Callicos, Iron, Tin, Brasse, and some Gold. The Iunke was of Borneo, and so were these Moores. All was restored, their intent being to get friends, and the Burneois satisfied.

Tandoia. Camungo. Tandaya. Masagua. Bohol.

The Captaine sent the Saint Iohn to discouer the Coast of Butuan, and learne where the Cinamon was gathered, and to find some good Port in fit place to build. The Burneois told the Captaine the cause of the Indians flight, that about two yeeres before some Portugals bearing themselues for Spaniards, had comne thither from the Molucas, and hauing made peace with them, set on them and slue aboue a thousand Indians, the cause of that depopulation. This the Portugals did to make the Spaniards odious, that if they came thither, they might not be admitted. The Captaine sent a well furnished ship to search the Coast, which came to a place where the Borneo Gouernour said he had friends, and leaping on shoare hee was slaine of the Indians. The Saint Iohn returned from Buthuan, which said, they had seene the King, and two Iunkes of Moores in the Riuer at anker, and that the Iland was great and rich, and exchanged with them fine Gold for Testons, one for six in equall weight. They bought Wax of the Moores but had Earth inclosed in the Cakes; they also incensed the Indians against the Castilians, which would haue made purchase of them, but were forbidden by the King. They said, they had there seene Wax, Cinamon, Gold, and other precious things.

Wicked policy, an Indian pestilence which since hath infected others. Moores coenage.

On Easter Euen the other ship returned to their great ioy, which had thought her lost, hauing staid twentie dayes longer then her limited time. They had sailed about the Iland Igla the space of six hundred miles: and in their returne came to Subo a well peopled Iland, and plentifull of all things. The Captaine determined to goe thither to buy prouision, or else to force them. For Magelane had beene there; and the King, and most of the Inhabitants were baptised, and acknowledged the Catholike King; Magelane also dying in their defence, and thirtie other Souldiers in Matan. They also had broken league and slaine some of Magelane Souldiers. On Friday April twentie seuen, the Fleet arriued at the Port of Subo, and one came from King Tupas to them, saying, that Hee with ten chiefe men would come to them. The Captaine expected them a whole day and the next, in which space the Ilanders hid their goods in the Woods. The third day the Captaine sent his brother Andrew and the Camp-master, to admonish the King in the Malayan tongue, to receiue them, as Vassals of the Spanish King. Which not succeeding, hee resolued to vse force. The Indians out of other Ilands had assembled together to the number of two

Igla. Subo. See tom. 1. l. 2. c. 2.

Digitized by Google

two thouſand, which prouoked our men, but at the report of the Ordnance ran away, and the Spaniards wan the Towne. Many ſignes of Gold and Gemmes appeared in the Iland. And being ſituate ſo neere to the richeſt Regions, the Gouernour hopeth acceſſe thereby to the increaſe and glorie of the Spaniſh Crowne, if Spaniſh Colonies be there planted. The Captaine from the Citie of Subo ſent the Admirall ſhip with his brother Andrew de Vrdanera, to certifie the L. Lewys de Velaſco, the ſonne of the Vice-roy, what had beene done,

This which followeth is taken out of Fray Iuan Gonzales de Mendoſa his Spaniſh Relation of China, & is here much abbreuiated.

Miguel Lopez de Legaſpi, Generall of the Fleet, and Gouernour of the Countrey which they ſhould diſcouer, dyed in the ſaid Ilands with the Title of Adelantado, hauing firſt peopled ſome of them to the vſe of His Maieſtie, eſpecially that of Manilla, which is fiue hundred leagues in circuit; in which is ſeated the Citie of Luſon (called alſo Manilla) as the Metropolitan of all the Iland, where the Gouernours haue ſetled their reſidence euer ſince the firſt diſcouerie. They haue there founded a Cathedrall Church, and Friar Dom. Domingo de Salachar was conſecrated the firſt Biſhop thereof in Madrid, 1579. At this preſent there be three Monaſteries of Religious men in that Iland, the one of the Order of Saint Auſtine, and were the firſt that by the Commandement of his Majeſtie did enter into this Ilands, preaching the Law of the Goſpell, which was great profit vnto their ſoules, yet great trauell vnto them, & coſt many of them their liues in doing it: the other Monaſterie is of barefoot Friers of the Order of S. Francis of the Prouince of S. Ioſeph, who haue bin great Examples, with great profit vnto them of thoſe Parts. The third are of the Order of S. Dominicke, or Preachers, who haue done their dutie in all things ſo well as the other. Theſe three Orders were alone in thoſe Ilands for certayne yeares, till now of late time haue gone thither Ieſuits, which haue bin a great ayde and helpe vnto their Religion.

Manilla.

When theſe Spaniards were come vnto theſe Ilands, they had ſtraight-wayes notice of the mightie Kingdome of China, as well by the relation of them of the Ilands (who told vnto them the maruels thereof) as alſo within a few dayes after, they did ſee and vnderſtand, by ſhips that came into thoſe Ports with Merchants, that brought Merchandize and other things of great curioſitie from that Kingdome, and did particularly declare the mightineſſe and riches thereof. This being knowne vnto the Religious people of Saint Auſtin, who at that time were alone in thoſe Ilands: but in eſpeciall vnto the Prouinciall, Frier Martin de Herrada, ſeeing the great capacitie or towardneſſe which the Chinois had more then thoſe of the Ilands in all things, but in eſpeciall in their gallantneſſe, diſcretion and wit: hee ſtraight-wayes had a great deſire to goe thither with his fellow to preach the Goſpell vnto thoſe people, of ſo good a capacitie to receiue the ſame: who with a pretended purpoſe to put it in vre and effect, he began with great care and ſtudie to learne that Language, the which he learned in few dayes: and did make thereof a Dictionarie. Then afterwards they did giue great entertaynment and Preſents vnto the Merchants that came from China for to procure them to carrie them thither, and many other things, the which did ſhew their holy zeale: yea, they did offer themſelues to bee ſlaues vnto the Merchants, thinking by that meanes to enter in to preach: but yet none of theſe diligences did take effect, till ſuch time as the Diuine Majeſtie did diſcouer a better way, as ſhall bee declared vnto you in this Chapter following.

§. III.

Of LIMAHON a China Robber and Rouer, by whoſe occaſion the Spaniards ſent into China.

THe Spaniards did enjoy their neere habitation of Manilla in great quietneſſe & in obedience vnto the Chriſtian King Don Philip, and in continuall Traffick with the Chineis. But being in this ſecuritie and quietneſſe, vnlooked for, they were beſet with a mightie and great Armada or Fleet of ſhips, by the Rouer Limahon, of whoſe vocation there are continually on the Coaſt, the one by reaſon that the Countrey is full of people, whereas of neceſſitie muſt be many idle perſons: and the other and principall occaſion, by reaſon of the great tyrannie that the Gouernours doe vſe vnto the Subiects. This Limahon came vpon them with intent to doe them harme as you ſhall vnderſtand. This Rouer was borne in the Citie of Truchoo, in the Prouince of Cuytan, which the Portugals doe call Catim. He was of meane Parentage, and brought vp in his youth in libertie and vice, he was by nature Warlike and euill inclined. He would learne no Occupation, but was giuen to rob in the high-wayes, and became ſo expert that many came vnto him and followed that Trade. Hee made himſelfe Captaine ouer them which were more then two thouſand, and were ſo ſtrong that they were feared in all that Prouince where as they were. This being knowne vnto the King and to his Councell, they did ſtraight way command the Vice-roy of the Prouince whereas the Rouer was, that with all the haſte poſſible he ſhould gather together all the Garriſons of his Frontiers, to apprehend and take him, and if it were poſſible to carry him aliue vnto the Citie of Taybin, if not his head.

Limahon a China Rouer.

Where Limahon was borne.

Digitized by Google

head. The Vice-roy incontinent did gather together people neceſſary, and in great haſte to follow him.

The which being knowne vnto Limahon the Rouer, who ſaw, that with the people hee had, he was not able to make reſiſtance againſt ſo great a number as they were, and the eminent danger that was therein, hee called together his Companies, and went from thence vnto a Port of the Sea, that was a few leagues from that place: and did it ſo quickly and in ſuch ſecret, that before the people that dwelt therein, could make any defence (for that they were not accuſtomed to any ſuch aſſaults, but liued in great quietneſſe) they were Lords of the Port, and of all ſuch ſhips as were there: into the which they imbarked themſelues ſtraight-wayes, weighed Anchor and departed to the Sea, whereas they thought to be in more ſecuritie then on the Land (as it was true.) Then he ſeeing himſelfe Lord of all thoſe Seas, beganne to rob and ſpoyle all ſhips that hee could take, as well ſtrangers as of the naturall people: by which meanes in a ſmall time he was prouided of Mariners, and other things which before hee lacked, requiſite for that new Occupation. He ſacked, robbed and ſpoyled all the Townes that were vpon the Coaſt, and did very much harme. So hee finding himſelfe very ſtrong with fortie ſhips well armed, of thoſe he had out of the Port, and other that hee had taken at the Sea, with much people ſuch as were without ſhame, their hands imbrued with Robberies and killing of men, he imagined with himſelfe to attempt greater matters, and did put it in execution: he aſſaulted great Townes, and did a thouſand cruelties. So he following this trade and exerciſe, he chanced to meete with another Rouer as himſelfe, called Vintoquian, likewiſe naturally borne in China, who was in a Port void of any care or miſtruſt, whereas Limahon finding opportunitie, with greater courage did fight with the ſhips of the other: that although they were threeſcore ſhips great and ſmall, and good Souldiers therein, he did ouercome them, and tooke fiue and fiftie of their ſhips, ſo that Vintoquian eſcaped with fiue ſhips. Then Limahon ſeeing himſelfe with a fleet of ninetie fiue ſhips well armed, and with many ſtout people in them, knowing that if they were taken, they ſhould be all executed to death; ſetting all feare apart, gaue themſelues to attempt new inuentions of euill, not onely in robbing of great Cities, but alſo in deſtroying of them.

Vintoquian a Rouer robed by this Rouer.

For the which, commandement was giuen ſtraight-wayes vnto the Vice-roy of that Prouince (whereas he vſed to execute his euill) that with great expedition he might be taken, who in few dayes did ſet forth to Sea, one hundred and thirtie great ſhips well appointed, with forty thouſand men in them, and one made Generall ouer them all, a Gentleman called Omoncon, for to goe ſeeke and follow this Rouer with expreſſe commandement to apprehend or kill him. Of all this prouiſion, Limahon had aduertiſemant by ſome ſecret friends, who ſeeing that his Enemies were many, and he not able to counteruaile them, neither in ſhippes nor men, determined not to abide their comming, but to retyre and depart from that Coaſt: ſo in flying he came vnto an Iland in ſecret, called Tonzuacaotican, which was fortie leagues from the firme Land, and is in the right way of Nauigation to the Ilands Philippinas.

One hundred and thirtie great ſhips of Warre with forty thouſand men. Omoncon.

From this Iland they did goe forth with ſome of their ſhips robbing and ſpoyling all ſuch as they met with Merchandize, and other things that they carried from one Iland to another, and from the Iland vnto the firme, and comming from thence amongſt them all, they cauſed to take two ſhips of China which came from Manilla, and were bound to their owne Countrey. And hauing them in their power, they ſearched them vnder hatches, and found that they had rich things of Gold, and Spaniſh Rials, which they had in trucke of their Merchandize, the which they carried to the Ilands. They informed themſelues in all points of the State, and fertilitie of that Countrey, but in particular of the Spaniards, and how many there were of them in the Citie of Manilla, who were not at that preſent aboue ſeuentie perſons; for that the reſt were ſeparated in the diſcouering and populing of other Ilands newly found, and vnderſtanding, that theſe few did liue without any ſuſpition of Enemies, and had neuer a Fort nor Bulwarke, and the Ordnance which they had (although it was very good) yet was it not in order to defend themnor offend their Enemies, hee determined to goe thither with all his fleete and people, for to deſtroy and kill them, and to make himſelfe Lord of the ſaid Iland of Manilla, and other adjacent there nigh the ſame. So with this determination hee departed from thoſe Ilands whereas hee was retyred, and went to Sea, and ſayling towards the Ilands Philippinas, they paſſed in ſight of the Ilands of the Illocos, which had a Towne called Fernandina, which was new founded by the Captayne Iohn de Salzedo, who at that inſtant was in the ſame for Lieutenant to the Gouernour: Foure leagues from the ſame they met with a ſmall Galley, which the ſaid Iohn de Salzedo had ſent for victuals. He caſt about towards her, and with great eaſe did take her, and did burne and kill all that was in her, and pardoned one of them. This being done, hee did proſecute his Voyage according vnto his determination, and paſſed alongſt, but not in ſuch ſecret but that he was diſcouered by the Dwellers of the Towne of Fernandina, who gaue notice thereof vnto the Lieutenant of the Gouernour aforeſaid, as a wonder to ſee ſo many ſhips together, and a thing neuer ſeene before at thoſe Ilands. Likewiſe it cauſed admiration vnto him, and made him to thinke and to imagine with great care what it might be, he ſaw that they did beare with the Citie of Manilla, and thought with himſelfe, that ſo great a fleet

Illocos.

Fernandina.

as

Digitized by Google

as that was, could not goe to the place which they bare in with, for any goodnesse towards the dwellers therein, who were voide of all care, and a small number of people, as aforesaid: Wherewith he determined with himselfe with so great speed as it was possible, to ioyne together such Spaniards as were there, which were to the number of fiftie foure, and to depart and procure to get the fore-hand of them, to aduertise them of Manilla, and to aide and helpe them to put their Artillerie in order, and all other things necessarie for their defence.

This Limahon was well prouided of prouision, and all other things necessarie, and hauing the wind faire, hee was alwaies in the fore-front, and came in the sight of Manilla vpon 1574. Saint Andrewes Eue, in the yeere 1574. whereas hee came to an anchor that night with all his whole estate.

For all the contradiction of the winde this same night the foure hundred Chinois did put themselues within a league of the Citie, vpon Saint Andrewes day at eight of the clocke in the morning, whereas they left their Boats and went on land, and in great haste began to march forwards in battel aray diuided in two parts, with two hundred Harquebusses afore, and immediatly after them other two hundred Pike-men: and by reason that they were many, and the Countrey very plaine, they were straightwaies discouered by some of the Citie, who entred in with a great noise, crying, Arme, arme, arme, the Enemies come. The which aduice did little profit, for that there was none that would beleeue them: but beleeued that it was some false alarme done by the people of the Countrey for to mocke them. But in conclusion, the Enemies were come Martin de Goyti slune. vnto the house of the Generall of the Field, who was called Martin de Goyti, which was the first house in all the Citie that way which the Enemies came. And before that the Spaniards and Souldiers that were within the Towne could be fully perswaded the rumour to be true, the Enemies had set fire vpon his house, and slue him and all that were within.

Guido de Labacates Gouernour. At this time, by the order of his Maiestie was elected for Gouernour of these Ilands Philippinas, Guido de Labacates, after the death of Miguel Lopez de Legaspi, who vnderstanding the great fleet and power of Lymahon the Rouer, and the small resistance and defence that was in the Citie of Manilla, with as much speed as was possible he did call together all their Captaines and dwellers therein: and with a generall consent they spared no person of what qualitie and degree soeuer he was, but that his hand was to helpe all that was possible, the which endured two
A fort erected. dayes and two nights, for so long the Rouer kept his ships and came not abroad. In which time of their continuall labour, they made a Fort with Pipes and Boards filled with sand and other necessaries thereto belonging, such as the time would permit them: they put in carriages, foure excellent Peeces of Artillerie that were in the Citie. All the which being put in order, they gathered all the people of the Citie into that little Fort. The night before the Enemie did giue assault vnto the Citie, came thither the Captaine Iohn de Salzedo, Lieutenant vnto the Gouernour. The Rouer in the morning following, before the breake of the day (which was the Citie burnt. second after he gaue the first assault) was with all his fleet right against the Port, and did put aland sixe hundred Souldiers, who at that instant did set vpon the Citie, the which at their pleasure they did sacke and burne. They did assault the Fort with great cruelty, as men fleshed with the last slaughter, thinking that their resistance was but small. But it fell not out as they did beleeue, for hauing continued in the fight almost all the day, with the losse of two hundred men, that were slaine in the assault, and many other hurt, he straightwaies departed from thence, and returned the same way that he came, till they arriued in a mightie Riuer, fortie leagues from the Pangasinan. Citie of Manilla, that is called Pangasinan, the which place or soyle did like him very well, and where he thought he might be sure from them, who by the commandement of the King went for to seeke him. There hee determined to remayne, and to make himselfe Lord ouer all that Countrey, the which he did with little trauell, and built himselfe a Fort one league within the Riuer, whereas he remayned certaine dayes, receiuing tribute of the Inhabitants thereabouts, as though he were their true and naturall Lord: and at times went forth with his ships robbing and spoyling all that he met vpon the coast. And spred abroad, that he had taken to himselfe the Ilands Philippinas, and how that all the Spaniards that were in them, were either slayne or fled away. With this consideration they entred into counsell, and did determine to ioyne together all the people they could, and being in good order, to follow and seeke the Rouer. Then the Gouernours commanded to be called together all the people bordering thereabouts, and to come vnto the Citie whereas hee was. Likewise at that time hee did giue aduice vnto such as Pintados. were Lords and Gouernours of the Ilands, called Pintados, commanding them to come thither, with such ships as they could spare, as well Spaniards as the naturall people of the Countrey. The Generall * of the field with the people aforesaid, did depart from Manilla the three and twentieth day of March, Anno 1575. and arriued at the mouth of the Riuer Paganſinan vpon tenable Wednesday in the morning next following, without being discouered of any. Then straightwaies at that instant the Generall did put a-land all his people and foure Peeces of Artillerie, leauing the mouth of the Riuer shut vp with his shipping, in chayning the one to the other, in such sort, that none could enter in neither yet goe forth to giue any aduice vnto the Rouer of his arriuall: he commanded some to goe and discouer the fleet of the Enemie, and the place

* Iohn de Salzedo who succeeded Goyti, and was Nephew to Michael Legaspi.

Digitized by Google

place whereas he was fortified, and charged them very much to doe it in ſuch ſecret ſort, that they were not eſpied: for therein conſiſted all their whole worke. Hee commanded the Captaine Gabriel de Ribera, that ſtraightwaies he ſhould depart by Land, and that vpon a ſudden he ſhould ſtrike alarme vpon the Enemie, with the greateſt tumult that was poſſible. Likewiſe he commanded the Captaines Pedro de Caues and Lorenſo Chacon, that either of them with forty Souldiers ſhould goe vp the Riuer in ſmall ſhips and light, and to meaſure the time in ſuch ſort, that as well thoſe that went by land, as thoſe that went by water, ſhould at one inſtant come vpon the Fort, and to giue alarme both together, the better to goe thorow with their pretence: and he himſelfe did remayne with all the reſt of the people, to watch occaſion and time for to aide and ſuccour them if need be required. This their purpoſe came ſo well to paſſe, that both the one and the other came to good effect: for thoſe that went by water, did ſet fire on all the fleet of the Enemie: and thoſe that went by land at that inſtant had taken and ſet fire on a Trench made of timber, that Limahon had cauſed to bee made for the defence of his people and the Fort: and with that furie they ſlue more then one hundred Chinos, and tooke priſoners ſeuenty women which they found in the ſame Trench, but when that Limahon vnderſtood the rumour, hee tooke himſelfe ſtraightwaies to his Fort which hee had made for to defend himſelfe from the Kings Nauie, if they ſhould happen to finde him out.

The next day following, the Generall of the field did bring his Souldiers into a ſquare battell, and beganne to march towards the Fort, with courage to aſſault it if occaſion did ſerue thereunto: hee did pitch his Campe within two hundred paces of the Fort, and found that the Enemie did all that night fortifie himſelfe very well, and in ſuch ſort, that it was perillous to aſſault him, for that he had placed vpon his Fort three Peeces of Artillerie, and many Baſes, beſides other Engines of fire-worke. Seeing this, and that his Peeces of Artillerie that hee brought were very ſmall for to batter, and little ſtore of munition, for that they had ſpent all at the aſſault which the Rouer did giue them at Manilla, the Generall of the field, and the Captaines concluded amongſt themſelues, that ſeeing the Enemie had no ſhips to eſcape by water, neither had he any great ſtore of victuals for that all was burnt in the ſhips, it was the beſt and moſt ſureſt way to beſiege the Fort, and to remayne there in quiet vntill that hunger did conſtraine them either to yeeld or come to ſome concluſion: which rather they will then to periſh with hunger.

This determination was liked well of them all, although it fell out cleane contrarie vnto their expectation; for that in the ſpace of three moneths that ſiege endured, this Limahon did ſo much that within the Fort he made certaine ſmall Barkes, and trimmed them in the beſt manner he could, wherewith in one night he and all his people eſcaped. Limahon after three moneths ſiege eſcapeth.

It happened vpon a day, that there came to the Campe a ſhip of Miguell de Loarcha, wherein was Friar Martin de Herrada Prouinciall of the Auguſtine Friars. Seuen leagues after they were out of the mouth of Pagaſinan, they met with a ſhip of Sangleyes, who made for the Port, and thinking them to bee Enemies, they bare with them (hauing another ſhip that followed them for their defence) and had no more in them but the ſaid Prouinciall and fiue Spaniards, beſides the Mariners. This ſhip of Sangley ſeeing that hee did beare with them, would haue fled, but the winde would not permit him, for that it was to him contrary, which was the occaſion that the two ſhips wherein the Spaniards were, for that they did both ſayle and rowe, in a ſmall time came within Cannon ſhot. In one of the ſhips there was a Chino, called Sinſay. This Sinſay went ſtraightwaies into the fore-ſhips, and demanded what they were, and from whence they came: and being well enformed, hee vnderſtood that hee was one of the ſhips of warre that was ſent out by the King of China, to ſeeke the Rouer Limahon, who leauing the reſt of the fleet behind, came forth to ſeeke in thoſe Ilands to ſee if hee could diſcouer him to bee in any of them: and the better to bee enformed thereof, they were bound into the Port of Buliano, from whence they came with their two ſhips: from whom they would haue fled, thinking they had beene ſome of the Rouers ſhips. Being fully perſwaded the one of the other, they ioyned together with great peace and friendſhip: the Spaniards ſtraightwaies entred into their Boat, and went vnto the ſhip of the Chinos, and carried with them the aforeſaid Sinſay, for to be their Interpreter, and to ſpeake vnto the Chinos. In the ſaid ſhip came a man of great authoritie, who was called Omoncon, who brought a Commiſſion from their King, and ſhewed it vnto the Spaniards, and vnto the Father Prouinciall: in the which the King and his Counſell did pardon all thoſe Souldiers that were with Limahon, if that forthwith they would leaue him and returne vnto the Kings part: and likewiſe did promiſe great gifts and fauour vnto him that did either take or kill the aforeſaid Rouer. Then did Sinſay declare vnto him of the comming of the Rouer vnto the Ilands, and all that happened in the ſiege of the Citie, as aforeſaid: and how they had him beſieged in the Riuer of Paganſinan, from whence it was not poſſible for him to eſcape.

The Captaine Omoncon reioyced very much of theſe newes, and made many ſignes of great content, and did embrace the Spaniards many times, and gaue other tokens whereby hee did manifeſt the great pleaſure hee receiued, and would therewith ſtraightwaies depart vnto the reſt of the fleet. And for that they looked euery day for the death or impriſonment of the Rouer, the better to enforme himſelfe: hee determined (for that it was ſo nigh hand) to goe and ſee the Generall of the field in Paganſinan, and carrie with him Sinſay, one that was known both of the one and the other: by whoſe meanes they might treate of ſuch things that beſt accompliſhed the confirmation of the peace and friendſhip betwixt the Chinois and the Spaniards, as alſo of the death or impriſonment of Limahon. With this reſolution, the one departed vnto Paganſinan, whereas they arriued the ſame day, and the others vnto Manilla, whither they went for victuals.

Digitized by Google

Omoncon remayned there certaine dayes, after the which he ſeeing that the ſiege did long endure, and that his ſtaying might cauſe ſuſpicion of his death: and againe, that the whole fleet did tarrie his comming to his intelligence of the Rouer, being fully perſwaded and certaine, that he could not eſcape the Spaniards hand: they had him in ſuch a ſtraight, and that they would without all doubt, ſend him vnto the King aliue or dead (as they promiſed him) hee was determined to returne vnto China, with the good newes that hee had vnderſtood, with a determinate intent, to returne againe and carrie the Rouer, after that they had him priſoner. With this reſolution in the end of certaine dayes hee went vnto the Gouernour, certifying him of his pretence, whereby hee might giue him licence to put it in execution. The Gouernour did like well of his pretence, and did promiſe him the ſame, the which the Generall of the field did offer vnto him: and which was, ſo ſoone as the Rouer ſhould be taken priſoner, or ſlayne, to ſend him vnto the King without any delay, or elſe, to put him whereas he ſhould be forth-comming, and to giue them aduertiſement to ſend for him, or come himſelfe: and did offer him more, that for his voyage he ſhould bee prouided forthwith of all things neceſſarie, without lacking of any thing. Omoncon did giue him great thankes for the ſame, and in recompence thereof did promiſe vnto the Gouernour, for that he vnderſtood, and had intelligence of the Fathers, of Saint Auguſtine, that his Honour, and his Anteceſſor, and the Adelantado, Miguel Lopez de Legaſpi, had deſired many times to ſend vnto the Kingdome of China ſome Religious men, to treate of the preaching of the Goſpell, and to ſee the wonders of that Kingdome, and how that they neuer could put this their deſire in execution, for that thoſe Chinois which came thither, although they did offer them whatſoeuer they would demand, fearing the puniſhment that ſhould be executed on them according vnto the Lawes of the Kingdome: hee did promiſe him, that he would carrie them with him vnto China, ſuch Religious men as his Honour would command, and ſome Souldiers, ſuch as would goe with them: hoping with the good newes that hee carried, to runne in no danger of the Law, neither the Vice-roy of Aucheo to thinke euill thereof, and for a more ſecuritie that they ſhould not bee euill entreated, hee would leaue with him pledges to their content.

Omoncon promiſeth to carrie the Friers vnto China.

The Gouernour being very ioyfull of theſe newes, did therewith ſend for the Prouinciall of the Auguſtine Friers, who was elected but few dayes paſt: his name was Frier Alonſo de Aluarado, vnto whom hee declared the offer that the Captaine Omoncon had made vnto him, whereat he reioyced. They determined that there ſhould goe but two Religious men, by reaſon that at that time there was but a few of them, and two Souldiers in their companie. The Religious men ſhould be, Frier Martin de Herrada of Pamplona, who left off the dignitie of Prouinciall: and in companie with him ſhould goe, Frier Hieronimo Martin, who alſo was very well learned, and of the Citie of Mexico: the Souldiers that were appointed to beare them companie were called, Pedro Sarmiento, chiefe Sergeant of the Citie of Manilla of Vilorado, and Miguel de Loarcha, both principall men, and good Chriſtians, as was conuenient for that which they tooke in hand. Theſe Fathers did carrie them for this purpoſe, that if they did remaine there with the King, preaching of the Goſpell, then they ſhould returne with the newes thereof, to giue the Gouernour to vnderſtand of all that they had ſeene, and happened vnto them: and likewiſe vnto the King of Spayne, if need did ſo require. And the Gouernour in token of gratitude, did giue vnto the Captaine Omoncon in the preſence of them all, a gallant Chaine of Gold, and a rich Robe of crimſon in graine: a thing that hee eſteemed very much, and much more eſteemed in China, for that it is a thing that they haue not there. Beſides this, they did ordayne a reaſonable Preſent for to ſend vnto the Gouernour of Chincheo, hee that diſpatched Omoncon by the commandement of the King, to goe and ſeeke the Rouer: alſo another Preſent for the Vice-roy of the Prouince of Ochian, who was at that preſent in the Citie of Aucheo. And for that Sinſay ſhould not finde himſelfe agreeued (who was a Merchant well knowne amongſt them, and perhaps might bee the occaſion of ſome euill and diſturbance of their pretence) they gaue vnto him alſo another Chaine of Gold, as well for this, as alſo for that hee was euer a ſure and perfect friend vnto the Spaniards. Then ſtraightwaies by the commandement of the Gouernour there were brought together all ſuch Chinois as were captiue and taken from Limahon out of the Fort aforeſaid, at Paganſinan, and gaue them vnto Omoncon, to carrie them free with him: and gaue likewiſe commandement that the Generall of the field, and all ſuch Captaines and Souldiers that were at the ſiege of the Fort, ſhould giue vnto him all ſuch as did there remaine: binding himſelfe to pay vnto the Souldiers,

A good pretence.

The Friers names that went to China.

A token that fine cloth is eſteemed.

Spaniſh bounty.

Digitized by Google

Souldiers, to whom they did appertaine, all whatsoeuer they should bee valued to bee worth.

Vpon a sunday at the break of day, being the fiue and twentieth of Iune, after they had prayed vnto God to direct their voyage, they set sayle with a prosperous wind: there were with the Friars, Souldiers and men of seruice, twentie persons, besides the Chines that were captiues, and the people of the Captaine Omoncon. They were not so soone off from the coast, but the wind abated, and they remayned becalmed certaine dayes: but afterwards they had a lustie gale, that carried them forwards. The Chines doe gouerne their ships by a compasse diuided into twelue parts, and doe vse no Sea Cards, but a briefe description or Ruter, wherewith they sayle: and commonly for the most part they neuer goe out of the sight of Land. They maruelled very much when that it was told them, that comming from Mexico vnto Philippinas, they were three moneths at the Sea and neuer saw Land. Vpon the Sunday following, we had sight of the Land of China: so that wee found all our Voyage from the Port of Buliano, from whence wee had last departed, vnto the firme Land to bee one hundred and fortie leagues; and twentie leagues before they came in the sight thereof, they had sounding at threescore and ten and foure-score fathom, and so waxed lesse and lesse vntill they came to the Land: which is the best and surest token they haue to bee nigh the Land. In all the time of their Voyage the Captaine Omoncon with his Companie shewed such great courtesie and friendship to our men, as though they had beene the owners of the said ship: and at such time as they did embarke themselues, hee gaue his owne Cabine that was in the sterne to the Friers, and vnto Pedro Sarmiento, and to Miguel de Loarcha, hee gaue another Cabine that was very good, and commanded his companie in the ship that they should respect them more then himselfe: the which was in such sort, that on a day at the beginning of their Voyage, the Fathers found them making of Sacrifice vnto their Idols, and told them, that all which they did was a kinde of mockage, and that they should worship but onely one God: and willed them to doe so no more. Who onely in respect of them did leaue it off, and not vse it after in all the Voyage: whereas before they did vse it euery day many times. Besides this, they would worship the Images that the Friers did carrie with them, and kneele vpon their knees with great shew of deuotion: who now hauing sight of the firme Land, in so short time, and passed that small Gulfe so quietly, which was wont to bee very perillous and full of stormes: they did attribute it vnto the Prayers of the Friers, their companions and Souldiers. As they drew neerer the Land, they might discouer from the Sea, a very gallant and well towred Citie, that was called Titubul, whereas the King hath continually in Garrison ten thousand Souldiers, and is vnder the gouernement of the Prouince of Chincheo. The next day wee came vnto a Watch-towre, which was situated vpon a Rocke at the entrie into a Bay, who had discouered our ship, and knew the Standard or Flagge to bee the Kings: and made a signe vnto seuen ships which were on the other side of the Point, which was part of a companie ordayned for to keepe and defend the coast, which were more then foure hundred. Straightwayes the Captaine of the seuen ships came forth to know what wee were. Hee issued forth from behind the Point, with three ships that did rowe with Oares very swift: and when he came nigh vnto them, he shot at them to make them to amaine: the which Omoncon would not doe, for that he supposed (as afterwards hee did confesse) that he should be some man of little estimation, and not the Generall of the coast. But as he drew nigher vnto him, he did know him by the Flagge hee bare on the sterne, in the Foist wherein he was himselfe with his Souldiers, and straightwaies caused to amaine his sayles, and tarried for him. The Generall did the like, and stayed behind, sending a Boat for to bring the Captaine vnto him, and to declare what hee was, and from whence hee came. Omoncon did forthwith embarke himselfe into his Boat without any resistance, but rather with feare that he should be punished for that hee did flee from him. The Generall gaue him good entertainment.

This Generall was a goodly man of person, and was very well apparelled, and did sit in a Chaire in the sterne of his ship, the which was all couered to keepe away the Sunne: he commanded the Captaine Omoncon to sit downe by him vpon the hatches, without Chaire or any other thing, who did obey him, although first he did refuse it with great modestie, as not worthie to haue that honour, which was not esteemed a little. After that he was set, hee gaue him to vnderstand in effect of all his voyage and successe, and in what extremitie hee left Limahon, and also how that he carried with him the Friars and other Spaniards, which went to carrie the newes, and to treat of peace with the Vice-roy of Auchee: vnto whom, and vnto the Gouernour of Chincheo, he carried presents, sent from the Gouernour and Generall of the field of the Ilands Philippinas. When the Generall had heard this relation, he commanded the Boat to returne and to bring them before him, that he might see what manner of men they were of person, and the vse of the apparell: and likewise to satisfie himselfe of other desires that came into his mind by that which Omoncon had said of them. The Fathers and their companions did obey the commandement, and did embarke themselues in the Boat, and came vnto the ship whereas the Generall receiued them with great courtesie after his fashion.

They departed towards China.

China Compasses diuided into 12. parts. Chines meane Mariners.

Sounding.

They leaue the worshipping of one Idoll to worship another.

Titubul in the Prouince of Chincheo.

Digitized by Google

℣. IIII.

Friar MARTIN DE HERRADA, and other Spaniards entertaynment in China, and their returne to the Philippinas.

Tanfuſo, or Tanſuſo.

WIthin a little while after, Omoncon and his companie arriued at the Port of Tanfuſo hard by, vpon Wedneſday in the euening, being the fift day of Iuly. This Tanfuſo is a gallant and freſh Towne of foure thouſand Houſholders, and hath continually a thouſand Souldiers in Garriſon, and compaſſed about. with a great and ſtrong wall, and the gates fortified with plates of Iron, the foundations of all the houſes are of Lime and Stone, and the walls of Lime and Earth, and ſome of Bricke: their houſes within very fairely wrought, with great Courts, their ſtreets faire and broad all paued. Before that Omoncon did come vnto an anchor, they ſaw all the Souldiers and the people of the Towne were gathered together vpon the Rockes that were ioyning vnto the Port, all armed ready vnto the battell, amongſt whom there was a principall Captaine, and three more of his companions, that were ſent him by the Gouernour of Chinchee, whom they doe call in their language, Inſuanto, who had vnderſtanding of the comming of Omoncon, when the ſhip entred into the Port, Omoncon did ſalute the Towne with certaine Peeces of Artillerie, and diſcharged all his Harquebuſſes ſixe times about, and therewithall tooke in her ſayle, and let anchor fall. Then ſtraightwaies the Captaine whom the Inſuanto had ſent, came aboord the ſhip, who had expreſſe commiſſion, not to leaue the companie of our people after that they were diſembarked, till ſuch time as they came whereas he was, but to beare them companie, and to prouide them of all things neceſſarie: the which he did accompliſh.

Enſignes to know the Loytias.

All theſe Captaines and Miniſters of the King doe weare certaine enſignes for to be knowne from the common people, to wit, broad Waſtes or Girdles emboſſed after diuers manners: ſome of Gold and Siluer, ſome of the Tortois ſhell, and of a ſweet wood, and other ſome of Iuorie, the higher eſtates hath them embroidered with Pearles and precious ſtones, and their Bonnets with two long eares, and their Buskins made of Sattin, and vnſhorne Veluet.

Board-licence.

Then after, ſo ſoone as they were come to an anchor in the Port, the Iuſtice did ſend them a Licence in writing for to come forth of the ſhip, as a thing neceſſarie, for that without it the Waiters or Guards of the water ſide, will not ſuffer them to put foot on land. This Licence was written vpon a boord whited, and firmed by the Iuſtice, whoſe charge it is to giue the Licence.

The firſt landing of the Friars.

Then when they came aſhoare, there were the Souldiers that were appointed by the Inſuanto in a readineſſe to beare them companie, and did direct and leade them vnto the Kings houſes of the ſaid Citie: the like hath euery Citie almoſt throughout all the Kingdome, and there they bid lodge them. Theſe houſes are very great and very well wrought, and gallant, with faire Courts below, and Galleries aboue: they had in them Stanges or Ponds of water full of fiſh of ſundry ſorts.

The people of the Citie did preſſe very much to ſee theſe ſtrangers, ſo that with the preſſe, as alſo with the great heate, they were maruellouſly afflicted: which being perceiued by the Iuſtice, he gaue order that they might bee eaſed of that trouble, and cauſed Sergeants to keepe the doore, and their Yeomen to make reſiſtance againſt the people. When night was come, the Iuſtice of the Citie did make a Banquet according to the faſhion of the Countrey: and it was in the faſhion following. They were carried into a Hall that was very curiouſly wrought, wherein were many Torches and waxe Candles light, and in the midſt thereof was ſet for euery one of the Gueſts a Table by himſelfe, as is the vſe and faſhion of that Countrey; euery Table had his couering of Damaske or Sattin very well made, the Tables were gallantly painted, without any Table-clothes, neither doe they vſe any, for they haue no need of them, for that they doe eate all their victuals with two little ſtickes made of Gold and Siluer, and of a maruellous odoriferous wood, and of the length of little Forkes, as they doe vſe in Italie, with the which they do feed themſelues ſo cleanly, that although their victuals be neuer ſo ſmall, yet doe they let nothing fall, neither foule their hands nor faces. They were ſet downe at theſe Tables in very good order, and in gallant Chaires, in ſuch ſort, that although they were euery one at his Table by himſelfe, yet they might ſee and talke one with another, they were ſerued with diuers ſorts of cates, and very well dreſſed, both of fleſh and fiſh, as gamons of Bacon, Capons, Geeſe, whole Hens, and pieces of Beefe, and at the laſt, many little baskets full of ſweet meats made of Sugar, and Marchpanes all wrought very curiouſly. They gaue them Wine of an indifferent colour and taſte, made of the Palm-tree. All the time that the ſupper laſted, there was in the Hall great ſtore of Muſicke of diuers Inſtruments, whereon they played with great conſort, ſome one time and ſome another. The Inſtruments which they commonly doe vſe, are Hoybuckes, Cornets, Trumpets, Lutes, ſuch as be vſed in Spaine, although in the faſhion there is ſome difference. There was at this Banquet (which endured a great while) the Captaine that was ordayned for their Guard, and the Captaine Omoncon, and Sinſay. When Supper was done

The vſe of their banquets

Wine of a Palme tree.

Digitized by Google

done, they were carryed into very faire Chambers, whereas were faire Beds, where they slept and eased themselues.

The next day in the morning, was brought vnto them their ordinarie victuals, and that in abundance, as well of Flesh as of Fish, Fruits and Wine, to be dressed vnto their owne content, and according vnto their manner: they would take nothing for the same, for so they were commanded by the Insuantes. This was brought vnto them euery day, so longas they were there, & in the way when as they went vnto Chincheo. The same day arriued a Captayne of fortie Ships in the same Port, and so soone as hee was ashoare, he went straight-wayes vnto the Palace for to see the strangers: who being aduertised of his comming, came foorth and receiued him at the Palace gate, whereas was vsed betwixt them great courtesie. The Captayne came with great Maiestie, with his guard of Souldiers and Mace-bearers before him, with great musicke of Hoy-buckes, Trumpets and Drums, and two Whiffelers, or Typ-staues, that made roome, putting the people aside: also there came with him two executors of Iustice, hauing each of them in their hands a Set made of canes, which is an instrument wherewith they doth whip and punish offenders. When this Captayne came vnto the Palace gate, whereas the father Friars and their companions did receiue him, he was brought on the shoulders of eight men very richly apparelled, in a chayre wrought of Iuorie and Gold, who stayed not till they came into the inner Chamber, whereas he did alight from the chayre, and went straight vnder a Cloath of estate, that was there ordinarily for the same purpose, and a Table before him: there hee sate downe, and straight-wayes arose vp, and standing he did receiue the strange ghests, who did courtesie vnto him according vnto their fashion, which is to joyne their hands together, and to stoope with them and their heads downe to the ground: hee gratified them againe, with bowing his head a little, and that with great grauitie. These speeches being finished, there was brought foorth certaine pieces of blacke Silke of twelue vares long a piece. And his Officers did put on the Friars shoulders each of them two, which was for either shoulder one, and was brought about their bodies and girt therewith: the like was done in order vnto the Spanish Souldiers, and vnto Omoncon, and Sinsay, and to their Interpreter. But vnto Omoncon, and Sinsay, was giuen vnto either of them a branch or Nosegay made of Siluer, which was set vpon their heads, which is accustomable honour, that is done vnto such as haue done some great enterprise, or such like. After that this ceremonie was done, they played vpon the Instruments aforesayd, which came with the Captayne. In the meane time of their musicke, there was brought foorth great store of Conserues, March-panes, and things made of Sugar, and excellent good Wine: and so being on foote standing, hee caused them to eate, and hee himselfe from the Chayre whereas he sate, did giue them to drinke euery one in order, without rising vp, which is a ceremonie and token of great fauour, and of loue.

Captaine of fortie Ships.

Sergeants.

This being done, hee arose from the chayre vnder the Cloath of state, and went and sate downe in that which was brought on mens backes, and with declyning of his head a little, hee departed out of the Hall and out of the house, and went vnto his owne house, whereas by the counsell of Omoncon, and Sinsay, within an houre after they should goe and visite him, the which they did: hee receiued them maruellously well and with great courtesie: who maruelled at his great Maiestie and authoritie, for that Omoncon and Sinsay, when they did talke with him were vpon their knees, and so did all the rest. Hee gaue them againe in his owne house a gallant banquet, of diuers sorts of Conserues and Fruits, and excellent Wine of the Palme-tree, and did talke and reason with them in good sort, and was more familiar than at his first visitation.

After that the Fathers with their companions had remained two dayes in the Port of Tansuso, the thrid day they departed in the morning towards Chincheo. At their going forth of the Town, they were accompanied with a great number of Soldiers, both Harquebusses & Pikes, and before them a great noyse of Trumpets, Drums, and Hoy-bucks, till such time as they came vnto the Riuers side, whereas was a Brygandine prouided and made readie in all points, to carrie them vp the Riuer: all the streets alongst whereas they went, there followed them so much people that it was innumerable, and all to see them. All alongst the Riuers whereas they went, was seated with Villages very gallant and fresh, both on the one side and on the other.

At the end of the two leagues, they came vnto a great Bay, where was at an Anchor a fleete of more then one hundred and fiftie Ships men of warre, whose Generall was this Captaine, whom wee haue spoken of. At such time as the fleete did discouer them, they began to salute them, as well with great pieces of Artillerie, as with Harquebusses, and other kinde of pastimes, which commonly they doe vse at such times.

Our Spaniards did trauell vp the Riuer more than three leagues, hauing continually both on the one side and on the other, very many and faire Townes, and full of people. In the end of the three leagues, they went aland halfe a league from the Towne of Tangoa, whereas straight-wayes all such things as they carryed with them, were taken vpon mens backes, and carryed vnto the Towne before them, whereas they were tarrying their comming, for to giue them great entertaynment. At their going ashoare, they found prepared for the two Religious men, little Chayres to carrie them vpon mens backes, and for the Souldiers and the rest of their companions horse. The Fathers did refuse to bee carryed, and would haue gone a foot, but Omoncon, and the Tangoa.

Digitized by Google

other Captayne would not conſent thereunto. The Fathers obeyed their reaſons, and entred into the Chayres, and were carryed with eight men a piece, and the other their companions with foure men a piece, according vnto the order giuen by the Gouernour. Thoſe that carryed the Chayres, did it with ſo good a will, that there was ſtriuing who ſhould firſt lay hands to them. This Towne of Tangoa, hath three thouſand Souldiers, and is called in their language Coan: at the entring in, it hath many Gardens and Orchards and a ſtreet where through they carryed the Spaniards vnto their lodging, they affirmed to bee halfe a league long, and all the ſtreet whereas they went, was full of boards and ſtalles whereon was layd all kinde of Merchandiſe very curious, and things to bee eaten, as freſh Fiſh and ſalt Fiſh of diuers ſorts, and great abundance of Fowle, and Fleſh of all ſorts, Fruits and greene Herbes in ſuch quantitie, that it was ſufficient to ſerue ſuch a Citie as Siuill is. They were brought vnto the Kings houſe, which was very great, marueilouſly well wrought with ſtone and bricke, and many Halls, Parlours, and Chambers, but none aboue, but all below. So ſoone as they were a foote, there was brought from the Captayne or Iuſtice of the Towne, whom they doe call Ticoan, a meſſage, bidding them welcome, and therewith a preſent, which was great ſtore of Capons, Hennes, Teales, Ducks, Geeſe, Fleſh of foure or fiue ſorts, freſh Fiſh, Wine, and fruits of diuers ſorts, and of ſo great quantitie, that it was ſufficient for two hundreth men. All the which they would haue giuen for a little coole ayre, by reaſon that it was then very hot weather; and againe, the great number of people that came thither to ſee them did augment it the more. In the Euening the two Spaniſh Souldiers went foorth into the ſtreets to walke abroad, and left the two Friars within their lodging, vnto whom afterwards they did giue intelligence of all things that they had ſeene, which did cauſe great admiration: the wall of the Towne was very broad, and wrought with lyme and ſtone, full of loope-holes and watch-towers. And as they paſſed through the ſtreets there came foorth of a houſe a very honeſt man, as it ſeemed, who was very well apparelled and ſtayed them, for that in the ſame houſe, there were certayne Dames principall perſonages, that did ſee them a farre off, and not content therewith, they did requeſt them with great curteſie for to enter into the houſe, that they might the better ſee them: the which they did ſtraightwayes accompliſh, and entring in, they were brought into a court, whereas was ſet Chayres for them to ſit downe, and the Ladies were there a little from them, beholding them with great honeſtie and grauitie. Then a little after, they ſet them a banquet with March-panes and ſweet meats made of Sugar, which they did eate without any curioſitie, and drunke after the ſame. The banquet being done, they made ſignes and tokens vnto them, that they receiued great content with their ſight, and that they might depart when that their pleaſure was, the which they did, after that they had made great curteſies with thankes, for their friendſhip receiued of both parts.

China Women.

So after they had taken their leaue, they went to ſee a Houſe of pleaſure, that was hard by the Towne-wall, wrought vpon the water, with very faire galleries and open lodges to banquet in, made of Maſons worke, and therein many Tables finely painted, and round about it Ciſterns of water, wherin was ſtore of Fiſh, and joyning vnto them Tables of very faire Alabaſter, all of one ſtone, and the leaſt of them was of eight ſpannes long: and round about them were brookes of running water, that gaue a pleaſant ſound in the meane time they were banquetting, and nigh thereunto many Gardens full of all ſorts of Flowers. And a little from that place they ſaw a Bridge all of Maſons worke, and the ſtones very well wrought and of a mightie bigneſſe, they meaſured ſome of them, that were twentie and two and twentie foote long, and fiue foot broad, and ſeemed vnto them, that it was a thing impoſſible to bee layd there by mans hands. Of this bigneſſe, yea and bigger they did ſee layd vpon many other Bridges, in the diſcourſe of their voyage, going to Chincheo and Aucheo. The next day in the morning when they were vp and readie, they found in the houſe all things in a readineſſe and in very good order, for their departure, as well their little Chayres, and Horſe, as for men to carrie their ſtuffe and apparell, which did not a litle make them to maruell, how that euery one of them with a waſter vpon their ſhoulders, did diuide their burthen in two parts, ſixe roues before and ſixe roues behinde, and did trauell with the ſame with ſo great eaſe and ſwiftneſſe, that the Horſe could not indure with them. They went vnto the Ticoan his houſe. They found him with great Maieſtie, but yet gaue them great and good entertaynment. Hee did likewiſe put vpon each of them, two pieces of Silke, in the ſame order as the Gouernour of Tanſuſo did.

Houſe of pleaſure.

Stone-bridge.

From this Towne of Tangoa vnto Chincheo, is thirteene leagues, and ſo playne way that it giueth great content to trauell it: in all the way they could not ſee one ſpanne of ground but was tilled and occupied. The like they doe ſay, is of all the ground that is in the whole Kingdome: it is full of people, and the Townes one ſo neere to another, that almoſt you can not iudge them to bee many Townes but one, for that there was but a quarter of a league diſtant, one Towne from another, and it was told vnto them that in all the Prouinces of the Kingdome, it is peopled in the ſame order. All their ground they till is watred, which is the occaſion of the fruitfulneſſe therof, ſo that they doe gather fruit all the yeere long, and our Spaniards did ſee in all places whereas they came, that they were gathering of Rice, ſome new ſprung vp, ſome with eares, and ſome ripe. They doe plough and till their ground with Kine, Bufalos, and Bulls, which are very very tame, and although they bee very great, yet be their hornes but of a spanne long and turning backwards to the tayle, in such sort that they cannot doe any hurt or harme with them: they doe gouerne them with a coard that is made fast to a ring that is in their nose, and in like sort doe they gouerne the Bufales. They doe feed them commonly in the fields of Rice, for that they haue no other grasings, and all the time that they are feeding, a Boy doth ride on euery one of them to disturbe them, that they doe no harme therein. But to eate the weedes and grasse that doe grow in the Rice. Pasturage.

Thriftie tillage

Plowing with Buffalos.

Digitized by Google

All the high-wayes are couered with the shadow of very faire Orchards, which doe garnish it very much, and they are planted in very good order: and amongst them there are Shops, where as is sold all manner of Fruits, to the comfort of all such as doe trauell by the way, which is an infinite number, some on foote, some on horse-backe, and others in little chayres. Their waters by the high-wayes, are very good and light. The same day when they had trauelled halfe way, they saw a farre off comming marching towards them in very good order, a squadron of Souldiers, which at the first caused them to maruell, and to bee afrayd, till such time as they drew nigher, it was told vnto them, that it was the Captayne of the guard vnto the Insuanto, or Gouernour of Chincheo, who came by his order to receiue them with foure hundred Souldiers, very well armed with Pikes and Harquebusses, and well apparelled. So soone as the Captayne came vnto them, hee was mounted on a bay Horse, but of small stature, as they for the most part bee in all that Prouince, hee alighted and came vnto the Fathers, and his companions (who likewise did alight from their little Chayres) and did salute the one the other with great courtesie.

The Captayne came very well apparelled with a Chayne of gold about his necke, a man of a good audacitie and vnderstanding. Hard vnto his stirrop hee had a Page that went with him, and carryed a great Tira sol, made of Silke, that did shadow him all ouer. Hee had before him great musicke of Trumpets and Hoybuckes, whereon they played in great concord; This Captayne with his foure hundreth Souldiers, did continually guard them for pompe, not necessitie; for the people may not weare weapons but the Souldiers. In this high-way continually there went and came many packe-Horses, laden with Merchandise and other things, but the most part of them were Mules. The high-wayes are very broad, that twentie men may ride together on a ranke, and one not hinder another, and are all paued with great stones. A thing to keepe away the Sunne. High-wayes.

VPon a Saturday being the eleuenth of Iuly, came our Spaniards vnto the Citie of Chincheo, foure houres before it was night. This Citie is of the common sort in that Kingdome, and may haue seuentie thousand housholds. It is of great traffick and well prouided of all things, for that the Sea is but two leagues from it: it hath a mightie Riuer running alongst by it downe into the Sea, by which is brought by water and carryed downe all kinde of merchandise. There is a Bridge ouer the sayd Riuer, which is supposed to bee the fairest that is in all the world: it hath a draw bridge to serue in time of warres, or for any other necessitie: the Bridge is eight hundred paces long, and all wrought with stones of two and twentie foote long, and fiue foote broad, a thing greatly to bee maruelled at: at the entrie thereof, there were many armed Souldiers readie to fight, who when they came within Harquebusse shot did salute them in very good order. There was nigh vnto the sayd bridge in the Riuer riding at anchor, more then a thousand Ships of all sorts, and so great a number of Boates and Barkes, that all the Riuer was couered, and euery one full of people that had entred into them for to see the Castillas, for so they did call the Spaniards in that Countrey, for the streets in the Suburbes, nor in the Citie could not hold them, the number was so great, yet their streets are as broad as our ordinary streets in any Citie in all Spaine. This Citie is compassed with a strong Wall made of stone, and is seuen fathom high, and foure fathom broad, & vpon the Gates many towers, wherein is placed their Artillerie, which is all their strength, for that they doe not vse in their Kingdome strong Castles, as they doe in Europe. The houses of the Citie are all built after one sort and fashion, but faire, & not very high, by reason of the Earthquakes which are ordinarily in that Country. All the streets (but especially that wherein they passed at their comming thither) haue on the one side and on the other, Sheds, vnder the which are shops, full of rich Merchandise and of great value, and very curious. They haue in equall distance the one from the other, many triumphant Arches which doe set out the streets very much, and is vsed in euery principall street throughout all the Kingdome, in the which they haue excellent Market-places, whereas is to bee bought all things that you will desire to be eaten, as well of Fish, as of Flesh, Fruits, Hearbs, Comfits, Conserues, and all things so good cheape, that it is almost bought for nothing. Chincheo hath seuentie thousand housholds. Faire Bridge. A thousand ships in one Riuer. They haue no vse of Castles. Earthquakes in this Countrey. Rich Merchandise. Triumphant Arches.

The Insuanto or Gouernour of the Citie, did send that forthwith they should goe vnto his House, for that hee had great desire to see them. In the midst of the streete, where was no lesse number of people then in the other, whereby they entred into the Citie, they met with a Loytia, that came to entertaine them with great Maiestie, and had carryed before him many Banners, Mace-bearers, and Tipstaues, and others which carryed Sets or Whips, which they did trayle after them, made fast vnto long stickes, which were the Executioners, the which doe goe alwayes making of way, parting the people before the Loytias, as you haue heard. The maiestie and The Insuanto.

Digitized by Google

An Aſſiſtant.

and company wherewith he came was ſo great, that they verily did beleeue him to be the Inſuanto: but being certified, they vnderſtood that it was one of his Counſellors that came from the Gouernours home to his owne houſe, which was in the ſame ſtreet whereas hee met with them. This Counſellor was carried in a Chaire of Iuorie, garniſhed with Gold and with Curtaines of Cloth of Gold, and on them the Kings Armes, which are certayne Serpents knotted together (as hath beene told you.) But when he came right againſt the Spaniards, without any ſtaying he made a ſigne with his head, and commanded that they ſhould returne backe againe vnto his houſe, which was hard by: the Captaines did ſtraight-wayes obey his commandement, and returned with them. The Counſellor entred into his houſe, which was very faire, hee had in it a faire Court, and therein a gallant Fountaine and a Garden. After him entred the Spaniards all alone, the reſt remayned without in the ſtreet at the Loyſas commandement, hee entertayned them with very good words of ſemblance, and commanded a Banquet to be brought forth, and Wine to drinke, he began firſt both to eate and drinke. Then he commanded to call in the Captaine, vnto whom was giuen the charge to beare them companie, and did chide with him very ſharpely and ſeuerely, becauſe he did carrie them on foot (they could not vnderſtand whether it were done for a policie, or of a truth, although the effects wherewith hee did chide ſeemed of a truth) hee ſtraight-wayes commanded two rich Chaires to bee brought forth to carry the Fathers, and to giue vnto their companions Horſes: the which beeing done, hee willed them to goe and viſit the Gouernour, who did tarrie their comming: and that another time at more leiſure he would ſee and viſit them.

Serpents knotted the Kings Armes.

They followed their way all alongſt the ſtreet, which ſeemed vnto them to bee more fairer then the other wherein they entred, and of more fairer houſes and triumphant Arches: and alſo the ſhops that were on the one ſide and on the other, to bee better furniſhed with richer things then the others, in ſo ample ſort, that what therewith, as alſo the great number of people which they ſaw, they were ſo amazed, that they were as people from themſelues, thinking it to bee a Dreame. To conclude, after they had gone a good while in that ſtreet, delighting their eyes with new things neuer ſeene of them before: they came into a great place, whereas were many Souldiers in good order with their Harquebuſſes, Pikes and other Armour in a readineſſe, apparelled all in a Liuery of Silke, with their Ancients diſplayed. At the end of this place, was there a very faire and ſumptuous Palace, the gate was wrought of Maſons worke of ſtone, very great and full of figures or Perſonages, and aboue it a great window with an Iron grate all gilt: they were carried within the gates, the Soulders and the people which were without number, remayned without and could not be auoyded but with great difficultie. When they were within the firſt Court, there came forth a man very well apparelled and of authoritie, and made ſignes with his hand vnto them that brought the Spaniards, that they ſhould carrie them into a Hall that was vpon the right hand, the which was ſtraight-wayes done. The Hall was very great and faire, and at the end thereof there was an Altar, whereon were many Idols, and all did differ the one from the other in their faſhion: the Altar was rich and very curiouſly trimmed with burning Lampes: the Altar-cloth was of cloth of Gold: and the fruntlet of the ſame.

Goodly ſight.

The Palace.

After awhile that they had beene there whereas the Idols were, there came a Seruant from the Gouernour and ſaid vnto them in his behalfe, that they ſhould ſend vnto him the Interpreter; they ſtraight-wayes commanded him to goe. And the Gouernour ſaid vnto him that he ſhould aduiſe the Fathers and the reſt of his companions, that if they would talke and treate of ſuch buſineſſe as they came for, that it muſt be done with the ſame ceremonie and reſpect, as the Nobles of that Prouince doe, vſe to talke with him, which is vpon their knees (as afterwards they did ſee many times vſed) if not that they ſhould depart vnto the Houſe whereas they were lodged, and there to tarrie the order that ſhould be ſent from the Vice-roy of Aucheo.

State-ceremonie.

The Spaniards were of diuers judgements, ſtriuing amongſt themſelues a good while, but yet in concluſion, the Religious Fathers, whom the Gouernour of the Ilands had ordayned and ſent as principals in this matter, and whoſe judgement they ſhould follow, ſaid, that they ought to accept the condition, ſeeing that by no other meanes they could not come vnto that they pretended: and not to leaue it off for matters of ſmall importance, for that therein they make no offence vnto God, and it may be a meane vnto the conuerting of that mightie Kingdome.

When that the Inſuanto vnderſtood that the Spaniards would enter with the reuerence accuſtomed, and in ſuch order as was declared vnto them, hee ſtraight-wayes commanded that they ſhould come into the Hall whereas hee was, they entred into another Hall as bigge as the firſt: whereas were many Souldiers with their weapons in their hands in very good order, and richly apparelled, and next vnto them were many Tipſtaues and Sergeants, with different Enſignes or Badges, all apparelled with long Robes of ſilke, garded and embroydered with Gold, and euery one of them had a Helme on his head, ſome of ſiluer and other ſome of Tinne gilt ouer, which was a gallant thing to ſee: all had long haire and died yellow, which hung downe behind their eares vpon their backes: they were placed in very good order, and made a lane that the Spaniards might paſſe thorough: then they came into a Gallerie, which was joyning vnto the Chamber where the Gouernour was, and there they heard ſuch a noyſe of Inſtruments of diuers ſorts,

which

Digitized by Google

which endured a good while, and was of so great melodie, that it seemed vnto them that they neuer before heard the like: which caused vnto them great admiration to see so great Majestie amongst Gentiles. When the Musicke was ended, they entred into the Hall aforesaid, and had not gone many steps, when as they met with the Counsailer that met with them in the street afore-said, and with him other two of his companions all on foot and bare-headed before the Gouernour, and their Ensignes of Majestie left off: which is generally vsed in all the Kingdome, the inferiour to make any shew when that he is before his Superiour. Then they made signes vnto them for to kneele downe, for that the Insuanto was nigh at hand in a rich Towre, vnder a Canopie of great Riches, and did represent so great Majestie as the King himselfe: hee did entertayne them with tokens of great loue, and humanitie, and told them by their Interpreter, that they were very well welcome, and that hee did greatly rejoyce to see them, with many other words of great fauour. This Gouernour was a man of goodly person, well fauoured, and of a merry countenance, more then any that they had seene in all that Countrey. Hee caused to bee put vpon the shoulders of the Fathers and of the Souldiers that were with him, euery one of them two pieces of silke, which was crossed about them like Skarfes, and likewise to either of them a branch of siluer: the like courtesie he did vnto the Captaine Omoncon, and vnto Sinsay, and commanded to giue vnto all their Seruants euery one of them a Mantle of Cotton painted. This being done, the Fathers did giue vnto him the Letters which they carried from the Gouernour and Generall of the field, and a note of the Present that was sent him: craving pardon for that it was so small, but time and oportunitie would not serue as then to send vnto him a thing of greater price and valour: certifying him, that if the friendship which they pretended did goe forwards, and come to be established, that then all things should be amended and amplified. Hee answered vnto their proffers with words of great fauour, and made signes vnto them to arise, and to goe and take their rests there, whereas they were lodged: the which they did, and found all things in very good order and well furnished, as well of Beds as of all other necessaries, which was done by the commandement of the Gouernour. Before they departed out of the Palace the Captaine of the guard did carrie them vnto his Lodging, which was within the Court, and there he made them a Banquet with Conserues, and Fruits in abundance: the which being done, hee and other Gentlemen of the Palace did beare them company vntil they came to their Lodgings, which they greatly desired, for that they were wearie of their Iourney, and also with the trouble of the great presse of people that pressed on them in the streets, & otherwise for to see them: the which Captaine of the guard did appoint a Company of Souldiers for to guard them both night and day, the which was done more for Maiestie then for necessitie or securitie of their persons. They had a Steward appointed to prouide them and all their company of all things necessary, and that in abundance, and not to take of them any thing, which was giuen by particular commandement by the Gouernour.

Great Maiesty.

The Insuantos person and entertaynment.

The next day, many of the Gentlemen of the Citie did goe vnto the Spaniards to visit them, and such as could not goe themselues did send their Seruants, bidding them welcome. The Spaniards did make answere, and gratified them all, in the which visitation they spent all the whole day, hauing great admiration to see the good behauiour, nurture, and gallant demeanour of those Gentlemen, and the great discretion they had in the demanding of any thing they would know as also in their Answeres made to our requests. The next day the Insuanto sent a commandement wherein he willed the two Fathers to remayne in their Lodgings and take their ease: but the two Souldiers Pedro Sarmiento, and Miguel de Loarcha, should come and speake with him, and that they should bring with them their Interpreter, for that hee had one there with him (who was a Chino, and vnderstood the Language of the Philippinas, but so badly, that they could not by his Interpretation talke of any matter of importance. So when they came thither, they were brought whereas he was, but with lesse ceremonie, he requested them to declare vnto him the whole circumstance of the comming of Limahon the Rouer, vnto the Ilands, and how the Spaniards dealt with him: that although he had beene informed particularly in all things, by the Captaine Omoncon and Sinsay, yet he was in a iealousie that they told him not the truth. Hee was nothing deceiued in that he suspected,) for after that our Souldiers had made a true Relation of the comming of the Rouer vnto Manilla, and of all the rest, hee found that they differed very much, the one from the other, for that they did attribute it wholly vnto themselues to get honour and benefit: but the Insuanto like a wise man straight-wayes vnderstood their pretence. But when that he perceiued that Limahon was neither dead nor Prisoner, but onely besieged, he offered vnto them that if they would returne againe vnto Paganſinan vpon him whereas he was, he would giue vnto them fiue hundred ships of warre, with people sufficient to serue both by Sea and Land, and more if they would request. They answered him, that all such cost and labour were but in vaine, for that the Generall of the field who hath him in siege, with the people and ships that he hath are sufficient to end that Enterprize, and to send him hither aliue or dead, and that long before that their fleet should come thither. And besides this, their Ilands were poore of victuals, and could not sustaine so great an Armie many dayes. Beeing satisfied with these reasons, he gaue place that the Interpreter which they brought should come in where as they were,

Vaine glory.

Boasting.

Digitized by Google

were, for he remayned at the doore without, for that hee would bee fully certified to auoid the suspitious doubt he had before he come in presence, yet he did helpe them very much. So when their Interpreter was come in, the Spaniards seeing good occasion and oportunitie for to declare Mortified Friers. that which passed the day before, betwixt them and the Fathers, touching the speaking vnto him on their knees: and seeing, as it seemed vnto them, that he was at that time in a good mind for to heare them, they did vtter vnto him all the whole contention (after that they had declared many reasons of great consideration, to giue them to vnderstand that it was not conuenient to doe it, but especially to religious men, who were there as principals ouer the rest, vnto whom the King of Spaine (their Lord) himselfe doth stand on foot, when as they doe intreate of any matter, although it be but of small importance: for that they are Priests and Ministers of God, whom he doth worship and reuerence.

The Insuanto with a merry countenance did answere them, that vnto that time hee vnderstood no more of them, then in that he was informed by the Captaine Omoncon, and did not acknowledge them to bee any other but Castillas: without knowing wherefore they came, nor from whom, for lacke of the Letters sent from their Gouernour, and Generall of the field, the first time that hee spake with them: neither had hee any knowledge of the custome of their Countrey: yet notwithstanding, that which hath passed heere, without any exception of person, if they would take it in good part, in that which is to come shall be amended: and from that day forwards, at all times whensoeuer it were their pleasure to come of themselues, or at such time as they were sent for, for to talke with him as they doe vse in Castilla or Spaine, vnto such of their dignitie and vocation, the which hee granted with a very good will: although hee not grant vnto any that pre-eminence, no not vnto a Vice-roy, except he were an Ambassador sent from some King.

The next day, the Gouernour called a Gentleman of his House vnto him, and commanded him to go and visit the Spaniards, and to informe himselfe of them if that they lacked any thing. And also that he should in his name inuite them for the next day following to dine with him in his House. This Gentleman went vnto them and accomplished his message: and the Spaniards answered, kissing his hand for the great care he had of them: they were carryed into a Hall that was below in the second Court, whereas were many Chaires of Veluet and Tables that Spaniards feasted. Table-rite. were painted with their frontals before. In the first Chaires they caused the Friers to sit downe, euery one at a Table by himselfe, and each of them other sixe Tables, placed in order, compassing round like a Circle: then were the Spanish Souldiers set in the same manner, and each of them had fiue Tables, and next vnto them the Captaine of the guard belonging vnto the Gouernour, and two other Captaines: and euery one of them had three Tables. For that it is the custome
A Comedy & other sports. of that Countrey to make a difference in the qualitie of the guests, by the number of the Tables. All these were placed in circle or compasse (as aforesaid) that they might see one another. In the midst betwixt them there was a round compasse, whereas was represented a Comedie with much pastime, and indured all the Dinner time, and a good while after. There was also great store of very good and excellent Musicke, accompanied with gallant voyces, also Iesters with
The Viands. Puppets, and other things of great pastime, to driue the time away. On the first Table was set to euery one of the guests, little Baskets wrought with Gold and Siluer wyre, full of sweet meates made of Sugar, as March-panes, Castles, Pitchers, Pots, Dishes, Dogges, Buls, Elephants, and other things very curious, and all gilt: besides this there were many Dishes full of flesh, as Capons, Hennes, Geese, Teales, Gamons of Bacon, pieces of Beefe, and other sorts of flesh wherewith all the Tables were repleniſhed, sauing that whereat they did sit to dine, which was repleniſhed with victuals that was dressed (for all the other was raw) and was of so great abundance, that there was at times more then fiftie dishes, and they were serued with great curiositie. They had Wine of diuers sorts, and of that which they doe make in that Countrey of the Palme-tree, but of so great excellencie, that they found no lacke of that which was made of Grapes. The Dinner endured foure houres, in so good order that it might haue beene giuen vnto any Prince in the World.

Their Seruants and Slaues that they brought with them at the same time, did dine in another Hall nigh vnto the same, with so great abundance as their Masters. When Dinner was done, the Gouernour commanded the people to come vnto him, with whom hee did talke and common with great friendship, and good conuersation, and would not consent that they should kneele downe, neither to be bare headed. So after that he had made vnto them tokens of friendship, and detayned them a while, in demanding of many things, lastly, he told them that there was an order come from the Vice-roy of Aucheo, that they should goe thither with great speed. So hee tooke his leaue of vs with great friendship and courtesie. At their going forth out of the Hall, they found the Captaine that did dine with them, and with him many other Gentlemen that tarried their comming for to beare them company vnto their Lodging: going before them many Seruants, that did carrie the raw meate, that was vpon the other Tables ouer and aboue that which they did eate on, the which was done for great Maiestie, and a Ceremonie very much vsed in that Kingdome, so many times as they doe make any Banquet.

When

Digitized by Google

When they came vnto their Lodging they found that the Insuanto had sent them a very good Present, in the which was for euery one of them foure pieces of silke, and counting chiles with other things, and certayne painted Mantles for the Seruants and Slaues. After they had taken their leaue of the Captaines and Gentlemen that did beare them company home, they beganne with great ioy to put all things in order for their Iourney the next day following.

THe next day in the morning, before that the Spaniards were stirring, there was within the House all things necessary for their Iourney, as well of Litter chaires, as of Horses and Men for to carrie them, and their stuffe, the which they did with so good a will (as aforesaid) that they did fall out and striue amongst themselues, who should be the first that should receiue their burthen. So all things beeing in good order, they departed, hauing in their company the same Captaine and Souldiers, that vnto that time had beene their guard, vntill they came vnto the Citie of Aucheo, whereas the Vice-roy was. This day by reason they vnderstood that they should depart, the preasse and multitude of the people was so great, that although they had Tip-staues before them, to beate the people away and to make roome, yet was it almost night before they could get out of the Citie: so that they were constrained to remaine in a Towne there hard by all that night, whereas by the commandement of the Gouernour they were very well lodged, and their Supper made readie in very good order, as it was in seuen dayes together, till such time as they came vnto Aucheo, without taking for the same, or for any other thing necessarie for their sustentaion, any price or value. There went continually before them a Post with a prouision from the Gouernour, written in a great board wherein was declared who they were, and from whence they came, and commanding that there should be prouided for them all things necessarie in abundance, vpon the Kings cost, which was the occasion that so much people came for to see them, that in the high-waies they were many times disturbed with great trouble, the third day they came vnto a Citie which was called Megoa, which was sometimes the head gouernment, the which was of forty thousand housholds, but a great part thereof was dispeopled: the occasion thereof they told vs (and was) that about thirtie yeares past, the Iapones, who brought for their Guides three Chinois, came vpon that Citie (to reuenge themselues of an injurie that was done vnto them) the which they put in execution with so great secrecie and policie, that they made themselues Lords of the Citie without any danger or hurt vnto themselues: for that fiftie Iapones, men fit for that purpose, did apparell themselues in Chinois apparell without being knowne, and came vnto a Gate of the Citie, whereas the Souldiers that had the charge thereof were void of all suspition. And within a little while after that, followed two thousand that did dis-imbarke themselues in a secret and vnknowne place, and came in very secret order, because they would not be discouered, and did beset that gate of the Citie, whereas their companions were, which they sent before: who so soone as they saw them nigh at hand, drew out their weapons, the which they carried hid vnder their apparell, & set vpon the Soldiers (that were void of feare and vnarmed) with so great furie and force, that they being amazed wert easily slain, so that they were Lords of the Gate, whereas they left very good guard, and followed their victorie, and made themselues Lords of the Citie, without any danger vnto their persons, and did possesse the same certaine daies, and did sacke the same in spite of them all, with great harme and losse vnto the Inhabitants thereof, vntill such time as the Vice-roy of Aucheo did leuie an Armie together of threescore and ten thusand men, but they seeing that they could not defend themselues against so many, in one night they left the Citie and went vnto their ships, whereas they had left them in very good order, and carried with them the spoile of the Citie, leauing it beaten downe.

Aucheo.

Megoa a great Citie spoyled by Iapanders.

Stratagem.

So soone as they came thither, the Friers remayned in their Lodgings, but Pedro Sarmiento and Miguel de Loarcha went to visit the Gouernour, vsing the Spanish courtesie with him: and he receiued them with great joy and courtesie. After they had taken their leaue and returned vnto their Lodgings, the Gouernour sent to visit them El Tyn, who is the ancientest of his Councell. At their departure from this Citie, trauelling towards Aucheo, they passed ouer a mightie great Riuer, by a Bridge all made of stone: the goodliest and greatest that euer they had seene, whose greatnesse did cause wonderfull admiration, so that they stayed and did measure it from one end to another, that it might be put amongst the wonders of that Countrey, which they tooke a note of. They found that it was one thousand and three hundred foot long, and that the least stone wherewith it was built, was of seuenteene foot, and many of two and twentie foot long, and eight foote broad, and seemed vnto them a thing impossible to bee brought thither by mans art, for that all round about so farre as they could see, was plaine ground without any Mountaines: by which they judged them to be brought from farre. When they were passed that Bridge, they trauelled all the rest of the day till night vpon a Cawsie that was very broad and plaine, and on both sides many Victualling Houses, and the fields sowed with Rice, wheate, and other Seeds: and so full of people as in the streets of a good Towne or Citie

Admirable stone bridge.

After they had trauelled more then halfe a league in the Suburbs of the Citie of Aucheo, they met with a Post that came from the Vice-roy: who brought order that they should remaine mayne in a house that was appointed for them in the sayd Suburbes. So soone as they were alighted, there came a Gentleman to visite them, sent from the Vice-roy to bid them welcome, and to know how they did with their iourney, and also to see that they were well prouided for that night, of all things necessarie, and that in abundance. After this Gentleman, came other Captaynes to visite them, and brought with them great store of Conserues, Wine and Fruit: which is a common custome amongst them, when that they goe in the like visitation, and it is carryed by their seruants in little Baskets very curiously wrought, or else in Barrels made of earth all gilt. Within two houres after their comming thither, there came another messenger from the Vice-roy, with many men laden with Capons, Hennes, Geese, Teales, gamons of Bacon, and Conserues of diuers sorts, and of great abundance, sufficient for one hundred men to suppe that night, and for their dinner the next day. The next day in the morning very earely, there came much people vnto their lodging, sent by the Vice-roy, and brought with them two rich Chayres, for to carrie the Fathers in, and the Curtaines tyed vp, that they might the better bee seene, and for their companions very good Horses, sadled after the fashion which they doe vse. They foorthwith made haste for to depart, and although they made great speed, yet were they a good houre and a halfe, before they could come vnto the gates of the Citie, and seemed vnto them that they had trauelled two leagues in the Suburbes: well peopled, faire houses, and many shops full of Merchandise.

Digitized by Google

Suburbs of Aucheo.

Before they came vnto the Gates, they passed a mightie Riuer three times ouer Bridges, that were great and very faire, and the Riuer so deepe, that great Ships came vp the same, but their maste stooping downe, to passe vnder the bridges. This Citie is the head Citie of all the Prouince, verie rich and fertile, and many Townes belonging vnto it, and but eight leagues from the Sea. They had no leasure to tell the Souldiers, but they saw that from the Gate vntill they came vnto the Vice-royes Palace on both sides, which was a good way, to bee full of them, and all richly apparelled and of one colour. The people that were at the windowes and in the street, betwixt the houses and the Souldiers were so great a number, that it seemed to be doomes day, and that all the people in the world were there ioyned together in that street. When they came vnto the Palace which was two houres after day, the Gentlemen that were their guides, did cause the Spaniards to enter into a roome which was hard by, till such time as the Gate was open, for that it is open but once a day, and so continue no longer time then the audience endureth, which is done by the Vice-roy once euery day, and that is but a small time. But first, before he doth enter into audience, there is shot off foure peeces of Artillerie, with a great noyse of Trumpets, Drums and Waytes. And there is no day that passeth without audience, as our people did see by experience so long as they were there, and were likewise informed of others. The houre being come, and the ceremonie done as aforesayd, the Gates were opened, and there was in the Court many Souldiers, apparelled in the same liuerie that those were of in the street. From the midst amongst them came foorth a Gentleman, who was as it was told them, the Captayne of the guard of the Vice-roy, who came with great grauitie and authoritie, towards the place whereas our people were, and after they had saluted the one the other, hee made signes vnto them, that they should goe towards the gates of the Palace. When they were within the first Court, which was great and wrought with mightie pillars, there was a great number of Souldiers, and many Sergeants, that entred into another great court, and mounted vp a payre of stayres that was on the one side, whereas all the people were with great silence, sauing the Captayne of the guard, who went with our people till they came to the gates of the Hall, where was the Vice-roy, at which gate hee stayed with his head discouered, and made signes vnto ours that they should doe the like.

Palace open once a day.

State.

Ceremonie.

Then straight-wayes came foorth of the Hall a man apparelled in a long Robe, of good personage, and asked of the Spaniards, if they would speake with the Vice-roy, and they answered, yea: then asked hee againe from whom they came, and by whom they were sent, they answered, that they were sent by the Gouernour of Philippinas, who was seruant vnto the mightiest King in all Christendome. When he had this answer, he returned againe into the Hall, and within a little while after he came foorth, and bad them come in, but gaue them to vnderstand, that in entring into the hall whereas the Vice-roy was, that they should kneele downe, and talke with him in that order, till hee commanded to the contrarie, if they would vse this Ceremonie, that then they should come in, if not, that they should returne backe againe. They sayd, that they would obserue the order giuen vnto them. Therewith hee went in, who seemed to bee the Master of ceremonies, making a signe that they should follow after him, and doe that which hee willed them to doe. At the entring in at the doore, they stayed a little, and then kneeled downe right ouer against there whereas the Vice-roy sate, in a Chayre very high like vnto a Throne, with a Table before him, and was in so darke a place that almost they could not see his face very well. On the one side of him, there were some like vnto Heralds of Armes, with Scepters in their hands, and on the other side, two men of a gallant comlinesse armed with Corslets, made of scales of Gold downe to the calfe of their legges, with Bowes in their hands of gold, and Quiuers at their backs of the same. Both the one and the other were vpon their knees. There was Vice-royes state.

vpon

Digitized by Google

vpon the Table before him, paper and all things neceſſarie to write : which is an ordinarie vſe amongſt them at all times, when there is any publike audience, and on the one ſide of the board a Lion made of blacke wood, which was (as after they vnderſtood) the Armes of that Prouince. So ſtraight-wayes hee made ſignes vnto them to draw neere, which they did, and kneeled downe a little from the Table which was whereas the Maſter of Ceremonies did will them. In this ſort they began to talke with him by their Interpreter, and told them the occaſion of their comming into that Citie and Kingdome, and from whom and vnto whom they were ſent. But hee made ſignes vnto them that they ſhould ariſe, the which they did with a very good will, and did perſeuer in their intent. But the Vice-roy did cut them off before they could make an end, and asked if they had brought any Letter from their King, vnto the King his Lord, whom they would goe to ſee and talke with : but when they anſwered no, hee ſtraight-wayes tooke his leaue of them, ſaying, that they were welcome, and that they ſhould depart vnto their lodgings and to take their eaſe, for that afterwards they ſhould haue occaſion to declare their mindes vnto him, and hee would giue them their anſwer, for that the King was farre off, and it requireth a long time to come whereas hee is, but he would write vnto him, and according vnto his commandement, he would make them anſwer. And therewith hee tooke the Letter, and the memoriall of the preſent, and commanded in his preſence, to put about the neckes of the Friars in manner of a ſcarfe, to either of them ſixe pieces of Silke, and vnto the Soldiers their companions, and vnto Omoncon, and Sinſay, each of them foure pieces, and to euery one of their ſeruants two a piece, and to giue vnto the two Friars and the Souldiers, Omoncon, and Sinſay, euery one of them two branches of Siluer.

Lions the Armes of that Prouince, perhaps this deceiued Piats, who miſtooke them (ſeeing them common on pillars &c.) to be the Kings Armes, which were but of ſome places.

With the Silke about their neckes, and with the branches in their hands, they returned out of the Hall and downe the ſtayres the way they came, and ſo through the court into the ſtreets, from whence they ſaw them ſhut the Court gate with ſo great a noyſe, as when they did open it. From thence at the requeſt of Omoncon, and Sinſay, they went vnto the houſe of Totoc, who is the Captayne generall of all the men of Warre, and vnto the houſe of Cagnitoc, who is the chiefe Standard-bearer : their houſes were nigh the one the other, very faire and great. They found them with as great Maieſtie as the Vice-roy, and in the ſame order, with a Table before them, and had on each ſide of them armed Souldiers, kneeling on their knees. Yet did they not vſe our men with the courteſie that the Vice-roy vſed, to cauſe them to ſtand vp, which was the occaſion, that ſtraight-wayes they made a ſhow that they would depart and bee gone, complaining of Omoncon, and Sinſay, for that they did carrie them thither, and told them with anger, that the Gouernour of Manilla, did intreat them in a different ſort, who was there reſident for the mightieſt Prince in all the world, and they but eaſie Merchants, neither was their going thither to bee equalled, vnto the benefite that they came thither for. This diſcontent the which they receiued, was the occaſion that they would not goe to make any more viſitations, although the ſayd Omoncon, and Sinſay, for their owne intereſt, would haue carryed them to the houſes of other Officers, and Gentlemen of the Court.

Totoc.

Cagnitoc.

At their comming thither, they found all their ſtuffe in good order, and their dinner marueilous well prouided, and the whole houſe hanged and trimmed, as though it had beene for the Kings owne perſon, with many wayting men and Souldiers, thoſe which did guard them both day and night, and hanging at the doore two tables or boards (commanded by the Vice-roy) whereon was written who they were, that were there lodged, and from whence they came, and wherefore, and that none whoſoeuer, ſhould bee ſo hardie as to offer them any wrong or diſturbance, vpon payne to bee for the ſame offence ſeuerely puniſhed. In this houſe they were more in quiet, then in any other place, whereas they had beene, neither did the people giue them ſo much trouble, by reaſon of the great care which the Iudges had in putting order for the ſame, by the commandement of the Vice-roy, yet was it the greateſt Towne and moſt populed, of all that Prouince (although in other Prouinces there bee that be much bigger) and is affirmed that the Citie of Taybin, or Suntiem, (there whereas the King and his Court is reſident) hath three hundred thouſand houſholds, and yet there is a bigger Citie in the Kingdome called Lanchin.

Reports of Pequin, called Taybin alſo and Suntiem. Lanchin for Nanchin, or Nanquin. See Ricci.

This Citie of Auchee, hath a very faire and ſtrong Wall made of ſtone, which is fiue fathom high, and foure fathom broad, the which was meaſured many times by our people, for that they had a gate out of their lodging that did open to the ſame. This wall is all couered ouer with tyles to defend the rayne-water for hurting of it, which could not to the contrarie but receiue damage, for that there is no lyme vſed in the whole wall. They haue not one Caſtle in all this Citie, neither is there any vſed in all that Kingdome, for all their force and ſtrength is in their Gates, the which bee made very ſtrong, with a double wall, within very broad, betwixt the which are continually many Souldiers, ſuch as doe keepe watch and ward both day and night. Vpon theſe gates they haue much Ordnance, but very ill wrought. The whole wall is full of battlements, and thereon written the names of ſuch Souldiers as are bound to repayre thither in the time of neceſſitie. At euery hundred paces they haue lodgings, the which are very huge and great : there whereas in the time of neceſſitie doe remayne and dwell their Captaynes, Auchee deſcribed.

Ordnance bad

Digitized by Google

The Citie double moted.

so long as their troubles doe indure, all the wall is fortified with two great motes or ditches, the one within and the other without, the which they doe fill at all times when they please, by sluces which they haue from the Riuer for the same purpose, and doe serue of water almost all the houses in the Citie, whereas they haue their stanges for the most part full of Fish. This mightie Citie is situated in a great playne, and compassed round about with mightie Rockes and Mountaines, which is the occasion that it is not so healthfull, and the Inhabitants say, that it is by reason of the Mountaines, and many times it is ouer-flowen in the winter, by spring-tydes from the Riuer. And in that yeere that this doth happen, it doth destroy and ruinate a great part of the Citie, as it was at that time when our people did see it, for that in the winter before they were troubled with these great tydes, which did them much harme.

Vnwholsome.

Inundations.

Vice-royes Feast.

The next day after that our people came into the Citie, the Vice-roy did send to inuite them to dinner to his owne house, whereas he made them a great banquet in the forme following. At their comming vnto the Palace there came forth a great number of Gentlemen, seruants vnto the Vice-roy, to bid them welcome, with great store of musicke and tokens of mirth. Being entred into the first Court, they brought them into a mightie Hall that was maruellously well trimmed, wherein was a great number of Tables set in such order, as they were in the banquet that was made them by the Gouernour of Chinchéo, (as hath beene told you) although the number and furniture did farre excell the other. But before they did sit downe, there came vnto them two Captaynes principall men, vnto whom the Vice-roy had committed the charge of the banquet, to doe all things in his name, for that it is a custome in that Kingdome, that Noble men must not be present in their banquets they make. So the charge was giuen vnto them, to make them be merrie, & to bid his ghests welcome. When they came vnto them they vsed great courtesie, and passed away the time in gallant discourses, till it was time to go to dinner, and that they began to bring in their victuals. Then before they did sit downe, the Captaynes did take each of them a cup in his hand, in manner of a Sorlue, as they doe vse, and being full of Wine, they went together whereas they might discouer the Heauen and offered it vnto the Sunne, and vnto the Saints of heauen, adding thereunto many words of prayers: but principally they did request that the comming of their new ghests might be profitable vnto them all, and that the friendship which they did pretend to establish, might be for good both vnto the one and to the other. This their prayer being done, they did spill out the Wine making a great courtesie, then were they straight-wayes filled againe, and making reuerence vnto their ghests euery one by himselfe, they set the Cups downe vpon the Tables whereas the Fathers should dine, whereas they were set euerie one by himselfe. This being done, the first seruice was set vpon the boards, and the Captaynes were set at other Tables. The time which the banquet indured (which was very late) there was great store of musicke of diuers Instruments, as of Vials, Gitterns, and Rebuckes, and with them many Iesters did make them merrie at their dinner. The which being done, the sayd Captayns did beare their ghests companie out of the Palace, whereas they did anew inuite them to dinner for the next day, in the same Hall: they obeying their request did come, whereas was made vnto them a banquet more notable than the first. This day at the banquet was present the Totoc. In this second banquet they had as the day before, very much musicke, and a Comedie that indured long, with many prettie and merrie iests: there was also a Tumbler, who did his feates very artificially, as well in vauting in the ayre, as vpon a staffe that two men did hold on their shoulders. Before the Comedie did begin, by their Interpreter the signification thereof was told them, that the better they might content themselues in the conceiuing.

Idolatrous rite to the Sunne.

Comedies.

Tomblers.

Taybin or Paquin; diuersly called, either by reason of diuers languages; or because they giue appellatiue names (as the Tartars call the same Citie Cambalu, that is, the Royall Citie) thereto.

The next day they sent the present, and those who carryed it in, did afterward giue our people to vnderstand that in opening the prestnt, there was a note thereof taken before a Notarie, and straight-wayes put in againe where it was taken out, before the sayd Notarie and other witnesses, the which being done, hee sealed it vp, and sent it vnto the Citie of Taybin, vnto the King and his Counsell, for that they haue a rigorous Law in that Kingdome, that doth prohibite all such as haue any office of Gouernment, to receiue any present of what qualitie soeuer it bee, without licence of the King or of his Counsell. This is conformable vnto that, which the Gouernour of Chinchéo did in the presence of our people.

The next day following, the Vice-roy did send to visite them, and to aske of them a Sword, a Harquebusse and a Flaske: for that hee would cause others to bee made by them, the which they did send, and afterwards vnderstood, that they had counterfeited the same, although not in so perfect manner.

All things good cheape.

Then after a time our people seeing, that their being in that Citie seemed to be long and like to be longer, they did procure to driue away the time in the best manner they could, and went abroad into the Citie, and did by either of them that which they thought best. Whereof they found great abundance, and of so small price, that they bought it almost for nothing. They bought many Bookes that did intreat of diuers matters, which they brought with them to the Ilands. The next day they went to see the Gates of the Citie, and all such curious things as were to bee seene, so farre as they could learne or vnderstand, which were many. But amongst them all, they saw a sumptuous Temple of their Idols, in whose chiefe Chappell they counted, one hundred

III. Idols in one Chappell.

and

Digitized by Google

and eleuen Idols, besides a great number more that were in other particuler Chappels, all were of carued worke, very well proportioned and gilded: but in especiall three of them that were placed in the midst of all the rest, the one had three heads proceeding out of one bodie, the one looking on the other in full face, the second was the forme of a Woman with a Child in her armes, the third of a Man apparelled after the forme and fashion, that the Christians doe paynt the Apostles. Of all the rest some had foure armes, and some had sixe, and other eight, and other some maruellous deformed monsters. Before them they had burning Lamps, and many sweet perfumes and smels, but in especiall, before the three aboue specified. Three headed Image. A woman with childe.

But when that the Vice-roy did vnderstand, that our people did goe viewing the Citie gates and Temples (and perceiueth that they that gaue him the notice did suspect it, that it was to some ill intent) therewith hee straight-wayes commanded, that they should not goe forth of their lodging, without his licence: and likewise commanded the Captayne that was their guard not to consent thereunto, as he had done, and likewise that none should carrie them any thing for to sell, for he that did it should be punished with whipping. Yet notwithstanding, they had euery day very sufficient necessaries for their personages in such ample wise, that there did always remayne, and not lacke. In this closeneſſe and keeping in, they suffered many dayes with much sadneſſe, and oppressed with melancholicke humours, to see that their purpose wherefore they went thither seemed to be long, and euery day was worse and worse. Yet notwithstanding they did passe it ouer in the best wise they could, in committing it with heartie zeale vnto God, for whose honour and glory they did attempt that voyage, and prayed vnto him for to mooue their hearts to consent, that the religious Fathers might remayne in that Countrey, for to learne the language (as they had begun many dayes before) by which meanes their soules might be saued, and clearely deliuered from the tyrannie of the Deuill, who of truth had them in possession. So after many dayes, that they had remayned in that close estate, as aforesayd, they determined for to goe and talke with the Vice-roy, and to bee fully resolued, either to tarrie or returne from whence they came, but were not permitted. Vice-royes iealousie.

In this order they remayned in the Citie certayne dayes, and for to conclude, either to stay there, or depart the Kingdome, they were resolute, and determined to write a Letter vnto the the Vice-roy. They could finde none that would write this letter for them, although they would haue payed them very well for their paines. Till in the end, by great request and prayings, the Captayne Onuncen did write it for them, and straight-wayes departed vnto the Citie of Ampin, that was not farre off, to put away the suspition they might conceiue, that hee did write the letter, if that peraduenture the Vice-roy would take it in ill part. Their letter being written, they found great difficultie in sending the same, for that there was none that would carrie it, neither would they consent, that our men should enter into the Palace to deliuer it. But in conclusion, what with requests and gifts, they perswaded their Captayne of their guard to carrie it, who did deliuer the same vnto the Vice-roy, in name of the Castillos, saying, that he tooke it of them to bring it vnto him, for that they did certifie him, that it was a thing that did import very much. Hauing read the letter, he answered, that he would giue the King to vnderstand thereof, as hee said at the first time. And in that, touching the Friars remaining in that Countrey to preach, at that time he could make them no answer, for that in such matters, it was first requisite to haue the good-will of the Royall Counsell. Yet would hee make answer vnto the Letter they brought from the Gouernour of Manilla, and that they might depart, and returne againe at such time as they brought Limahon prisoner or dead, the which being done, then shall the friendship be concluded which they doe pretend, and to remayne and preach at their will. With this answer they remayned without all hope to remaine there, and did incontinent prepare themselues for to depart from Manilla, and bought many bookes to carrie with them, wherein was comprehended all the secrets of that Kingdome. By reason whereof, they might giue large notice vnto the royall Maiestie of King Philip. The which being vnderstood by the Vice-roy, who had set spyes to watch their doings, he did send them word that they should not trouble themselues in the buying of bookes, for that he would giue them freely, all such bookes as they would desire to haue: the which afterwards hee did not accomplish. Ampin. People in great subiection.

In the meane time that they stayed in this Citie, amongst all other things that they vnderstood, to driue away the time was one, it was giuen them to vnderstand that in one of the Prisons, there was a Portugall prisoner, who was taken in a ship of the Iapones, with others of his Nation, who were all dead in the Prison, and none left aliue but hee alone. Our people being very desirous for to see him, and to learne of him some secrets of that Countrey, for that hee had beene there a great while, they did procure to talke with him, asking licence of the supreame Iudge and Lieutenant vnto the Vice-roy, who did not onely refuse to grant it them, but did make diligent inquirie who they were, that did giue them to vnderstand thereof, for to punish them. A Portugall prisoner.

Vpon a sodaine there came newes vnto the Citie, that the Rouer Limahon, was vpon the coast of Chinchea, vsing his old accustomed cruelties, and how that he had spoyled and robbed a Towne vpon the sea coast. This newes was throughout all the Citie, and appeared to bee true, touching the effect of the deed: yet falſe touching the perſon, for that the Rouer was called Taocay, an enemie, and contrarie vnto Limahon: but a friend vnto Vintoquian, of whom wee haue ſpoken of. But thereupon the Vice-roy, and all of the Citie, were comformable in the ſuſpition that they had receiued, which was that our people were come into that Kingdome vpon ſome euill pretence, and to ſee the ſecrets thereof, to ſome euill end, which was the occaſion that from that time forwards, they ſhewed them not ſo good countenance as they did before. Theſe newes was not ſo ſoone come, but ſtraight-wayes the Vice-roy did ſend for Omoncon, (who was then returned from his viſiting) and Sinſay, vnto whom he had done courteſie, and giuen them the tytle of Loytias and Captaynes, and hee did reprehend them very ſharpely for that they had brought ouer people thither, and ſayd, that they had told him a lye, in ſaying that Limahon was beſieged, in ſuch ſort that hee could not eſcape, neither had the Caſtillos burnt his Ships, and that all was but a made matter amongſt themſelues, and how that the Captiues which they brought, and ſayd that they had taken from Limahon, they had robbed from other places, and ſayd that the Spaniards, were ſpyes that came to diſcouer the ſecrets, and ſtrength of the Kingdome, and that they had brought them thither, by force of gifts that they had giuen them. They anſwered him with great humilitie, in ſaying, that in all that which they had ſayd they did ſpeake the truth, and that it ſhould appeare at ſuch time, as the newes of the Rouer ſhould bee better knowne, the which if it ſhall appeare to be contrarie, they were there readie for to ſuffer whatſoeuer puniſhment that ſhould bee giuen them. The Vice-roy being ſomewhat ſatisfied with this their iuſtification, bad them to depart, remitting all things vnto time for the true declaration thereof. Then Omoncon, and Sinſay, came ſtraight-wayes to giue the Spaniards to vnderſtand of all that had paſſed with the Vice-roy, and what they vnderſtood of him, which cauſed in them ſo great teare, that for the time which it indured (which was till ſuch time as they vnderſtood the truth as aforeſayd) they payed very well for their feaſts and banquets the which they had made them. All this happened in the time that Omoncon, and Sinſay, were at variance, and ſpake many iniurious words the one of the other, diſcouering their intents and deuiſes, whereby it plainely appeared, that in all that which they had told vnto the Vice-roy, they lyed, but in eſpeciall Omoncon. Sinſay did diſſemble, for hee ſayd and told vnto all people, that by his order and induſtrie, our people did fire the Ships of Limahon, and beſieged him, with other ſpeeches in the like ſort, yet twentie dayes before his comming thither, all was ended and done as appeared. The occaſion of their enmitie and falling out, was for that the Vice-roy, had giuen vnto Omoncon, a tytle and charge of more honour, then vnto Sinſay, hauing made betwixt them a conſort, that the reward or dignitie ſhould bee equally diuided betwixt them, and that the one ſhould ſpeake of the other the beſt they could, becauſe the Vice-roy ſhould doe them friendſhip. This condition and conſort (as appeareth) was euill performed by Omoncon, being addicted vnto ſelfe-loue, and ſeemed vnto him that Sinſay, did not deſerue ſo much as hee did, for that he was a baſe man, and of the Sea, and hee of the more nobilitie, and had the office of a Captayne.

Digitized by Google

Taocay another Pirat, taken to bee Limahon. Suſpition of euill.

Omoncon and Sinſay, at variance.

WIth this griefe and care remayned the Spaniards certaine dayes kept cloſe in their lodgings, and were not viſited ſo often as they were when they firſt came thither, which did augment very much their feare, till ſuch time as they vnderſtood, that the Vice-roy either of his owne good-will, or elſe by ſome particular order from the King and his Counſell, had called together all the Gouernours of that Prouince of Aucheo, to intreat of matters touching Limahon, as alſo in particular, why and wherefore the Spaniards came thither, and to reſolue themſelues wholly in all things requiſite for the ſame. So when that they were all come together, which was in a ſhort time, and amongſt them the Gouernour of Chincheo, who by another name was called Inſuanto, they had particular meetings together with the Vice-roy, in the which they were all agreed to haue a generall meeting, whereunto ſhould bee called the Caſtillos, and to demand of them in publike audience, the cauſe of their comming and being heard, to giue them their anſwer according as they had determined: for the which vpon a day appointed they met all together (but not the Vice-roy) in the houſe of the Cagontoc, and commanded to come before the Caſtillos, who did accompliſh their requeſt with a great good-will, for that they vnderſtood that they were called to entreat of their matter, either to tarrie or depart. So when they came thither, they were commanded to enter into a mightie Hall, whereas they were all ſet in verie rich Chayres with great grauitie and maieſtie. The Inſuanto ſeemed to bee the chiefeſt amongſt them, but whether it was for that hee was the principalleſt next vnto the Vice-roy (or as it was told them) for that it was hee that ſent Omoncon, in the chaſe of the Rouer Limahon, they knew not, but ſo ſoone as they were entred into the Hall, they were commanded to draw nigh, there, whereas they were all placed, without bidding them to ſit downe, neither did they vſe any particular circumſtances or courteſie. The Inſuanto tooke vpon him the charge, and demanded of the Spaniards (by meanes of the Interpreters) what was the occaſion of their comming into that Countrey. The Spaniards anſwered as they thought: and ſuppoſed, that at that time it could not bee, but that Limahon was either taken priſoner or ſlaine. Then did the Inſuanto con-

Generall conſultation.

Digitized by Google

conclude his ſpeech, in ſaying vnto them that they ſhould returne vnto their owne Countrey to the Ilands, and at ſuch time as they did bring Limahon, they would conclude all things touching the friendſhip they requeſted, and alſo for the Preaching of the Goſpell.

So from that day forwards, they did procure with all haſte for to depart, and gaue the Vice-roy to vnderſtand thereof, who anſwered them and ſayd, that they ſhould comfort themſelues and receiue joy and pleaſure, and that hee would diſpatch them, ſo ſoone as the Viſitor of that Prouince was come to Aucheo, which would bee within ten dayes, for that hee had written vnto him, that he ſhould not diſpatch them vntill his comming, for that he would ſee them. From that day forwards, he commanded that ſometimes they ſhould let them goe foorth abroad to recreate themſelues, and that they ſhould ſhew vnto them ſome particular pleaſure or friendſhip. So one of them was carryed to ſee the Muſtering of their men of warre, which they haue in a common cuſtome throughout all the Kingdome, to doe it the firſt day of the New-moone, and is ſure a thing to bee ſeene : and they doe it in the field which is joyning vnto the walls of the Citie, in this manner following. There were joyned together little more or leſſe then twentie thouſand Souldiers, Pike-men and Harquebuſſe ſhot, who were ſo expert, that at the ſound of the Drum or Trumpet, they ſtraight-wayes put themſelues in battle aray, and at another ſound in a ſquadron, and at another the ſhot doe diuide themſelues from the reſt, and diſcharge their Pieces with very gallant and good order, and with a trice put themſelues againe into their places or ſtandings : this being done, the Pike-men came foorth and gaue the aſſault all together, with ſo good order and conſort, that it ſeemed vnto the Spaniards, that they did exceed all the warlike orders vſed in all the world : and if it were ſo, that their ſtomacks and hardineſſe were equall vnto their dexteritie, and number of people, it were an eaſie thing for them to conquer the dominion of all the world. If it ſo chance, that any Souldier ſhould lacke in his Office, and not repayre to his place appointed, hee is ſtraight-wayes puniſhed very cruelly, which is the occaſion, that euery one of them hath a care vnto his charge. This their Muſter indured foure houres, and it was certified vnto the Spaniards, that the ſame day and houre it is done in all Cities and Townes, throughout the whole Kingdome, although they are without ſuſpection of enemies.

New-moone Muſters.

Their actiuitie, their Pieces, & hearts, are ſayd to be naught.

Souldiers are puniſhed.

Fiue and twentie dayes after that the Inſuanto had giuen the reſolute anſwer vnto the Spaniards, came the Viſitor thither : and the whole Citie went foorth to receiue him, who entred in with ſo great Maieſtie, that if they had not knowne who hee was, they could not haue beene perſwaded, but that he had beene the King. The next day following, the Spaniards went to viſite him, for duties ſake, as alſo for that hee had a deſire to ſee them. They found him in his lodging, where he began to make viſitation of the Citie. In their Courts were an infinite number of people, which came thither with Petitions and complaynts, but in the Halls within, there was none but his Seruants and Sergeants. When that any came for to preſent his Petition, the Porter that was at the entrie made a great noyſe, in manner of an Oeſt, for that it was a good way from the place whereas the Viſitor did ſit, then commeth foorth ſtraight-wayes one of his Pages, and taketh the Petition, and carryeth it vnto him. At this time it was told him how that the Caſtillas were there : hee commanded that they ſhould enter, and talked with them a few words, but with great courteſie, and all was touching the Impriſonment of Limahon, without making any mention of their departure or tarrying. So after a while that hee had beheld them and their apparell, he tooke his leaue of them, ſaying, that by reaſon of the great buſineſſe hee had in that viſitation, he could not ſhew them any courteſie, neither to vnderſtand of them what their requeſt and deſire was, but gaue them great thankes for their courteſie ſhewed, in that they would come to viſite him.

Viſitors entrance in ſtate.

Manner of his Courts.

Three dayes after the Viſitor was come thither, the Inſuanto departed for his owne houſe, with order that with all ſpeed poſſible, hee ſhould ordayne Ships wherein the Caſtillas ſhould returne vnto the Philippinas. Likewiſe the ſame day, all thoſe that were there aſſembled by the order of the Vice-roy, departed vnto their owne houſes. And the Spaniards were commanded for to ſtay vntill the full of the Moone, which ſhould bee the twentieth of Auguſt, and that day they ſhould take their leaue of them : for on that day amongſt them, it is holden for good to begin any thing whatſoeuer. Wherein they doe vſe great ſuperſtition, and doe make many banquets, as vpon New-yeeres day.

Superſtition.

The day before the departure of the Spaniards, there came ſome in behalfe of the Vice-roy to inuite them, and made them banquet in the order and faſhion as at the firſt : although this (for that it was at their departure) was more ſumptuous, wherein was repreſented a Comedie, which was very excellent and good, whoſe argument was firſt declared vnto them. All the which they did repreſent ſo naturally, and with ſo good apparell and perſonages, that it ſeemed a thing to paſſe in Act. There was not in this banquet the Vice-roy, but thoſe Captaynes which were there the firſt time : and another Captayne, vnto whom was giuen the charge to bring the Spaniards vnto Manilla, who was called Chautalay, a principall Captayne of that Prouince. When the banquet was ended, they were carryed with great companie from the Hall whereas the banquet was made, vnto the houſe of the Cogontoc, who was the Kings Treaſurer, & dwelt there hard by,

Parting complement.

Treaſurer.

Digitized by Google

of whom they were maruellously well receiued with louing words and great courtesie: in saying that he hoped very shortly to see them againe, at such time as they shall returne with Limahon, and that as then their friendship should be fully concluded, and would intreat with them in particular of other matters. This being done, he gaue vnto them a Present for to carrie vnto the Gouernour of Manilla in recompence of that which was sent vnto the Vice-roy: the Present was forty pieces of Silke and twentie pieces of Burato, a Litter Chaire and gilt, and two Quitasoles of Silke, and a Horse. Likewise hee sent the like Present vnto the Generall of the field, and to either of them a Letter in particular: these things were put in Chists which were very faire and gilt. Besides this he gaue other forty pieces of Silke of all colours for to bee parted amongst the Captaines and other Officers that were at the siege of Limahon, with three hundred blacke Mantles and as many Quitasoles to be parted amongst the Souldiers. Besides all these, he gaue vnto the Friers each of them eight pieces of Silke, and vnto the Souldiers their companions foure pieces of each of them, and to euery one his Horse and a Quitasol of Silke; their Horses were very good to trauell by the way. This being done, the Cogomroe tooke his leaue of them, and willed them to goe and take leaue and licence of the Vice-roy and the Visitor, that they might depart, for that all things were in a readinesse for their Voyage: the which commandement they did straight-wayes accomplish, being very well content and satisfied of the great fauours and courtesies, the which they receiued both of the one and the other: Likewise of the Tococ, i Captaine Generall, whom they also did visit and tooke their leaue.

Presents.

To keepe away the Sun.

The Spaniards departed from the Citie of Auchoo, vpon a Tuesday, beeing the three and twentieth of August in the sight of all the people of the Citie, who came forth to see them with so great presse and throng, as they did when they first came thither into the Countrey: they were all carried in Litter Chaires, yea, their very slaues, for that it was so commanded by the Vice-roy: the Friers were carried by eight men a piece, and the Souldiers by foure men a piece, and all their Seruants and Slaues were carried by two men a piece. Looke so many men as was to carrie them, there went so many more to helpe them when they waxed wearie, besides foure and twentie that carried their Stuffe. There went alwayes before them a Harbinger for to prouide their Lodgings, and with him went a Pay-master, whose charge was to ordaine and prouide men for to carrie their Litter Chaires, and to giue them for their trauell that which is accustomed, and to pay all costs and charges spent by the Spaniard.

After that they departed from Auchoo, they made of two dayes Iourney one, which was the occasion that they came to Chincheo in foure dayes. At their entring into the Citie they found a Seruant of the Insuanto, with order and commandement, that they should proceed forwards on their Iourney, and not to stay in the Citie, but to goe vnto the Port of Tansuso, whither he will come the next day following. They obeyed his commandement, and made so much haste that in two dayes they came vnto the Village of Tangoa, whereas they had beene before, and particular mention made thereof. In the same Village they were lodged, well entertayned and had great good cheere: from thence they went in one day to Tansuso, which was the first Port whereas they did dis-imbarke themselues, when as they came from the Ilands vnto that firme Land: the Iustice of the Towne did lodge them in the same House whereas they were first lodged, and did prouide for them of all things necessary and needfull, and that in abundance, till the comming of the Insuanto, which was within foure dayes after, for that hee could not come any sooner (although his desire was) for that it was very foule weather.

Superstition.

The third of September, the Insuanto sent and commanded the Spaniards that they should imbark themselues, for that it was that day the conjunction of the Moone (although at that time the ships were not fully in a readinesse.) They obeyed his commandement, and the Insuanto himselfe went to the water side, in whose presence came thither certaine Religious men of their manner, and after their fashion they made Sacrifice with certaine Prayers, in the which they craued of the Heauens to giue good and faire weather, and a sure Voyage and fauourable Seas vnto all those that saile in those ships. This Ceremony being done (which is a thing very much vsed in that Countrey) the Spaniards went vnto the Insuanto, who was there with great company and Maiestie: he entertayned them very friendly and with cheerefull words making an outward shew that he bare them great loue, and that their departure was vnto him a great griefe. Then he requested them to giue him a remembrance of such things as was necessary and needfull for their prouision for the Sea, for that he would giue order for the prouiding of the same, the which hee did, and was with so great abundance that they had for the Voyage, and remayned a great deale to spare. He then commanded to be brought thither Cates to eate and drinke, and gaue it them with his owne hands, as well the one as the other: he himselfe did eate and drinke with them, which is the greatest fauour that can be shewed amongst them. The Banket being ended, he commanded them in his presence to goe aboard their ships, because that was a luckie day, and also to accomplish that which the Vice-roy had cõmanded, which was that he should not depart from thence, vntill they had first seene them imbarked. The Spaniards obeyed the commandement, and tooke their leaue of the Insuanto, with great courtesie and reuerence, and with outward shewes that they remayned indebted for the great courtesie & good will that they had receiued:

Plentifull prouision.

Luckie day.

and

and therwith they departed to the waters side, towards the Boat which was tarrying for them.

As they passed by the Religious men (that before we spake of) they saw a great Table set, and vpon it a whole Oxe with his throat cut, and hard by the same a Hogge and a Goate, and other things to be eaten: the which they had ordained for to make Sacrifice, which they doe vse in the like Affaires.

They being imbarked in the Boate, they were carried aboard the Admirall, which was the ship appointed for them to goe in: then presently they beganne to stirre the ship, from one place vnto another with certaine Boats and Cables which they had there readie for the same purpose. The ship did not so soone begin to mooue, but the Religious men ashoare did beginne their Sacrifice, the which did indure vntill night, ending their Feasts and Triumphs in putting forth of the Citie, and vpon their Gates many Cressets and Lights. The Souldiers shot off all their Harquabusses, and the shippes that were in the Port shot off all their Artillerie, and on the shoare a great noyse of Drummes and Bels: all the which being ended and done, the Spaniards went ashoare againe vnto their Lodging: but first the Insuanto was departed vnto his owne House, with all the company that he brought with him.

Insuantos farewell Feast.

The next day the said Insuanto did inuite them vnto a Banket, which was as famous as any which had beene made them vnto that time. He was at the Banket himselfe, and the Captaine Generall of all that Prouince. There was abundance of meates and many pretie deuises to passe away the time, which made the Banket to indure more then foure houres: the which being done, there was brought forth the Present which the Insuanto did send vnto the Gouernour of Manilla in returne of that which was sent to him. The Present was fourteene pieces of silke for the Gouernour of Manilla, and ten pieces for the Generall of the field: he also commanded to be giuen vnto the Friers each of them foure pieces, and vnto the Souldiers each of them two pieces, and vnto their Seruants and Slaues certaine painted Mantels, and therewith hee tooke his leaue of them very friendly, and gaue vnto them Letters, the which he had wrote vnto the Gouernour, and vnto the Generall of the field, answere vnto those, the which they had wrote vnto him, and said that all things necessary for their departure was in a readinesse, with victuals for tenne moneths put aboard their ships, so that when as wind and weather did serue they might depart. Also that if in their Voyage it should so fall out, that any of the Chinois that went in their ships, should doe vnto them any euill, either abroad or at the Ilands: that the Gouernour thereof should punish them at his pleasure, and how that the Vice-roy will thinke well thereof: In conclusion, he said vnto them, that he hoped to see them there againe very shortly, and to returne againe with Limahon, and then he would supply the wants which now they lacked. The Spaniards did kisse his hands, and said, that they had receiued in courtesie more then they deserued, and that in all things, there did abound and not lack, that they remained greatly indebted vnto him for their friendship, and would giue their King notice thereof, that whensoeuer occasion should be offered, to repay them with the like: and therewith the Insuanto departed to his owne House, leauing in the company of the Spaniards fiue Captains, those which should go with them in their company to Sea, and also Omoncon and Sinsay who were that day in the Banket, with the Habit and Ensigne of Loytias, for that the day before it was giuen vnto them by the Insuanto.

Ten moneths prouision.

Vpon Wednesday which was the fourteenth of September, the wind came faire, wherewith they hoysed vp their Sayles and went to Sea: at their departure there was at the waters side the Insuanto and the Iustice of Chincheo to see them sayle, they sayled forwards directing their course towards a small Iland that was not farre off, with determination there to take water for their ships, for that it had in it many Riuers of very sweet water. Within a small space they arriued there, and it had a very faire and sure Port, wherein might ride in securitie a great Nauy of ships. All Thursday they were there recreating and sporting themselues, for that it was a pleasant Iland, and full of fresh Riuers. Vpon Friday being the sixteenth of September, the day being somewhat spent, they made saile and tooke Port foure leagues from that place in another Iland called Laulo, for to put themselues in a new course, different and contrary vnto that which they tooke when they came vnto that Kingdome, for that the Chinois had by experience proued, that in those monethes the winds were more fauourable then in other monethes, and for the most part North and North-east winds: all that night they remained in that Iland, and the next day following they sayled vnto another Iland which was called Chautubo, not farre distant from that of Laulo. This Iland was full of little Townes, one of them was called Gautin, which had fiue Forts of Towers made of Lime and stone, very thicke and strongly wrought: they were all foure square, and sixe fathome high, and were made of purpose for to receiue into them all the people of those little Townes, to defend themselues from Rouers and Theeues that daily come on that Coast.

Laulo.

Monsons.

Chautubo.

Gautin.

They very much noted, that although this Iland were rockie and sandie, yet was it tilled and sowed full of Rice, Wheate, and other Seeds and Graine. There was in it great store of Kine and Horse, and they vnderstood that they were gouerned, not by one particular man, to whom they were subiect, neither by any other amongst themselues, nor of China, but in common: yet notwithstanding they liued in great peace and quietnesse, for that euery one did content himselfe with Kine and Horse. Common-wealth.

Digitized by Google

with his owne. Vpon Sunday in the afternoone they departed from this Iland, and ſayled their Corchu. courſe all that night, at the next morning they arriued at another Iland, called Corchu, which was twentie leagues from the Port of Tanſuſo, from whence they departed. The Spaniards ſeeing what leiſure they tooke in this their Voyage, they requeſted the Captaines to command the Mariners that they ſhould not enter into ſo many Ports or Harbours. The Captaines anſwered, and requeſted them to haue patience, for that in making their Iournies as they did, they doe accompliſh and follow the order ſet downe by the Vice-roy and Inſuanto, the Chinois are very fearefull of the Sea, and men that are not accuſtomed to ingulfe themſelues too farre, Ancon. neither to paſſe any ſtormes.

Neere vnto this Iland there was another ſomewhat bigger, which is called Ancon, wholly diſpeopled and without any dwellers, yet a better Countrey and more profitable for to ſow and reape then that of Corchu. The Spaniards being at an Anchor there, vnderſtood by the Chinois that in times paſt it was very well inhabited, vnto the which arriued a great Fleet belonging to the King of China, and by a great ſtorme were all caſt away vpon the ſame: the which loſſe and deſtruction being vnderſtood by another Generall that had the Guard of that Coaſt, ſuſpecting that the dwellers thereof had done that ſlaughter, hee came to the ſhoare and ſlue many of the Inhabitants, and carried all the reſt in their ſhips vnto the firme Land, who afterwards would neuer returne thither againe, although they gaue them licence after that they vnderſtood the truth of that ſucceſſe: ſo that vnto that time it remained diſpeopled, and full of wilde Swine, of the brood that remained there at ſuch time as they were ſlaine and carried away as you haue heard.

This Iland and the reſt adjoyning thereunto (which are very many) haue very excellent and ſure Ports and Hauens, with great ſtore of fiſh. Theſe Ilands endured vntill they came vnto a
A ſtraight. little Gulfe, which is fiue and fortie leagues ouer, and is ſayled in one day, and at the end thereof is the Port of Cabite, which is neere vnto Manilla. So when that winde and weather ſerued their turne, they departed from the Iland of Ancon, and ſailed till they came vnto another Iland called Plon, where they vnderſtood by a ſhip that was there a fiſhing, how that the Rouer Limahon was eſcaped in certaine Barkes, which he cauſed to bee made very ſecretly within his Fort, of ſuch Timber and Boards as remained of his ſhips that were burnt, the which was brought in by night by his Souldiers, on that ſide of the Fort which was next vnto the Riuer, and were not diſcouered by the Caſtillas, which were put there with all care and diligence to keepe the mouth that come in to helpe them. And towards the Land there whereas he might eſcape, they were without all ſuſpection (they were ſo ſtrong) and did not miſtruſt that any ſuch thing ſhould be put in vre, as afterwards did fall out, the which was executed with ſo great policie and craft, that when they came to vnderſtand it, the Rouer was cleane gone, and in ſafeguard, calking his Barkes at the Iland of Tocaotican, the better for to eſcape and ſaue himſelfe, and they ſaid, that it was but eight dayes paſt that he fled. With this newes they all receiued great alteration, but in eſpeciall Omoncon and Sinſay.

After they had remained three weeks in that Harbour detayned with a mighty North-wind, that neuer calmed night nor day in all that time. The eleuenth day of October two houres before day, they ſet ſayle and went to Sea. Sixteene leagues from the Port, ſailing towards the South, they diſcouered a mightie Iland very high Land, which was called Tangarruan, and was of three ſcore leagues about, all inhabited with people like vnto thoſe of the Ilands Philippinas. Vpon Sunday in the morning being the ſeuenteenth day of October, they diſcouered the Iland of Ma-
From the Philippinas to the China is 200. leagues nilla, of them greatly deſired, they ſayled towards the Iland that they ſo long deſired to ſee, and came thither the twentie eight day of October, as aforeſaid. So that from the Port of Tanſuſo, which is the firſt Port of China, till they came vnto the Iland of Manilla, they were fiue and fortie dayes, and is not in all ful two hundred leagues, which may be made with reaſonable weather in ten dayes at the moſt.

I could haue here added two other Voyages of Franciſcans, to China, the one by Peter de Alfaro, and other three of his Order, 1579. the other 1582. by Ignatio, &c. both written at large by Mendoza. But I haſten to our Ieſuites exacter Relations. Only I will conclude this Storie with Alfaros returne from China to the Philippinas; and his Relation of their Witch-crafts vſed in a Tempeſt then happening: after that two Letters mentioning Engliſh ſhips on that Coaſt.

A Tempeſt. But it ſo fell out, as they were going alongſt the Coaſt of the Iland for to enter into the Port of Manilla, and being within fiue leagues of the entry thereof, vpon a ſudden there aroſe the North-wind with ſo great furie, and cauſed ſo great a Sea, that they found themſelues in a great deale more danger then in the other ſtorme paſt, in ſuch ſort that they ſponed before the winde with their fore-ſayle halfe Maſt high, ſhaking it ſelfe all to pieces, and in euery minute of an houre readie to be drowned. The Chinois for that they are Superſtitious and Witches, beganne to inuocate and call vpon the Deuill, for to bring them out of that trouble (which is a thing commonly vſed amongſt them, at all times when they find themſelues in the like perplexitie) alſo they doe requeſt of him to ſhew them what they ſhould do to bring themſelues out of trouble. But when the Spaniards vnderſtood their dealings, they did diſturbe them that they ſhould not

Digitized by Google

not perseuer in their Lots and Inuocations, and beganne to conjure the Deuils, which was the occasion that they would not answere vnto the Inuocation of the Chinois, who did call them after diuers manners, yet they heard a Deuill say, that they should not blame them because they did not answere vnto their demand, for they could not doe it for that they were disturbed by the conjuration of those Spanish Fathers, which they carried with them in their ship. Coniuring against coniuring.

So presently when the night was come, God was so pleased that the storme ceased, and became in few houres very calme, although it endured but a while, for as they began to set sayle to nauigate towards the Port, and almost at the point to enter into the same, a new storme seized on them, and with so great force, that they were constrayned to returne vnto the Sea, for feare to bee broken in pieces vpon the shoare. The Chinos began anew to inuocate the Deuils by writing, which is a way that they neuer let but doe answere them, as they did at this instant, and were not disturbed by the coniurations of the Fathers, yet notwithstanding they lyed in their answer, for that they said, that within three dayes they should be within the Citie of Manilla, and after it was more then foure dayes. Inuocation by writing.

In conclusion, hauing by the fauour of almightie God ouercome all their trauels by the Sea, and the necessitie of the lacke of water and victuals, they arriued at the desired Port the second day of February, Anno 1580. whereas they were receiued by the Gouernour, and of all the rest with great ioy, &c.

Two Letters taken out of BARTOLOME LEONARDO DE ARGENSOLA his Treatise, called Conquista de las Islas Malucas, Printed at Madrid, 1609. pagg. 336. 337. mentioning the comming of two English ships to China: which seeme to bee two ships of the fleet of * BENIAMIN WOOD: The former written by the Visitor of Chincheo in China, vnto the Gouernor of the Philippinas, Don PEDRO DE ACVNNA.

* See sup. l. 3. c. 1. §. 2.

TO the grand Captaine of Luzon. Because wee haue vnderstood, that the Chineses, which went to trade and trafficke into the Kingdome of Luzon, haue beene slaine by the Spaniards, wee haue made inquisition of the cause of these slaughters, and haue besought the King to doe iustice on him, that hath beene the cause of so great mischiefe, to procure a remedie for the time to come, and that the Merchants may liue in peace and safety. In the yeeres past, before I came hither to be Visitour, a certaine Sangley, called Tioneg, with three Mandarines or Iudges hauing the Kings Passe, came to Cabit in Luzon, to seeke Gold and Siluer: which was all lyes: because he found neither Gold nor Siluer. And therefore I besought the King, that he would punish this deceiuer Tioneg, that the good iustice that is vsed in China might be knowne. In the time of the former Vice-roy, and Capado, Tioneg and his companion Yanlion deliuered this vntruth. I afterward besought the King, that hee would cause all the Papers of the cause of Tioneg to be coppied out, and that he would send for the said Tioneg with his processes before himselfe: And I my selfe saw the said Papers, and caused it to appeare that all was but lyes which the said Tioneg had said. I wrote vnto the King, saying, That by reason of the lyes which Tioneg had made, the Castillians suspected that wee sought to make warre vpon them: and that therefore they had slayne aboue thirtie thousand Chineses in Luzon. The King did that which I besought him. And so he chastised the said Yanlion, commanding him to bee put to death. And hee commanded Tionegs head to be cut off, and to be put in a Cage. The people of China which were slayne in Luzon, were in no fault. And I with others negotiated this businesse with the King, that I might know his pleasure in this affaire: and in another matter, which was this: That there came two English ships to these coasts of Chincheo; a thing very dangerous for China: That the King might consider what was to bee done in these two matters of so great importance. Likewise wee wrote vnto the King, that he would command the two Sangleys to be punished, which shewed the Hauen to the Englishmen. And after wee had written these things aforesaid to the King, he answered vs that wee should learne, wherefore the English ships came vnto China? whether they came to robbe or no? That they should dispatch from thence a Messenger immediatly to Luzon: and that they should signifie to them of Luzon, that they should not giue credite to the base and lying people of China: And that forthwith they should put to death those two Sangleyes, which shewed the Hauen to the Englishmen. And touching the rest that wee wrote vnto him, wee should doe as wee thought best. After wee had receiued this order, the Vice-roy, the Capado, and I sent this message to the Gouernour of Luzon: That his Lordship might know the greatnesse of the King of China. Seeing hee is so mightie, that hee gouerneth all that the Moone and Sunne doe shine vpon. And also that the Gouernour of Luzon may know the great wisedome wherewith this mighty Kingdome is gouerned. Which Kingdome this long while none durst attempt to offend. And albeit the Iaponians haue pretended to disquiet Corea, which is vnder the Gouernment of China: yet they could not obtayne their purpose: but they were driuen out of it: And Corea hath remayned in great peace and safety, as at this day they of Luzon doe well vnderstand.

I found this transl. with Master H. Luzon.

Tioneg.

30000. Chineses slaine in the Philippinas.

Two English ships on the coast of Chincheo in China.

Iealousie of Strangers.

Danger of bringing ships to a China Hauen.

China ambition.

Iaponian attempt.

Corea is vnder China.

The

The Anſwer of Don PEDRO DE ACVNNA, Gouernour of the Philippinas, to the Viſitour of Chincheo in China.

THe Gouernour anſwered theſe Letters by the ſame Meſſengers that brought them: vſing termes full of courteſie and authoritie. Hee rehearſed the rebellion of the Sangleyes, from the beginning: Hee iuſtified the defenſe of the Spaniards, and the puniſhment that was executed vpon the Offenders. Hee ſaid, that no Common-wealth can be gouerned without chaſtiſing the bad, nor without rewarding the good. And therefore that he did not repent him of that execution: becauſe it was done for repreſſing of them that thought to deſtroy vs. That the Viſitour ſhould bee Iudge, what kee would doe, if the like caſe ſhould happen in China. That the griefe that he had was, that he could not ſaue certaine Sangleyes Merchants Anhayes, which died among the offenders: But that this was vnpoſſible to be remedied; becauſe the furie of warre doth not giue leaue to kill ſome, and to ſaue others, eſpecially being not knowne of the Souldiers in the heate of battell. That vſing mercy to thoſe that remayned aliue, condemned them to rowe in the Galleyes: which is the puniſhment, which is ordayned among the Caſtillians for thoſe that haue deſerued death. Yet if it ſeeme in China that it ought to be moderated, hee would grant them libertie. But let it be conſidered, ſaid Don Pedro, that this may be a cauſe, that in not chaſtiſing ſo great an offence, they may hereafter fall againe into the ſame. A thing that would ſhut vp all acceſſe vnto fauour. That the goods of the Chineſes that were ſlayne are in ſafe cuſtodie. And that it may be ſeene, that no other affection moueth mee then that of iuſtice, I will ſhortly ſend them to be deliuered to the right Heires, or vnto ſuch perſons as of right they belong vnto. None other reſpect moueth mee to any of theſe things, but that of reaſon. Whereas you tell mee, That if I will not ſet at libertie thoſe priſoners, licence will be granted in China to the kinſfolke of thoſe, which died in the Rebellion, to come with an Armie to Manila, it breedeth no feare in mee. For I hold the Chineſes to be ſo wiſe, that they will not be moued to ſuch things vpon ſo weake a ground: eſpecially none occaſion thereof being giuen them on our part. And in caſe they ſhould be of another minde, wee Spaniards are a People which know very well how to defend our Right, Religion, and Territories. And let not the Chineſes thinke, that they are Lords of all the World, as they would haue vs thinke. For wee Caſtillians, which haue meaſured the World with ſpannes, know perfectly the Countreyes of China. Wherefore they ſhall doe well to take knowledge, that the King of Spaine hath continuall warres with as mighty Kings as theirs is, and doth ſuppreſſe them, and putteth them to great troubles. And it is no new caſe, that when our enemies thinke that they haue vanquiſhed vs, they finde vs marching and deſtroying the Confines of their Land, and not to ceaſe, vntill wee haue caſt them out of their Thrones, and taken their Scepters from them. I would be much grieued with the change of the commerce: But I beleeue alſo that the Chineſes would not willingly loſe it, ſince that thereby they obtayne ſo great profit, carrying to their Kingdome our Siluer, which neuer faileth in trucke of their merchandiſe, which are ſlight things, and ſoone worne out.

China pride retorted.

Spaniſh Siluer carried to China.

The ſhips of the Engliſhmen, which arriued on the coaſt of China, it was determined not to receiue: becauſe they be no Spaniards, but rather * their enemies, and Pirats. Wherefore if they come to Manila, they ſhall be puniſhed. Finally, becauſe wee Spaniards doe alwaies iuſtifie our cauſes, and doe boaſt our ſelues, that it cannot bee ſaid in the world, that wee vſurpe other mens poſſeſſions, nor inuade our friends, that ſhall be fulfilled which is here promiſed. And from hence forward let them know in China, that wee neuer doe any thing for feare, nor for threats of our enemies. Don Pedro concludeth, offering continuance of amitie by new bonds of peace with the Kingdomes of China: and that he will ſet at libertie in due time the Priſoners which he held in the Galleyes: albeit he thought to vſe them, as he did, in the voyage of Maluco; which be put in execution with ſpeed. And all this he preciſely performed.

* The Engliſh ſhips ſpoken of by Spaniards according to the mutuall hoſtilitie of thoſe times.

CHAP. IIII.

The report of a Mahometan Merchant which had beene in Cambalu: and the troubleſome trauell of BENEDICTVS GOES, a Portugall Ieſuite, from Lahor to China by land, thorow the Tartars Countreyes.

Epiſt. Eman. Caruel. 1599.

IEROME Xauere a Ieſuite, in a Letter from Lahor in India, ſubiect to the Mogoll, dated, Auguſt, 1598. relateth that an old man there knowne to haue diſtributed 100000. Peeces of Gold at Mecca, affirmed to the Prince that he had liued in Xatai thirteene yeeres, in Xambalu the chiefe Citie; that the King thereof was mighty, and had in his Empire one thouſand and fiftie Cities, ſome very populous; that he had often ſeene the King, with whom no man ſpeakes but by a Supplication, nor is anſwered but by an Eunuch. And asked how hee had acceſſe thither, he ſaid, he being a Merchant ſuſtayned alſo the perſon of the Embaſſadour of the King of Caygar, and Xatai and Xambalu, for Catai and Cambalu.

Caygar.

Digitized by Google

and being detained in the first Citie by the Magistrate, he shewed his Commission, and Poste was presently sent to the King, who returned in a moneth, riding ninety or an hundred courses a day, with change of Horses; bringing him Letters of admission. Hee said that they punish theeues seuerely: that these Xaitaians are white, long bearded, personable, and comely, therein to be preferred before the Rumes or Turkes; in Religion Isauites (Christians, so called of Iesus) some Musauites or Iewes, and many Mahumetans, insomuch that they hoped to bring the Christian King to that Sect. They had (he said to the Iesuite in another conference) many Temples, and Images painted and grauen, and Crucifixes which they with great deuotion worshipped; many Priests, much reuerenced, each hauing his owne Church; to whom they offer their gifts, they liued single and kept Schooles; one supereminent: at the Kings charge were the Churches built and repaired; they ware blacke clothes, and on holidayes red, with Caps like the Iesuites; but greater; many Monasteries of both Sexes, and some in their owne houses, obseruing a single life; the Countrey rich, hauing many siluer Mines; and that the King had foure hundred Elephants, which they said were brought from Malaca, and that Merchants resorted thither; the Voyage sixe moneths. Xauerius addeth, that in Caximir he heard of many Christians in Rebat, a Kingdome adioyning to Catai, with Churches, Priests, and Bishops. These reports (sayth Trigantius) the Saracens made, either of purpose to deceiue, after their wont; or were deceiued by like shew of Holies in Images, Lamps, Altars, Priests vestments, Processions, Singings, and the like, which the Deuill hath imitated among the Chinois like to our (Romish) Rites.

A Course or Cose is a mile and halfe, and sometime two miles.

These reports caused the Iesuites in India to thinke of sending one of their Society into those parts. Pimenta the Father Visitour sent notice thereof to the Pope, and to the King of Spaine, who tooke Order with the Vice-roy to be aduised herein by Pimenta. Benedictus Goez a brother of that Society and Coadjutor to Xauerius, was thought fit for that designe, hauing the Persian tongue. And hauing come from Echebar (father of the present Mogol) who had lately taken Brampor, with his Legat, to Goa; hee was sent backe to Lahor, to accompanie the Merchants; which euery fifth yeere, as that Saracen related, with title of Legats of the King of Persia, and other Easterne Kings (not otherwise admitted) went thither. In the yeere therefore 1602. he went to Agra, where Echebar applauded his purpose, and gaue him foure hundred Crownes for his iourney, besides a thousand Rupias hee had already spent. He changed his habite, and disguised himselfe like an Armenian Merchant, and so went to Lahor, calling himselfe Branda Abedula, whither he came on the eight of December. He went to the house of Iohn Galisco a Venetian, and there prouided himselfe of necessaries, wearing his haire and beard long, and Leo Grimone a Greeke, well skilled in Turkish and Persian, vndertaking to be his companion, with Demetrius another Greeke, and Isaac an Armenian. Furnished with diuers writings and a Catalogue of moueable Feasts till An. 1610. he set forth An. 1603. the sixth of Ianuarie from his Superiour, and in Lent after from Lahor, with the companie of Merchants which goe from the Mogols to Cascar, almost fiue hundred men, with many Camels and carriages.

De christ. expedit. ap. Sinas l. 3 c. 11, 12, 13. Ianic. thes. rer. Ind. t. 3. c. 24.

In a moneths iourney they came to a Citie called Athec, in the Prouince of Lahor; and after fifteene dayes, passed a Riuer a flight shot broad, where they stayed fiue dayes, being told of theeues in great number at hand. Two moneths after they came to another Citie called Passaur, where they rested twentie dayes. Thence they going to another small Towne, met with a certaine Anchorite a stranger, by whom they vnderstood that thirtie dayes off was a Citie named Capherstam, into which the Saracens are not permitted entrance, and if they enter are put to death. But Ethnike Merchants are admitted their Citie, yet not their Temples. Hee said, that the Inhabitants of that Region goe to Church all of them in blacke; their Countrey fertile, and plentifull of Grapes. Hereby Goes supposed that they were Christians. In the place where they found this stranger, they stayed other twentie dayes. And because the way was infested with Theeues they receiued of the Lord of the place a Conuoy of foure hundred Souldiers. In fiue and twentie dayes they came from hence to a place called Ghideli, all which way their carriages went at the foot of a Hill. The Merchants with Armes on the tops of the Hill made search for Theeues, which vse to throw stones from thence on the Passengers, except thus preuented. In this place the Merchants pay Tribute. Being assaulted by Theeues many were wounded, and they had much adoe to saue their liues and goods. Benedict escaped by flight into the Woods. At night they came againe together, and auoyded the Theeues. After other twentie dayes iourney they came to Cabul, a Citie and Mart frequent, not yet hauing passed the Mogols Dominions. Here they stayed eight dayes: for some of the Merchants would goe no further, and others durst not, being so few. In this Mart the Sister of the King of Cascar, by whose Dominion they were to passe to Catay, happened on the Carauan. The Kings name was Maffamet Can; this his Sister was Mother to the King of Cotan, and called Agehanem (Age is a title giuen by the Saracens to those which haue beene on Pilgrimage at Mecca, whence she now returned.) Being destitute of prouision for her iourney, shee demanded aide of the Merchants, promising to restore all faithfully with encrease when they were come to her Kingdome.

Athec.

Passaur.

Capherstam. Saracens not admitted.

Ghideli.

Assault of Theeues.

Cabul.

Goes thought it a fit occasion to procure the friendship of another King, his Mogoll Patents now wearing out. Hee lent her therefore on sale of some goods sixe hundred Crownes, refusing any

Digitized by Google

A kind of Marble much valued in China

any contract of interest, which shee bountifully repayed in pieces of Marble much esteemed in China, the best merchandise for such as goe to Catay. Leo Grimane the Priest, wearied with the tediousnesse of the iourney, went no further, and Demetrius stayed in this Citie on merchandising affaires. Goes held on with Isaac the Armenian, in the companie of other Merchants, which gaue likelihood of better securitie. The first Citie they came at was called Ciaracar, in which place is great store of Iron. Here Goes was not a little troubled, the Mogols Seale in these his borders being neglected, which all this way hitherto had freed him from payment of Customes. Ten dayes after they came to a small Towne, called Paruam, the vtmost of the Mogoll confines.

Ciaracar.

Paruam the extreme border of the Mogoll.

After fiue dayes stay, they had twentie dayes iourney ouer high Mountaines into a Region named Aingharan, In fifteene dayes more they came to Calcia. The people of this Region hath yellow haire on head and beard like the Low-Countrey-men, and dwell in diuers Villages. Ten dayes after, they came to a place called Gialalabath, where the Bramanes exact Customes granted them by the King Bruarate. After other fifteene dayes they came to Talban, where Ciuill broiles detayned them a moneth; the Calcians rebelling and endangering the wayes. Hence they passed to Cheman. Vnder Abdulahan King of Samarhan, Burgania, and Bacharate, and of other neighbouring Kingdomes, is a small Towne, the Captaine whereof sent to the Merchants to containe themselues within the walls, the Calcians infesting all without. They answered, that they would pay their Customes, and pursue their iourney by night. But hee forbad them, saying, that the Rebels had no Horses as yet, which if they could take from the Carauan, they would proue more mischieuous: much better it were, if they would ioyne with him to repell them. Scarcely were they comne to the walls, when the rumour came of the Calcians comming: at which newes the Captaine and his ranne away. The Merchants erected a sudden fortification of their packes, and carried into the same great store of stones to serue their turnes if Arrowes failed. The Calcians perceiuing that, sent a message to the Merchants, that they should feare nothing, for they would accompanie and defend them. They durst not trust them, but resolued to flee to the next Wood, the Theeues taking out of the packes what they pleased, and then calling them forth, and permitting them with their emptied packes to enter the emptie walls. Benedict lost nothing but a Horse, for which also hee after receiued Cotton clothes. They liued within the walls in great feare. But at that time a great Captaine, named Olobet Ebadascan, sent his Brother out of the Bucharate Region to the Rebels, which caused them to permit the Merchants to goe freely: in all which iourney the Rere was vexed with Pilferers. Foure of them set vpon Goes, to escape whom hee threw amongst them his Persian Turbant, whereof they making a foot-ball, hee meane while set spurres to his Horse and ouertooke his companie.

Aingharan.
Calcia.
Gialalabath.
Cheman.
Samarhan or Samarcand.
Bogbar.

Eight dayes after with a tedious passage they came to Badascian, called Tengi, which signifieth A troublesome way: for there is space but for one to passe, and that on the high banke of a great Riuer. The Inhabitants with a companie of Souldiers set vpon the Merchants, and tooke from Goes three Horses, which he after redeemed with gifts. Here they stayed ten dayes, and thence in one day came to Ciarciunar, where they were fiue dayes detayned with raines in the open field, and were besides assaulted by Theeues. Ten dayes after they arriued at Serpanil, a place quite forsaken. They climbed into a high Hill, called Sacrithma, whither the strongest Horses were only able to passe, the rest going about. Two of Goes his Horses halted, and had much adoe to ouertake their fellowes. In twentie dayes iourney comming to the Prouince Sarcil, they there found many neighbouring Villages. After two dayes stay for refreshing, they in two dayes more came to the foot of a Hill, termed Ciecialith, which they ascended, thicke couered with Snow, wherewith many were frozen, and Goes was in great danger. For the Snow held them sixe dayes; after which they came to Tangetar, which belongs to the Kingdome of Cascar. There Isaac the Armenian fell from the banke of a great Riuer into the water, and was eight houres space halfe dead. In fifteene dayes more they attayned the Towne Iaconich, such an ill way that Goez lost sixe Horses with the trauell. In fiue dayes he got (hasting before the companie) to the chiefe Citie named Hiarchan, whence hee prouided his companions of necessaries, who soone after arriued there in Nouember, 1603.

Tengi Badascian.
Ciarciunar.
Serpanil.
Sarcil.
Snowie way.
Tangbetar.
Iatonich.
Hiarchan.

Hiarchan the Seat Royall of the Kingdome of Cascar, hath great resort of Merchants, and is also well stored with variety of merchandise. The Carauan of Cabul here ends their Voyage: and from thence to Catay is a new one furnished, the Captainship whereof the King selleth at a great price, and conferreth on the Captaine Regall power ouer the Merchants thorow all that way. It was a yeeres space before they could all bee ready to so long and dangerous a iourney, which required many persons. Neither is it performed euery yeere, but by them onely which know they shall be admitted into Catay. There is no better merchandise (as before is said) then a certaine shining Marble, which wee are wont to call Iasper, for want of a fitter word; which the King of Catay buyeth at a great price; and what hee leaueth they may sell to others at exceeding rates. Of it they make diuers ornaments for Vessels, Garments, Girdles, with leaues and flowers artificially engrauen. The Chinois call it Tusce; and of it are two kinds, one more precious

Catay-Carauan

Precious Marble.

Digitized by Google

precious which is taken out of the Riuer Cotan, not farre from the Citie Royall, in manner as the Diuers fish for Pearles, and is brought out like thicke flints; the other meaner is digged out of Hils, and is sawed into broad stones aboue two Ells wide, after fitted to the Voyage. This Hill is twentie dayes Iourney from that Citie Royall, and is stiled Cansangui Casçio, that is, The stonie Mountayne. They are thence taken with incredible labour, both for the desertnesse of the place, and the inexorable hardnesse of the Marble, which they say is forced with fire made thereon to yeeld: the license also to take it, is deere sold by the King to some one Merchant, who purchaseth the Monopoly; and when they goe thither they carrie a yeares prouision for the Labourers, which in that space returne not.

Goez visited the King, whose name is Mahamethin, and presented him with a Watch, a Glasse and other European Commodities, which made him very welcome. Hee would not at first tell him of going to Catay, but only spake of the Kingdome of Cialis East-ward from thence, and procured his grant thereto, assisted by the Sonne of his Sister the Pilgrime Queene before mentioned. Sixe moneths passed, and Demetrius one of his old Societie which staid at Cabul, came thither. At that time by the Kings License one of the Merchants was stiled Emperour as in jest, to whom the other Merchants after the custome gaue Presents, which Demetrius refusing, was in danger to be imprisoned and beaten (for so large is his power) had not Benedict interceded and by a gift compounded the businesse. Theeues also brake into the House and setting a Sword to the Armenians brest terrified him from crying; but our Brother Demetrius hearing, cried out and scarred them away. Benedict was gone to the King of Quotans Mother for payment of his Debt: his Residence was ten dayes Iourney thence, so that he spent a moneth therein before his returne. In this space the Saracens raised a report that he was dead, slaine by their Priests for refusing their holies. Now because he dyed intestate, they sought to seize on his goods, which was very troublesome to Isaac and Demetrius, both for defence of the goods, and losse of their Friend, which redoubled their joy at his returne with plentie of that Marble, and hee in thankfulnesse gaue much Almes.

Mahamet Can King of Casçar. Cialis.

On a day as he was eating with other Saracens, one came in armed, and setting his Sword to his brest, charged him to inuoke * Mahomet. He answered, that in his Law there was no such name inuoked, and therefore refused: and by the company that mad fellow was extruded. The like zeale oft endangered him on like termes of Mahumetan profession. On another day he was called by the King of Casçar in the presence of his Cacises, the Priests, & the Mullas or learned men, and asked what Law he professed, whether that of Moses, of Dauid, or Mahumet, and which way he turned himselfe in praying. Hee answered, that hee professed the Law of Iesus, whom they call Isai, and turned any way when he prayed, beleeuing that God was euery where: about which rose amongst them great controuersie, they vsing to turne to the * West: yet they concluded that our Law also might seeme good.

* To vse (as it seemes) those words La illah illalah, Mehumed resullalah, the Characteristical note of Mahumetan profession.

* To Mecca ward.

Meane-whiles one Agiasi of that Countrey was named Captaine of the future Caruan, who inuited our Brother to his House (hauing heard well of him) to a Feast, wherein they had Musicke after their manner. At the end, hee desired his company to Catay, which he much desired, but had learned by experience how to deale with the Saracens, and would be intreated, that he might seeme to doe, rather then receiue, a Fauour. The Captaine vseth the Kings mediation, who desired him to accompany the Caruan Bassa, which he accepted vpon condition of his Letters Patents for all that way. His Cabul companions were herewith offended, as loth to lose his company, and much disswaded him; but hee made shew as though hee were loth herein to displease the King, and for his sake had promised the Caruan Bassa, which now hee might not reuoke. They said that these people were perfidious, and would deuoure him and his: nor was their feare causelesse, for many of the Natiues had told them, that those three Armenians (so they called all these three Christians) as soone as they were out of the walles would bee slaine. This terrified Demetrius from going further, who also disswaded Goez but in vaine, saying, he would not disappoint the hopes of so many, the Archbishop of Goa, and the Vice-roy to lose his expences, but would aduenture his life in the Designe.

Caruan Bassa. See before in Chaggi Memet the like Iourney and the same places.

Hee prouided ten Horses for his Carriages, and for his fellow, hauing another at home. The Bassa was gone to his house fiue dayes Iourney thence to make all readie, and thence sent to Goez to hasten.

Anno 1604. about the midst of Nouember, they came to a place called Iolci, where they vse to pay Customes, and their Commissions are examined. Hence they went to Hancialix, Alceghet, to Hagabateth, to Egriar, to Mesetelec, to Thalec, to Horma, to Thoantac, to Mingieda, to Capetalcol Zilan, to Sarc Guebedal, to Canbasci, to Aconserfee, to Ciacor, to Acsu: in this way they spent fiue and twentie dayes, the way troublesome, both with store of stones or Rockes, and with Sands. Acsu is a Towne of the Kingdome of Casçar, the Gouernour whereof was Nephew to the King, then twelue yeares old. Hee would needs see Goez, who went and gaue him childish Presents, Sugar and the like, and was gently entertayned of him. There being then a solemne dancing before him, he requested our Brother to dance, which to satisfie him, he did.

Voyage to Catay from Hierchan. Places in the way.

Goez danceth.

Digitized by Google

He visited also his Mother and shewed her his Patent, which was with great reuerence admitted: to her he gaue a Chrystall glasse, a Calico cloth of India, and the like. The Childs Gouernour also, or Protector, which swayd the publike Affaires, sent for him. In this way one of Goez his Horses fell into a swift Riuer, and escaped to the other side; and came againe of himselfe, the Name of Iesus being inuoked?

Caracathai, the first place of the Tartars Conbuest. See before in F. Bacon, Rubr. &c.

In this way the Desert is passed called Caracathai, that is, The blacke Land of the Cathayans, in which they say the Catayans stayed long. In this Towne they stayed fifteene dayes for other Merchants, and then departing went to Oitograch Gazo, to Casciani, to Dellai, to Saregabedall, to Vgan, and after to Cucia, a small Towne where they stayed a whole moneth to refresh their beasts, which by the irksomnesse of the wayes, and weight of the Marble, and want of Barley were almost spent. Here the Priests demanded of Goez, why in their Solemne Fast (Lent) he fasted not, and almost forced him in hope of some Largesse or Fine. After they were gone hence in fiue and twentie dayes they came to the Citie Cialis, which was little, but well fortified. This Countrey was gouerned by a base Sonne of the King of Cascar, who hearing that Goez professed another Religion, began to terrifie him, saying, it was a bold part for a man of another profession to enter those parts: for he might lawfully take from him his life and goods. But when he read his Letters Patents he was pacified, and with a Present was made also a friend. One night disputing about their Law, with the Priests and Learned men, he sent for Benedict into the Palace (whereupon suspition arose of some ill intent being at so vnseasonable a time) hee went and being commanded to dispute, with force of Argumeuts silenced the Aduersaries. The Vice-roy alway protected him, approuing his Sayings, and concluding that the Christians were the true Misermans, saying, that his Progenitors had professed the same Law. After the Disputation hee made him a Banquet, and caused him to lye that night in the Palace, so that Isaac was weeping at his returne, and almost in despaire to see him. In this Citie they stayed three moneths. For the Carauan Bassa would not depart without a great company (it being so much more gaine to him) nor suffer any man to goe before. Goez wearied with this tedious stay and chargeable expence, with a Gift obtayned leaue of the Viceroy, the Carauan and Captaine being against it.

Cialis.

Musubmans, that is, right beleeuers.

He then intended to proceed from Cialis, when the Merchants of the former Carauan returned from Catay. These fayning an Embassage (after their wont) had pierced into the Royall Seat of Catay, and hauing conuersed in the same Palace of Strangers with our (Iesuites) reported strange and certaine newes of Father Matthew and the Companie, to Goez, who wondred that Catay was become China. These Saracens were the same hereafter reported * of, which liued three moneths with ours, and told him that the Fathers had presented to the King, Watches, Pictures and other European Presents, and were much respected in the Palace, of the greatest, and (adding some lies) said that they had often spoken with the King. They reasonable well painted their faces, but knew not their names: by reason that after the China manner they had taken other names. And for further Argument they shewed a Paper written in Portugall, which they had taken out of the dust, when the Seruant swept the Chamber, to shew in their owne Countrey. This cheared Goez hearing that Catay was China, and that Pequin the Royall Citie was Cambalu.

Newes of F. M. Ricius and the Iesuits.

* In Pantoia and Recius.

Names changed by the Iesuites.

Cambalu.

The Vice-roy gaue him his Letters for securitie, and demanding whether he would be inscribed a Christian, he answered yea; for all this way he had comne, called by the Name of Isai, and so would hold out to the end. An old Saracen Priest hearing this, cast his Cap on the ground, applauding his resolute Zeale, saying, that theirs are reported to dissemble and alter their Religion with the Region. Goez went on with his companion, and a few others, and in twentie dayes came to Pucian a Towne of the same Kingdome, where the Gouernour vsed him kindly and amply prouided him out of his owne House. Thence they proceeded to Turphan, and staid a whole moneth in that fortified Citie. Thence they passed to Aramuth, and after to Camul, a fortified place where they refreshed themselues another moneth, because they were well vsed in all the Kingdome of Cialis, which ends at this Towne. From Camul in nine dayes they came to the Northerne wals of China, to a place called Chiaicuon, where they staid fiue and twentie dayes for the Answere of the Vice-roy of that Prouince.

Pucian. Turphan. Aramuth. Camul.

The wals of China. Chiaicuon.

After this they were admitted entrance within the walles, and in one day came to Socien a Citie, where they heard much of Pequin, and other names knowne; so that now hee was out of all doubt that Catay and China differed only in name. All the way from Cialis to the borders of China, is infamous with incursions of the Tartars: and therefore Merchants passe these places with great feare, searching by day from the Neighbour Hils whether there bee any out-rode of Tartars, and if they judge the wayes secure they trauell by night with silence. In the way they found many Saracens miserably slaine, hauing aduentured to goe alone: although the Tartars seldome kill the Natiues, saying, they are their Slaues and Herdsmen, from whom they take away their flocks of Sheepe, and Herds of Bullocks. They eate no Wheate, Barley, nor Pulse, saying, it is food for beasts, not men. They feed only on flesh, not sparing Horses, Mules, Camels, and yet are said to liue one hundred yeares.

Socien in China.

Borderers thecuish.

Tartars customes in the borders.

The

Digitized by Google

The Saracen Nations bordering on these parts of China, might easily by the Chinois bee subdued, as being not warlike men, if the Chinois cared to enlarge their Dominions. In this way one night Benedict fell from his Horse, his company going on and not missing him till they came to their Lodging, and then Isaac went backe to seeke him and found him by the sound of the Name Iesus, almost despairing to see his company any more.

These walls were built on the West of China, as it trends North-wards, about the space of two hundred * miles, where the Tartarian out-roads are now lesse dangerous. Against them are builded two fortified Cities with choise Garrisons. They haue a peculiar Vice-roy and other Magistrates ouer them, which are commanded only from Pequin. In one of these (Canceu in the Prouince of Scensi) the Vice-roy resideth with other chiefe Magistrates. The other (named Soceu) hath a speciall Gouernour, and is distributed into two parts; in one of which the Chinois (whom the Saracens here call Catayans) in the other the Saracens, haue their Habitation, which come from Cascar, and the like Westerne Kingdomes for Merchandizing Affaires. Some of them, as the Portugals at Amacao, in the Prouince of Canton, settle their abodes and haue wiues and children, accounted as Natiue subiects. But those Portugals liue according to their owne Lawes, and haue Magistrates of their owne, whereas these Saracens are gouerned by the Chinois, and euery night are shut vp by them within their owne Citie, inclosed with peculiar walls. The Law is, that he which hath stayed there nine yeares, may not returne to his Countrey. The Merchants come vsually from the West to this Citie, which with fayned Embassage, by ancient leagues of seuen or eight Kingdomes with that of China, haue obtayned, that euery sixth yeare seuentie two in name of Legats should pay Tribute to the King, that shining Marble, pieces of Diamonds, blue colour and other things; thence they goe to the Court at publike charge, and likewise returne. Their Tribute is rather by way of honour or homage then any way profitable; for no man payes dearer for this Marble then the King himselfe, who esteemes it a dishonour to take any thing of Strangers for nothing. And they are so entertayned at the Kings cost, that all things reckoned, they get euery day aboue their necessarie charges a Ducket a man. Hence are many ambitious of this Embassage and purchase it of the Carauan Bassa (who hath the nomination) at great price: at that time counterfeiting their Kings Letters, acknowledging vassallage to the King of China. The like Embassages the Chinois admit from diuers Kingdomes, from Cauchin china, Siam, Leuchieu, Corea, and some of the Tartars Kingdomes, not without incredible expenses of the publike treasure: of which fraud the Chinois are not ignorant, but flatter with their King, as if all the World paid Tribute vnto him, when as rather the Chinois in this manner pay Tributes to them.

* This 200. is to bee vnderstood of the Westerne part: or perhaps all but so much is naturall of rockes or hills: or Trigautius a Dutchman might meane Dutch miles. The Map expresseth about 1000. miles. The reports are diuers as from reports: for who could see it all? and what good would 200. miles doe, which horsemen in few dayes might passe.

Diuers Embassages counterfeited.

At the end of the yeere 1605. Our Benedict came to Soceu, growne wealthy by his long Iourney; hauing thirteene Horses, fiue hired Seruants, two Boyes which hee bought, and the most precious Marble of the rest, all valued at 2500. Duckets. Hee also and Isaac were well in health. In this Citie he lighted vpon other Saracens returned from Pequin, which confirmed the former Reports of the Fathers, with other things beyond all measure of Faith, that the King of China paid them money daily by a certaine measure and not by weight. Hee writ presently to Father Matthew to Pequin, to acquaint him with his comming, and gaue the Letters to certaine Chinois: but because he knew not the China name wherewith Ours were called, and the Region where they resided, and writ in European Characters, those Chinois could not deliuer them. The next yeare at Easter, he sent againe by a Saracen Fugitiue (for they may neither goe in nor out without the Magistrates leaue) and writ to them of his Voyage and state, desiring them to take some course to free him from that Prison, that he might returne by Sea into India, the Portugall way. The Father had long before learned by Letters from India, of this intended Iourney, and yeerely expected him, and made much enquirie of those counterfeit Embassadors, but could not till now heare of him. They were now therefore much ioyed to read his Letters, which in Nouember following came to their hands, and one was presently sent, to bring him by some meanes to Pequin, not one of the Societie lest one stranger should hinder another, but a Pupill which lately admitted, had not yet entred his probation, named Iohn Fernandus a wise young man, with a companion, a new Conuert, skilled in those parts. And if hee could not bring him thence by the Magistrates leaue or by other Arts, he should stay there with him, and write to the Company, who by their friends would procure him passage.

Reports of trauellers to bee weighed.

Nouem. 1606.

This Iourney was vnreasonable in the hardest of Winter, being almost foure moneths Iourney from Pequin. Yet would not Father Matthew deferre any longer, which if he had done, Goez would haue beene dead before his comming. Hee and two others of the Societie writ to him. Meane-while Goez suffers more wrongs of the Saracens in this place then hee had done in the way, and was faine to sell his Marble halfe vnder the price for prouisions, whence he made 1200. Duckets and paid his Debts, and sustained his Family a yeere. Meane-while, the Carauan came with their Captaine, and he with entertainments was againe forced to borrow, and because hee was chosen into the number of the seuentie two, he prouided him of some Marble pieces, without which had beene no going to Pequin. Hee hid one hundred pounds in the ground that the Saracens should not know thereof. Ferdinandus went from Pequin the eleuenth of December, Carauan commeth.

Digitized by Google

Singhan. and his Seruant ranne from him at Singhan, the Mother Citie of the Prouince of Scianſi, carrying away halfe their prouiſion. At the end of March, 1607. he yet made ſhift to get to Socen, and found Goez lying on his Death-bed, who had dreamed that one of our company would come thither the next day, and ſent Iſaac into the Market who brought Ferdinandus to him. Hauing receiued the Letters, he brak into a Nunc dimittis, as ſeeming to haue ended his Pilgrimage. Eleuen dayes after Goez dyeth, not without ſuſpition of Poyſon from the Saracens. They had perpetuall Spies to watch and catch what he left, which they did moſt barbarouſly execute, and amongſt the reſt his Iournall was loſt which he had written in very ſmall Letters. They ſought for it to preuent payment of Debts there entred. They would haue buried him like a Saracen, but Iſaac and Ferdinand excluded them and buried him, with a recitall of the Roſarie, in defect of other Bookes. Thus died Benedict Goez, a man of great parts, which had after his admiſſion done great ſeruice to the Societie (howſoeuer he was not a Prieſt) much eſteemed by the Great Mogoll, whom hee auerted from the Warre of India. He diſſwaded before his death that Ours ſhould not truſt the Saracens, nor aduenture this way, as vnprofitable and dangerous. And although hee dyed without Confeſſion in ſo many yeeres, yet he was cheerefull in the mercie of God, and profeſſed that his conſcience did not accuſe him of matters of any moment.

Goez dyeth.

Tartarean Tartars. By a Tartarian cuſtome they diuide the goods of the deceaſed amongſt them all, and therefore bound Iſaac threatning to kill him if he turned not Mahumetan; but Ferdinand put vp a Supplication to the Vice-roy at Cancen, who ſubſcribed that the Gouernour of Socen ſhould examine the buſineſſe. He firſt was fauourable, but corrupted by bribes threatned to whip him, and held him in Priſon three dayes. But he ſold his Garments for want of Money, and continued the Suit fiue moneths, not being able at firſt to conferre with Iſaac for want of Language. Iſaac only vttered a few Portugall words, and the Iudge had thought they had ſpoken in the Canton Tongue. At laſt, Ferdinand learned to ſpeake Perſian, and was able to conferre with him. The Saracens pleaded that Ferdinand was a Chineſe by his countenance, the other a Saracen: hee anſwered that his Mother was a Chineſe, whom he reſembled. But nothing moued the Iudge more then that he was an enemy to their Religion, and pulling a piece of Porke out of his ſleeue, they both did eate it; whereupon with laughter of the Aſſembly, the Saracens abhominated both, ſpitting at the Armenian, and leauing the Suit, ſaying, that the Armenian was deluded by the China-coozener. For in all the way to preuent offence, Benedict and Iſaac had abſtayned from Porke. And thus all was by the Iudges ſentence reſtored to Ferdinand which had beene Benedicts: but nothing was found, ſaue Marble pieces which had beene hidden in the ground, which was ſold, and yeelded to pay their Debts and prouiſion for their Iourney to Pequin, whither both of them came. They brought a faire gilded Croſſe-Picture and the Charters of three Kings, Caſcar, Quotan and Cialis, which are reſerued at Pequin for a memoriall. Iſaac related all this Storie to Father Matthew vpon credit of his memorie, and hauing ſtayed a moneth, was ſent the wonted way to Amacao; where being well entertayned, hee in ſayling thence to India, was taken by Hollanders, and loſt both goods and libertie. But the Portugals of Malaca redeemed him, and he held on his courſe to India, and hearing of his Wiues death, went not to the Mogols Countrey, but ſtaid at Chaul, and is now at the writing hereof aliue.

Iſaacs iourney.

Chaul. 1615.

CHAP. V.

A Generall Collection and Hiſtoricall repreſentation of the Ieſuites entrance into Iapon and China, vntill their admiſſion in the Royall Citie of Nanquin.

§. I.

of FRANCIS XAVIER, MELCHIOR NVNNES, VALIGNANVS, RVGGERIVS and PASIVS.

FOraſmuch as we haue ſailed ſo lately from the Philippinas to China, and backe-againe with our Friers, and haue giuen you a Ieſuits Land Iourney, we thought it worthy our labour alſo to launch into the deepe of their Nauigations, and to honour the Ieſuits, (to whom in the following parts of this Hiſtorie we are ſo indebted) with obſeruing their Obſeruations of Iapon, and the intercourſe thereof with China; and from it (as the greateſt and moſt glorious Eaſterne Ieſuiticall Conqueſt) to ſhip our ſelues in their Barge to China. How Francis Xavier (now Sainted at Rome, together with Ignatius Loiola, firſt Founder of that Order) laboured the Conuerſions of Ignatius and Francis canonized by Greg. 15. March 12. 1622.

Gentiles

Digitized by Google

Gentiles and Pagans to Christianitie, as in other parts of the Indies, so heere in Iapan I willingly acknowledge; yea, so farre am I from enuying either him or his Order, or any other Order stiled Religious, their Trophees of Conuersions, that I could wish the Pope seated in Miaco, and all the Iesuits, & Friers, yea, all his Iesuited Clergie fully possessed of the Bonzian Colledges & Temples in Iapon; whence a double good might issue; to the Ethnikes some light in stead of a totall darknesse, a diseased life being better then death, and to Europe, to be lightned of their burthen, where professing themselues Lights, they proue Lightnings, and raise so manifold combustions. And most especially could I wish this honour to my Countrey-men the English Iesuites, and Priests, Popish Emissaries of whatsoeuer Order, that they were there ordered, or (which fits their ambition better) ordering that Easterne World, rather then here disordered and disordering, playing the Lords of Mis-rule in the West. The very Name of Christ is sweet to mee, euen in Iapan, yea, from a Iesuites mouth, or a Iesuites Conuert; and would God they taught them Iesus more, and lesse Iesuitish fancies of exchanged worship of Creatures, howsoeuer gilded with Christian Names, that the Iaponians might learne to acknowledge Iesus and Maria truly, and not with Names and Images of they know not what, to worship Venus and her Sonne Cupid, in stead of the Blessed Virgin, and that incarnate Blessednesse her blessed Sonne, who is God ouer all blessed for euer.

This happened in Capt. Saris his ship. See to. 1. l. 4. c. 1. p. 367.

One told Cortes the Mexian Conqueror then speaking great words, that there is much difference in conquering Neighbours at home, and naked Americans; I adde, that a man may be Christened, and yet farre short of Christianitie, (euen by Iesuites * testimonies) and that somewhat more is required to a Christian then Christian Names, giuen in Baptisme to hundreds at once, as some haue done without further instruction. Deuotion is rather to be prized by weight and worth, then by tale and numbers, as happens in their Beades here, and too often in their Conuersions there: which were they indeed so much to be magnified and gloried in, would aswell preuaile in men of capacitie to ouerthrow strong holds and high imaginations, as here to worke on our silly women laden with sinnes, hoping for their Confession-cure; and there, with sillinesse it selfe, or such as Reason turnes Christians because they will not runne madde with their owne to such Monsters as their Bonzi teach them. Themselues confesse, that it is not much, they can preuaile with Mahumetans any where; or here in China: and Ours haue found them to say more then they had done in that little.

* See sup. l. 9. c. 12. §. 5. and the last Chapter of my Pilgrimage

2. Cor. 10. 4.

See Sir T. Roe and M. Terry, sup. p. 1482. and 586.

I should much rejoyce that their Reports were true, and that as an Orator * of theirs hath solemnized the Canonization of Loiola, their Patriarke, and Xauier the Indian Apostle (so hee stileth them) this Saint Francis had conuerted three hundred thousand Soules, of innumerable Nations; yea, all Heretikes in neere sixteene hundred yeeres, had not conuerted so many, nay, had not peruerted so many not Christians, to all their Heresies together, as he alone adjoyned to Christ in eleuen yeeres. I am glad to heare it, and that which hee addeth, that all Heretickes whatsoeuer had not infected so many Languages and peoples, as those of which hee had illustrated many with Christian Truth and Pietie. Doth this man consider how much of the World hath beene Christian, and how much after that Hereticall? how many more Nations the Nestorian Heresie hath infected then Xauier saw, leauening, in manner, all Asia from Constantinople where it began, vnto Tartaria? Cathay, or China, and the Indies, and hath not the Iacobite Heresie preuailed ouer Africa? and before that the Arrian; ouer all the World, which as Saint Hierome saith, groned and wondred to see it selfe growne Arrian? But these perhaps rather peruerted Christians then any way conuerted Ethnikes! Yet the great Nations of the Gothes and Vandales were of Ethnikes made Arrians, the great Nations of the Lithuanians, Muscouites, Russes, &c. haue not many hundred yeeres since of Ethnikes beene conuerted to the Greeke Church, which they hold not Catholike (that I mention not the Armenians, Georgians, and others) one of which numbreth many times three hundred thousand.

This Storie shewes that with Mogols & Chinois gifts are best Conuerters.

* Adol. Schulkenius. Colon. A. 1622. Iun. 26.

See before in Polo; Conti, &c. the truth hereof.

And that one Impietie of Mahumet hath more Followers many, then all whatsoeuer professions of Christianitie in all Languages, Nations, Rites whatsoeuer (I greeue to tell it) and that from peruerse Ethnikes and peruerted Christians. And although Luther and Caluin went not out of Germanie and France (which he obiects) yet their sound, the Gospell which they preached hath gone ouer all the Earth, (as these our Relations shew in the Voyages of English, Dutch, French, yea, the Apostles themselues) and they haue shaken the Towres of Babylon in Europe, where they were strongest (where Antichrist hath his Throne, a Conquest more then Indian or Iaponian) and when the Prophesie of Babylons vtter ruine is fulfilled, the same word shall conquer (I hope) both Iewes and Gentiles; yea, these Iesuites and their Preachings, may by Diuine Dispensation become Harbengers to the Gospell hereafter, as the Iewish Dispersions in the Translations of the Scripture and profession of the true God, were fore-runners of the Apostles preaching. Meane-while they find vs worke at home to watch ouer our Flockes, lest such grieuous Wolues enter, and make vs to leaue the Pharisies glorie of compassing Sea and Land to winne Proselites to these their Heires and Successors in this, as in many other things. But I will leaue them glorying of their Conuersions, grieuing that they are not herein better then their reports. I will follow them to these parts of China, and here for Chinas sake to Iapon, and with that Rule of Cassius

Apoc. 18.

Acts 10.

Cic. pro Milone.

Digitized by Google

Caſſius (Cui bono) obſerue them, in things not gainefull to their Religion, approue and applaud their induſtrie, yea, accept and thankfully acknowledge their authoritie. In their Conuerſions to the Faith, I ſuſpend my faith in the qualitie, if I admit their quantitie. For how could one man well inſtruct ſo many in ſo little time, except hee could haue giuen the Holy Ghoſt, as the Apoſtles in their conuerſions did.

How little in compariſon was Pauls, from Ieruſalem to Illyricum?

Francis Xauier, in the yeere 1541. ſayled from Lisbon, wintred at Moſambique, whence hee paſſed into India, after that to Malaca, and to Iaponia, Et Cunctas oras (ſayth the former Author) quas Oceanus ab Indico mari vſque ad extremos Sinas, id eſt totius Orbis dimidium, circumfluit, Euangelica predicatione illuſtrauit & implenit, (Iapon was firſt diſcouered and knowne to the Portugals by Mota, carryed out of his courſe to China thither by tempeſt, 1542.) Hee dyed, Anno 1552. the fiue and fiftieth of his Age, of his Indian peregrination the eleuenth, in the Ile Sancian, on the Coaſt of China. This was the Indian Standrad-bearer to all of that Societie (beginning his trauell to Lisbon the firſt yeere of their Confirmation 1540.) and now deified or Canonized, and inuoked by Doctor Schulchenius, Chancellor of Collen his Orator, Ignati & Franciſce veſtris ſuccurrite precibus, &c. A Letter of his written from Iapon, in Nouember, 1549. thus relateth.

Letter of Xauier.

Wee came by Gods grace in Auguſt to Iapon, on the Feaſt day of the Aſſumption of the Virgin Marie, hauing ſet foorth from Malaca on Midſommer day. The Maſter of the Ship was a Chineſe, which had vndertaken that office to the Captayne of Malaca, and ſayled proſperouſly till the Maſter altered his minde (as thoſe Barbarians are vſually inconſtant) and lingred long amongſt the Ilands in the way. This troubled vs in two reſpects principally, both for the loſſe of the ſeaſon which God offered, and which being paſt, wee were compelled to winter on the Coaſt of China; and againe, becauſe in the ſame Ship was carryed an Idoll of the Deuill, to which the Mariners in ſight and ſpight of vs, ſacrificed after the manner of their Countrey. They alſo by lots demanded anſwers thereof, touching their Voyage; which (as they ſayd and beleeued) were ſometimes good, ſometimes bad. A hundred leagues from Malaca, holding our courſe to China, wee ſtayed at an Iland, where after many Ceremonies the Deuill was conſulted, what fortune wee ſhould haue, who anſwered, very proſperous: Whereupon with great alacritie wee ſet ſayle: they worſhipped the Idoll placed in the poope, with Candles burning and incenſe of ſweet Wood; wee truſted in God the Creator of Heauen and Earth, and in his Sonne our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, deſiring to carrie his Religion into thoſe parts. When wee were vnder ſayle, they demanded of the Deuill, whether this Ship ſhould returne from Iapon to Malaca: the anſwer was made by the lot-caſters, that it ſhould goe to Iapon, but not returne to Malaca; which made them alter their mindes, thinking it better to winter in China, and to deferre the voyage to Iapon till the next yeere. You may well thinke how it grieued vs, that the Deuill muſt bee conſulted touching our courſe. After this we came to Cauchinchina, where two aduerſe things happened, Emanuel Sina our companion, by the rolling of the Ship in the troubled Sea fell into the ſinke, almoſt dead with the bruiſe and water, but in few dayes recouered: which before it was ended, the Maſters Daughter with the like rolling of the Ship fell into the Sea, and in all our ſight was drowned, and much lamentation followed. The Barbarians preſently ſought to pacifie the Deuill, and without reſt all the day and night, tooke paines to kill Birds to the Idoll, and to ſet diſhes (of meate before it,) and by lots conſulted to know the cauſe of that misfortune. The anſwer was, that if Emanuel which firſt fell in, had dyed, the Girle had not fallen into the Sea. You ſee in what danger the Deuill hereby had caſt vs, if our Lord had not reſtrayned his rage, &c.

Deuill worſhipped by the Chinois.

Canton.

The tempeſt being aſſwaged, wee came in few dayes to the Port of Canton in China. And there they purpoſed to Winter, notwithſtanding all our intreaties and expoſtulations: but I know not how on a ſudden they would goe to Chincheo, on the ſame Coaſt. And when wee were almoſt there, the Maſter was certified by ſome which ſayled by, that there was ſtore of Pirats at Chincheo; whereupon the winde being faire for Iapon, and croſſe for Canton, they brought vs to Cangoxuma, the Countrey of our friend Paul, whoſe friends vſed vs vnkindly. There wee ſpent fortie dayes in learning the Elements of the Iaponian tongue with great labour, and began to publiſh the Decalogue, and other heads of Chriſtian learning, which Paul had accurately conuerted into his owne Language; and wee purpoſed ſpeedily to Print them, whereby the knowledge of Chriſt is further and more eaſily founded, &c. The occaſion of his journey thither, hee ſheweth in another Letter, that ſome Portugals being lodged in a Houſe poſſeſſed by Deuils, compaſſed the ſayd houſe with Croſſes, and that there was great hope of good to bee done in thoſe parts: whereupon, notwithſtanding thoſe Seas are very tempeſtuous, and much infeſted with Pirats, hee reſolued to goe thither.

Cangoxima in Iapon. Paul had beene in India, and was Baptiſed.

Seas tempeſtuous and Piraticall.

Ricius and Trigantius, adde that the Iaponian Prieſts alledged in defence of their Idolatries, the Chinois wiſedome againſt him, whereupon hee returned to India, to aduiſe with the Vice-roy to ſend an Ambaſſage into China, without which there was no entrance, and obtayned that Iames Pereira was named Legate, with whom he had before conferred about the buſineſſe at Sancian, where the Portugals at that time vſed to trade with the Chinois, (Amacao not yet eſtabliſhed) but Aluarus Taidius the Captayne of Maluca oppoſed. Xauier loath herein to bee croſſed, vſed the Popes Bull, which conſtituted him Apoſtolicall Nuncio, and grieuouſly Curſed all that ſhould hinder his proceedings in promoting Religion. And when Aluarus would not otherwiſe relent, hee interdicted him and his followers. Soone after Aluarus was poſſeſſed with a Leproſie,

Digitized by Google

sie, and further contemning the Vice-roy, was taken and cast in Irons, and dyed miserably. Xauier burning with zeale of his China expedition, sought to get some Chinois by fauour or reward, to conueigh him by stealth into China, and to expose him some-where on the Continent, although hee knew that imprisonment attended such strangers, as came into China without licence. Being admonished to take leaue of the Captayne, What, sayd hee, should I goe to salute an Excommunicate person? I shall neuer see him, nor hee me, in this life, nor after, but when in the Vale of Iosaphat I shall accuse him before the Iudge, Christ. And praying for him, after with a countenance full of Maiestie, hee put off his shooes, and shooke off the dust, according to the Euangelicall precept. Thus he came to Sancian a Desart Iland, where the Portugals vsed to make Boothes of boughes or straw, (for the time of their Trading with the Chinois) with whom hee consulted about some way to effect his desires, though with losse of libertie or life. At last he agreeth with a China Merchant, for as much Pepper (giuen him of the Portugall Merchants in almes) as was worth aboue two hundred Duckets, to set him and his Interpreter on shoare secretly. Hee vndertooke it, but either secretly terrified by other Portugals, or with his owne danger, his Interpreter forsooke him: and after that, the Merchant also vanished. He stayed yet wayting for him, till a Feuer tooke him out of the world, in December, 1552. His corps was after translated to India.

Xauiers zeale.

Sancian thirtie leagues from the China shoare.

Xauiers death. See Vita Xauerij. & F. Pinto. & Eman. Acosta Mafferius Ricius, &c.

The Portugals of those times, were very desirous of Trade with the Chinois, who on the other side were very suspitious of them, both by that which they saw of their Ships and Ordnance, and by that which the Moores at Canton reported of these Franks, (so the Mahumetans * call Europæans) that they were warlike and victorious, as appeared in Malaca and all India, vnder colour of Merchandise subiected to the Portugals. The Chinois at Canton call them still Falanks: for they want the R, and pronounce not two consonants without a vowell interposed. By the same name they call also the Portugals Ordnance. Yet desire of gaine preuayled, that they were admitted to such a trade as ye haue heard, so as the Mart ended, they must away with their goods to India. That course continued diuers yeeres, till the Chinois growing lesse fearefull, granted them in the greater Iland a little Peninsula to dwell in. In that place was an Idoll, which still remayneth to bee seene, called Ama, whence the Peninsula was called Amacao, that is, Amas Bay. This Rocke indeed rather then Peninsula, began to bee inhabited not onely of Portugals, but of the confluence of all neighbouring Nations, in regard of the commerce of Commodities of Europe, India, and the Moluccas, brought in Portugals Ships, and especially loue of the Siluer Coynes, brought the Chinois thither to dwell. In continuance of time, a Citie began by degrees to bee built, and the Portugals made not onely contracts of Merchandise, but of Marriage, with the Chinois, and so the Peninsula was filled with priuate houses, and out of a barren Rocke arose a noble Mart. And as gayne brought Merchants thither, so the care to keepe and to get soules, brought thither Priests and Religious men, and the Portugall Kings priuiledged the place with the tytle of a Citie, and made it a Bishops See. There the Iesuites fixed a residence, and first erected a Church to our Ladie, and after that diuers others. For it seemed conuenient to their designes, the world of China lying to the North, the Moluccas to the South, Iapon, and the Philippinas to the East, to the West Cochinchina, Camboia, Siam, and others.

* Since the Expedition of the Westerne Christians (the chiefe of which were Franks) to the conquest of Ierusalem.

A Peninsula is compassed with water except on one part.

Beginnings of Amacao.

From hence, many intended the China imployment without successe, those fields not then white to the harueft. Melchior Nunnes, (Anno 1555.) from Canton, writes of his accidentall going a shoare on China, in his voyage to Iapan, occasioned by a terrible tempest whereto those Seas are much subiect. They came in Iuly to Sancian an Iland, thirtie leagues from Canton, being much indangered by the Rockes in the way, and there hee sayd Masse ouer the place where Xauier had beene buryed; and easily obtayned admission into Canton. This is reported to bee the least of all the Mother Cities of the Prouinces, yet seeming to exceed Lisbone, in frequencie. The buildings are good, the walls strong: a thousand Arches with inscriptions are seene therein, which the Magistrates vsually leaue as Memorials at their departures. The people are giuen to their bellies, and to pleasure. The Gouernment is admirable. The Chiefe Iustice they call Hexasi, the Treasurer Ponchasi, the Admirall and Gouernour of Strangers, Aitan. The Chaens Ensignes, are a Hand and an Eye; his office is to see the Execution of the Kings Sentences, to order or deprive Magistrates. The Tutan *is Vice-roy, conspicuous by his Cap and his Garments, wrought with a gilded Lion, which * is the Kings Armes: in State hee excelleth* European Kings. The Portugall Captaynes and wee speake not to him, but aloofe on our knees. If any will speake with him, at euery Gate of his sumptuous Palace, hee must aloud vtter his businesse, before the Porter admits him. Hee hath many for his Guard. And one hundred thousand men are sayd to bee maintayned at the Kings cost, for the keeping of this Prouince. His Officers goe two and two and make way with great cryes. Their Cane-whippings are terrible, the Canes burned at the end, a cubite long, foure fingers broad, &c. The Chinois *are wittie and indicious, in matters of the world: but haue little care of the soule, ignorant of its * immortalitie, of one God, and of eternall rewards and punishments. Their Priests haue a kinde of Myter on the head, are shauen head and beard, otherwise contemptible. I could not with great diligence finde any that could shew mee their Ceremonies, and the lawes of their Holies. The Inhabitants all haue Idols, which they incense; and diuine by lots, beating the Idols if the Lots proue vnluckie. I was twice at* Canton, and spent two moneths

Melchior Nunn.

Canton least Metropolitan Citie. I take but a little of his relation, because you haue so much before.

Aiton, Aitao, or Haitao.

* So Pinto also, but this is the Prouinces Armes not the Kings.

* Some Sects acknowledge more, others lesse.

Digitized by Google

moneths there to redeeme Portugall prisoners. The Chinois kill or captiuate the Portugals, which are wracked on that Coast, which yet they cease to doe, since they pay their Customes. I went thence in Mayto Iapan.

Valignanus. Alexander Valignanus, was sent by the Iesuiticall Generall into India as Visitor, and hauing visited other parts, came to Amacao, in his way to Iapon, forced to stay there ten moneths with the Iesuites. There hee more fully informed himselfe of the state of China, and raised the embers of the almost extinguished zeale of that expedition. Hee is thought to bee the Author of that treatise called Admiranda Regni Sinensis, containing a summarie of the wonders in China, worthy heere to haue beene inserted, but that wee rather ayme at things seene then heard, as hauing better certaintie. Oculatus testis unus præstat auritis decem. Vpon the consideration of their wits, Peace, Policie, studies of Learning, hee conceiued that if any were skilfull of their Language and Letters, he might doe some good for their Conuersion. Hereupon hee resolued to imploy some that way, although many others of the companie which had experience of the China affayres, held it labour in vayne. Yet hee went on and because of the paucitie of ours at Amacao, and none so fit for that designe, hee sent into India to the Prouinciall, to send thither at least one Priest for that purpose. And he going to Iapon, left order what hee which was sent should doe.

Admiranda regni Sinensis extant with the Iesuites Epistles published by Io Hayus. Plaut.

Mich. Ruggerius. Michael Ruggerius, an Italian of the Kingdome of Naples, was sent, and came to Amacao, in Iuly, Anno 1579. and applyed himselfe to learne the language which the Courtiers in China vse, and is common thorow all China, (the Prouinces hauing otherwise peculiar languages) also to learne to reade and write their Characters, which are as many as words. That language was verie hard both in it selfe, and for the want of teachers. For those Christian Chinois which liued at Amacao, in habit of Europeans, & those which came thither in Merchandise, were almost as ignorant of the Court tongue, as of the Portugall: and though they vnderstood it, yet they could not well pronounce it. And for the Characters, they know those which belonged to their Merchandising and common vse. Labor improbus omnia vincit. With pictures his teacher was often forced to supply characters. And whereas the Portugals twice a yeere in the Mart season haue accesse to Canton, about Ianuarie and Iune, he went with them thither. For in time they obtayned this libertie, that not in a desart Iland, as first, nor in the Amacao Hauen, but in the Metropolitan Citie two dayes vp the Riuer, they might haue trading by day, but lye aboard at night, with so many eyes and watches on them, as it is manifest they are not altogether free of their former feares.

Portugall trade at Canton by day, and extrusion at night.

Ruge. first entrance. These Marts continue two moneths each of them, or longer, and haue beene the onely meane of admitting the Iesuites into China, by the industrie and pietie of other Portugals. Ruggerius therefore with his merchandise also aduentured with them, and found an impediment at first. Another Iesuite which before had gone thither had conuerted a youth, Disciple to a Priest, and closely conueyed him to Amacao. His Master made complaint and procured the Magistrate to fetch him backe by force, to the great trouble of Ours, and seeming discredit as if by ill arts they had seduced Children from their Parents, which is a thing at Canton, both vsuall and Capitall. Ruggerius enterposed himselfe with great care and discretion, and appeased the Admirall or Hai-tao which hath the command of Strangers, who hereby had an opinion of his vertue, and delighted to see him studious of the China bookes. He therefore permitted him to stand at his side when others kneeled, and freed him also from the going aboard at night, and allowed him a place in the Palace, where the Ambassadours of the King of Siam were vsually entertayned, bringing their present or tribute (such as you haue heard in Goez) to the King. There hee studied night and day the China bookes, and on Sundayes and Holy-dayes, the Portugals came thither to him to Masse and to receiue the Sacraments. This continued whiles they continued, for when the Mart ended hee was commanded to returne with them. The Father procured acquaintance also with the chiefe Captayne of the Souldiers of that Prouince (the Chinois call him Zumpim), to whom hee gaue a watch. By this meanes many of those which came to Amacao, began to shake off their Ethnike darknesse, and the deuout Portugals erected a House for the Catechumeni (new Conuerts to bee instructed in Christian mysteries before Baptisme) where hee instructed them, and more freely followed his China studies, by helpe of Interpreters. One businesse hindred another, and his Marts absence (which tooke vp neere halfe the yeere) this Catechising, and a tongue is hardly learned by studie without vse; and therefore the Visitor sent for Matthew Ricius out of India, (which had come out of Europe with Ruggerius, and now had finished his Diuinitie course at Goa) to bee his yoake fellow, one to whom the China expedition is most indebted.

Ruggerius freed by the Hai-tao.

Ambassage of Siam.

Zumpim or Chumbim.

Mat. Ricius.

Anno 1582. Valignanus the Visitor, carryed certayne Iaponian Princes sent to Rome to yeeld subiection to the Pope, in the name of those Kings which sent them, as you shall heare. He staying for the Monson at the Colledge of Amacao, tooke great paines to aduance the China businesse. And to that purpose hee instituted the Fraternitie or fellowship of Iesus in our House, with lawes fitting to New Conuerts; forbidding any Portugals to bee therein admitted, but onely Chinois, and Iaponians, and those which were newly conuerted of other Nations: alway to bee gouerned Fraternitie of Iesus.

Digitized by Google

gouerned by one of those Fathers which should bee assigned to the China Expedition, called, The Father of the new Conuerts, taking care not onely of their saluation, but their other affaires and pouerty.

The Vice-roy of Canton Prouince is one of the chiefe Vice-royes, because his Prouince is farre from Pequin, and coasting on the Sea; infested therefore with often Piracies, especially Iaponian. Hereupon the Canton Vice-roy exerciseth iurisdiction also in the adioyning Prouince Quamsi, if occasion require to leuie more Souldiers, although Quamsi hath also a Vice-roy of her owne. For this cause the Canton Vice-roy resideth not at Canton, but at Sciauquin, a Citie bordering on both Prouinces. At this time Cinsui borne in the Prouince of Fuquien, was Vice-roy, a couetous man, who to get money of the Amacaons sent thither his Writ for the Bishop and Captaine to come to his Court, vnderstanding that they commanded all there. They thought it not agreeing to the Portugall honour to goe, nor to their safety to neglect his summons, and therefore by Valignanus his aduise, Ruggerius was sent in the name of the Bishop, to see if hee could get a perpetuall Station in that Kingdome, and Penella the Auditor, in place of the Captaine. And to obtaine his fauour, that he should not disturbe their merchandising, a Present was sent him at publike charge, of such things as the Chinois most regard, as waued garments of silke Damaske (which the Chinois then knew not how to make) Crystall Glasses, and other things valued at 1000. Duckets. The Vice-roy receiued them in great pompe, more to terrifie then honour them; but at the sight of the Presents (the scope of his purpose) hee became gentle and courteous, and decreed that they might liue in his Port in manner as hitherto they had done, obeying the Lawes of the China Magistrates: which words seeme formall, the Portugals liuing there after their owne Lawes; and other Nations, yea the Chinois themselues which are Christians in habite and religion, being subiect to them. The other Chinois are subiect to common Officers sent thither from Canton. The Vice-roy would haue nothing, but hee would pay for it, which hee did because bribes and gifts are there seuerely punished: but priuily hee sent to them, that money was giuen them to procure him as many other like.

Vice-roy of Canton. Quamsi. Sciauquin. Bribe trickes.

Ruggerius desired that which he came for, saying, he learned the China Tongue and read their Bookes, which he seemed much to like, and gaue him hopes at his next returne to obtayne it. And hauing giuen them weight of Siluer; with prouision, great attendance of Magistrates and Souldiers, much Musicke of Hoybuckes and other Instruments, hee sent them pompously thorow the publike streets of the Citie to their shipping. So weighty is hope of gaine. In August had comne (as they vse) Portugall ships to Amacao, in them of our Society not a few, and amongst others, Father Matthew Ricius, who brought with him an artificiall Watch from the Prouinciall for the aduancing this China businesse. About that time the Captaine of Amacao hauing made readie those things which the Vice-roy prescribed, sent backe the Auditor to Sciauquin, but Ruggerius vnseasonably (or seasonably rather as the euent manifested) fell sicke; yet sent word to the Vice-roy that he could not come to him as he had promised: and withall, that he had a Clocke-watch which did without any striker sound the houres, a thing euen still of much wonder to the Chinois. Hearing of his sickenesse, hee seemed sorrowfull, but this Watch awaked him, and caused him to make his Secretarie presently write a Licence for the Father to come to him with that admirable worke, as soone as he should bee able. When this Charter was read at Amacao, it contayned more; for the Fathers were inuited by publike Authoritie to erect a publike and priuate house in that Citie, which caused great ioy. But the Visitor was afraid as yet to send Ruggerius, as not furnished fully for that designe; the beginning of a thing being the greatest part. The other Iesuites perswaded, and Father Francis Pasius bound for Iapon, a man well qualified for gouerning was sent, and Ruggerius adioyning his Colleague. Ricius was made Gouernour of the Colledge of the Catechumeni, and appointed to follow the other two, if occasion serued. And if the businesse proceeded not, Pasius was to proceed to Iapon, and the other two to attend better opportunitie in their China businesse.

Mat. Ricius. Clocke-watch.

